While Jackson was well-known internationally for his strong stance on defense issues, he was known at home for his concern about people. On his last public appearance on the Island just prior to the 1976 General Election Jackson talked about the need to get people back to work. Maintaining a high unemployment level among young people in this nation's cities is "inviting disaster," he warned. He talked about putting together a public works jobs program, which finally happened several years later.

Partisan battles are already shaping up over a replacement for Jackson, although Democratic and Republican leaders alike seem to agree fillings his shoes may be an impossible task.

But as we ponder the election season upon us and study the host of local candidates who have agreed to put their names on the ballot, we're glad there are people who will carry on, who are willing to commit themselves to public service as Scoop Jackson did so unselfishly for so long.

[From the World, Sept. 5, 1983]

KARL STOFFEL REMEMBERS PVT. JACKSON

(By Bob Woods)

When a friend dies, there seems always to be that question: "I wonder if he really knew how much he was appreciated?"

It is like that with the passing of Senator Scoop, forty-year friend.

I'd like to share with you one little story about Scoop which I think tells something more than the regular political and friendly commentary.

I met Scoop when he was a 2nd District congressman in 1942, when we were just becoming immersed in World War II. I was an assistant to the late Walt Horan, newly elected 5th District congressman. Scoop was a bachelor, good looking, and very knowledgeable about the Capitol. He and his own chief assistant, Johnny Saltar, although on the opposite sides of the political fence, were tremendously helpful and many times while playing penny-ante poker they smoothed the way for a greenhorn.

But the point of the story is that as the war progressed and the manpower shortage become acute Capitol Hill became more and more deserted of eligible military and governmental workers. Even over-age congressmen were besieging the Army and Navy for commissions or for opportunities to serve.

Congressman Scoop Jackson was different. He very quietly straightened out his affairs, turned over the representative correspondence and chores to John Salter, and joined the Army, not as a commissioned officer but as a buck private.

Who knows what sort of a military career Scoop might have had? He didn't get the chance. After a short while in jungle warfare training in and around Florida, and with dozens of his Capitol Hill co-horts gone and leaving, President Roosevelt called an end to it. He recalled Scoop and others to civilian duty. In other words, Scoop Jackson's G.I. duties were summarily ended by presidential edict.

I was flying home to check with my own draft board (and believe me to get on a transcontinental airline at that time was something else), when I was displaced in Cincinnati by some brass-wearing VIP and told to wait for another flight.

Sitting around in the rather barren airport waiting room on wooden benches were half a dozen other lesser important travelers. Among them, dressed in Army fatigues with a duffel bag by his side was Congressman (Private) Scoop Jackson. He'd taken a "bump" along with the others and was waiting his turn to get on another flight. He was going home before going back to his Capitol Hill desk and civilian duties. We eventually flew together back to Washington State.

Many times afterward I reminded Scoop of his passing up VIP status and his only reply was the famous half smile. He was a very fine, very human sort of a man and I'm happy to have had the opportunity to know him as a friend and senator.

[From the Snohomish (Wash.) County Tribune, Sept. 7, 1983]

HE GAVE POLITICS A GOOD NAME

The Tribune joins the people of Snohomish County, the state, country and world in mourning the death of Senator Henry Jackson.

He gave politics a good name.

The senator served with distinction in a career choice frequently viewed with suspicion in these cynical times. Even though his politics weren't always popular with everyone there was never any doubt he represented his constituents, state and country with honesty, intelligence, hard work and determination—maintaining the highest standards of public service.

The last time we met him was at the opening of the First Heritage Bank in Snohomish. That occasion was not the "grand opening" of the new building. The event took place in a tent adjacent to a mobile structure serving as the bank's temporary headquarters. The surroundings were not "plush" but Jackson, one of the most powerful men in the country, was there.

At that time he praised the people of this area for having the confidence to undertake the challenge of developing a home-owned, independent bank in bleak economic times. He related his background and his confidence in this country's future and its roots in self-reliance and determination. He was at home with the small town businessmen, the farmers, the people he represented.

He gave politics a good name.

[From the Mt. Vernon (Wash.), Skagit Valley Herald, Sept. 7, 1983]

THE WORLD WILL MISS HENRY M. JACKSON

The world is bidding farewell to an institution in Everett today. Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson, one of the greatest men this state has ever produced, is gone.

The sudden death of Jackson comes as a shock, for he was seemingly a tireless man who hardly had begun to show his 71 years. On the one hand, it seems best that he died while he was still going strong—on a day when the world had looked to him for guidance during its most recent crisis. On the other, one can't help but think that he deserved some pleasant retirement after his long career in Congress.

Henry Jackson stood apart from lesser political figures because he was tough enough and brave enough to tell his constituents exactly what he thought. Few of his constituents agreed with him on every issue, but they always knew where he stood.

Jackson worked hard to improve education and protect the environment. He pushed urban development and human rights. He also understood what makes Washington's economy tick and did his share to keep it ticking.

Most Americans, however, will remember Jackson for his commitment to national defense, his impact on arms control talks and his strong support for Israel.

Henry Jackson was a man of honor and strength who expected his country to operate with those attributes. He was a great friend of Skagit and Island counties, and he will be greatly missed here.

At present it's unclear how Jackson's replacement in the Senate will be chosen, much less who it will be. Whoever it is will be measured against a monumental yardstick.

[From the Auburn (Wash.) Globe, Sept. 4, 1983]

OPINION

THE NATION'S LOST A VALUED FRIEND

There was everything to applaud and little to criticize in the life of Sen. Henry M. Jackson, whose death Thursday night shocked and saddened friends and political foes.

Scoop Jackson was a man all of us can emulate.

He was one of those rare political specimens, a man dedicated to the service of his state and country, a tireless worker—some would say a workaholic—a skilled legislative craftsman who could bring both sides of the aisle together in compromise, a man of integrity and principle who would sooner quit public life than alter his basic beliefs and values in favor of political expediency.

And in a political career spanning nearly 45 years beginning with his election as prosecuting attorney in Snohomish County, there was no hint of scandal, no tarnish.

In the past two days, one official after another has lauded that one predominant trait in Jackson, the fact that whether or not you agreed with him on a particular issue, his word was everything. You trusted the man.

Through the years, his peace-through-strength philosophy and his ever-suspicious view of Soviet intentions fell in and out of fashion, but he never betrayed those values. And it was those beliefs which prompted him to vist Red China, his fourth visit, during the last half of August.

On that trip, Jackson wore himself out campaigning for better relations between the two countries, something he strongly felt was vital to world stability.

Quite literally, he died in the line of duty.

The 71-year-old Jackson returned from the two-week trip with a heavy cold he caught toward the end of the tour. Despite the nagging cold and a cough which punctuated his conversations, he maintained a full schedule of appointments, telephone calls and a press conference Thursday to express his shock over the Soviet Union's jet fighter attack on a civilian Korean airliner.

His last press conference, fittingly, was vintage Scoop, with his expressions of deep-felt moral outrage over the Soviet act and a call for a firm response mixed with restraint.

He then went home, complaining of a tightness in his chest, and retired early. The heart attack probably came when he was asleep.

His death is a unestimatable loss for the people of the state; as the third-highest ranking member of the Senate, he wielded tremendous power and influence advantageous to Washington. The nation, too, has lost a strong, unflinching voice for world peace through strength.

And all of us have lost a valued friend.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post Intelligencer, Sept. 9, 1983]

SCOOP LEAVES US WITH FITTING LEGACY

Good law is so obvious that we wonder how—and why—we ever lived without such legislation before it was passed.

The U.S. Environmental Policy Act of 1969 is good law, excellent law. If history recognizes merit after the meritorious are dead, the Environmental Policy Act would be known as the Jackson Environmental Policy Act.

For it was Sen. Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson of Washington state, now eight days dead and richly eulogized, who created the Environmental Policy Act and who used his power and prestige 14 years ago to move his bill through Congress and onto the desk of President Richard Nixon.

It was a measure of Jackson's persuasive abilities, sometimes lost to outside observers, that President Nixon, with ceremony and gusto, made signing the act his first official action of 1970, saying it was "now or never" for the United States to move against pollution and unregulated highway building and the following urban sprawl.

HIGH IN NIXON'S REGARD

Nixon's political advisers, of a party different and of views certainly different from Jackson's on most matters, had wanted the president to seek something less than Jackson has wrought.

But the president knew Jackson, trusted him, indeed had considered him for his Cabinet, so high was Nixon's regard, and became converted to what was for many Republicans then and is still a disturbing notion:

That the federal government should interpose its power in what had previously been an exercise of private or state power—regulation of actions that might affect the quality of air, water, wilderness, human space and values.

It was typical for Jackson that on the day that Nixon signed EPA, Jackson jogged the president to do more than just speak of a healthy environment.

No one could ever say that Jackson was generally eloquent of speech, but no one ever denied that he could politely press the points of pressure that forward action in a democracy.

The act was a radical measure in the history of the republic. For the first time it declared it federal policy "to create and maintain conditions under which man and nature can exist in productive harmony." Up to Jan. 2, 1970, when Nixon signed the act, federal policy had been mainly to stand aside and let the actions of private persons, corporations and government agencies fall where they might on the general population so far as damaging the environment was concerned.

Jackson's bill, designed for passage by the then Senate Interior Committee, which Jackson chaired, went far beyond lofty aims, however.

It created and directed the president to listen to an independent council of advisers on environmental policy, thus ensuring that the nation at its highest levels would get constant and objective information on matters impinging on the public health and welfare.

It led to the creation of the Environmental Protection Agency, thus pulling together but giving vastly more power to what had been a hodgepodge of agencies with concerns about environmental quality.

Perhaps most importantly of all—but mainly overlooked in the press reports of the time—EPA directed that all federal agencies be required to write environmental impact statements and genuinely evaluate their conclusions before taking many major actions.

The importance of these statements cannot be overrated. For the first time agencies like the Army Corps of Engineers had to gather and report and hold hearings on information about the effects of what they proposed to do before they did it. If they do not, then, as a thousand legal cases have proved, they are vulnerable to attack in the courts and to delay and perhaps the ultimate demise of a project.

PUBLIC CAN EDUCATE SELF

Writing an EIS requires that windy promises by officialdom be replaced by science—by exact information about the costs of air, water, wildlife, human society. And the law requires that an EIS must list and detail alternatives to the proposed action.

Thus the public can educate itself before a highway or a dam or a dock is imposed upon it.

This section of EPA has, if nothing else, resulted in a vast body of new knowledge about the things that many large-scale human actions impact, including about human beings. It is not enough any more for an agency routinely to justify pollution or the extinction of a rare species.

By federal law, and by extension through like state and local laws, the public's right to know has been increased vastly.

Scoop Jackson knew that, acted on it and defended it until the day he died. "He protected the environment" would be a fitting epitaph.

[From the Bellingham (Wash.) Herald, Sept. 2, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON, SENATOR

Sen. Henry M. Jackson was a politician in the best sense of the word. He spent a lifetime practicing the science of democratic government with skill and intelligence.

In return, the people of this state trusted him in a way that is unmatched by any other public official. Election after election they voted for him, whichever way the political winds blew.

Not that Henry Jackson shifted with the political winds. He was a man of his roots and his times. Born in Everett, May 31, 1912, the son of Norwegian immigrants, he combined the tradition of social consciousness of his ancestry with its stubborn adherence to principle.

He earned the nickname "Scoop" as a paperboy in Everett and managed to work his way through the University of Washington during the Depression. Fresh from law school, he was elected Snohomish County prosecutor and from there on never lost an election.

Jackson entered Congress in 1938 with a wave of young liberal disciples of President Franklin Roosevelt that included Lyndon Johnson of Texas. They and their country went to war three years later. The Depression and World War II shaped their thinking.

Out of the Depression came Jackson's commitment to social and economic action by government. Out of the war came a commitment to strong defense.

Jackson, like most of his generation, believed that World War II would never have started if the Western allies had stood up to Hitler and Tojo, that the terrible price paid in blood by the small, ill-equipped forces of the allies and by their civilians early in the war could have been prevented.

Despite the unpopularity in recent years of Henry Jackson's advocacy of a strong military, he never had any trouble at the polls. One reason was that he liked campaigning; he liked people. It was a pleasure to watch him work a Whatcom County crowd, picking out faces and names, recalling previous meetings.

To Jackson, the voters were never mass statistics to be reached by scientifically adjusting positions to the prevailing winds. Voters were reached by shaking their hands and patiently explaining what was the right thing to do.

Henry Jackson never reached the presidency, although he came close a couple of times. Nevertheless, he shaped his country's government in a way that only a few in history have. The state of Washington can be proud of its son.

[From the Pullman (Wash.) Herald, Sept. 3, 1983]

SENATOR HENRY JACKSON, 1912–1983

(By Floyd Larson)

The unexpected death Thursday night of U.S. Senator Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson is a loss to the state and nation—and marks an end of an era which saw the rise to political preeminence of several western politicians out of the economic and social ashes of the Great Depression.

Jackson was one of that breed, who, like Sen. Mike Mansfield of Montana, former majority leader and now U.S. Ambassador to Japan; former Sen. Warren Magnuson of our state; and former Sen. Frank Church of Idaho, were able to strike a successful balance between the parochial and national politics.

Their perennial success at the polls often transcended party lines because they used their tenure powers and influences bipartisanly for the most part.

This is not to say that any of them, and Sen. Jackson in particular, could not be the most intense of partisans when the occassion demanded it. He served as national party chairman in the Kennedy years.

The West has always been wary of the so-called Eastern Establishment, yet Jackson was able to win a modest, but respectable, following in the East in his two unsuccessful bids for the democratic presidential nomination, without undermining his home political base.

Always distrustful of the Soviet Union's intentions, Jackson appealed to many conservatves by maintaining a strong hawkish stance on national security issues despite a significant shift in the other direction by many in his party.

He made no apologies for the epithet bestowed on him by some critics that he "was the senator from Boeing." This consistent support had nothing to do politically with Boeing management. Jackson was a pragmatist and to him Boeing success translated into thousands of jobs for his constituents.

Although, his political foes disagreed with him—often quite sharply—on many, many issues; there is no question that he commanded their respect, and at times envious admiration.

Once elected to the Senate, he was returned three times with 70 percent or plus pluralities—which has to be a tribute to his political acumen which enabled him, like many of his contemporary colleagues who are now too gone from the scene, to attract voters from both parties and attain power through tenure.

His death diminishes the state's political clout in the nation's capital.

His stature as an expert in foreign affairs, national defense and energy conservation reflected three major areas of federal impact in our state.

Historians will place Sen. Jackson in a more realistic perspective than we—political friends or foes—can today.

But, we are confident the balance will favor him and his record will show he served his state and his nation well.

We, and other citizens of this state, now join his family in mourning his untimely passing. Honest political differences aside, Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson was a giant of our time.

[From the Portland Sunday Oregonian, Sept. 4, 1983]

OREGON WILL MISS JACKSON

The death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson of a heart attack at age 71 is a serious national loss. His unexpected death will be felt particularly in his own state of Washington, but neighboring states like Oregon also will miss and mourn the Democrat who labored without recompense on countless regional tasks now caught in the web of history.

Jackson's impact on the nation was far-reaching during his more than 40 years in the Congress, which included 30 Senate years. The senator from Everett, Wash., set standards for excellence of performance admired by presidents, his colleagues in all parties and the countless ordinary people he knew and genuinely liked, and for whom he gave much of his life's work.

Washington voters responded, electing him by unprecedented margins. Although his two efforts to get a presidential nomination failed, he continued to exercise great power in the Senate. He was third on the Senate seniority list at the time of his death and the ranking minority member of the Armed Services Committee.

Jackson was deeply informed on weapons systems, foreign affairs, energy, the environment, civil rights and the big and small problems of his region. Perhaps the biggest regional problem of all, the Washington Public Power Supply System's default on bonds for two nuclear power plants, will sorely miss Jackson's expertise and influence as the region struggles back from the disaster.

Oregonians appreciated Jackson's efforts. when he was alive. One of them, Edith Green, the former congresswoman, recommended Jackson for president in 1972. One can speculate that the nation would be a far better place today had Jackson brought his integrity, his genuine honesty, humility and wide range of talents to the White House at that time.

Oregon's debt to Jackson was enormous. He helped business people, ordinary citizens with problems and the state's leaders as if Oregon were his own state. And prior to the emergence of Sens. Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood to leadership posts in the Congress, Jackson often was Oregon's only really influential senator.

The Oregonian supported Jackson's Democratic nomination bid in 1972, citing among the reasons his efforts to develop a defense second to none and his authorship of the most influential piece of legislation of the decade, the Environmental Protection Act.

Hardly a major issue of the last 30 years, whether he was affirming a new understanding with Peking where Jackson visited this summer to confer with the Chinese leaders, or sorting out baffling weapons systems choices, the great oil embargo disruptions or trying to save the environment, suffered from his neglect or lacked his informed support.

Henry Jackson set personal standards in the conduct of politics that made all who knew him feel better for the experience. It is a legacy of excellence, compassion and national concerns that he leaves, and it is matched by few of the nation's political leaders.

[From the Everett (Wash.) Herald, Sept. 7, 1983]

THE JACKSON LEGACY

This is not to mourn Sen. Henry Jackson in death, but to celebrate in life the vibrant legacy of a great American.

That legacy rededicates America to the values that allow it to endure: equality under law, justice and liberty.

It is a legacy of commitment to American institutions: education, free enterprise, ethical public service and democratic government.

Jackson's legacy reminds the nation of its broader place in the world community: a temple of democracy, a bastion of freedom, a shrine of human rights and peace.

It is a legacy of vision: to protect the environment that sustains all life; to provide the energy that powers the nation's economic engines.

His legacy teaches Americans to practice those simple virtues that make them such a genuinely decent people: Caring, kindness, anonymous charity, reverence and hard work.

And finally, the Jackson legacy is one of history: that the nation must not lose sight of the American experience; and that so instructed, these United States must seek a destiny that is not manifest but that embraces manifestly the highest principles of humankind.

[From the Salem (Oreg.) Statesman-Journal, Sept. 4, 1983]

JACKSON AN EFFECTIVE PATRIOT

His detractors called him "the senator from Boeing," but Sen. Henry M. Jackson was really the senator from the Pacific Northwest. He was an able advocate and friend for the entire region. Jackson, the ranking Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, died Thursday night at the age of 71.

"Scoop" Jackson, who got his nickname delivering newspapers as a boy, had served in the U.S. Senate since 1952 after six terms in the House of Representatives. Jackson and Sen. Warren Magnuson, who served 28 years in Congress, became effective and powerful advocates for the Northwest during Democratic and Republican administrations.

Jackson was hawkish on defense and viewed the Soviet Union with distrust. He also was an outspoken defender of Israel. Despite his views on arms, Jackson was respected by friend and foe for his dedication and high moral character.

Jackson hours before his death had called the destruction of a Korean Air Lines jumbo jetliner "an act of barbarism" by the Soviet Union.

Jackson had worked effectively with Oregon congressional representatives over the years in winning appropriations for Northwest projects. The level of federal spending in Washington state was largely the result of work by Jackson and Magnuson.

Gov. Spellman will name a successor to Jackson and that successor, who will serve until the 1984 general election, almost certainly will be a Republican although Spellman has said he will not talk about a successor until after Jackson's services.

[From the Baker (Oreg.) Democrat-Herald, Sept. 5, 1983]

JACKSON WAS A MAN FOR ALL OF THE PEOPLE

Yesterday, U.S. Sen. Henry Jackson was here, characteristically taking on the Soviet Union for another of its transgressions against mankind.

Today he is gone from us, the victim of a sudden, massive heart attack.

The death of the veteran senator, 71, on Thursday evening in his hometown Everett, is a shocking loss to the people of this state and to the nation.

During his more than 30 years in the Senate, Jackson rose to be one of the most powerful and respected men in that body, and in the United States.

While he lost two bids to be president of the United States, he never lost an election in his 45 years in Congress, more often than not winning by bipartisan landslides, burying his sacrificial Republican opponents.

But Jackson was much more than a partisan Democrat. Although he associated with world leaders and royalites, he was a man for all of the people, down to the most common, every-day citizen.

He never forgot his roots and never forgot his allegiance and responsibilities to his constituents, the people of this state.

He came to the Lewis County area a number of times, making public appearances and visiting with the media, including stopping in at this newspaper to share with us his viewpoints.

He was a Democrat in the very finest traditions of that party, a man with deep compassion for the common working man and a patriot's patriot, consistently favoring a strong national defense to keep our free nation free.

Indeed, the fervent displeasure and anger he expressed at a news conference, just hours before his death, against the Soviet Union for shooting down an unarmed South Korean passenger plane is said by one of his doctors to have very likely contributed to his fatal heart attack.

When Congress reconvenes after its Labor Day recess, there will be a big pair of empty shoes in the halls of Congress reminding all who knew and worked with the senator that they will no longer have his long years of experience and wise counsel to call upon.

Jackson was the ranking Democrat on the Armed Services Committee and was a powerful and influential member of the Energy and Natural Resources, Governmental Affairs and Intelligence Committees.

We offer our heartfelt condolences to the senator's family. The attention after Jackson is laid to rest (the speculation has already begun) will shift to who Gov. Spellman will name as a successor to fill the position until the 1984 general election.

It's expected by all that Spellman will name a Republican.

We trust the governor will choose one who shares the views the late senator had on national defense and foreign affairs. That would be a fitting memorial to the departed senator and to the people who elected him.

Goodbye, Scoop.

NUMBER ONE CITIZEN

The untimely death of Senator Henry M. Jackson robbed the free world of one of its greatest leaders, and took from Washington State its number-one citizen. Scoop Jackson served in public office for almost half of the 94-year history of Washington State.

When he died he ranked as the number-one Washingtonian of all time, and probably one of the 10 most influential and effective leaders of the free world.

His statesmanship transcended partisan politics so much that voters returned him to the world's most important legislative body by unprecedented majorities.

His loss will be felt a bit more keenly in Prosser because Henry Jackson was the intimate friend of Prosserite Herb Davis with whom he remained in close touch from the time their friendship was formed in college and law school. Others in Prosser became closer to Mr. Jackson because of the bond between Scoop and Herb.

Twice Senator Jackson turned down cabinet appointments. Twice he came close to receiving his party's presidential nomination and twice he was close to being nominated for vice president.

Senator Jackson was a powerful advocate for public power, nuclear energy, national defense, social programs, unions, farmers and business. He was a Communist fighter. Many disagreed with some of his positions. Virtually none questioned his straight out honesty and integrity.

Although his loss is sudden, unexpected and painful, it will be good to remember that he spent his last day on earth not in a sick bed, but up on his feet fighting for his state and his country.

SCOOP JACKSON

(By Joseph Kraft)

Any number of senators can replace Scoop Jackson in such specialized areas as energy, defense, civil liberties and Great Power politics. But nobody else can draw all these themes together in ways that make things happen.

Much fuss has been made as to whether he was a liberal or a conservative. In fact, his shaping political experience was the New Deal. Like all New Dealers, he believed in the power of government to solve problems.

Because his views were so steadfast, he developed over time a personal constituency of extraordinary depth and reach. He won six terms as a congressman from the state of Washington, and six as a senator—the last with 69 percent of the vote. No one was closer to the Jewish community in this country. Nor to labor. So unlike almost all other senators and congressmen, Jackson did not merely speak for himself. He commanded by battalions.

Because he had troops and a feel for the presidential viewpoint, he exerted extraordinary influence on the course of events. He practically determined energy policy. He shaped basic legislation on the environment and the development of water resources. His insistence on tying relations with Russia to explicit guarantees on Jewish emigration frustrated the policy of detente undertaken by Henry Kissinger under Nixon and Ford.

Most important, he personified bipartisan support for a strong defense. Other senators—notably John Tower, the Texas Republican who now heads the Armed Services Committee, and Sam Nunn, the Georgia Democrat—set as much store by efficient military force as Jackson. But he alone crossed ideolcgical lines. He fostered trust between the Pentagon and the unions. He kept labor patriotic, and the generals in touch with ordinary people. He thus served as a potent factor in the building of national consensus.

He is the last of a breed. New senators are made on television, and in an age where ideological fashion is turned against government. More and more, the Senate is a collection of egos.

Leadership in the Senate, accordingly, has lost its appeal to men of large views and high ability. Howard Baker, the majority leader, is stepping down in large part because the petty quarrels of the Senate afford him scant springboard for the presidency. John Tower is quitting at least in part because of wounds sustained in a nasty debate over the MX missile last month.

The corrosive forces at work in the Senate operate throughout government. The quality of Cabinet officers, and governors, and mayors, has slipped. Private satisfaction exerts, particularly for intelligent people, a stronger appeal than public glory.

Just why is hard to say. There seems to be, as Albert Hirschman has pointed out, a kind of "private-public cycle." Societies," he writes in his fine work "Shifting Involvements," "are in some way predisposed toward vacillation between periods of intense preoccupation with public issues and almost total concentration on private improvement."

If so, the frustration fostered by selfishness will eventually breed a new realization that the "pursuit of happiness" means a quest for public good. When that happens, we may see again the likes of Henry Jackson.

"SCOOP" WAS FRIEND TO OREGON

Most Northwesterners can't remember a time when Henry "Scoop" Jackson wasn't in Congress. His career in national politics spanned 42 years, 30 of them in the Senate, where he climbed to the third rung on the seniority ladder. Jackson made himself a fixture of the American political scene, and now, after his sudden death Thursday, the people of his state and his region will have to make a painful adjustment. His energy, integrity and experience will be missed.

Some people who spend a lifetime in Congress owe their political longevity to an ability to avoid controversy. Others owe their lasting popularity at the polls to an ability to avoid personal compromise. Jackson was one of the latter type. He was a Democrat, but he followed no one's party line but his own. His was a unique voice in the Senate—liberal on some issues, conservative on others, but always speaking from well-informed conviction.

Jackson was Washington's senior senator, but Oregonians also looked to him for leadership. Indeed, during the years when Oregon Sen. Wayne Morse was giving the word "maverick" a modern definition, Jackson was often the only influential political figure to whom Oregonians could turn. Jackson always answered Oregonians' calls. And though those calls have become less frequent with the emergence of Sens. Mark Hatfield and Bob Packwood as powerful spokesmen for their state, Oregon should not forget its debt to "Scoop" Jackson.

The states of the Northwest are tied together by a shared interest in water, power and timber resources. For good and for ill, Jackson's efforts to develop and preserve those resources have left their mark far beyond his own state's borders. Regional energy issues are only one example of the extent of Jackson's influence: he deserves part of the blame for the Washington Public Power Supply System fiasco, but he also deserves a large measure of credit for regional efforts to conserve energy and coordinate future power development plans.

On national issues, Jackson once summed up his political philosophy better than anyone else could: "I'm a liberal, but I'm not stupid." That philosophy led him to support his party's efforts to promote civil rights, clean up the environment and invest in education and anti-poverty programs. It also led him to become one of the Senate's most vocal advocates of a strong military, a no-nonsense attitude in relations toward the Soviet Union and steadfast support for Israel.

Jackson twice sought the Democratic presidential nomination, losing in 1972 to George McGovern and in 1976 to Jimmy Carter. The country might be better off today if Jackson had won. He had the stamina, the intelligence and the character to make a good presidential candidate. Washington, the Northwest and the nation have lost a leader and a friend.

"SCOOP" JACKSON

The Ship of State has strong characters aboard, and many who are just along for the ride.

Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson of Washington is one who had a hand in steering the ship in his long tenure as a congressman and senator. Bold, aggressive, and outspoken, he took a stand on issues according to his basic beliefs. One of his basic beliefs was that the nation must move with strength.

Classified as a liberal be believed the nation must have a strong social program. However, he held the commonly conservative position that the nation must have military strength, which was a position in conflict with his fellow Democrats.

Although necessarily involved in politics, in his devotion to a desirable program as he saw it, he had an element of statesmanship. His attacks were for or against programs rather than against political foes.

His openness and strength won him increasing numbers of backers. Certainly such strength and openness is sorely needed in our legislative bodies.

Jackson died last week at the age of 71. Rightly, the nation mourns his loss. His devotion has been unflagging; he has given far more than his share of effort for the common good; his leadership has been strong.

We need many more with his type of devotion in our legislative halls.

[From the Bend, (Oreg.) Bulletin, Sept. 2, 1983]

HENRY "SCOOP" JACKSON

One of the Northwest's strongest voices in Washington, Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson, is dead today at the age of 71. Jackson had served his home state of Washington in the U.S. House and Senate for nearly 45 years.

He served his state well, so well that, when he tried to gain the Democratic party's nomination for President in 1972 and 1976, he found precious little enthusiasm for his effort, even in the neighboring state of Oregon.

Jackson gained a reputation for being a rare combination—fairly liberal on social issues, yet one of the Senate's most vocal proponents of a strong defense establishment. He felt, for example, that Henry Kissinger conceded too much in this country's Strategic Arms Limitation Talks with the Soviet Union, and he continued to oppose Jimmy Carter's efforts to negotiate a second SALT treaty in 1979. At the same time, he managed to garner the support of labor unions and, occasionally, environmentalists.

Washington staters adored Jackson, and well they should have. Thanks to his efforts and those of his colleague, Sen. Warren Magnuson, the state became the federal government's home base for the region. A variety of federal agencies have regional headquarters in Seattle, for example, thanks to them. Sometimes called "the Senator from Boeing," his ability to bring federal dollars home helped that company become the nation's ninth largest defense contractor.

But Jackson's attention to his state had a negative side, as well, and that sometimes hurt him. His devotion to Washington, sometimes at the expense even of so close a state as Oregon, diminished his popularity in the region. Thus, when he ran in several presidential primaries in 1976, most Oregonians were cool to his candidacy.

Jackson was a strong voice in the Senate, a recognized authority on defense and military spending. Such a voice will not be easy to replace.

[From the Pocatello (Idaho) Idaho State Journal, Sept. 6, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON

Sen. Henry Jackson, who died last week, was one of a disappearing breed of politicians, a kind badly needed in the U.S. Senate.

Jackson had for many years been one of the nation's most skillful and prolific legislators. He was a natural lawmaker, in fact: he understood the details of legislation, the political realities involved and the process of putting together coalitions to get results.

In recent years, increasing numbers of confrontation-oriented lawmakers have entered Congress; Jackson was one of the few left who understood a better way to meld public policy.

He was honest and decent—no scars on a congressional record reaching back to 1941—and contributed positively on a variety of issues, from energy and the environment to the national defense.

He will be missed.

[From the Hood River (Oreg.) News, Sept. 7, 1983]

OUR LOSS, TOO

Death of U.S. Sen. Henry Jackson of Washington state is a loss that has an impact far beyond the boundaries of the state he represents.

The Everett, Wash., Democrat had become known as a solid leader for a strong America who assumed a leadership role supporting that position both through Republican and Democratic administrations. His stance was not that of a warmonger, but instead of a leader who saw clearly that dealing through strength was the way to assure peace and freedom. Importance of his attitude was never more clear than in the time just before his death, when Soviet fighters shot down an unarmed South Korean airliner with 269 people aboard.

In many cases, it would have been good if Oregon's Congressional delegation had emulated Jackson.

In many other ways, his influence crossed state lines. That was clear at the Bonneville Dam second powerhouse dedication, Jackson's last appearance in this area. It was apparent that the influence and prestige Jackson had brought to bear, working with Oregon Sen. Mark Hatfield, were important for regional development. He was no gadfly, and his colleagues knew it.

Jackson was a man for the Northwest and for the nation, and it is difficult to see how Washington State can produce a replacement anywhere near his ability and perception. We can only express gratitude for having had a Jackson in Washington, D.C., and wish them luck in selecting a replacement.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) Post Intelligencer, Sept. 12, 1983]

JACKSON STOOD FOR SPECIAL BREED

WASHINGTON.—As the bells tolled a sad farewell last week for Sen. Henry Jackson, they also seemed to toll the departure of a very special breed of American whose perspective reached far beyond the myopic limits of Vietnam and Watergate.

That breed, its numbers now reduced almost to zero in Congress, understood what it was to fight and win a massive war, to rehabilitate battle-ravished nations, to establish an enlightened system of cooperation among allies and to utilize the powers of the federal government to help the downtrodden.

The members of that breed were not narrow ideologues. They were men and women who, while loyal to the political party of their choice, had the vision and the courage to cross party lines in quest of a strong, compassionate America that was determined to escape the bondage of a society dominated by inequity and isolationism.

BUSINESS AND LABOR LEADERS

Through a trying time, they—mainstream Democrats and Republicans—helped construct a foreign and domestic policy structure that remains remarkably strong—despite attempts to shatter its underpinnings.

Over four decades, their number has included presidents, members of Congress and the Cabinet, leaders of business, labor, industry, academia and religion. But often over that period of time their primary bastion has been the United States Senate.

There remain in the Senate men and women of talent and wisdom. But those whose service in public life or whose personal standards of reference reach back across the years to World War II, the Marshall Plan, the establishment of NATO, the McCarthy era and the Korean Conflict have, with very few exceptions, died or retired from public life.

Among the members of the proud breed, which Jackson had come to symbolize, there were policy differences and sometimes conflicts of ambition. But on the major issues that have shaped the United States and the Western world during the past 40 years they generally stood as one.

Two of that breed—Edmund Muskie, an unsuccessful presidential aspirant who became Jimmy Carter's secretary of state, and John Sherman Cooper, a Republican senator who served as Dwight Eisenhower's ambassador to India—were among 1,700 friends of Jackson who gathered to memorialize the senator.

Among its members were Republicans like Arthur Vandenberg, George Aiken, Warren Austin, Margaret Chase Smith, Clifford Case, Leverett Saltonstall, Thomas Kuchel and Everet Dirksen.

On the Democratic side of the aisle, its numbers included John Kennedy, Lyndon Johnson, Tom Connolly, Hubert Humphrey, Alben Barkley, Paul Douglas, Walter George, Richard Russell, Stuart Symington, William Fulbright, Estes Kefauver, Albert Gore and John Sparkman.

To young Americans of today, those may sound like obscure names out of the past. But it is because of that special breed that young Americans live in a nation that stands as the great bulwark of freedom in the world.

Long ago, Walt Whitman wrote: "There is no week nor day nor hour, when tyranny may not enter upon this country, if the people lose their roughness and spirit of definace—Tyranny may always enter—there is no charm, no bar against it—the only bar against it is a large resolute breed of men."

The special breed which Jackson symbolized may not have exhibited the roughness of which Whitman wrote, for they lived in an era far removed from the frontier of Whitman's day. But its members were defiant and resolute in their determination to move America and the world toward a brighter future.

[From the Oakland (Calif.) Tribune, Sept. 4, 1983]

HENRY M. JACKSON

Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson, who died Thursday of a heart attack at the age of 71, possessed a strong anti-Soviet suspicion that commanded respect because he was consistent and thoughtful.

His conservative approach to foreign affairs was tempered by a liberal social conscience, and enhanced by a keen sense of foresight.

He spoke with pride of flying over the Soviet construction of a highway between the Russian border and Kabul, Afghanistan in 1954, telling a colleague the highway would be the route for a Soviet invasion of that country someday.

He uncovered details of the 1972 Strategic Arms Limitation Treaty that embarrassed the Nixon administration. Over the years, his thorough critiques bolstered the suspicions that prevented Senate approval of the SALT II treaty during President Carter's administration.

He was an unsuccessful Democratic presidential candidate in 1972 and 1976, but his policy stands were more consistent with his principles, not his partisanship.

To the dismay of anti-Vietnam War activists who were Democrats, Jackson supported President Nixon's controversial bombing of North Vietnam in 1972. Jackson had the courage to correct himself in 1974, and led the opposition to the Nixon administration's request for continuing aid to what Jackson called the "repressive" American-backed Thieu regime.

With the power and respect he commanded in Congress Jackson was a thorn in the side of Jimmy Carter, chiding the Democratic president for his overtures to Cuba, and for foreign policy that was not "aggressive" enough.

While Jackson was too hawkish for the former president, the current president was too hawkish for Jackson.

Though a supporter of the defense buildup (he was known affectionately by colleagues as the "senator from Boeing") Jackson was part of the Senate's one-vote majority that killed funding for nerve gas weaponry requested by the Reagan administration this year.

Though staunchly anti-communist, his Central America approach showed an understanding of social factors that was probably based in his early background.

He denounced Reagan's reliance upon a "military shield" against the spread of Latin American communism because that approach ignores the burning economic inequities of the oligarchies in the region.

Jackson recently denounced Reagan's alarmist assertions of a Soviet nuclear superiority, despite his own tough stand on defense.

Jackson expressed little surprise over the "barbaric" attack by the Russians upon Korean Air Lines Flight 007 at a news conference hours before his fatal heart attack. As has been the case before, his tough skepticism about Soviet intentions may gain wider acceptance after such incidents as the air murder.

Henry Jackson was a non-partisan sage and statesman who could cry "Wolf!" and be believed, because he was uncommonly principled, and often right.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, Sept. 6, 1983]

"SCOOP" JACKSON

Senator Henry (Scoop) Jackson, the powerful Washington Democrat, was a distinguished political figure of felicitous contradictions. He was known for his liberal views on domestic social issues and for a tough, hawkish stance on national defense.

Jackson was elected to the Senate in 1952, the year of the Eisenhower landslide and quickly caught the national spotlight when he and two fellow senators resigned from that body's Permanent Investigation Subcommittee in protest against its red-baiting chairman, Joseph McCarthy of Wisconsin.

He was strong both for nuclear energy and conservation—many consider him the father of the Environmental Protection Agency. He took a tough, no-nonsense line toward expansionist efforts by the Soviet Union, and was also a lifelong liberal in matters dealing with civil rights and labor.

It was characteristic of Jackson that just before his fatal heart attack, he had called a press conference to denounce the Soviet Union's attack against a Korean airliner as "a dasterdly, barbaric act against humanity." He served his community and nation with notable distinction. His death is a great loss.

[From the Tacoma (Wash.) News Tribune, Sept. 11, 1983]

JACKSON'S SILENT TREATMENT LASTED SIX YEARS

(By Emily Walker)

The sudden and unexpected death of U.S. Sen. Henry M. (Scoop) Jackson shocked not only his family, friends and constituents but the nation as well. Friends and political foes alike were quick to express their adminration for his honesty, straightforwardness and political know-how.

It's too bad that a man has to die before such a widespread surge of admiration and respect comes to the surface. However, the senator would have probably agreed that it may have been better for him to have gone now than to perhaps been thrown out of office after a distinguished career because in the eyes of his constituents he had become too old or too ill to serve.

Way back when then-Congressman Jackson was campaigning (successfully as it turned out) to unseat Sen. Harry P. Cain, for whom I was working, Cain had me attend a meeting in Tacoma which Jackson was to address.

Purposefully I sat in the front row immediately below the dais. I didn't want to appear as though I were trying to hide.

Following Jackson's speech I had to hurry back to Cain's office to report what I had heard. However, Harry Smith, who was an aide to the late Congressman Thor Tollefson and was in town to work on Tollefson's campaign, lingered once Jackson's speech was finished.

Smith appeared in Cain's office a few hours later to tell me that following the speech he overheard a man tell Jackson "that wretched Emily Walker from Cain's office" had been there to monitor what Jackson had to say. Jackson's reply was "I knew she was here and let me tell you something, she's doing a good job in Washington, D.C., and all of us like and respect her and are happy to have her there."

You can imagine what that did for my ego despite what may have been political overtones.

I was working for Tollefson after Cain was defeated when Jackson's marriage was announced in the Washington Post. I suggested to Tollefson that he immediately call Jackson and congratulate him. For some reason Tollefson didn't want to, but I kept after him until he did.

I happened to hear him tell the senator, "Emily insists that I call you and offer my congratulations," thereby revealing his hesitancy in doing so.

As we all know Jackson was extremely careful to take good care of his health, I remember one evening I was sipping coffee at some "do" at the Shoreham Hotel in Washington, D.C. when Jackson walked by. He tapped me on my shoulder and warned me, "That stuff'll kill you."

It was nearly six years before Jackson forgave me (but I sure never forgot) for a dirty trick I played on him. I had gone to Tollefson's office one Saturday morning to catch up on some work when I received a call from the late Ernie Knight, then editor of The News Tribune. Knight was checking on a rumor that a project involving new facilities at Mount Rainier had been approved.

I knew that Jackson had been working on this for months. However, I felt that this was a chance to help Tollefson, which I was being paid to do. I knew that the Rockefeller Foundation was involved, but when I called their office in New York to get the details I was told that the Department of the Interior had all the documents.

I called the department, which was closed for the weekend. A fellow who happened to be there told me that the document was there but he didn't think he was free to give out the information. I finally convinced him that if he'd send it up to Tollefson's office by messenger I'd have it mimeographed and sent back to him within the hour.

It worked.

As a result, the Sunday edition of The News Tribune front page carried a story giving Tollefson credit for announcing that the project had been approved. Although the story did not specifically give Tollefson credit for the project, it didn't mention Jackson at all. Thus it was implied that Tollefson who had little or nothing to do with the project got the credit.

Tollefson had no more than come to the office Monday morning than he had to face a telephone call from an angry and hurt Jackson. Tollefson, who had nothing to do with the story, put the blame on me (which was mine and which I was also paid to take), explaining that often I was beyond his control. He also explained that I had done it without consulting him—which was true.

For years after that Jackson wouldn't have anything to do with me. I couldn't blame him. Finally, the senator and I ran into each other in the middle of the street between the House Office Building and the Capitol.

"Look, Senator," I said, "If I had done something like that and had I been on your staff, you'd have thought I'd done you a service."

I hand it to him that he smilingly, although grudgingly, agreed and we were back at last on friendly terms. Actually, I wouldn't have blamed him if he had drummed me out of the Congressional working staff forever.

Right or wrong, I felt one's loyalty (and trickery if necessary) is due the person who has hired you. Perhaps I went too far and probably did, but after the confrontation all was well between us. I doubt that I would have been that magnanimous had the shoe been on the other foot.

While writing this column, I looked over the many Christmas cards picturing him and his family which I have always valued and will now keep. Like memories of Jackson, they'll always be treasured.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, Sept. 12, 1983]

REAGAN EMULATES SCOOP'S BEST TRAITS

(By David Broder)

The Members of Congress are returning to a capital strikingly different in atmosphere from the one they left at the start of their recess in early August. Death is in the air, and its sobering effects can be felt everywhere.

The summer ended with trip-hammer blows: the systematic shelling and killing of the Marines on "peacekeeping duty" in Lebanon; the murderous Soviet destruction of the Korean airliner, killing 269 persons, including Representative Larry McDonald of Georgia; and the sudden, unexpected death of Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

As is always the case, such tragedy has shamed the pettiness out of Washington politics. The atmosphere of soured partisanship Congress left behind when it took its August break has been transformed into a sense of shared concern and sobered realism.

President Reagan has been at his finest through this ordeal. Whether comforting the families of the slain Marines, expressing the nation's regrets at Scoop Jackson's death, or voicing the outrage everyone felt at the cold blooded attack on the Korean airliner and its innocent passengers, his words, tone and demeanor have been exactly right.

What gave special poignancy to Reagan's impressive performance was that it so perfectly embodied the principles and even the personal style of Scoop Jackson, the man he mourned as "a true patriot."

Jackson was the least theatrical of public men. His friend and colleague, Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan of New York, once described Jackson as having "the charisma of competence."

Probably it took a long time for one to appreciate Scoop Jackson's qualities. I came to value them in 1960, when I saw him set aside his personal disappointment over the Kennedys' last-minute decision to pull back the implied offer of the vice-presidential nomination, when they decided Lyndon Johnson would be a stronger political asset. Far from sulking, Jackson accepted the lesser post of Democratic National Chairman and worked his head off in the campaign.

That same year, he issued a report on national security organization, convincingly demonstrating the risks of letting a White House operator, the national security adviser, usurp the role and functions of the secretary of state.

He was right about that, just as history proved him right on other issues. Infallible he was not, but on most of the large questions to which he turned his ever-active intelligence, his judgment was awfully good. Most of all, he was realistic. He allowed himself few illusions, which made him especially valuable in a week like last week, when so many others found themselves disillusioned to the point of distraction.

"He lived in the worst of times," his friend Pat Moynihan said at last week's memorial service, "the age of the totalitarian state. . . He wanted his country strong because he knew the terrible danger of the age in which we live. Where others lurch from one issue to another with the attention span of a five-year-old, he sustained this understanding and this vision through five of the most awful decades in the history of mankind."

Reagan was displaying those "Jacksonian" qualities last week—steadiness, strength and clarity—at a time when we needed them most.

[From the Vancouver (Wash.) Columbian, Sept. 2, 1983]

JASKSON TRAITS: CLASSY, POWERFUL, WITTY, SMART

(By Jewett, Van Arsdol & Beck)

Todays Column offers anecdotes, vignettes and personal recollections about Washington Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson, provided by regular INK columnists and others in The Columbian newsroom.

It's always a shock when someone close to us dies, but particularly when that person is as healthy as Henry Jackson.

Columbian City Editor Gregg Herrington noted that Jackson always watched his cholesterol intake. For breakfast, he usually shunned eggs, but nonetheless, often ordered a small steak and a glass of juice.

Just last year, Jackson's wife, Helen, mentioned to us that her husband was healthy and vigorous.

"He gets to bed early, keeps to his diet, doesn't smoke and swims every day in the Senate gym when he's in Washington," she said. "He comes from a hardy stock."

One of the things we remember most about Jackson is that he knew how to laugh.

Some politicians will make an effort to laugh at something they think they recognize as a joke, but you can tell their hearts aren't really in it—you can see in their eyes that they aren't really sure if the punchline has been reached, and they wait nervously for a clue from those around them that it's time to laugh.

Scoop Jackson knew how to laugh, especially at himself. The last time we talked with him for a couple of minutes, he told a little story about walking into the wrong room for a meeting, finding some unknown group in session, and not knowing how to walk back out gracefully with everyone watching him and wondering what was going on.

"I just gave them a little wave and turned around," he said.

The Senator was closely identified with nuclear energy development, and although he became identified considerably with the weapons aspect of atomic energy, he also maintained a big interest in its peaceful uses.

He was a frequent visitor to the Hanford atomic plant in Central Washington, and was one of the most knowledgeable individuals in the country on the problems and issues of that complex.

During the 1950s, Jackson's office was besieged with complaints from Richland residents when the federal government decided to sell the town, particularly after the sales prices of the federally owned houses had been announced. In one of the most turbulent periods of the Richland transition to private ownership, Jackson told one of the present INK writers:

"Sometimes I feel like I'm mayor of that town."

Scoop always took things in stride, even if he was upstaged.

Columbian writer John Harrison recalled the day Scoop walked into the newsroom at the same time a former Mr. Universe was flexing his muscles in the photo studio. The photo studio curtains had been drawn, but there was enough of a gap to give a tantalizing view. Columbian employees were naturally intrigued and a sizable number went to peek between the curtains. In the midst of the excitement, no one saw Scoop, who was standing at a reception desk waiting for someone to notice him.

Jackson had a knack for making people feel at ease with him.

Columbian writer Jim Stasiowski remembered meeting Jackson last June at the dedication of the second powerhouse at Bonneville Dam.

"By chance, I ran into Jackson in one of the powerhouse's huge passageways. He was running a hand through his hair, talking to a couple of his advisers. He wasn't smiling.

"I decided, as a reporter, I had to butt in even though the talk seemed to be pretty heavy, I stuck my hand out and introduced myself. Jackson looked a little startled, but returned the handshake and listened carefully to my name. He and his aides were getting into an elevator. Jackson invited me to ride along, and I did. He asked where I was from and how I liked the Northwest. Then he opened his briefcase, pulled out a copy of his speech and gave it to me. That's usually the kind of mundane activity press aides handle.

"Before the ceremony and after it, crowds came to Jackson's side asking for autographs. He was the one celebrity among all the others most people wanted to talk to.

"I had to interrupt again, to clarify something he'd said in his speech. He was gracious and answered my questions. I thanked him, and he said, "See you later, Jim,' as he hurried away to his car."

Columbian editor Tom Koenninger said he was often amazed at the Senator's encyclopedic knowledge" of foreign issues.

When Jackson would meet here with Columbian editors, he invariably covered the spectrum of current foreign policy matters, occasionally stopping to chide gently the editors if they showed the slightest indication of not being up to the same level of knowledge on those issues.

As one of the most powerful members of Congress, Jackson impressed many Clark County residents.

Before he was assistant city editor, The Columbian's David Kern spent nearly six years trailing politicians, and Kern remembers that few had as classy a style as Jackson.

"I remember the fall of 1980 when Jackson was stumping for Ron Dotzauer, the former Clark County auditor was narrowly defeated for Washington secretary of state that year," Kern said.

"On the front lawn of the beautiful home owned by Larry Cassidy, which overlooks Vancouver Lake, Jackson gazed out and noted that the Washington delegation had worked hard to get millions of federal dollars to help clean up the lake. He wasn't boasting, simply detailing how the delegation did not forget things important to folks at home.

"Jackson also noted that he had pushed through a proviso that Columbia River water not even be studied for possible diversion to the Southwest until 1988.

"To get the proviso through, Jackson told the crowd, 'I told Bobby Byrd (then Senate majority leader from West Virginia), 'Now don't talk loud. Mumble a lot.'

"Jackson gave a short speech that night from the elevated dining area, a couple of stairs higher than the adjoining room. Jackson, not a tall man, always tried to position himself above the crowd."

[From the Columbian, Sept. 5, 1983]

SENATOR JACKSON TOTALLY DEDICATED LIFE TO JOB

(By Jewett, Van Arsdol, and Beck)

We got several responses from our request for recollections about the late Sen. Henry Jackson on Friday, so here are a few more:

Columbian City Editor Gregg Herrington covered Jackson while he worked for the Associated Press in Washington., D.C., for five years, and travelled with him on some of his 1972 campaign trips.

Jackson was a physical fitness buff who liked to swim in the Senate Office Building pool, which was reserved exclusively for senators. Jackson said the senators often swam in the nude although that was always subject to change depending on whether women were elected to the Senate.

In general, Herrington said, Jackson presented a bit of an "old-shoe" image.

"He lived and breathed his work, not marrying and starting a family until relatively late in life. A Washington, D.C., friend said his bachelor apartment was always strewn with newspapers. Jackson worked until late at night, then came home and read papers and went to bed for a few hours before going back to work again.

"His staffers said he simply had had no interest in anything excpet his job. Sterling Munro, Scoop's former administrative assistant, said Jackson couldn't even go fishing without taking his work with him. He said Jackson would call in by ship-to-shore radio to see what was going on.

"But he had his unpleasant side, too. Critics said he was so entrenched in Washington—state and district—that he developed a bit of a holier-than-thou attitude regarding many public issues. He showed little patience for people who challenged his views during news conferences or public forums. He also was found of saying that he had earlier predicted some course of world politics that had eventually occurred."

Columbian reporter Bob Sisson was an intern at The Columbian in 1974 when he met Jackson at Al Hunziker's Douglas Service Station, 6510 Mill Plain Blvd.

That was during the worst of the gasoline shortage. Jackson told a small group of gas dealers who gathered at the station that they might get more fuel to sell within a few days.

A few days passed, and no gas arrived. By coincidence, Sisson's girlfriend, Mary, (now his wife) was on a college study tour of Washington, D.C., and her group was scheduled to meet with Jackson. So, Mary asked the senator what had happened with his efforts to get more gas in Clark County.

Emergency gas allocations arrived here within a few days. The Sissons never did find out if they had anything to do with it.

Columbian photographer Dave Olson remembers that Jackson came across as a personal friend, rather than as just another political candidate on a public relations tour.

When Olson photographed Jackson during a tour of Alcoa, Jackson made it a point to stand in the best light.

"He obviouisly knew something about photography, probably from many years of being photographed. If he saw me miss a shot, he would hold up until I could get it," Olson said.

"He asked my name and when he found out I was of Norwegian descent, he started talking to me in some broken 'Norsky,' mostly kind little idioms. And on one occasion, when he found out a man was just retiring from the plant, he said, 'Come on over here, Ole, and take a picture of me with this retiring gentleman.' "

"Ole," said Olson, "is a nickname that I haven't heard in years."

Few people realize it, but Jackson was instrumental in helping many people up the ladder to positions of power.

In 1978, Seattle attorney John Salter, for years a Jackson aide and confidant, noted the influence of Scoop.

"Jackson was mainly responsible for the election of four Democrats in 1964—(Lloyd) Meeds, (Tom) Foley, Floyd Hicks and Brock Adams," said Salter, who was executive director of the National Democratic Committee in 1960, the year Scoop chaired the panel. "He more or less selected them, drafted them and used a great deal of his campaign money because he had very little opposition."

Of his staff members, Jackson said: "I have always followed a rule, in my own self-interest, that I should get the very best I can. I try to pick people that are smarter than I am."

Columbian reporter Pat Moser met Jackson in the spring of 1972, when it had become apparent that George McGovern was winning the Democratic nomination for president as an anti-Vietnam War candidate.

Hawkish Henry Jackson was ready to withdraw from the race, but he put off his announcement so he could keep a promise to meet with farmers and ranchers in Pendleton.

At a lunch and reception, Jackson wore a cowboy hat. He slapped backs and swapped stories about the various regional issues they had faced together.

Moser had the impression that Jackson was happier with a bunch of cowboys than he was explaining to anti-war demonstrators on the presidential campaign trail his support for the Vietnam War effort.

[From the Oregonian, Sept. 13, 1983]

ROLE MODEL

(By Jonathan Nicholas)

Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson will be missed for lots of reasons. Not the least of them is the fact that he served as a role model of the kind of moral character a community has every right to expect in its public servants.

We live at a time when political figures (especially those who recently have been discredited and/or imprisoned) command outrageous sums on the lecture circuit. From 1952, when he was first elected to the U.S. Senate, Jackson anonymously gave to charity every penny that he earned from his public speaking engagements.

In recent years, Jackson gave away as much as $50,000 annually to the Gertrude Jackson Memorial Fund, a trust he established in his sister's name to grant scholarships to children in the school district of his Everett home. Some skeptics might view this sort of generosity as public posturing. So sometimes we have to take note of the little things to give the truest indication of the character of a man.

When Ken Lewis, president of Lasco Shipping Co. of Portland, was flying from Japan to China last month, he shared a flight with Jackson, who was en route to Peking for a meeting with Deng Xiaoping. No sooner had the plane taken off from the Tokyo airport than a stewardess approached Jackson inviting him to go forward into the plane's first-class cabin. Politely, the senator declined.

A few minutes later, the chief steward stopped by, urging Jackson to permit the cabin staff to upgrade his seating. Again Jackson declined. Finally, the co-pilot himself came back. The staff really would be honored, he explained, to be able to serve the senator in the first-class cabin. Jackson turned to one of his aides. "Would you mind doing me a favor?" he asked. "Go sit in the first-class section so I can stay here and chat."

[From the Daily News, Sept. 11, 1983]

JACKSON'S DEATH A SETBACK FOR ALASKA, NATION

(By Guy Martin)

WASHINGTON.—Somehow, I guess I expected Scoop Jackson to live forever. His gave us the kind of bedrock leadership and graceful exercise of power that created confidence that he was here to stay—a fixed part of American life and politics.

For me and many others, his death was the uncommon event, the one that grabs at your guts and tells you unmistakably that, this time, things are really going to change. Clearly, those who eulogized him, and they were many, diverse and eloquent, were not prepared for his loss. People across an unbelievable spectrum of political beliefs and roles in American life created an outpouring of respect and affection for the senator which was as unrestrained and genuine as I can recall.

The warmth felt by so many toward Senator Jackson transcended a diverse, and to some a politically contradictory, set of political accomplishments and beliefs. As was often acknowledged, it was the personal qualities of the man and his ability to be a forceful advocate without making enemies which allowed both conservatives and liberals to remember him as a great man.

Historians will search diligently through Sen. Jackson's career for unifying themes, attempting to reconcile his unswerving support of the military, new weapons systems and a hard line towards communism with his strong support of social welfare programs and the traditional domestic programs of liberal Democratic politics. They will struggle to rationalize his energy policy leadership, his support of nuclear energy and a highly subsidized federal synthetic fuels development program with his acknowledged record of accomplishment in the environmental and resource management areas where he was either the author or the major factor in the passage of dozens of landmark laws, such as the National Environmental Policy Act.

For those struggling for the central theme in all this, let me suggest that Sen. Jackson was, first and foremost, convinced of the power and creativity of the federal government to solve serious problems, whether through a firm foreign policy backed by a strong military capability, special programs to help the poor and disadvantaged, support of the American labor movement, or strong federal laws to protect the environment or promote the development of energy resources.

Sen. Jackson's record with respect to Alaska bears the same hallmarks as his national career. Four federal actions have shaped the modern history of Alaska, and on each, Sen. Jackson played a key role. He was an acknowledged leader and supporter in the statehood movement, ultimately joining with an earlier generation of Alaska leaders to win the victory in 1958. Beginning in the mid 1960s, when the aboriginal land claims of Alaska Natives were too controversial within the state for the Alaska delegation to take strong advocacy positions in Congress, it was Sen. Jackson to whom Alaska Natives turned for leadership on the issue. He responded, and ultimately made the difference in the passage of a federally dictated settlement in 1971. Although time has exposed some defects in the act, it stands unquestioned as an act of justice toward Alaska Natives, and clearly laid the foundations for the two remaining federal actions which sculpted modern Alaska—The Trans-Alaska Pipeline Act and the Alaska Lands Act.

The development of Prudhoe Bay, made possible by the construction of TAPS, stands as the most important economic event in modern Alaska history, yet it proceeded on the schedule it did over the objections of Henry Jackson. His dissent was grounded in the belief that the National Environmental Policy Act, of which he was correctly called the father, should not be waived even for a project as important as TAPS. With Alaska senators on one side and Jackson on the other an historic Senate floor debate took place in 1975, decided finally by a tie vote broken by Vice President Spiro Agnew in favor of the NEPA waiver. The resolution of this single issue is felt by many to be the determining event in the early completion of TAPS and its contribution to the national energy supply.

Depending on one's perspective, it can be debated whether the contribution of TAPS is greater than the damage to NEPA, but there is little doubt that Jackson's position was consistent with his overall view of federal supremacy and sound environmental laws to control such decisions, rather than the political exigencies of the time.

Although less visible, Jackson's role in the final chapter of federal land allocations in Alaska, the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act, also was profound. Cast in extreme terms in Alaska as an "us versus them" fight against national environmentalists, Jackson would have none of it. Rather, he was the skillful advocate for passage of a bill, and the shaper of compromises, which protected vast portions of federal land in Alaska for future generations. While it must have been-confusing for some Alaskans to see the "Senator from Boeing" apparently moving against Alaska commercial interests, his role was no surprise to those who understood his dedication to environmental values, or knew, as he did, that the best path to Alaska's future would be to end the political bloodshed over the d-2 issue.

Considering it all, how you mark your Alaska scorecard on Scoop Jackson allows for some perspective, but not much. His contributions and dedication to the state were immense, and he was often a leader on Alaska issues when our own delegation was not enough. Search as you will for his successor as "Alaska's Third Senator," and you will learn all you need to know.

[From the Journal American, Sept. 11, 1983]

JACKSON PROVED RIGHT IN DISTRUST OF SOVIET UNION

(By John McClelland)

Yes, remember him—remember Jackson, a towering leader on the American scene—but also remember what he kept saying—what he admonished us about. With that resolve I dug out my Jackson file after the funeral and began to read.

A recurring theme runs through his writings—deep distrust of the Soviet Union. A warning was repeated over and over—America must not be deceived, not be misled, must not misjudge. Russia doesn't change. Its devotion to Communist revolution does not diminish. Its militarism menaces our ability even to survive.

Here is the start of a letter, dating as far back as 1969:

"As you know, I have long believed that in trying to make wise decisions on national security issues, it is important to understand the nature of the adversary. I have been pointing out that the Soviet Union is an opportunistic, unpredictable opponent with rapidly expanding military capabilities, and that, far from moving away from Stalinism, there are increased signs within Russia of a move to the right—toward a domestic hard line.

At the funeral in Everett Warren Magnuson, Jackson's colleague in Congress for four decades, said his departed close friend was a prophet. And now that he mentions it, Jackson was a prophet, especially about Russia.

For now this nation, like the rest of the world, is shaken as it has seldom been before by a new act of barbarism on the part of Russia. Recall other Russian international offenses in the last dozen years—tanks into Czechoslovakia to suppress attempts by the Czechs to enlarge their freedoms; armies into Afghanistan to destroy that ancient country's independence and bring it into the Soviet camp; the Soviet army mobilized on the borders of Poland while Soviet emissaries converged on Warsaw to dictate the terms of suppression for the Solidarity movement.

All three instances provoked worldwide indignation, angry protests, inflammatory rhetoric in the United Nations, and a few economic reprisals. But our "adversary," as Jackson described it, was not disturbed. No nation can step in and interfere with what Moscow undertakes to do. Furthermore, it reasons, people have short memories. Their passions die down. The smoke clears away. Anger is replaced by normal optimism that somehow, some way, Russia won't go on like this. Vast quantities of soothing words pour out from Moscow to encourgage that belief.

Then, unexpectedly, it happens again. This time a Korean airliner carrying 269 passengers is shot down by a Soviet fighter plane, acting on orders from its base. This is shocking. Almost unbelievable. So everyone turns toward Moscow for an explanation. An error must have been made—a tragic error. Surely in a few hours the Russian government will explain, express remorse and even offer to do something for the relatives of the victims.

That did not happens. And Sen. Jackson died that day, shortly after his last chance to say again what he knew to be the truth about the Soviet rulers. He proved to be prophetic—again—about the Soviet Union.

Even in the face of worldwide condemnation the Russian rulers, far from being disturbed that their military had deliberately killed a plane full of civilians, took a haughty and defiant stance. In essence they said that the plane had "intruded" into Soviet air space. It deserved to be shot down.

This attitude can't be explainded solely in terms of Russia's paranoid preoccupation with security and deep-seated distrust of all foreigners, although that feeling is a dominant characteristic of everything Russian. What it tells us—again—is that Russians are not like Americans, or Britons, or French or any other people who are governed by those chosen by the people to govern. They don't share our beliefs about human freedoms. That is perfectly obvious. But neither do they share our concepts about the value of human lives.

Kremlin leaders must be frankly puzzled by the extent of the world reaction to their shooting down of one plane—just one plane. The military was doing its duty, wasn't it? Foreign planes must stay out of Russia's air space and this was a good chance to make that plain. In the long run it will help Russian security.

Sen. Jackson applauded those who warned us of what is called the "mirror image" fallacy. We tend to look at Russian people and see them as people like ourselves. Then we attribute to them our values, our beliefs, our sense of justice, our compassion, our abhorrence of human suffering. And that's wrong. They aren't like that, much as our sense of charity makes us want to believe that they are. Jimmy Carter was one who believed Russia's smiling appeals for detente—to live and let live. He was as surprised and dismayed as any when Afghanistan was invaded.

Scoop Jackson, a dozen years ago, sent us a series of five articles about Russia, written by a Washington Post reporter who spent two years in Moscow before being thrown out. His theme was that the Soviet leaders who took over after Nikita Khrushchev was deposed were all cast in the Stalinist mold and were turning back the clock. He named seven Kremlin leaders who had made this decision and were working to implement it. One was Brezhnev. Another was Andropov, the man now in power who was then head of the most dreaded of weapons used to control the people—the KGB (security police). It is Andropov who has nothing remorseful to say about the slaughter of the innocents in the air off Sakhalin.

If Scoop Jackson could have lived even one more month he would have had time to repeat what he has been saying all through his public career, and this time all would have listened. For this time the Russian leaders have badly misjudged the West. Action against an entire country—Czechoslovakia, Afghanistan, Poland—could be gotten away with. Adverse consequences were not long lasting. Those hostile actions had the appearance of political moves, bad but at least explainable in terms of Russian self interest.

The shooting down of a civilian plane and then trying to lie their way out of it is something else. That kind of thing everyone can understand. No high level politics involved. It is an act of raw cruelty and arrogance not seen since Hitler and it lays the Russian character bare.

Why couldn't the Russian rulers have foreseen this reaction? Why couldn't they have realized that the consequences of an attempt to cover up would far outweigh on the adverse side the little good that can come from another warning for planes to stay clear of Russian coastlines?

Because the Russians are different. They think differently.

In our society the individual has first rights. The state exists to protect and implement those rights, including the right of each person to control his own destiny. The state belongs to the people. They control it. Human life is sacred. An individual must be respected and helped, when needed, by the people as a whole acting through their government. That is all we know. It is our way.

In the communist society all rights have been collected into a whole—the state. The individual is a part of that whole and so must conform to it. Unity is everything. What is good for the state is good for the whole. There can be no majorities and minorities. The majority is everyone. No dissent is needed so none can be tolorated. No criticism of leadership can serve any good purpose, so none is allowed. This model of society is so good that eventually it must encompass the whole world. Thus it is the duty of the Soviet to encourage and help revolutionary movements in any country that can cause them to become like Russia.

Scoop Jackson wrote this in a Reader's Digest article:

"We must maintain the strength and resolve to discourage and deter Soviet expansion. The only safe way to negotiate with the Russians is to keep our eyes open and to bargain from strong positions. It is on this basis that I favor negotiating with Moscow on the reciprocal limitation or reduction of offensive and defensive nuclear forces.

"Obviously our resources are limited—though not so limited as those of the adversary—and we must use them with discrimination and prudence, recognizing that we have urgent and vital tasks at home as well as abroad. The United States will not lag behind any nation in beating its swords into plowshares when the day comes that others will join us. Meanwhile, in these fateful and difficult times, Americans must be prepared to accept the responsibilities of a great power, lest international crises get out of hand and the chances of peace go glimmering.

"Winston Churchill said the right words to us: 'The price of greatness is responsibility.'"

This was written in 1969. The words of a prophet are worth rereading and remembering.

[From the Waitsburg (Wash.) Times, Sept. 8, 1983]

TOMFOOLERY

The State of Washington lost one of its outstanding citizens this past week in the sudden and unexpected death of Senator Henry M. Jackson.

We did not see the TV interview made shortly before the fatal heart attack, but we understand he had been suffering from some sort of upper respiratory infection which he got on his recent trip to China.

We have to admit that our contacts with Sen. Jackson were not plentiful, since he lived on the west side of the State. We did meet him at a couple of press meetings, at a reception in Walla Walla and one time when he came to speak Waitsburg as a favor to Lee Mantz, Sr., who was a good friend.

We know of many people who voted for "Scoop" even though he was on the ticket of the opposite party. They did it, we have gathered, because they admired his qualifications and never felt that he was running against anyone who measured up.

As one friend said this past weekend, he must have been a strong person to survive the battles in Washington, D.C. for some 40-plus years.

His personal history made him a candidate of much appeal for many who had similar backgrounds. He was raised in the Everett area, and his widowed mother had to take in boarders to make ends meet during the days of his early childhood.

His nickname came because he was a paper carrier, and his record there reflected his dedication to duty. He delivered some 84,000 newspapers without a single complaint. We will never know whether that was an actual figure, or whether as a lad he was such as effective politician that he could smooth things over.

Jackson was a man of records. He recently was congratulated by his colleagues in the Senate for his 11,000th vote in that body, an unusual record when considering how many of them are at other business when votes are recorded. He was as diligent at being a Senator as he was at being a paper boy.

Another point that endeared him to the general public was the fact that he worked his way through the University of Washington and Stanford Law School. He was not a person who was born to wealth or position, but he did the very best at whatever he attempted, and people of modest means can relate to that better than they can to a Teddy Kennedy, for example.

We remember a press conference at WWCC a few years back when Jackson was asked to comment on the social welfare programs. He mentioned the fact that in the early days there were no government help programs. He said his mother worked very hard to keep his family fed and clothed, and it was the custom in those days not to seek outside help.

He didn't look at his background as a reason for any bitterness, but could see the value in some of the subsistence programs which would take the edge off the suffering and misery which some people endure.

We were perhaps the most personally impressed with the fact that he did not take any money personally for his speaking engagements.

A lot of paper and ink have been spent telling of the various honorariums which are given to congressional speakers who command $10,000 or $15,000 for a single talk.

"Scoop" had established a benevolent fund which received all of the funds which were generated by Sen. Jackson's speaking engagements. He apparently did not want to feel that he was compromising his position as a Senator in any way, and in his day of megabucks, that is a refreshing position.

Senators, and Congressmen in general, deal with folks who command salaries in multiples of what they are making. Even though it may seem to the man on the street that the Congress is well paid, their salaries and perks do not represent the top of the economic heap in any manner.

A person would have to have some very special character ingredients to be able to withstand those pressures.

"Scoop" Jackson was apparently one who could do it.

At one or two of the conferences we attended at which the Senator was present, when we were introduced as being from Waitsburg, the Senator would always ask about Lee Mantz, Sr. How he was doing, and if everything was going well.

One of the sidebar stories in the AP described; the friendliness of Sen. Jackson—how he never forgot the home folks. His concern about Lee Mantz was certainly an indication of that. He and Lee, Sr., apparently got acquainted early-on through Democratic politics in Walla Walla County. Lee was a strong supporter of Jackson, and he never forgot.

One of the things that both Sen. Warren Magnuson and Sen. Jackson did was to make sure that federal money found its way into the State of Washington. They were responsible for a goodly chunk of the State's federal impact funds, and thus were able to help the folks "back home" in many ways.

The State will not have the position of strength in the Senate as it once had when it was represented with long-term officeholders who were in high-level committee responsibilities.

One of the matters which must have been very troubling to the Senator was the condition of the WPPS project. It did, of course, bring money into the State, but we are sure it was not his wish to have it take the wrong financial turn which it did.

We can remember one of the times when Sen. Jackson spoke in Waitsburg at the Legion Club Banquet Rooms.

Someone asked about our relationships with the Russians, and he spent the better part of half an hour relating some horror stories about our relationships with the Soviets. He was an acknowledged "hawk" in defense terms, but he felt he had enough background on the Russians to understand that the United States does not ever want to be at their mercy.

The recent incident of the shooting down of the Korean Air Lines jet must have been deeply troubling to the Senator.

His trip to China, although useful diplomatically, also takes its toll physically and mentally.

It may sound as if travelling is loads of fun—it is. But it is also lots of work. And we never envy anyone who has to jet across the world and live for weeks out of a suitcase.

In doing his job, Sen. Jackson gave what Abraham Lincoln would have called his "last full measure of devotion . . ."

We were richer because of Sen. Jackson, and the State and nation will be poorer at his loss.

[From the Walla Walla (Wash.) Union Bulletin, Sept. 2, 1983]

STATE LOSES A DEAR FRIEND

The honest and sincere people of the world lost a leader and a friend Thursday night upon the death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson. Jackson was one of those rare individuals who rose to a position of power without forgetting his roots, without forgetting the people who helped him attain that power.

No greater compliment can be paid to Jackson than the fact that he was equally respected by conservatives and liberals, not only throughout eastern and western Washington, but throughout the nation. He stood up for what he believed in—a strong national defense, civil rights, the rights of common laborers and conservation—but was not so inflexible that he was not able to compromise to reach a reasonable solution to a problem.

That Jackson was a very special individual became readily apparent at an early age when the Everett Herald gave him a commendation for delivering 84,000 papers without a single customer complaint. Anyone who has ever received a late newspaper or a wet newspaper can appreciate that achievement, almost unheard of in the newspaper industry.

After distinguishing himself at the University of Washington, where he earned a law degree in 1935, Jackson built a reputation as a racket-buster as Snohomish County prosecuting attorney that carried him to a seat in the U.S. House in 1940.

Ever since the question has been not if Jackson would win re-election, but by how much. It can truthfully be said that if Jackson was proud of the fact that he never ran a race he did not win, the state of Washington was even prouder. For state residents were well aware of that fact that for every rise in prominence Jackson personally achieved, that rise meant an equal rise in prominence for the state of Washington. Jackson will forever be remembered as the state's first serious candidate for both the vice-presidency in 1960 and the presidency in 1972 and 1976.

Ralph Waldo Emerson once said the greatest success is confidence or perfect understanding between sincere people. Utilizing that definition of success, Sen. Henry Jackson was one of the greatest success stories in state and national history.

[From the Seattle (Wash.) West Seattle Herald, Sept. 7, 1983]

SCOOP NEVER LOST CREDIBILITY BATTLE

Scoop Jackson's death last week came on a Thursday night, sandwiched between the final episode of the Godfather and the late news, in which Jackson's death overshadowed updates on the shooting down of a South Korean airliner by a Soviet pilot. It was an ironic time to die.

It was ironic because Jackson's political career rivalled the Godfather's for longevity and drama. He took two runs at the presidency, served more than 30 years, and spoke out often and assertively about the risk of Soviet aggression. Sid Morrison, a relative newcomer to Washington's congressional delegation—he represents the state's 4th district—praised Jackson for his help in making Morrison welcome in the nation's capital. It was the sort of Godfatherly backup that a newcomer needs to adjust to the demands of office.

Jackson was also a Godfather of sorts to thousands of constituents, from senior citizens who needed his help in getting benefits to kids who sought appointment to military academies. In paying those dues to the people who elected him. Jackson had no peers. He was an advocate with a capital A, a man who delivered for this state and its people.

The tragedy of the South Korean airliner only doubled the irony. He commented on the issue earlier that day, showing his determination to keep the Soviets in line, his hardline rhetoric on militray readiness. His remarks were in keeping with his reputation; less visible was his scholarly knowledge about Soviet history and tactics. Without consulting a note, Jackson could—and would—reel off names, dates and places in which Russian history proved his point. He was no knee-jerk patriot, no friend to the paranoid political view that a Red lurked behind every protest sign.

Still, there were times he had little patience with what he must have viewed as soft-headed thinking about political realities. Jackson was a realist, not only because of his long tenure in the cloakrooms of Washington, D.C., but because as a student of Soviet tactics he saw every move of the Politburo as a calculated one, in a career that began a year before Stalin's death and the emergence of Nikita Khrushchev. Though the invasion of Hungary in 1956 was a powerful example of Russia's blueprint for world dominance, Scoop had already established himself as an adversary of hysterical red-baiters in his nationally televised debates with Sen. Joseph McCarthy in 1954.

Specializing in defense, Jackson did not become enmired by the technology that hypnotized others, but used that expertise to lobby against strategic arms limitation treaties. On the domestic front he was a champion of hydroelectric resources in the state as well as an early advocate of nuclear power. But he was no patsy for the energy industry. In his role as a spokesman for environmental protection, he led the fight for the 1969 National Environmental Policy Act, and was a strong advocate of land use planning and parks and wilderness legislation.

The nickname was given to him by a sister when he was a carrier boy for the Everett Herald, delivering nearly 75,000 copies of the paper without a single complaint. It was an early sign of the kind of career he was to have. Steadfast, service-oriented, grounded in his instinct for hard work and attention to detail.

Never linked with the scandal that ruined the careers of others during his long tenure, Scoop is most likely to be remembered for his exemplary character, a quality difficult to sustain in the heady atmosphere of Washington, D.C. It gave him credibility when others lacked it, and set a standard for anyone who aspires to high office.

[From the Gig Harbor (Wash.) Peninsula Gateway, Sept. 7, 1983]

SENATOR JACKSON: HE WILL BE MISSED

Just about everything that can be said about the importance of the late Sen. Henry Jackson to the state of Washington has been said or written during the week since his death.

There is no doubt his shoes will be hard to fill. His tenure in the Congress gave this state a powerful voice in democracy. And the fact Jackson was considered qualified to be seriously considered as a candidate for the offices of vice president and president shows his strength and leadership abilities were known throughout this nation and the world.

We are pleased that Gov. John Spellman will wait until Jackson's funeral before making what must be a complex and hard political decision in replacing Jackson in the Senate.

With questions of seniority and even control of the entire Senate at stake, the political implications of Republican Spellman's decision to replace a Democrat could be immense.

The best move for the state would be for Spellman to select the best qualified person, regardless of party affiliation, who could immediately command respect and contribute to Congress and this state.

A couple of names come to mind—U.S. Rep. Tom Foley of Spokane and former governor Dan Evans.

Sen. Jackson will be remembered for years to come. We are a better nation thanks in part to his efforts.

[From the Anchorage (Alaska) News, Sept. 4, 1983]

SEN. HENRY JACKSON, FRIEND AND STATESMAN

Sen. Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson knew Alaska nearly as well as our state's own delegation in Congress, and as a friend of long standing. He also knew, as a U.S. Senator must, how to rise to the national interest and confront the issues that concern us all.

That's why he could perform the delicate feats of legislative statecraft needed to nudge the Alaska Statehood Act through Congress in 1958. That's why he could speak forcefully for the interests of Alaska Natives in drafting and implementing the Alaska Native Claims Settlement Act—a measure that not only answered the claims of Native people in our state, but also cleared the path for construction of the trans-Alaska pipeline. That's why he could play an honest broker's role in the seven-year fight over the Alaska National Interest Lands Conservation Act—able to communicate with all sides because he had earned all sides' respect.

Scoop Jackson was a Cold War liberal—nowadays termed a "neoconservative"—who expressed the American post-war consensus for strong national defense and equally vital social services. He was a lifelong Democrat and, after 43 years of service, perhaps the last New Dealer in Congress. He split with much of his party and most other liberals over American involvement in Vietnam, and he long provided the focus in Congress for opposition to the Soviet Union and the policy of detente. He championed the causes of labor, environmentalism, civil rights, Israel, anti-communism and American minorities. He earned the respect of all sides in Congress. Senate colleagues who often disagreed with him were among the first to eulogize his service in Congress and contributions to public life.

It was ironic, perhaps, that his death Thursday evening was overshadowed by the downing of a Korean airliner by Soviet fighters near Siberia. Sen. Jackson had spent most of his career denouncing conditions in the Soviet Union and effectively battling for what he thought would keep the U.S. and the West ahead in the conflict between the superpowers. His staff on the Senate Armed Services Committee became a think tank for high-quality strategic analysis with a conservative, anti-Soviet bent.

The headlines on Thursday belonged to Georgia Rep. Larry MacDonald, the John Birch Society chairman who died when the Korean airliner went down. But Sen. Jackson did more every day to oppose Soviet abuse of power than Rep. MacDonald did in a career—because he was thoughtful and fair, informed and hardheaded, subtle and legislatively deft.

Alaskans benefited from those skills on a wide range of issues—and consistently found in Sen. Jackson a sympathetic ear, a voice of reason, a reserve of energy, and a politician of real savvy. They will miss him, as will a nation that long relied on his statesmanship.

[From the Washington Daily News-Miner, Sept. 3, 1983]

ALASKA LOSES A FRIEND

When Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson looked at Alaska more than three decades ago, he saw a territory that he believed would one day make major contributions to the United States.

His foresight proved highly accurate. In those early days before statehood, he became an advocate for Alaska whose constancy never wavered.

Alaska lost a true friend when Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson died Thursday after a massive heart attack at his home in Everett, Wash.

Jackson, 71, served 12 years in the U.S. House and 31 years in the U.S. Senate, becoming a powerful force in U.S. politics.

His stature was such that he twice sought the Democratic presidential nominations—in 1972 and 1976—though neither try was successful. His advocacy of Alaskan interests gave us an edge that we badly needed and will sorely miss.

Sen. Jackson—along with Washington's junior senator, Warren Magnuson—helped Alaskan delegate and eventually Sen. E. L. "Bob" Bartlett on many occasions. When Bartlett died in 1968 and Gov. Walter Hickel named Ted Stevens to the Senate seat, Jackson befriended Stevens as well, and their friendship ripened over the years, despite their different party affiliations.

"Alaska will always be indebted to Scoop Jackson," Stevens said Friday. "He was floor manager of the Alaska statehood bill in 1958 and successfully guided it through the Senate without amendment. Without his efforts, in all probability we would not have become a state at that time."

Stevens added: "Scoop Jackson should be remembered by Alaskans because he freely gave of his time and talents to assist Alaska—to become a member of the union and to succeed as a new state."

Sen. Jackson was able to see the need to balance economic development with environmental protection and settlement of the land claims of Alaska's Natives.

He became a good friend to Alaskan Natives, sponsoring the land claims settlement act that passed in 1971 and maintaining an active interest in implementation of the act and resolution of continuing problems.

At the same time, he saw the need to develop Alaska's natural resources and led the drive for the Trans-Alaska Pipeline Authorization Act in 1973 that paved the way for construction of the Alyeska Pipeline Service Co., oil pipeline. He also spearheaded efforts to build a natural gas transmission system from the North Slope.

As chairman of the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee, he chaired more than 40 committee sessions called to draft acceptable Alaska lands legislation. After four years of work, a bill was passed in 1980.

He supported a strong military presence in Alaska, recognizing our state's strategic importance. Through his seat on the Senate Armed Services Committee, he fought to maintain military strength in Alaska.

With his death Thursday, the nation has lost a powerful political leader whose perception and consistency will be hard to replace. And Alaska has lost a true friend.

[From the Camas-Washougal (Wash.) Record, Sept. 6, 1983]

"SCOOP" JACKSON NEARLY PRESIDENT

(By Hal Zimmerman)

U.S. Senator Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson, elected to six consecutive terms in the House of Representatives, and to six consecutive terms in the U.S. Senate, came to Camas and Clark County often. That will explain his success as a politician.

From my first meeting of "Scoop" Jackson when he spoke to the Sedro-Woolley Rotary Club at the Gateway Hotel in 1948 until my last meeting with him at Rock Creek Center, Stevenson, the day he and Senator Hatfield helped dedicate the Second Powerhouse at North Bonneville, June 1, he was always the gentleman, and he had changed little over the years.

It was not his intellect, brilliance or glibness that made Henry Jackson a man to remember or admire. It was his common, direct, friendly style. He was a likeable person. He was a conscientious legislator. His personal efforts assisted the resolution of citizenship problems faced by Mrs. David (Lucy) Rice, and others with immigration problems.

Although it was easy to disagree with some of his economic approaches in government, and his solutions usually meant spending more taxpayer money, he had a firm feeling about his job: He believed sincerely in a strong defense for America and he had a real distrust of the Soviet Union. President Nixon asked him to serve as his

Secretary of Defense, a position Jackson turned down.

Senator Jackson came to Camas regularly, and reported to the Chamber of Commerce. His conscientous effort to respond to requests of citizens with problems earned him a reputation for being able to get things done in Washington, D.C.

His seniority and several committee assignments gave him "clout," and he used it with a gentleness and finesse that proved essential when in the 1980 election, resulting in Republican majority in the Senate, he lost his major chairmanships.

Because he was so highly respected, he did not get pushed aside, but was able to work well with the majority leaders. Sen. Hatfield expressed this June 1.

Although his two campaigns for U.S. presidential nominations on the Democratic ticket did not succeed, Senator Jackson was still considered a powerful leader in his party. Ironically, many considered him the best possible running mate for John Kennedy in 1960, and if he had received that nod, he would have served as president.

The fact he was defeated for the 1972 nomination (taken by Sen. George McGovern), and the 1976 nomination by Jimmy Carter, did not detract from his ability to serve the people of Washington.

He was the main speaker for the 1970 Centennial Paperama celebration of the Crown Zellerbach corporation. He and his wife Helen both came to Camas, and were the top special guests for the celebration. He and Denis Hayes both spoke that night. Denis was being honored by the Camas-Washougal Jaycees for environmental work. Sen Jackson had sponsored the 1969 National Environmental Policy Act.

Senator Jackson, whose early name "Scoop" came from his dependability as a newspaper carrier, was a lawyer by education, a county prosecutor, and then a U.S. Representative before moving to the Senate.

He kept in physical condition by swimming and walking, and he did not smoke, and drank but little. He had a great deal of poise, self-esteem, and was comfortable with himself, but had a genuine humility.

Before labor groups and teachers he could speak with powerful convictions and stir his listeners but he was not considered an orator, and his speeches were generally marked for being informative, rather than inspirational.

There seems little doubt that the emotional stress, strain and frustrations accompanying the Soviets' shooting down of the unarmed Korean airliner, and his own related feelings contributed to the senator's heart attack and death.

The Norwegian legislator from Everett will rank among the finest legislators in the history of Washington state and the nation.

[From the Miami Herald, Sept. 3, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON

When Henry M. "Scoop" Jackson first took a seat in Congress, Franklin D. Roosevelt was President. It was January 1941. The nation still suffering from the Great Depression. The name Pearl Harbor would remain unfamiliar for another 11 months.

Since then, America and the world have undergone vast transformations. Throughout them all, Scoop Jackson played a continuous leading role in guiding this nation. He died suddenly of heart failure at age 71 on Thursday. Before death ended his 43 years of distinguished service, Henry Jackson compiled a record of achievement and influence seldom equaled in the history of American Government.

On foreign affairs he was a hard-line conservative, and it was for those views, perhaps, that he was best known. A profound, undeviating distrust of the Soviet Union made him one of the most consistent champions of Cold War hostility toward Moscow. That same conviction fueled his enthusiasm for a strong national defense, achieved by generous spending for weapons and armed forces.

After the Nixon Administration negotiated SALT I with the Soviets, it then had to negotiate it anew with Henry Jackson. Before he gave his assent—necessary to win Senate approval—he forced concessions. He later denounced the SALT II accord as "appeasement" and was instrumental in blocking Senate ratification of it. His unstinting support of U.S. intervention in Vietnam and espousal of the "domino theory" alienated him from many of his fellow Democrats, but Henry Jackson always insisted that he, not they, was the true adherent to Roosevelt-Truman-Kennedy liberalism.

And liberal he was on domestic affairs, consistently. He was a proud New Deal Democrat; he believed in Big Government. He was pro-civil rights: His children attended integrated public schools, and he first gained national notice by leading Senate critics against the demagoguery of Sen. Joseph McCarthy.

He was pro-labor and pro-consumer: Unions could count on his vote, and he fought tirelessly to restrain energy prices and to impose a windfall profits tax on oil. As chairman of the Senate Interior Committee, later named the Energy Committee, Senator Jackson was perhaps the big oil companies' most formidable foe during the 1970s.

He was pro-environment: He authored the 1969 National Environmental Policy Act, which created the Environmental Protection Agency and is perhaps the nation's most important environmental law. He was skilled at balancing environmental needs against requirements for economic growth.

No official in Washington was more dedicated to Israel. He also co-authored the Jackson-Vanik Amendment, which denied the Soviets trade concessions unless they eased Jewish emigration.

The list of his achievements, lengthy as it is, could not show what a political professional Henry Jackson was. Voters in Washington state never gave him less than a mandate. His peers in Washington, D.C., marveled at his skill as a legislator, a power-broker, a builder of coalitions.

President Kennedy considered making him his running mate. President Nixon asked him to be his Secretary of Defense, but was turned down. Henry Jackson himself twice sought the Presidency, in 1972 and 1976, but the times did not match the man. Though never President, Scoop Jackson influenced America perhaps as much as any recent leader outside the Oval Office. His leadership will be missed.

[From the Stevenson (Wash.) Skamania County Pioneer, Sept. 9, 1983]

IN LOVING MEMORY OF HONORABLE HENRY M. "SCOOP" JACKSON

(By Pearl Neely, Skamania County Coordinator for The Honorable Henry M. Jackson, U.S. Senator—Washington, D.C., Democrat from Washington State)

He was more than a Leader, this senior statesman of great stature; he was a genuine friend of the people whom he served for all the years of his political career in public offices. It is not enough to say that we will miss him. The feeling of great loss the nation, state, counties, cities, and the Democratic Party whose banner he carried so high for the past 43 years, is truly matched by the humble feelings of those of us in whom Senator Jackson entrusted coordination of his visits to our Washington State Counties and his political campaigns at all levels of government. Those of us who had this special opportunity to know our fallen leader as a personal friend, have much to be grateful for; he touched our lives in a very extraordinarily special way.

We learned much from him. We are better persons for having known and worked with him. His faith, trust, and endorsement of my personal character and professional abilities to serve at the grass roots level of government is a legacy of which I am most proud to pass on to future generations of my family and friends. I sincerely appreciate this high honor and respect from such a top statesman who had a reputation of genuinely meaning what he said and did.

As Senator Jackson is laid to rest today, Wednesday, September 7, 1983, in his home town at Everett, Washington not far from the place of his birth, the torch he so capably carried for the people of our nation is now being passed to his successors, his family, and his friends. Let us carry this lighted torch with great pride and deep respect as we move forward while reflecting often upon the legacy he left us.

God Bless him and all he stood for as he rests in peace—this great man we all knew and loved as our friend Scoop Jackson.

JUST WAITE AWHILE

(By S. Waite)

I'd never been a pro or anti Jackson fan. But two years ago, Henry Jackson endeared himself to our family. Let me tell you how it happened.

Our daughter accepted a postion through the Department of Defense to teach in Germany. It was an exciting challenge and she looked forward to it with anticipation.

Laurie's possessions consisted of three shipments. One she initially took with her. Since she packed in 100+ degree weather that August, this luggage was mostly summer clothing.

Then there was the "hold" baggage. She was advised to pack "one plate, one knife, one fork, one spoon," etc. to be delivered shortly after her arrival. The rest of her belongings were to reach her within two months.

Germany's weather turned chilly by mid-September and Laurie had to borrow heavier clothing. She moved into a German apartment the first of October without furniture, dishes, cooking utensils. Finally her "hold" baggage arrived. Then the wait began.

November passed—December. She continued to check at the transportation office, but the answer was always the same: We're investigating." Christmas came and went. Laurie concluded she'd never see her things again. Gone, apparently, was her stereo, furnishings for three rooms, ski equipment, to say nothing of her Grandmother's 60 years old cedar chest and other irreplaceable personal effects.

Finally one of the two crates arrived, stating on the outside "2000 pounds" It contained her spare tires, bicycle, one chair and a stereo speaker. Had the crate been rifled through? Where was the second missing crate?

January—then February. Six months after Laurie's arrival in Germany, we decided to seek help on this end. I wrote to the Department of Defense and to our legislators in Washington D.C.

A few days later, we received a call from Senator Jackson's office. "What can we do to help?"

In less than a week, we got a telegram from Germany and another call from Jackson's office. The missing crate was located in a Bremerhaven warehouse where it had been sitting for months. What's more—nothing was missing! (A story in itself!)

Needless to say, we became Jackson fans from that time on. Senator Henry Jackson truly cared about the "little guy".

[From the Seattle (Wash.) South District Journal, Sept. 7, 1983]

DEATH OF "SCOOP" LEAVES LEADERSHIP VOID

He was more than merely a powerful man.

He was the warm voice we all grew to know and believe in. When he smiled, it was the good-natured, affable grin of ease which endeared him to so many generations of Washingtonians.

With Scoop Jackson's parting, we lose a man of unusual ambition, intelligence and grace.

When he died Thursday, he not only created a void of power in the nation's capital and at home, but he left us with a certain feeling of emptiness.

For Jackson was no ordinary politican. It is fair, and perhaps necessary, to say he is one of a remarkable breed of men.

His record was never tainted with a national scandal. Jackson kept on the straight and narrow, something his constitutency in this state could boast of. Few politicians in the ultra-competitive world of Washington, D.C. power-scheming can go as far as Jackson did and retain his dignity, honesty and fortitude.

He was different. Some say he was boring, living a spartan existence and staying clear of a host of vices. Rarely took a drink, and didn't even marry until he was 49.

For the simple and hard-working people who elected Scoop to six terms in the Senate, he was their only man.

It was so poignantly evident on Sunday, when thousands of mourners went to an Everett funeral home to say their final farewell.

Scoop was just a small-town boy who did good. Had he only known how much he was loved. It seems as though everyone in his native Everett showed up.

They came bearing flowers and clutching hankerchiefs, and they shared their memories of the nice Norweigian kid who used to deliver papers to the stately homes in Everett.

That kid grew up to become one of the most powerful men in the United States.

As people in Washington mourned, the world felt great shock and sorrow at the news of his death.

A great statesman, Jackson was known around the globe as a friend to Israel, a staunch supporter of China and an outspoken critic of the Soviet Union.

He was a tough, hard-headed debater. He used strength when it was necessary, and gentility when it was called for. Above all, Jackson wasn't about to let anybody tread on Old Glory.

There are other influential men in the world, and life will certainly go on in the chambers of kings and presidents long after Jackson's passing is but a yellowed newspaper clipping in someone's scrapbook.

But for the people of this state, Jackson's death is not so easily forgotten.

Perhaps it is because he was a powerful man, but he was also a man who was loved by the people.

[From the Sacramento (Calif.) County Bee, Sept. 8, 1983]

HENRY "SCOOP" JACKSON

It seemed oddly apt, if unfair, that Henry Jackson died in the shadow of a major news event (the Soviet downing of a passenger airliner) that all but obscured his passing. For more than four decades, Jackson toiled in the public service—first in the House of Representatives, then for 30 years in the Senate—and achieved a great deal without gaining the public notice he deserved. His bland, straightarrow style may have been partly responsible for that, and for his failure, twice, to win the Democratic Party's presidential nomination.

No hint of scandal or of double-dealing ever attached to Jackson, but honesty was not his only strong suit. Very early on, he fought Sen. Joseph McCarthy at a time when that took a lot of courage. He authored the legislation that created the Environmental Protection Agency. And he wrote the Jackson-Vanik Amendment, which forbade the U.S. government from granting trade concessions to countries restricting emigration, an act aimed at Moscow's treatment of the Soviet Jewish population that foreshadowed Jimmy Carter's human rights policy by several years. Jackson was not a wealthy man, but he donated all his earnings from speeches to a scholarship fund for needy students.

Critics called him the "senator from Boeing," a jibe Jackson took in stride. The fact that the airplane manufacturer is the largest employer in Washington state obviously had something to do with his support of the aerospace industry, but so did the senator's unshakeable conviction that the Soviet Union is an untrustworthy adversary and that the best guarantee against war is a strong defense establishment. He also endorsed this country's participation in Vietnam, a position that deprived him permanently of support from the left wing of his party, a price he paid willingly for holding to his convictions.

Henry Jackson never achieved his highest aspiration—the presidency—but his long and distinguished career, and his uncompromising dedication to the principles he held, constitute an enduring memorial to one of the finest U.S. senators of our time.

[From the Fremont (Calif.) Argus, Sept. 4, 1983]

AN HONORABLE MAN

It was ironic that Sen. Henry Jackson suffered a fatal heart attack Thursday shortly after holding a press conference to make public his reaction to the shooting down of an unarmed South Korean jetliner by the Soviet Union. Not surprisingly, he condemned the act.

To the last, "Scoop" Jackson had few kind words for the Russians.

For most of his 43 years in the U.S. Congress, first in the House of Representatives and for nearly 30 years in the Senate, Jackson was an implacable foe of the Soviet Union, of worldwide communism and the godless Marxist doctrine that is its centerpiece.

Senior Democrat on the Senate Armed Services Committee (and its chairman when his party had the majority vote), Jackson was an indefatigable hawk who never relaxed his efforts to maintain this nation's military strength.

Yet he was a liberal in the tradition of Franklin Roosevelt when it came to social issues. Washington state's senior senator was also a power on the Senate Energy and Natural Resources (formerly Interior) Committee.

He understood the relationship between mankind and nature and he was a pioneer in supporting many environmental protective measures now widely accepted as essential to the nation's well-being.

Many consider him the "father" of the Environmental Protection Act.

In all his works, in all his deeds, Henry Jackson was known by friend and foe alike as an honorable man.

He served under nine presidents from Franklin Roosevelt to Ronald Reagan—and the administration of each of those men gained in some measure from Jackson's counsel and his legislative accomplishments.

His examples of leadership and steadfast devotion to the causes he championed earn him a prominent and lasting place in American history.

The nation, the United States Senate, will both be diminished in some measure with the death of Sen. Henry Jackson.

[From the Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune, Sept. 10, 1983]

SCOOP JACKSON—LIBERAL BUT NO FOOL

(By Guy Trotter)

The late Sen. Henry Jackson explained his political stance thus: "I am a liberal, but I'm not a damned fool." The statement referred to his consistently liberal positions on domestic issues and equally consistent hawkishness on foreign affairs and national defense. The clear implication was that anyone with the perception of a myopic maggot could see that the Soviet government was not to be trusted; and that anyone who failed to see it was a "damned fool."

He could—and occasionally did—cite chapter and verse from Marx, Engels and Lenin to explain why the Soviets act as they do. He'd then point out the relationships between the actions of Stalin, Khruschev or Brezhnev and principles laid down by the founding fathers of communism. He was constantly amazed that so few of his liberal brethren could grasp so basic a truth. He branded their failure to do so "selective credibility based upon wishful thinking." He noted that our government leaders usually act as they do because they are following the advice of their ideological forefathers.

"Why," he'd ask, "is it so strange that the Russians should do likewise?"

We had lunch together in Everett on my last day of active duty in the Navy, under the vigilant surveillance of Secret Service agents. At the time Jackson was a leading contender for the presidency, and I've often wondered since that day how different our history might have been if he'd won the nomination.

Jackson could have saved millions of Democratic votes forfeited by the liberal extremism of George McGovern. He might have beaten Nixon on that November and we'd have been spared the agony of Watergate. Further, the South Vietnamese chesnut might have been pulled out of the fire by a commander-in-chief who understood the situation and who could have kept in line a jelly-spined Senate infected with bug-out fever.

With his comprehension of the necessity for strong deterrence against aggression, Jackson might not have permitted the post-Vietnam cutbacks which have resulted in Soviet supremacy in both strategic and conventional forces.

I don't think the Soviets would have liked Scoop Jackson as president; but they'd have dammed well respected him. However, ". . . of all sad words of tongue or pen, the saddest are these: 'It might have been.' "

Henry M. Jackson will be sorely missed. He was one of a vanishing breed, a politician who put service to his country ahead of personal interest.

Sometimes it seems that the Soviets operate under a compulsion to prove that Scoop Jackson was right. We no sooner begin to think that the denizens of the Kremlin may be mellowing than they do something traumatic to disillusion us—to bring us back to the reality that is Marxist-Leninism.

The senseless and brutal act which President Reagan has characterized as a "massacre" was much worse than that. It was a cynical, defiant rejection of human values and basic decency. History relates details of many massacres, but most were incident to declared and active wars. The KAL 747 shoot-down was a calculated ambush of helpless civilians on a commercial flight in time of peace. The 269 victims dry-gulched by the Soviets posed no threat whatsoever. In this respect the act was also cowardly.

The Kremlin's accounting for the tragedy has been a series of lies attempting to blame everyone except themselves. The frequency-heard diagnosis—paranoia—offers only a partial explanation. More critical is the inescapable conclusion that, to the Soviets, human life is of no intrinsic value. To such a government, any strategy—including a resort to nuclear warfare—is not only "thinkable," it can be justifiable.

From the American Left, we may reasonably expect a denunciation of "linkage." They'll tell us that unacceptable bestial behavior by the USSR in one area of interest—such as perimeter defense—should not be permitted to influence our attitudes toward negotiations in other areas such as arms control. That is asking too much. It is profoundly stupid. Who among you—having been cheated by a bullying con man in previous negotiations, an avowed antagonist who'd stolen real estate from your friends, who's plundered, slaughtered and raped your neighbors and who'd threatened to "bury" you—would then purchase an insurance policy from the bastard?

International masochism must have some limit short of unconditional surrender.

[From the Bremerton (Wash.) Sun, Sept. 5, 1983]

'SCOOP' WILL BE MISSED

Sen. Henry M. Jackson seemed indestructible, almost as if he could go on forever.

He wasn't, of course, but that appearance of immortality misled a lot of us, making his death Thursday a shock.

Because of that, it may take awhile before the real impact of "Scoop" Jackson's death sinks in.

For now, we're mourning the death of a man, who, because of his honesty and his warmth, was one of the most loved public figures in the state of Washington.

And that's a huge loss, because politicians with Jackson's humanity are in short supply.

But the bigger loss by far is Scoop Jackson the U.S. senator.

As a senator, Jackson cast a giant shadow, lending his state much more clout nationally than its population or its economy could have ever brought otherwise.

He established himself as an international figure, with his immense knowledge on defense matters, and with his stubborn, hardline position on the Soviet Union.

That position hadn't changed a bit, even on the day of his death, when he called the Soviets barbarians for shooting down an unarmed Korean airliner that had strayed over Soviet air space.

For the moment, at least, it seems Scoop Jackson wasn't so stubborn on the subject of the Russians after all. Perhaps it just took awhile for events, and public perception, to catch up.

Jackson wasn't one of those senators who establish a national and international reputation and expertise while ignoring the folks back home, however.

He didn't spend 31 years in the U.S. Senate by forgetting who put him in office.

Sen. Jackson used his clout in Washington, D.C., to the benefit of his home state.

He was a moving force, for example, behind legislation that prevents federal agencies from even studying transfer of Columbia River water to the Southwest.

He sponsored two bills of major impact on parks in Washington state: the "Fort Lawton bill," which led to the creation of Seattle's Discovery Park, and the amendment of the Land and Water Conservation Act, so that money from federal offshore leases could be used as grants to acquire local parklands.

And Sen. Jackson sponsored the 1970 National Environmental Policy Act, which requires environmental impact statements on major federal projects.

And certainly, appropos the holiday today, Sen. Jackson was a great friend of labor.

But probably the most impact for the state, and especially for Kitsap County, came from his efforts in behalf of defense projects.

On a statewide level his efforts won him the title "the Senator from Boeing."

In Kitsap County, his efforts meant a thriving Puget Sound Naval Shipyard, which has come to mean a thriving economy for the county.

Dr. Calvin Christensen, a former president of the Puget Sound Naval Base Association and a member since 1968, credits Sen. Jackson with getting the shipyard involved with nuclear work, which Christensen thinks has been its salvation.

Because of that conversion, the shipyard is almost unique in its ability to handle nuclear ships, which Christensen sees as the wave of the future.

And of course, it's impossible to mention the nuclear Navy without also mentioning Adm. Hyman Rickover, whose career Jackson saved.

Christensen also credits Jackson with heavy involvement in getting the Trident submarine base located at Bangor, and, just as important, with helping Kitsap County get Trident impact funds to help pay for needed roads, schools and other services.

"Scoop did everything we hoped for and beyond," Christensen said.

He did that, and he will be sorely missed.

[From the Winslow (Wash.) Bainbridge Review, Sept. 7, 1983]

FAREWELL TO SCOOP

We didn't always agree with him but, like the rest of the press people who covered the late Sen. Henry "Scoop" Jackson at one time or another, we had to admire the man.

He was a workaholic, who did his homework. He had a tremendous store of knowledge, particularly in the realm of United States history and international relations. We recall one Poulsbo breakfast session a number of years ago, when the Senator talked for nearly two hours without notes—answering questions with facts and figures that were recalled as easily as if by computer.

A giant on the national and international scene, he was also a family man. He had married in middle age, and seemed to appreciate his two children more than most fathers—perhaps because he had waited so long for them. We recall that after the breakfast session in Poulsbo he posed for photographers—with his arms around a couple of middle-school "newspaper brats."

His place in history is secure. He will also be missed as husband and father, friend of many, and a decent, kind, honest citizen who set standards—in his personal as well as professional life—we all might emulate.

[From the Bothell (Wash.) Northshore Citizen, Sept. 7, 1983]

PASSING OF A STATESMAN AND FRIEND

U.S. Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson is dead at 71.

Scoop was a frequent visitor and good friend to the Northshore area, and often remarked how much he felt at home when he was here.

He used to call to check on what was happening locally, and would sometimes volunteer a visit if someone could set up an early morning breakfast where he could meet people. He particularly liked the grilling he got at the question and answer part of any program.

Scoop would often arrive with his ever-present briefcase in one hand and an arm load of clothes in some kind of carrier in the other. Frequently he would just have someone drop him off and rely on a friend offering to take him to his next location.

He never appeared to be in a hurry. Yet his day was jammed full of meetings, appearances and press conferences.

Scoop was readily available to the press, and we presume to any of his constituents. He always returned telephone calls. And he always responded to written notes.

The state and country will miss him.

And I will miss the opportunity to set up the rather frequent breakfasts he liked. And I'll miss firing some questions on current news events at him.

It was proper that he worked at his rigorous pace right to the end. Just a few days ago he was in China. The day Scoop died he sharply criticized the Russians for shooting down an unarmed commercial aircraft.

He was tough, well informed and spoke out on issues he believed in. The entire country will miss him.

It is the end of an era for Washington's senatorial delegation. In just two years the state has lost both of its senior senators, and the power that they held.

It is likely that the state will never again carry such clout in our nation's affairs.

[From the Stevenson (Wash.) Pioneer, Sept. 9, 1983]

TALKING IT OVER

(By Roy Craft)

When Senator Henry M. Jackson died last week at the age of 71, the nation and the free world lost a strong leader, the Pacific Northwest lost a powerful advocate, and people throughout Washington State lost a good friend.

He liked to be called "Scoop," his nickname from boyhood days when he delivered newspapers, but when I had occasion to chat with him on various occasions over the years, I always called him "Senator." It was not that I was awed by his official status, it was simply that I felt it inappropriate to address a man of his strength and stature by his first name, much less nickname.

He always signed his letters "Scoop" when responding to queries or requests for help for someone in Skamania County. When he was here June 1 helping dedicate the Second Powerhouse at Bonneville Dam, I handed him a note asking him to give the U.S. Emigration and Naturalization Service a nudge and urge them to expedite the paper work so that Salvacion, the bride of Robert L. Stevens of Carson, could leave the Philippines and join her husband here. They had been married on the Island of Mindanao April 16.

Upon his return to Washington, D.C., Senator Jackson wrote that he had made the request and asked me to let him know if no action was taken within 60 days. Some weeks back Stevens received word from the Emigration Service that Mrs. Stevens' papers had been processed and her entry into the U.S. approved.

Paper work still needs to be done by the U.S. Embassy in Manila Stevens was informed Wednesday, but it is expected that Bob's bride will be arriving soon.

This is just an example of Senator Jackson's interest in the welfare of all of the people he was elected to serve.

As an individual, I never tried to impose on Senator Jackson's time during his visits to Skamania County. As a newspaperman, I sometimes had occasion to ask him questions or inform him of our county's concerns in certain areas. He was invariably pleasant and he always spoke to the point.

Everyone has his or her recollections of contact with our Senator. One I recall was a chat with "Scoop" Jackson at the Salishan Lodge on the Oregon Coast in 1971. Jackson was then weighing the possibility of running for President and he was there to speak at a luncheon of the Associated Oregon Industries, a "big business" group with whom he was on as friendly terms as he was with "big labor."

I was to speak at the dinner that evening and gracie and I arrived early to hear Jackson speak. Before the luncheon we had an opportunity for a short visit and he showed a genuine interest in my quick report on the political climate of Skamania County.

A lacquered tray, a present from the Associated Oregon Industries, is inscribed Sept. 17, 1971. It reminds me of my Salishan visit but, more important, it reminds me of a coincidental encounter with one of the great personages of my time.

Funeral services were held in Everett Wednesday and the scramble for his Senate post has begun. Let us hope we choose wisely in electing his successor. Jackson's shoes will be hard to fill.

[From the San Francisco Chronicle, Sept. 14, 1983]

SCOOP JACKSON AND THE CHARISMA FACTOR

(By Jack W. Germond and Jules Witcover)

When the news came the other day of the death of Senator Henry M. Jackson, much of the commentary touched on the man's intense commitments to liberal domestic causes and to a hard line in dealing with the Soviet Union.

It was a mark of the man that he cared deeply about the positions he took and acted vigorously in pursuit of their fulfillment. Yet when Jackson made his two bids for the presidency in 1972 and 1976, he was saddled with one of the deadliest stigmas that can be attached to a politician. He was, it was said over and over again, boring.

So intense was he in enunciating his commitments that more often than not it came off as preaching. And because he was no barrel of laughs either, a Scoop Jackson speech could send an insomniac off to dreamland.

His campaign advertising consultants, painfully aware that Jackson was said to have no charisma, for a time in 1976 tried to make a silk purse out of that particular sow's ear by focusing on his established qualifications as a legislator. They talked of Jackson's "charisma of competence," in effect trying to shame the voters into giving their support on more serious grounds than star appeal.

In 1976, one of Jackson's campaign managers recalls, an advertising agency hotshot planned a television commercial showing Jackson speaking while holding his young son on his knee. Jackson was to say something like, "Hello, I'm Scoop Jackson. People say I'm boring but I don't think it's boring to . . ." and then launch into his concerns and achievements. In the commercial, the senator's son was to have fallen asleep as his father droned on. Not surprisingly, the idea was abandoned.

Another favorite story that one of his best friends in the state of Washington liked to use to illustrate Jackson's special political problem, was the one about the dog-food manufacturer who called in the members of his board to ask why his product didn't sell, although the best ingredients and the most attractive packaging were used. "Dogs don't like it," was the answer.

It was maddening to Jackson himself and to his managers to have a candidate who was so widely regarded as one of the most effective members of the Senate and a repeated landslide winner in his own state, a man who was a bear for work and the soul of integrity dismissed out of hand by many because he seldom had them rolling in the aisles.

Ironically, another politician who in 1976 demonstrated equal intensity but crowned it with a rare personal warmth that Jackson could not match beat him out for the Democratic nomination. That man was Jimmy Carter. Later, to be sure Carter's evangelistic style and proclamations of love for everybody wore very thin. But in 1976 he was more personally appealing than the straight-laced Jackson as the centrist candidate in a field otherwise awash with liberals—Morris Udall, Birch Bayh, Fred Harris, Sargent Shriver, Milton Scapp and Terry Sanford—plus George Wallace on the right.

All this is not to suggest that Jimmy Carter rather than Scoop Jackson became the 1976 Democratic nominee, and then president simply because Carter had a more dazzling smile and was more of a charmer with the voters. Carter's campaign was infinitely shrewder, and Jackson's was rent with organizational and financial woes.

Also, Jackson brought some political scars into the race for the Democratic nomination as a longtime hawk on Vietnam in a party heavily populated by committed activists to whom opposition to the war still was a pivotal litmus test of liberalism. As an old New Dealer, it used to drive Jackson up the wall to have his own liberal credentials questioned. But they were, widely, on Vietnam.

Still, you have to wonder whether he might have attained his goal of the presidency in 1976 had there been a spark of excitement about him. We like to think we elect our presidents on what they know and stand for, but a fair case can be made for the proposition that personal appeal is almost always a major ingredient in the people's choice.

By the time 1980 rolled around, Jimmy Carter's charm had lost its luster—indeed he sacrificed much of it by seeming mean and short-tempered toward the new Mr. Nice Guy, Ronald Reagan, in their campaign. And who is to say, if Reagan runs for and wins a second term that charisma won't be a factor again?

Achieving the presidency however, is not the only measure of political success. That fact was emphatically demonstrated by the wide outpouring of acclaim from Democrats and Republicans alike for Henry M. Jackson on his passing.

[From the Pasco (Wash.) Tri-City Herald, Sept. 4, 1983]

JACKSON WAS A GREAT LEADER

(By Glenn C. Lee)

The death of Henry M. Jackson is a great loss to the state, the nation and the world. He will be sorely missed by everyone in the Tri-Cities. He was a great friend of this community, and of Hanford, a great leader in our nation's capital, and respected around the world.

I first met Senator Jackson in 1947 when he was a congressman. He visited the Tri-Cities and the Tri-City Herald, which had just changed from weekly to daily publication. Mr. Jackson was visiting Hanford because of an announcement that General Electric Co. would replace duPont and $350 million would be spent to expand nuclear facilities on the project. Mr. Jackson was a member of the Joint Committee on Atomic Energy.

All through the years of his career in Congress. Senator Jackson kept in close touch with nuclear matters and with Hanford's growth and progress.

When N-reactor was nearing completion in 1960-61, the movement to construct an electrical generating plant in conjunction with it ran into a great deal of opposition. Senator Jackson favored the dual-purpose project. Private power opposed it. However, public power, with Mr. Jackson's leadership, proposed a bond issue of $120 million to pay for construction of the generating plant and the senator introduced authorization legislation in the Senate four times. But each time private power and other interests defeated the bill in the House.

With encouragement from the Herald and public power, Senator Jackson introduced the bill in the Senate a fifth time, and with a great deal of work and effort it was passed in the House and signed into law. President John F. Kennedy came to Hanford Sept. 26, 1963, for the dedication and ground-breaking ceremonies.

Without Senator Jackson's help, the plant that generates electricity with steam from N-reactor never would have been built. It was his idea that the electrical output of the plant would be shared 50-50 between private and public power.

On one of the many trips Don Pugnetti (then editor of the Herald) and I made to Washington, D.C., in 1961-62, we learned that all of Hanford's reactors might be shut down at one time.

So in 1963 the Tri-City Nuclear Industrial Council was formed. With help, leadership and cooperation of Senator Jackson, the diversification plan for Hanford took shape. General Electric was asked to leave as a contractor at Hanford, diversification brought in new contractors and new businesses, and Senator Jackson was our friend and helper all the way.

Without him, diversification of Hanford never would have taken place and never would have succeeded. I have personal knowledge of that.

Sam Volpentest (Nuclear Council executive vice president) was a great friend of Senator Jackson and supported him by helping raise funds for political campaigns, by getting an excellent crowd together for lunch or dinner when Senator Jackson visited the Tri-Cities, and we always had access to the senator and his office.

Mr. Jackson didn't limit his activities to nuclear power. He initiated and pushed through Congress legislation that blocked the diversion of water from the Columbia River to California and the Southwest. He was chairman of the Senate Interior (now Energy) Committee for many years.

The death of Senator Jackson is a great loss. His particular experience, and knowledge, and courage can never be replaced. He was a great leader.

[From the Pasco (Wash.) Tri-City Herald, Aug. 4, 1983]

AS ERA ENDS, WHAT OF THE FUTURE?

With Henry Jackson's death, an era comes to an end.

It was an era in which our economic destiny was determined by the political power of two Democratic senators—Warren Magnuson and Scoop Jackson.

They played the system like a musical instrument, funneling hundreds of millions of federal dollars into the state, much of it to Hanford.

The era began to fade in 1980 when Mr. Magnuson was defeated and Democrats lost control of the Senate. The era closed completely when Senator Jackson died.

Hanford's role is basically national defense and energy. Mr. Jackson was the Senate leader in both areas, and so long as he was there his influence would have been used within the system to serve the needs of the country and his constituents as he saw fit.

Until his death, it appeared that this term could have turned out to be Mr. Jackson's most powerful one, particularly if the Democrats were to regain control of the Senate in next year's election, as seems probable since 19 Republican senators face re-election. Decisions such as the recent one siting a new defense reactor in Idaho might have been easily reversed after the election had Senator Jackson lived and become chairman of the Senate Armed Forces Committee.

The prospect now is that this state will have two first-term Republican senators in a Congress dominated by Democratic majorities in both houses.

This prospect requires a thorough—and painful—change of attitude by Tri-Citians. No longer can we rely so heavily on political influence in Washington, D.C. to keep us supplied with government projects and payrolls.

Hanford will still be Hanford, the finest nuclear installation in the nation. And its credentials should entitle it to top consideration for more defense and energy projects.

But it won't get its rightful share unless it has powerful advocates in Washington.

Senator Jackson's death painfully brings home messages we must not ignore as a community.

Message No. 1: We have lost our strongest advocates and it will take years to develop new ones.

Message No. 2: Meantime, we must be more effective than ever before in developing new components for our economic base that are not so heavily dependent on either the federal government or nuclear energy.

Message No. 3: To effectively address our long-term economic needs, this community must develop institutions and strategies that are unified and communitywide in scope designed to repair problems that obstruct healthy new economic development and to actively recruit new employment.

This last message is the most important. Our prosperity in the past 40 years has been politically based and has come in spite of our inability as a community to mount a sophisticated and ongoing economic development program that looks beyond the boundaries of Hanford.

It's time. It is long overdue. Our cities, counties, chambers of commerce, the Tri-City Nuclear Industrial Council, ports and other agencies and entities with a stake in the future of the Tri-Cities should begin now the process of re-evaluating both their structures and missions for the future.

[From the Tri-City Herald, Aug. 4, 1983]

FAREWELL TO A FRIEND

Shortly before Sen. Henry M. Jackson had a fatal heart attack thursday night, he strongly condemned as "barbaric" the shooting down of a South Korean airliner by a Soviet jet fighter. He was an implacable critic of Russia, which he was fond of saying is like a hotel burglar who goes down the hallway trying every door. For him, the wanton destruction of the 747 with 269 aboard was just another proof of Russian perfidy.

Mr. Jackson served in Congress 42 years—the last 30 as a senator—and racked up what one admiring colleague called "a prodigious record of accomplishment." His record is as broad as it is long, but perhaps his greatest contribution—certainly it was the one in which he took greatest pride—was in national defense. He poured much of his enormous energy and talent into keeping his country militarily strong.

He was motivated by a deep distrust of the Soviet Union and a belief that the only way to deal with Russia is from a position of overwhelming military strength based on the most advanced weapons systems. He led—almost always successfully—Senate fights for one advanced weapons system after another and so sincere was his belief in the value of such systems that even his critics conceded he would have pushed for them just as hard if his homestate economy had not depended substantially on military spending.

On global matters, he was a blunt, direct, tough anti-communist. On domestic matters, he was a compassionate liberal, a friend of labor, of education.

He was environmentalism's most effective friend in the Senate. He was the principal author of the Environmental Protection Act, which truly was landmark legislation.

He was a "workaholic" who seldom missed a roll-call vote or a committee hearing.

Republican and Democratic colleagues alike conceded him to be not only one of the hardest-working members of the Senate, but one of the most effective. He was elected to the House in 1941 as a Franklin D. Roosevelt Democrat. He always had the support of organized labor, liberal Democrats—and of business people, many of them Republicans.

He and former Sen. Warren G. Magnuson were known as the "gold dust twins" because of their phenomenal ability "to deliver the goods" for their constituents and interests as varied a the University of Washington, Hanford and Boeing.

Senator Jackson was a friend of Israel from its beginnings and he fought hard—and successfully—to force the Soviet Union to permit thousands of Russian Jews to immigrate.

When he was in the House of Representatives, he represented the Everett congressional district. But as a member of the prestigious Joint Congressional Committee on Atomic Energy, he spent a lot of time in the Tri-Cities and had a major role in the development of Hanford. After he switched from the House to the Senate in 1952 he worked harder than ever for Hanford and nuclear energy.

He was a key figure in accomplishing the "miracle in the desert," the conversion of Hanford from a military to a peacetime mission during the '60s and '70s. He helped get diversification of the Tri-Cities economy started by advocating, and pushing, the development of irrigation, barge transportation and other natural resources of this region.

Mr. Jackson's parents were Norwegian immigrants and he was proud of his humble origins in Everett, Wash., where as a newsboy he acquired his nickname of "Scoop."

He made two attempts, in 1972 and 1976, to win the Democratic nomination for president. Both were unsuccessful, but he gained national stature, which he used skillfully to better do his job as senator and statesman.

He would have been an outstanding president. He was highly intelligent, finely trained and disciplined in his chosen field, and a man of courage and high principle.

The world has lost a statesman who grasped the political realities of our time, who understood the need for a balance of power to insure peace and preserve freedom.

His immense influence and prestige gave this state a disproportionate impact on national policy. His death is a great loss to the nation.

And the Tri-Cities has lost a loyal and valued friend.

[From the Longview (Wash.) News, Sept. 2, 1983]

A STUNNING LOSS

(By Ted M. Natt)

Men of the caliber of Henry Jackson are an exceedingly rare breed in public life in America.

Sen. Jackson's death Thursday of a heart attack is a stunning, numbing tragedy for the state and the nation. The loss is felt deeply, painfully and personally by hundreds of thousands of Washington residents who knew their favorite senator simply as "Scoop."

If one were to construct an ideal model of a public servant, Jackson comes the closest of anyone I have known to meeting that ideal.

He was competent, honest, exceptionally hardworking, selfless, dedicated, maintained the highest integrity, cared about people and always put the public interest first on his priority list.

Although he was 71, he maintained a work schedule that would exhaust a man 30 years younger. He cared so deeply about his nation, his state and his fellow citizens that he drove himself with a passion. His hard work paid off in terms of the respect and admiration of his colleagues in the Congress and his constituents in the state.

Jackson was the single most admired public official in the state. He knew thousands of his constituents by their first names and had been in office long enough to know their children and grandchildren. He routinely won re-election with 70 percent or 80 percent of the vote, a remarkable feat in itself.

Jackson's death will be felt deeply and across a wide range of issues both in the state and nationally. His support or opposition on an issue, whether of state or national import, often made the difference between victory or defeat.

Over the past 3½ years, whenever I called Scoop Jackson for help on Mount St. Helens matters, he was more than happy to do whatever he could. Time and again, he came through for this community. He made a point of calling periodically for updates. What could he do? What were the priorities? How were people adjusting? he would ask. He visited regularly to see things for himself.

Jackson was an exceptional man in many ways. While his colleagues supplemented their Senate salaries with speaking honoraria, every dime Jackson earned making speeches was put into a trust fund in Everett that gave scholarships to needy students. Jackson never kept anything for himself.

He was a great man and a good friend. Not since my grandfather died 2½ years ago have I felt such grief.

Today, our thoughts and prayers are for Helen Jackson, the senator's lovely and gracious wife, and his children, Anna Marie and Peter.

[From the Tri-City Herald, Aug. 4, 1983]

1945 NORWEGIAN VISIT GAVE JACKSON A SENSE OF MORTALITY

(By Jack Briggs)

It was just a year ago when this reporter was sitting in the red-leather seats that come as standard government issue to senators in Washington, D.C.

Sen. Henry Martin Jackson's aides had said the senator could spare half an hour, and Jackson was filling the 30 minutes with hood-eyed recitations of campaign speeches and platitudes about nuclear energy, Social Security and arms control.

In one of the few pauses Jackson was asked if, at 70, he was fit enought to serve his county for another six years.

The eyes jerked open, the body sprang from the encompassing leather, and Jackson had the reporter's hand in an arm-wrestling hold.

With embarrassingly little effort, and with only a slight reddening of his tanned face, he bent the reporter's hand towards the floor.

"Does that answer your question?," snapped the man who went to Congress a year before America entered World War II.

Jackson was touchy about health.

Two years before, Jackson's powerful buddy, Sen. Warren Magnuson, a 75-year-old who had trouble walking, had lost his Senate seat to a jogging 52-year-old state attorney general named Slade Gorton.

"Maggie was inundated with anti-Carter feeling, and was having trouble moving around," was Jackson's explanation.

Jackson made it clear he had no such problems.

"You pick good ancestors and then you don't abuse (your body). You have fun. But you follow the rule of moderation and common sense."

In his book, Scoop, author Peter Ognibene said that Jackson was the youngest of five children born to emigrants from Norway who had changed their name from Gresseth.

Ognibene quoted a neighbor of the Jacksons as saying Henry was a "runt who didn't grow up or play hard until after he had his appendix removed," a boy who was "undersized and a bit timid."

After a career as a crusading Snohomish County prosecutor, observers were calling the junior congressman who flew to his parents' native Norway in December 1954 neither small, nor timid.

But what they almost got to call him was the late junior congressman from Washington.

In their book, A Certain Democrat, William Prochnau and Richard Larsen described how Jackson contacted pneumonia and for 48 hours hovered near death until an American Air Corps plane flew in the first vial of the then-miracle drug, penicillin, to be used in Norway.

Jackson spent 10 days in the hospital. His bill, under the Norwegian national health-care plan, was $15.44.

The experience was to shape Jackson's thinking for the rest of his life.

He was concerned about health-care costs, especially for the elderly.

And he gained a respect for his own mortality.

"He was not a reckless man with his health," said Rick Cocker, his press aid for the past 5½ years. "He was very careful. He was somewhat of a physician by hobby. He enjoyed diagnosing medical problems people had and prescribing treatments. He was fluent in medical lingo. He knew all the medical terminology and enjoyed talking to groups of physicians."

He was also a man who believed in preventive medicine.

Six days a week he spent an hour in the Senate gym, swimming a quarter of a mile, jogging and walking.

"He made it a habit," said Cocker. "People go to lunch at 12:30 p.m. The senator went to the gym at 5 p.m.—every day. The Scarsdale diet and his gym activities kept in hand a propensity for weight gain that tended to make his face moonshaped, jowly and oversized for his 5-9½ frame.

The only minor health problem he would admit to publicly was a weak back, a reminder of the McCarthy hearings in the 1950s when, as Jackson put it, "The cameras were on you all day for three months. You couldn't pick your nose or scratch."

Jackson had just survived what Cocker said was a hectic August.

"The Armed Services Committee had been wrestling with the Pentagon budget and had literally worked around the clock for much of the month."

When Jackson left for China on what Cocker said was a "real tough schedule," there had been no signs of any medical problems.

Jackson had taken with him his personal physician, Dr. Haak Raede. "But merely as a friend, not as a physician," said Cocker.

The fact that Jackson returned with a chest cold and stayed at his Everett home with no appointments Monday, Tuesday and Wednesday caused no concern, said Cocker.

"He got those chest colds on a fairly regular basis.

"He was as healthy as a horse and as strong as a bull."

Or so everyone thought.

[From the Tacoma (Wash.) Tribune, Sept. 11, 1983]

THE MESSAGE FROM BEHIND THE IRON CURTAIN FOR SCOOP

(By Arpad Kadarkay)

A free nation paid a moving tribute to Henry Jackson whose life and public career symbolizes the best of America. I never met Scoop Jackson and yet our fate intertwined on a brief but memorable occasion.

Some eight years ago, I was invited by Sen. Jackson's office to join, with other scholars, a Congressional Committee visiting Taiwan.

After the committee completed its official business in Taiwan, I decided to return to the U.S. via East Europe. In one of the East European capitals I visited three prominent dissident intellectuals.

All three, who were also university professors, committed the unpardonable political sin of calling for the cultural "renaissance" of communism. To make matters worse, at least from the standpoint of the communist regime, all three published their views in West Europe.

The regime's reprisal was swift and brutal. The dissidents lost their jobs, one was even kicked out of the party, and were given the choice: either remain silent or face exile.

The day before my departure, I visited one dissident in his spacious apartment—a rare privilege in a communist country. He was young, married and brilliant. He neither wanted to remain silent nor live in exile.

He asked me to alert Sen. Henry Jackson, who was admired by East European intellectuals for his efforts to suspend U.S. aid to communist countries that abused human rights, about the plight of dissident intellectuals.

I promised to do my best upon returning to the U.S. Leaving the apartment, the dissident turned to me and said casually, "If I were you, I would not make note of our conversation in your notebook."

The significance of this innocent remark dawned on me as I handed over my passport to an internal security officer at the airport. The officer stepped out of his booth and spread his arms across the corridor. "You come with me!" he demanded.

We entered a sparsely furnished, soundproof room. Three more uniformed security officers entered and closed the padded door.

They spread the contents of my suitcase on two long tables and examined every single item, even snaked my ties between their fingers.

My hard-bound notebook was turned over to a civilian, impeccably dressed, who entered the room through a side-door.

He carefully studied the dates of entries, then walked up to me with the open book. "Where is your September 20 entry?" he wanted to know.

I was thunderstruck. That was the day I visited the dissident's apartment. In a dizzying moment I realized that the apartment had been bugged and the monster reel with total recall was in the possession of my interrogators.

The civilian was visibly annoyed. "I see that you write every day," he said, his eyes boring through me.

"Yes."

"Then why not on Sept. 20?"

"I was tired."

The uniformed officers and the civilian huddled in whispers in the far corner. The civilian returned with the notebook and asked me to explain the meaning of some underlined words in an entry.

I looked at the "suspicious" entry. It contained the following—John Keats (1795-1821) said the world is a "vale of soul making." I have underlined, in red ink, "soul-craft" and added, Scoop Jackson demonstrates that statecraft is soulcraft.

"It is a quote from Keats," I said to the civilian.

"Did you talk to and meet Keats here?" snapped the civilian.

"No, in England," I said quietly, my inside exploding with laughter.

They let me go. But as I was about to leave, I was stopped at the padded door.

"What message do you carry to Sen. Henry Jackson?" asked the civilian.

"None."

I was placed in a jeep and raced to the London-bound plane, already delayed one hour on the runway on account of my interrogation.

I never told Scoop Jackson about my experience with John Keats in communism. He would have enjoyed it because Scoop Jackson's life testifies that this Republic "shall not perish from the earth" so long as we produce statesmen who turn statecraft into soulcraft.

[From the Spokane, (Wash.) Spokesman Review, Sept. 11, 1983]

JACKSON ALWAYS HAD TIME TO HELP THE "LITTLE PEOPLE"

(By Michael Murphey)

As Sen. Henry M. Jackson's staff members consider the loose ends to be tied up during the last hectic weeks before they go their separate ways, their greatest concerns lie not in the arena of world politics but in the hopes of people who had counted on the senator's help.

"We have hundreds of cases ranging from emigration problems to Social Security problems to veterans' benefits to railroad retirement programs," Rich Cocker, Jackson's press secretary, said. "There is no doubt in my mind nor in anyone else's mind here that Sen. Jackson would want that to be the highest priority—to make sure these cases are carried on."

Jackson's interest in the individuals who called upon him for help was overshadowed during his career, Cocker said, by media interest in Jackson's national and international views.

"That's what television and newspapers always wanted to talk about," Cocker said, "so he came across as maybe appearing cold or tough.

"But I think he got as much of a charge out of helping a woman in Ephrata get her Social Security benefits as he did putting together some piece of national legislation," Cocker said. "I personally think that's what motivated and inspired him over 40 years."

"People take jobs and talk about getting bored with them after four or five years. But here he was, 42 years, and he still had a kind of childhood enthusiasm about his work. I think that was the product of a genuine interest in people and their problems."

Cocker spoke in a telephone interview Thursday, interrupted occasionally as he called out instructions about which boxes stayed and which boxes went as the Washington Democrat's offices and his staff were being cleared to make way for Daniel J. Evans, Jackson's Republican successor.

The staff and Jackson's papers and records are being moved to a temporary space upstairs in the office building.

From the temporary offices, the staff will try to sort through 42 years of papers and records "to be sure the historical record of Henry Jackson's service is preserved."

And from there, they will work with Evans and his staff to make the transition a smooth one.

It has been a week of arrangements and preparations, Cocker said, a week in which the people closest to Jackson probably have not had time to fully absorb the impact of this abrupt change in their lives.

"I thought he'd live to be 90," Cocker said, "and I think he did, too."

Many people think, Cocker said, that when a constituent calls or writes his senator, the senator responds because it is politically expedient.

"But how many cases do you work on over a year?" Cocker wondered. "A thousand? What's a thousand votes in the scope of a statewide election? No, those cases were a source of tremendous satisfaction to him. He liked helping people, completely aside from whether they agreed with him politically or not.

"There was a human side to Henry Jackson that people who didn't know him didn't get to know very much about.

"And that's too bad."

[From the Vancouver (Wash.) Columbian, Sept. 2, 1983]

SENATOR HENRY M. "SCOOP" JACKSON

Only hours after his death, they are already making history out of Scoop Jackson of Washington state.

Powerful senator . . . influential statesman . . . hawkish anti-communist; last of the Cold Warriors . . .

Sonorously, with an air of incontrovertibility, the news reports capsulize Jackson, reinforcing the image that will likely find its way into textbooks and political memory.

Perhaps that is the inevitable fate for a U.S. senator who was little short of a legend even in his own time. Certainly, he was powerful. First elected to Congress 43 years ago, Jackson in time would become part of the most effective state delegation in the Senate. By 1980, when Scoop's longtime partner Senator Warren Magnuson finally went down to defeat, the two Democratic senators from Washington collectively had 64 years of Senate seniority and 84 years of experience in Congress—and they used their clout effectively.

And yes, Jackson was influential. Known—in the corridors of the Kremlin as well as of the White House—as a firm advocate of U.S. military might, the senator's strong support for defense build-up, Soviet Jews and Israel significantly affected the shape of American foreign policy.

But what history may fail to remember, unless we correct the record now, is that while his power and influence made Jackson a notable national figure, it was his character—his personal integrity—that made Scoop a person that Washingtonians aren't likely to soon forget.

Jackson's integrity made even his adversaries, such as Eugene McCarthy, concede that the "senator from Boeing" would vote in favor of defense budgets even if Washington were not the home of a major military contractor. Jackson voted for defense because he believed in it. The integrity led Jackson Thursday, at his last public appearance, to counsel for restraint against the Soviets in wake of the downing of Korean Air Lines Fight 007. The advice puzzled many, who felt it out of character, but Jackson—a serious student of Soviet politics—was truly in character, speaking not as others anticipated, but as he believed would be in the best interest of his country.

And the integrity dictated that even as Jackson was widely known, and frequently castigated, for his positions on such large issues as nuclear arms and international relations, Scoop kept faith with a small personal gesture. Quietly, year after year, he donated all of his outside earnings to charity.

Jackson never lost an election in his home state, yet he failed both times when he tried for the U.S. presidency. That, as much as anything else, may serve as epitaph for Scoop.

Because his integrity led Jackson to act himself, even when it was not profitable for his presidential campaign, those who did not have long years to get to know the individualistic Pacific Northwesterners rejected him. But his home-state constituents, Republicans as well as Democrats, who had the luxury of long friendship with Scoop, unfailingly returned him to office. Washingtonians may not always have agreed with Scoop—but they knew they could trust him to act according to his beliefs.

[From the Port Angeles (Wash.) News, Sept. 2, 1983]

OPINION: LOSS OF SPECIAL FRIEND—SENATOR JACKSON

The North Olympic Peninsula has lost a special friend with the death of Sen. Henry M. Jackson.

Since 1940, when Sen. Jackson was first elected to the U.S. House of Representatives from a district which encompassed Clallam and Jefferson counties, he always kept in touch with the area. Without his support countless federal and even state projects on the Peninsula would have never gotten off the ground. His interests paralleled the interests of the people who have lived on the Peninsula—the environment, economic opportunity and a strong sense of right and wrong.

Sen. Jackson made friendships—many very strong and very personal—with countless Peninsula residents. In fact, hardly a political argument among locals can endure more than a few minutes before one of the combatants invokes the name of "his friend" Scoop. Sure, that is part of good political technique, but the bulk of those friendships were beyond that. He had a genuine interest in people here.

Jackson considered himself a working man's politician. We were never sure if that was because he saw politics as a working man's job or because he felt it was the working man he labored for in the halls of Congress. Judging by the extraordinary effort he put into his job and the results he got, it was probably both.

We were privileged to lunch with the senator just before the inauguration of Jimmy Carter in January of 1977. Jackson was simple, straight-forward and pleasant in contrast to the elegance of the Senate dining room and despite his being only recently a front-running presidential candidate. he was not too busy to be concerned for the comfort of his guests and for small talk, yet his conversation was punctuated with plans for tasks he felt vital to the nation or his fellow Northwesterners.

A year or two later, Jackson was just the same when a reporter and the publisher of the newspaper treated him to a brown bag lunch on a picnic table in Lincoln Park. The mealtime conversation was still the same: time for a laugh or two but lots of talk about work to be done.

The unexpected heart attack which struck down the vigorous 71-year-old senior senator from Washington state Thursday evening also closes the book on a Northwest era.

The second to the last chapter was written in 1980 when Sen. Warren G. Magnuson lost a bid for re-election. That was after nearly three decades of joint service with Jackson in the Senate. For all those years Jackson was the "junior" senator from Washington. But being junior was not so bad. Not only was he part of one of the best one-two punches in modern Senate history, Jackson also was a serious contender for vice president in 1960 and he ran for the presidency twice, in 1972 and 1976.

As a presidential candidate, he made a credible effort for a person from a small western state and for a person who would rather work to solve problems than talk endlessly about them.

As a senator and friend to the people of the North Olympic Peninsula and a public servant for the entire Northwest, Henry M. Jackson was way beyond credible. We were lucky to have him and are sorry to see his death.

[From the Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune, Sept. 3, 1983]

HENRY JACKSON: THE MAN HE WANTED HIMSELF TO BE

(By Jim Fisher)

Chatting with Henry Jackson on the Southway Bridge last October, I found it hard to believe this was the man who was first elected to the Senate when I was five years old and whose name was one of the first in my political lexicon.

"You know," he would start a sentence in his deliberative—some would say plodding—manner, and then as he finished his observation, he would move in closer and elbow me in the ribs.

There were few people on the bridge even though it was the dedication ceremony, and Jackson and I stood alone together for several minutes. His retinue was there, no doubt, but no staff members hovered around taking obvious glances at wristwatches to pull him from my clutches.

In fact, I seemed to be more in his clutches. He had time to talk and was clearly enjoying the balmy weather and view of the Snake River. I had introduced myself because he was standing alone when I arrived.

No circle of administrative assistants and press secretaries, no gaggle of political groupies, no aura. Just a couple of guys shooting the breeze after lunch on a warm afternoon.

It was 11 days before the election but you wouldn't have known it. He had always faced opposition, and this year he was being challenged by not only a Republican but an independent as well, but he knew better than to worry.

"I guess not," he smiled when asked if his was one of the close races that he expected would determine the future makeup of the Senate.

The polls showed him way out front, several laps in fact ahead of even the Republican. They usually did; running against Jackson had become a kamikaze mission to which only the most foolhardy or the most ideological would commit himself.

Even the dumping of Warren G. Magnuson two years before had not changed that, because Jackson had a special constituency. More accurately, he had part ownership in several constituencies.

To the liberals, he was the champion of social welfare and jobs who was disappointing for not breaking free from the cold war rhetoric of the decade he joined the Senate.

To the conservatives, he was the proponent of a strong America who couldn't leave behind New Deal domestic policies his party had been saddled with since the 1930s.

To the environmentalists, he was literally the creator of the North Cascades National Park who turned myopic in looking at some byproducts of progress.

To business he was "the senator from Boeing" who nevertheless showed a dismaying lack of concern over the growth of the federal deficit.

They all thought they had part ownership in him. But they didn't. He had carved his own niche not out of political opportunity but out of belief. He proved, for example, that his unyielding distrust of the Soviet Union was more than a sop to the rigid anti-communists when he embraced warming relations with China.

It's no wonder he was so relaxed that afternoon on the Southway Bridge. He seemed to have achieved what few ever do: He made the career he wanted to have by making himself the man he wanted to be.

He probably wasn't the man most of the rest of us wanted him to be. But that in itself sounds like rare praise in a day of highest-bidder politics and cut-rate politicians.

[From the Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune, Sept. 2, 1983]

FRIENDS REMEMBER "SCOOP" AS ALLY, STATESMAN

Though he was a figure of towering national prominence, Sen. Henry M. Jackson never lost sight of his constituents in southeastern Washington, and news of his death Thursday night shocked friends in the Quad Cities region.

Washington State University President Glenn Terrell, a close personal friend of Jackson's called the senator's death "a terrible shock and a very real loss."

"I believe he was the most knowledgeable public servant in the country," Terrell said. "He and I were very close personal friends and I have the highest regard for him. I've known him for more than 16 years, and this is a terrible shock."

Jackson was the President's Convocation speaker at WSU Oct. 23, 1982. That same day, he was the keynote speaker at the dedication of the $21 million Southway Bridge, which spans the Snake River between Lewiston and Clarkston. It was Jackson's last official visit to the Quad Cities region.

Former Idaho state senator Mike P. Mitchell of Lewiston described Jackson as a "gentleman" and said that although many of the issues Jackson was involved with were international in nature, Mitchell felt Jackson was never too busy to deal with the smaller issues of concern to people in southeastern Washington.

"I always felt Idaho was fortunate to have a leader like him," Mitchell said, because he worked for issues that were important to Idaho, too.

"I guess you don't think of the politician as a statesman until after they're gone," Mitchell said. "And Henry Jackson was certainly a statesman."

"I am really shocked," said Bernard P. McCabe, chairman of the Asotin County Commission, when contacted late Thursday about Jackson's death.

McCabe said he heard the news on television about an hour earlier.

"He was an excellent senator for Washington and particularly our area," said McCabe, who is a past campaign coordinator for Jackson in Asotin County.

"I think the state of Washington is really losing a fine citizen and excellent senator. He really stuck up for the people of Washington. He's going to be really missed," McCabe said.

"Oh my," said Harold Vaughn of Clarkston, upon learning of Jackson's death at a late hour. "He was a guest in my home. He was a good friend, a good senator.

"I know we've lost a great man," said Vaughn, who also was a campaign coordinator for Jackson in Asotin County. "He did a lot of great things for the state of Washington . . . We'll miss him greatly."

Charles (Pete) Collins, chairman of the Asotin County Democratic Party, was awakened by the news late Thursday.

"I think he was just a terrific help to eastern Washington," Collins said. "He always had our concerns in mind. He always came to Asotin County.

[From the Eugene (Oreg.) Register-Guard, Sept. 4, 1983]

A SENATOR WHO KNEW HIMSELF

The Pacific Northwest has lost one of its great public men, Sen. Henry Mr. "Scoop" Jackson of Washington.

He will be missed not only because of his effectiveness in office but because of the confidence he instilled in the continuing possibility of government controlled by good men.

Henry Jackson was a good man, and everyone from his Senate colleagues to his hometown neighbors in Everett, Wash., knew it. That doesn't mean just that he didn't smoke or drink or play around with nubile political groupies—although it is true, he did none of those things. In the larger sense, it means that while he did an important job extremely well he also retained a strong sense of himself as an individual, not an image. He was his own man, and for all of his prominence, was in many ways a very private person.

The son of Norwegian immigrants, Jackson grew up poor but made good quickly by way of public education (the University of Washington Law School) and elective office. He was a county prosecutor at 26, a U.S. Representative at 28, a U.S. Senator at 40. He established what must be a Northwest record for rolling up majorities at election time. It was always a little ironic that such a nice fellow would so thoroughly demolish his opponents at the polls.

In Congress, Jackson stubbornly followed his own lead on all important issues. He delighted liberals with his stands on labor and welfare policies, civil rights and—before it became a motherhood issue—environmentalism. But he offended many of those same people with his adamant denunciations of the Soviet Union and his strong defense of a strong national defense.

Jackson was, in truth, an unexciting speaker who was always too big on substance and too short on natural charm to ever have a chance for the presidency, although he tried for Democratic nomination twice, in 1972 and 1976.

In 1980, the authoritative Alamanac of American Politics paid him this compliment: "At the peak of his Washington career is Senator Henry "Scoop" Jackson. He has been disappointed in presidential elections: he was an also ran in 1972 and his seemingly strong campaign collapsed in 1976. But he remains a hard-working legislator with mastery over many subjects—a living refutation of the charge that the Senate no longer has leaders of broad interests and deep knowledge and experience."

One of the funniest moments of his career came in November, 1980, when the American Security Council, a right-wing outfit that would like to reserve the whole federal budget for the Pentagon, gave Jackson a 70 percent negative rating on his voting record.

When he heard that, the senator told a gathering of news people, "Here I am, I've been a warmonger for 30 years. I am the senator from Boeing and the chairman of the military-industrial complex. And now I've become a security risk."

When the laughter died down, he added a serious, somewhat weary, afterthought: "I'm really fed up with this one-issue business . . . One issue, one issue—my Lord, I wish the world were that simple."

That was Henry Jackson. He had the maturity, confidence, dignity and integrity we'd love to see in every person sent to represent the people in Washington, D.C., but which are found to this degree in few.

[From the Lewiston (Idaho) Tribune, Sept. 3, 1983]

ANOTHER POLITICAL GIANT HAS FALLEN

One of the most rewarding tasks that can fall to a governor is the opportunity to fill a vacancy in the United States Senate. But there can be no pleasure for John Spellman in contemplating the replacement of Washington Sen. Henry Jackson, who died unexpectedly Thursday night.

With Jackson's death Washington has lost the second of its politically powerful senators. Warren Magnuson, although old and ailing, was first in seniority in the Senate when he was defeated three years ago by Slade Gorton, and a figure of great influence. Jackson was third in seniority, a two-time candidate for his party's nomination for the presidency and an effective and respected lawmaker. Sometimes known as "the senator from Boeing," because of his skill at snagging defense contracts for Washington's largest employer, Jackson was also a vigorous advocate of social programs. He was a conservative in matters of defense and a liberal on social issues. He became such a prominent figure in that context that he gave his name to people of similar ideological makeup. When you wanted someone like him to fill a candidate slot, you sent for "a Jackson Democrat."

Jackson was effective for Washington in the Senate not only by virtue of his seniority but because he was a man of unshakable integrity. After 31 years in that steamy caldron of ambition and one-upmanship, he had collected a host of adversaries but no enemies.

Washington has been lucky to have him all these years, just as it was lucky to have Warren Magnuson. But public servants, like machines, wear out and have to be replaced. Henry Jackson suddenly is gone and the governor soon must seek a successor. No one ought to envy him that task.—L.H.

PARALYSIS IN THE FACE OF THE SOVIET SALT BREAKOUT

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, the extraordinary statement issued this week by the Soviet leader Yuriy Andropov is noteworthy not only for its harsh rhetoric, but for the actions which Andropov has ordered to back up his words. The speech should be seen as the visible manifestation of a long-term Soviet policy which has been managed by Andropov for years, along with Nikolai Orgarkov, the Soviet deputy defense minister and chief of the general staff. That policy, which comes as no surprise to those realists who have been following Soviet activities with regard to arms control, is the policy of break-out.

I

Mr. President, the idea that the Soviets would attempt to break out of the restrictions imposed by the strategic arms limitation agreements, and other arms control agreements, is one that is repugnant to the arms control establishment. The very notion of arms control is based upon the assumption that the agreements are in the rational interests of both superpowers, and that an attempt at break-out is irrational and self-destructive.

But the events of recent months, Mr. President, culminating with the shooting down of the KAL airliner, have convinced me that the Soviets are indeed in the beginning of overt break-out. Moreover, it is clear that U.S. policymakers have formulated no contingency plans to handle a situation of Soviet break-out. Thus the steady accumulation of incontrovertible evidence of Soviet violations of the strategic arms limitation agreements has introduced not action, but paralysis and deadlock among President Reagan's advisers. In the face of a threat to our security so massive and far-reaching, the administration has failed to take even one positive step toward countering the Soviet break-out.

Indeed, I proposed on this floor a number of diplomatic and economic steps which could be taken to undermine the Soviet drive for nuclear superiority and world domination. Those steps should yet be taken. But the time has come when we must begin a crash program to counter Soviet ICBM threats. In the face of Soviet breakout, we need to start immediately on defensive strategic programs to protect American lives. At the very least, we need to begin to implement nonnuclear space defense systems which would make the Soviet ICBM uncertain and obsolete.

The ruthless Soviet action in shooting down the KAL airliner was brazenly justified by Andropov in his statement yesterday, with clear intimations that the Soviets intended to pursue their present course. He said:

The Soviet state has successfully overcome many trials, including crucial ones, during the six and a half decades of its existence. Those who encroached on the integrity of our state, its independence and our system found themselves on the garbage heap of history. It is high time that everyone to whom this applies understood that we shall be able to insure the security of our country, the security of our friends and allies under any circumstances.

The Soviet people can rest assured that our country's defense capability is being maintained on such a level that it would not be advisable for anyone to stage a trial of strength.

No one should mistake the Soviet Union's good will and desire to come to an agreement for a sign of weakness. The Soviet Union will be able to make an appropriate response to any attempt to disrupt the existing military-strategic balance and its words and deeds will not be at variance.

Mr. President, the Soviets' so-called appropriate response has been a long list of violations of the SALT agreements. It is perhaps not accidental that Marshal Ogarkov, who appeared recently at the Soviet press conference to justify the KAL massacre, was the chief military delegate to the 1969–71 SALT I negotiations. And as Business Week outlines in the September 19 issue, Ogarkov, now the top Soviet military figure, was also the creator of a Soviet agency known as the Chief Directorate of Strategic Concealment. The Soviet activities in Kamchatka have long been directed toward concealment of Soviet violations of the SALT agreements.

In 1959, an official Department of State document stated that the Soviets had violated over 50 treaties since 1917. A Department of Defense document issued on November 5, 1962, listed the major treaty violations.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the DOD list of Soviet Treaty violations be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 1.)

Mr. HELMS. SALT I was ratified in 1972. Yet by 1976, the Soviets had even made a public admission that they were in violation of that treaty. See the New York Times, May 25, 1976, "Soviet Concedes Arms Violations."

But in the early days of détente, Soviet apologists argued that the Soviets could not be accused of actually violating the treaties, but only of taking advantage of loopholes that had been put in by such experts as Marshal Ogarkov.

But as those advantages have multiplied, while the United States did nothing, the Soviets have become ever more brazen. Pointing out the Soviet activities in Kamchatka, Business Week said:

But what makes the Kamchatka Peninsula one of Russia's most sensitive areas is its strategic build-up. At Chukotskiy, on the northern tip of the peninsula, the Soviets have built the infrastructure for a vast installation of mobile missiles—SS-20s and/or SS-16s, or the operational version of the PL-5. The SS-20's could reach half of the U.S., while the SS-16s and PL-5s could cover most of the country. There are more than 115 SS-20s east of the Urals, and the completion of the Far East buildup would double that number. The base at Chukotskiy appears to be the "retaliation in kind" that, Soviet propagandists have repeatedly warned, would follow modernization of U.S. missiles deployed under NATO in Europe.

The Soviets are also developing and testing a new generation of ballistic missiles and aerospace defense missiles on Kamchatka. In flagrant violation of SALT II provisions, the Soviet encode the telemetric information on these missile tests, while broadcasting false data to confuse the U.S. tracking system. For the PL-5, they have introduced another way of shielding secrets: night testing, which hampers the U.S. capability to observe the missiles and their impact points. . . .

Recently the Soviets have increased their antiballistic missile (ABM) activities in southern Kamchatka, although these are prohibited in a 1972 agreement attached to SALT I. In 1974, the Soviets introduced ABM radar in Kamchatka—specifically prohibited by the ABM treaty—calling it a test installation. In fact, the radar has full operational capacity. The Soviets hope it, along with an operational radar in Komsomolsk in the Far East and an ABM radar recently discovered in Ablakova in Siberia, will shield their Far East strategic installations.

Mr. President, it is this situation that the KAL jumbo jet innocently blundered into. The shooting down of the civilian airliner was a reckless attempt to cover up an illegal PL-5 test in progress. The shooting down itself was an attempt at concealing the arms control breakout. Yet in the face of this critical situation, the bureaucracy in the administration remains paralyzed.

II

The Soviet act of shooting down the KAL airliner, as I have pointed out, was an attempt to cover up Soviet SALT violations. At the very time that the KAL airliner was nearing Kamchatka, the Soviets were preparing for the fifth test of the PL-5 ICBM, a test which would have been illegal under the SALT II agreement, because there is evidence that it is 220 percent larger in throwweight than earlier missiles. It is because of the preparations for the illegal test that our RC 135 was in the air in the first place. An advisor to the Soviet leadership actually conceded on September 21, 1985 that the U.S. RC 135 was "about to monitor the would-be tests of the Soviet intercontinental missiles." Moreover, the electronic signals from the four previous tests had been encrypted, which itself is a violation. Obviously, the Soviets do not want us to know the details of their violations—so it is not surprising that the Soviets would do anything, even the brutal murder of 269 civilians, to block any chance that we might be discovering their guilty secret. And the Soviets have confirmed the coverup: They have violated the incidents at sea agreement of 1972 in their efforts to prevent United States recovery of the KAL black box.

Thus the KAL airliner shoot-down is itself a warning that our present approach to arms control is outmoded. If both sides are not acting in good faith, there is no verification procedure that can prevent violations. The very essence of arms control is good faith in assisting the compliance checking procedures, yet the Soviets claim the right to shoot down U.S. aerial reconnaissance. If the Soviets have thus rejected the essence of arms control, then our current posture in the negotiations is fruitless and dangerous to our security. We need to revise our strategy to take into account this undeniable circumstance.

Nevertheless, Mr. President, the administration does not seem to be able to make up its mind what to do about it. I can see the dilemma of those who have devoted their entire careers to arms control on the assumption that the arms control process was a reasonable proceeding based upon the common interests of both sides. To admit that the Soviets might not be acting in good faith would be to say that the whole careers of many in the arms control community has been based upon a false premise. It is very hard to admit that the work of a lifetime has been based upon error.

Yet not only does the record show that the Soviets have been violating the SALT agreements time and time again, but the record of the past few weeks on the KAL incident shows that the Soviets will lie, twist, distort, and impede the facts surrounding their violations.

Now, Mr. President, we come to a very serious situation, one that threatens our national security. I have been reliably informed that for the last 3 weeks, the highly classified National Security Council analysis of Soviet Salt violations has been on President Reagan's desk. While President Reagan is the first American President to accuse the Soviets of violating any arms control agreements, it is also true that this administration has done nothing about these violations. The President's advisers have created a serious embarrassment for the President, because he is already on the record with accusations that the Soviets have violated five arms control agreements (see my attached compilation), yet nothing has been done.

Take note of the timing, Mr. President: The Soviet SALT violations study arrived only a few days after the KAL affair. I cannot say in this Chamber exactly what this highly classified study says. But I do know that it will give no comfort to those who have been claiming that we lack the conclusive evidence to make a positive decision in the matter.

So what has happened, Mr. President? What impact has this study had? Absolutely no impact, Mr. President. And worse than no impact, its conclusions are so overwhelming that it has paralyzed action by the President's advisers at a crucial time.

The facts are well known, Mr. President, not only inside the administration, but among all those who follow these problems seriously. The facts would demand that the United States insist upon a special meeting of the U.S. SALT Standing Consultative Commission. The Soviet violations are so urgent and so flagrant, that special attention should be called to the problem. Even before the KAL shoot-down, in early August the United States requested a special meeting of the SCC. But there are powerful elements in the State Department who are afraid to confront the Soviets even in a diplomatic forum. Naturally, the Soviets refused the request in mid-August. And what did we do then? We meekly agreed to wait for a regular meeting in late September, instead of taking the matter of Soviet SALT breakout to top forums and making the refusal public.

The irony is, Mr. President, that a Soviet official has now actually admitted that an ICBM test flight was being prepared during the KAL shoot-down.

But despite the mid-August Soviet rebuff of our early August urgent request for a special compliance session, the administration decided that we would wait for the regular meeting of the SCC and then act.

Mr. President, the SALT SCC has been unable to compel Soviet SALT compliance. As the distinguished Senator from Idaho, Mr. McCLURE, has pointed out:

> While it is true that the SCC has resolved all US compliance concerns about the Soviets, these concerns have been resolved by American acquiescence. At a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing (on SALT II) in 1979, Ambassador Paul Nitze was asked how Soviet treaty violations before the SCC were resolved. He replied: "They were resolved by accepting what had been done in violation."

Not all Soviet SALT violations were even referred to the SCC, and in one case there was a delay of 7 years between first detection of the Soviet violation and the U.S. acquiescence in the SCC to the Soviet violation.

Thus the SCC has, over the decade of SALT I and II, proved absolutely useless. It has been a forum for U.S. acquiescence in all Soviet SALT violations, and it has not changed Soviet behavior. Indeed, it is fair to say that the SCC has been counterproductive, because it has become a convenient device for avoiding compliance enforcement.

I call to the attention of this body the fact that Secretary of State Shultz sent a diplomatic note to the Soviet Union last July asking for an explanation of the evidence we had of the illegal new Soviet ICBM. Only contemptuous denials and insults were received from the Soviets.

Then by early August, we had obtained unmistakable evidence of the construction of the new ABM radar in Siberia, in violation of five provisions of the SALT I ABM Treaty. As I have said, in early August, we asked the Soviets for an urgent, special SCC session to consider compliance. Only once before, in 1975, had the United States requested and received such a special compliance session.

And while the debate was raging within the administration about what to do about the new violation and the Soviet stonewalling on the special SCC compliance session, the Soviets shot down the KAL airliner in an action which they have admitted was related to their intended coverup of the fifth test of the illegal missile.

At the United Nations General Assembly on Monday, President Reagan stated:

> Reactions to the Korean airliner tragedy are a timely reminder of just how different the Soviets' concept of truth and international cooperation is from that of the rest of the world. Evidence abounds that we cannot simply assume that agreements negotiated with the Soviet Union will be fulfilled. We negotiated the Helsinki Final Act, but the promised freedoms have not been provided, and those in the Soviet Union who sought to monitor their fulfillment languish in prison. We negotiated a Biological Weapons Convention, but deadly yellow rain and other toxic agents fall on Hmong villages and Afghan encampments. We have negotiated arms agreements, but the high level of Soviet encoding hides the information needed for their verification. A newly-discovered radar facility and a new ICBM raise serious concerns about Soviet compliance with agreements already negotiated.

Mr. President, when a President of the United States makes these charges in the foremost, top level international forum, the issue is too important to be handled on a routine level in the SCC in Geneva.

Mr. President, the United States must demand that the Soviets dismantle their newest illegal ABM radar in the interior of Siberia, and stop the testing of their new and illegal PL-5 ICBM—and incidentally, the intelligence community has already dubbed the PL-5 with the label SS-X-25. That means there is no doubt in the minds of the intelligence community that it is a new type ICBM; and since it is then their second new type ICBM, it is forbidden by the SALT II agreement.

But the arms controllers do not want to make these minimum demands on the Soviet Union. While they do not even dispute that the Soviets are in violation of SALT I and SALT II, the fact is that the Soviets have already, at the highest level, repeatedly denied that they have been violating SALT I and SALT II, and have already refused to stop what they are doing. The arms controllers are worried that yet another, the fourth U.S. demand this year, would also be rebuffed by the Soviets. Apparently, they feel that it is better to pretend that the Soviet violations will go away.

Mr. President, this dispute has reportedly reached a profound deadlock within the administration. But paralysis and inaction cannot prevail. We must put the case to the world about what is happening. Any policy which pretends that the Soviet Union is a reliable partner is a policy which will lead to even greater crisis. The first step in any crisis is to let the people know just what the reality is.

Mr. President, as I have pointed out, President Reagan has already publicly accused the Soviets of violating five arms control agreements: The Chemical Warfare Protocol of 1925, the Biological Warfare Convention of 1975, the Threshold Test Ban Treaty of 1974, and the SALT II Treaty. Such authoritative former officials as Defense Secretary Melvin Laird, and Secretary of State Henry Kissinger have previously accused the Soviets of violating the SALT I ABM Treaty and the SALT I Interim Agreement.

Mr. President, I recommend the following steps:

First, the United States should cancel the routine SALT SCC meeting, due to repeated Soviet refusals of a special compliance session, and due to the fact that President Reagan's concern about Soviet SALT violations, expressed at the United Nations, require use of a higher forum than the SCC.

Second, the Secretary of State should send another note to the Soviet Foreign Minister, this time demanding that the Soviets cease and desist in their SALT violations. If this note is again met with contemptuous Soviet denials and insults, President Reagan himself should send a personal note to Soviet Chairman Andropov, and make the entire diplomatic record since February public.

Third, because the President is already on the record with five accusations of Soviet arms control treaty violaions, Congress needs to be told the facts about Soviet violations.

Fourth, the United States should stop making preemptive concessions in the INF and START negotiations, and instead change the focus of all arms control negotiations to enhancing verification and compliance.

Fifth, the President should consider those unilateral defense measures, especially antiballistic missile defenses, needed to protect American national security, which should be proposed to Congress.

III

Mr. President, President Reagan made another very important statement recently. On September 14, 1983, Ronald Reagan stated in regard to the Kennedy-Khrushchev Agreement of 1962:

> That agreement has been abrogated many times by the Soviet Union and Cuba in bringing what can only be considered offensive weapons, not defensive, there."

This Presidential statement represents the second time that Ronald Reagan has publicly accused the Soviets of violating the very agreement which brought the world peace after the worst nuclear crisis in history. The implications of the President's accusations are enormous for United States-Soviet relations. If the Soviets are violating the very agreement that brought the world back from the brink of nuclear war, should we be carrying on business as usual diplomacy and arms control negotiations with them?

Nor is this the first time that the President has talked about Soviet SALT violations.

On May 9, 1982, President Reagan stated accurately:

> Unfortunately, for some time suspicions have grown that the Soviet Union has not been living up to its obligations under existing arms control treaties.

As I have already noted, President Reagan made an even stronger statement on Soviet SALT violations at the United Nations General Assembly on September 26, 1983:

> We have negotiated arms agreements, but the high level of Soviet encoding hides the information needed for their verification. A newly discovered radar facility and a new ICBM raise serious concerns about Soviet compliance with agreements already negotiated.

On February 23, 1983, President Reagan stated in regard to the second Soviet SS-X-25 ICBM (PL-5) test earlier that month:

> You could say I'm convinced that these are violations * * * This last one comes closest to indicating that it is a violation.

Mr. President, I strongly agree with President Ronald Reagan that the Soviets are violating the SALT treaties and other arms control treaties. There are reports that even State Department detentists are fretting over escalating evidence of Soviet SALT cheating. One State Department arms control policymaker has been quoted as conceding that the Soviets have "busted the SALT agreements," a reference to Soviet violations of both SALT I and SALT II. The Soviets themselves in March 1976 admitted that they were in violation of SALT I. A former U.S. Ambassador has written that there is overwhelming objective evidence that the Soviets have violated SALT and other arms control agreements. Even the U.S. Ambassador to the Intermediate Range Nuclear Force reduction negotiations in Geneva, the venerable Paul Nitze, has conceded that throughout the 1972-

1982 decade of SALT, the United States has acquiesced in Soviet SALT violations.

In December 1982, amid reports that the Soviets were preparing to test another new missile, the SS-X-25, the State Department warned: "If they begin to test another new type of ICBM, this would conflict with the terms of SALT II." But the Soviets went right ahead and tested the SS-X-25 in December 1982, February, May, and June 1983 anyway. The SS-X-25 is their second new type ICBM, in violation of the SALT II constraint of no more than one new type ICBM.

In testimony to the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 15, 1983, Secretary of State Shultz criticized Moscow's continuing practice of stretching a series of treaties and agreements to the brink of violation and beyond. Shultz added that the United States is becoming increasingly concerned about Soviet practices—including the recent testing of ICBM's—that raise questions about the validity of their claim of compliance with existing SALT agreements.

Mr. President, the question facing all American leaders now is what to do about Soviet Arms Control Treaty breakout and the nature of United States-Soviet relations. The main problems ahead are the repeated Soviet threats to walk out of or to suspend the INF and START negotiations in Geneva, if the U.S. Pershing II and ground-launched cruise missile deployment goes forward in NATO Europe this December. Further, the Soviets have repeatedly threatened to create an analogous threat to the United States—somewhere in the Caribbean—if the United States and NATO missile deployment is consumated in 2 months. Of course, the Soviets already have created a severe nuclear threat in Cuba with their bomber, fighter-bomber, and submarine bases in Cuba in violation of the Kennedy-Khrushchev agreement. Thus we must prepare now for the very dangerous crisis looming in December and beyond.

The ultimate irony is that Soviet peace propaganda and active measures have successfully obfuscated Soviet SALT cheating, and instead made the United States seem to be the main villain and obstacle to successful arms control. Soviet hypocrisy about arms control is well illustrated by their breakout from all existing arms control treaties, while impudently threatening to walk out on on going negotiations if the United States tries to restore parity.

I believe that time is running out for President Reagan credibly to make a public report to the Congress and to the American people on Soviet SALT and other arms control violations. The President endorsed the Republican Party platform of July 1980, which stated:

> We pledge to end the Carter cover-up of violations of SALT I and II.

I believe that President Reagan should report to the Congress openly, in unclassified form, absolutely before and no later than October 31, 1983.

The report need not precipitate the Soviet threat to break off arms control negotiations. Indeed, the opposite effect is far more likely. After challenging Soviet SALT violations openly and explicitly, President Reagan can seize the moral summit, by nobly offering to accelerate the pace and scope of all arms control negotiations, if only the Soviets will show a sign of good faith by ending their violations of all existing treaties and agreements. Hence President Reagan has the opportunity both to deter Soviet breakoff of the ongoing arms control negotiations and breakout of existing arms control treaties, while at the same time reaffirming the integrity of existing and future arms control agreements. Thus the Presidential SALT violations report would strongly serve the cause of peace, while at the same time outflanking all concessionary leftist critics at home and in Europe.

Mr. President, I am concerned that about one third, 33 percent, of our existing nuclear weapons firepower, is being unilaterally deactivated. These oldest but most powerful missile and bomber forces are counted in SALT II. In contrast, the Soviets have refused to deactivate over 250 missiles and bombers in order to comply with SALT II. Moreover, I am concerned that about 46 percent of the capability of our modernization plans for U.S. strategic forces has been cut back, all in order to comply with the unratified SALT II Treaty. We are in the ironic posture of violating the Constitutional Treaty making powers in order to comply with the unratified SALT II Treaty, while the Soviets are breaking out of SALT II themselves.

Mr. President, Dr. Henry Kissinger made an eloquent prophecy on June 15, 1972, during the SALT I ratification debate when he predicted:

> The possibility always exists that the Soviets will treat the Moscow Agreement, (i.e. the May 1972 SALT I Interim Offensive Agreement and SALT I ABM Treaty) as they have sometimes treated earlier ones, just as another tactical opportunity in the protracted conflict. If this happens, the United States Will have to respond . . . If this agreement were being circumvented, obviously we would have to take compensatory steps in the strategic field.

During the decade of SALT I and SALT II, the Soviets have in fact circumvented and violated both SALT I and SALT II over 30 times, just as they violated over 50 treaties between 1917 and 1962. There are over 150 detected cases of Soviet diplomatic forgeries and active measures exposed over the last 7 years. The new Soviet ABM radar in the interior of Siberia and the new Soviet SS-X-25 ICBM are clearcut violations of SALT I and SALT II—even the many Soviet apologists inside the U.S. national security bureaucracy concede that there is no longer any serious internal dispute that these are violations. The Soviet telemetry encryption, the mobile SS-16 ICBM operational at a test range, the production of more than 30 Backfire bombers per year, the Soviet rapid-refire ABM and ICBM capability—these are examples of other almost equally conclusive Soviet SALT violations. But the United States has yet to take compensatory countermeasures, as Dr. Kissinger pledged.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following supporting documents be printed in the RECORD. First, an article from Human Events, September 3, 1983, entitled "Clark Verification Panel May Head Off Summit." A key administration arms control expert is quoted in the article. This expert is one of the top U.S. policymakers, and he says:

> We have tried to engage them [the Soviets] in verification discussions, and they've said no, no.

The Human Events article goes on to quote an NSC official as saying:

> The practices of gross deception and concealment by the Soviets, combined with their crude responses to our legitimate concerns, are such that no official, Senator or anyone else aware of these facts will any longer be able to ignore or excuse Soviet conduct.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibit 2.)

Mr. HELMS. Second, I would like to have printed in the RECORD an excellent article by William R. Harris entitled "Breaches of Arms Control Obligations: Implications for the Future of Arms Control." This article was presented less than a week ago at a Stanford University arms control seminar, and it provides a sound legal basis for my statement.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that an article by Rowland Evans and Robert Novak entitled "The President's SALT Screwdriver," published in the Washington Post on September 26, 1983, be printed in the RECORD. This is a very fine article by two outstanding and well-connected journalists. There is only one thing about the article which I would question. That is just how strong the opposition to Presidential exposure of Soviet SALT violations really is. I have already mentioned reports that the opposition of the President's political and diplomatic advisers to a Presidential report on Soviet SALT violations is much stronger than Evans and Novak suggest.

In addition, Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that an article from Business Week entitled "What the Soviets Are So Anxious to Conceal," edited by Sol Sanders, be printed in the RECORD.

Mr. President, I also ask unanimous consent that a compilation entitled "President Reagan's Accusations of Soviet SALT Violations" be printed in the RECORD. This compilation shows the need for the President to tell the Congress the evidence which underlies these public charges. Much evidence on Soviet SALT violations is already in the public domain, so all the Reagan administration needs to do is to compile and report on the unclassified evidence.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See exhibits 3, 4, 5, and 6.)

Mr. HELMS. Finally, Mr. President, I would point out that Marshal Nickolai Ogarkov recently gave a press conference in Moscow in which he presented the Soviet cover story for the KAL massacre. Marshal Ogarkov is currently the chief of the Soviet General Staff, and between 1969 and 1971 he was the top Soviet military delegate to the SALT I negotiations. What is not well known in the West is the fact that Marshal Ogarkov has concurrently also been chief of the Soviet General Staff Directorate of Strategic Deception. In an authoritative description of the May 1972 SALT I Summit in Moscow, Viktor Suvarov in his new book "Inside The Soviet Army," states:

. . . right behind Brezhnev (was) General Ogarkov . . . head of the (Soviet General Staff) Chief Directorate of Strategic Deception. This Chief Directorate is the most powerful in the Soviet General Staff . . . everything in this huge country must be done in such a way that the enemy always has a false impression of what is going on.

The Chief Directorate of Strategic Deception . . . shows the watchful eye of the camera a reassuring picture, behind the shelter of which the gangsters who call themselves the Communist Party of the Soviet Union, the Soviet Army, Military Industry and so forth go about their business . . . There is no doubt that these activities enable the Politburo, without great difficulty, to empty the pockets of those in the West who will not understand that they are dealing with organized crime, committed by a State which is operating on a world-wide scale.

This revelation of the Soviet General Staff Strategic Deception Directorate is the first unclassified reference to the military group which controls Soviet SALT negotiating and compliance behavior. It is regrettable that their explanation of the KAL massacre is no more credible than their sordid negotiating history, which is a record of duplicity, deception, and violation.

EXHIBIT 1

EXTRACT FROM SENATOR HELMS' ADDITIONAL VIEWS TO SFRC REPORT NUCLEAR ARMS REDUCTIONS, JULY 12, 1982

SOVIET TREATY VIOLATIONS

In conclusion, we also need to examine a brief and incomplete compilation of examples of Soviet diplomatic duplicity. The table below on Soviet treaty violations is notable for the fact that it is drawn from an official U.S. Government document published in 1962. Other examples of Soviet forgeries, disinformation, and diplomatic deception are beyond the present paper's scope.

a. In 1973, the Soviets violated the 1972 Basic Principles of U.S.-Soviet Relations during the Yom Kippur War. In this case, the Soviets reneged on their 1972 pledge to engage in mutual consultations in the event that nuclear war was threatened, and they sought unilateral advantage by encouraging the Egyptian attack on Israel. They also threatened unilateral intervention against Israel, and made a nuclear threat against the U.S.

b. With Soviet aid and encouragement, North Vietnam broke the Paris Accords on Peace in Southeast Asia throughout the 1973–1975 period.

c. The Soviets also violated two arms control treaties in the 1920s and 1940s. According to Laurence Beilenson:

"There are * * * two cases where the Soviet Union abetted violations disarmament treaties. The Soviet Union was not a party to the Treaty of Versailles, but * * * it abetted the breach by Germany of its disarmament provisions, and helped Germany to defeat the provision for verification of performance.

"The peace treaties of the wartime Allies—including the USSR and the United States—of 1947 with Rumania, Bulgaria, and Hungary each had clauses specifically limiting the military forces of each of the three countries, a disarmament provision. The clauses were not given even token performance. The breaches began and continued while the USSR dictated the conduct of the three countries."

d. High Reagan administration officials have charged that the December 1981 imposition of martial law in Poland was directed by the Soviets, and that the Soviets have directly threatened military action against Poland, intimidated its leaders, and ordered basic human rights of the Polish people to be violated by the Polish Communist Party and Polish Army. Eugene V. Rostow, ACDA Director even went so far on NBC-TV on December 22, 1981, as to charge that the Soviets have violated the UN Charter by their aggressive actions in Poland. Other high Reagan administration officials have also accused the Soviets of violating the 1975 Helsinki Accord by their suppression of the basic human rights of the Polish people.

e. Violation of the Litvinov Agreement.—In 1933, the U.S. recognized the government of the USSR following negotiations and an exchange of letters between Soviet Foreign Minister Litvinov and President Roosevelt. Litvinov stated in a letter to President Roosevelt of November 16, 1933:

"It will be the fixed policy of the Government of the Union of the Soviet Socialist Republics * * * not to permit the formation or residence on its territory of any group or organization which has an aim (of) the overthrow or the preparation for the overthrow of, or the bringing about by force, of a change in the political or social order of the whole or any part of the United States, its territories or possessions." (Emphasis added).

However, Foreign Minister Litvinov's solemn pledge produced no effect whatever upon the activities of the Comintern, which continued to carry out its role as the organizer and directing center of the World Communist movement from its Moscow headquarters. The purpose of the Comintern, clearly defined in its statutes and theses, was "the struggle by all available means, including armed forces, for the overthrow of the international bourgeoisie and the creation of an international Soviet Republic." Thus the Comintern, located in Moscow with the permission and aid of the Soviet government, was explicitly commited to overthrowing the U.S. Government by force. Evidence of systematic violation of the Litvinov agreements after 1945 was brought to light by convictions under the U.S. Alien Registration Act of 1940, which made it a criminal offense "to organize or help to organize any society, group, or assembly of persons who, teach, advocate, or encourage the overthrow or destruction of any government in the U.S. by force or violence." The trial and conviction in 1949 in a U.S. Federal Court in New York of 11 communist leaders, revealed that American Communist Party, acting upon orders of the USSR issued by Dmitri Manuuilsky, (Comintern Leader and in 1949 Foreign Minister of the Ukrainian Soviet Socialist Republic and therefore an official member of the Soviet Government), had returned to a policy of violent revolution.

Despite continuous Soviet violation of the very agreements establishing U.S.-Soviet relations, the United States, still seems to believe that the USSR is a nation capable of normal adherence to international law. Soviet propaganda, covert action, subversion, and espionage inside the United States has increased markedly over the last decade.

According to a new book by James L. Tyson, "Target America: The Influence of Communist Propaganda on U.S. Media," there are at least 4,000 active Soviet propaganda agents within the United States, spending over 240 million dollars a year on Soviet propaganda inside the United States. The Soviet activity is a blatant violation of the Litvinov Agreement, and in itself should make the USSR unfit to negotiate with on SALT.

f. Figure 8 reflects a number of other Soviet treaty violations. It is extracted from an official U.S. Government book entitle "Soviet Treaty Violations," Department of Defense, November 5, 1962.

FIGURE 8.—HISTORY OF MAJOR SOVIET TREATY VIOLATIONS

The agreement: May 7, 1920. Soviet regime signs treaty with independent Georgian republic, pledging no interference in Georgia's internal affairs.

The result: February 1-12, 1921. Soviet troops invade Georgia, in step leading to absorption of Republic into USSR.

March 16, 1921. In trade agreement with Britain, Soviet Union pledges not to engage in propaganda in that country.

May 26, 1927. Britain ends agreement because of Soviet violations, including failure to stop propaganda as promised.

June 5, 1922. Soviet Union concludes friendship agreement with Czechoslovakia.

June 29, 1945. USSR compels Czechoslovakia to cede Carpatho-Ukraine to the Soviet Union.

December 12, 1943. USSR and Czech government-in-exile sign treaty of friendship and mutual assistance.

February 25, 1948. Czechoslovak government forced to accept communist ultimatum, as USSR completes arrangements to force it into its satellite empire. Ultimatum compels appointment of a cabinet of Moscow followers and climaxes Soviet postwar drive to absorb once-independent Czechoslovakia.

December 17, 1925. USSR signs non-aggression and neutrality pact with Turkey.

March 20, 1945. USSR denounces this pact, begins campaign to secure control of Black Sea straits.

August 31, 1926. USSR concludes non-aggression pact with Afghanistan.

June 14, 1946. USSR forces Afghanistan to cede border territory of Kishka.

September 28, 1926. USSR makes non-aggression pact with Lithuania, later extending this agreement through 1945.

June 15, 1940. Soviet troops invade Lithuania.

August 3, 1940. Lithuania is annexed by Soviet Union.

September 27, 1928. Soviet Union adheres to Kellog-Briand pact for renunciation of war.

By 1939, USSR violates this pledge—40 invasions of Poland, Lithuania, Latvia, Estonia, Rumania, and Finland.

January 21, 1932. USSR agrees to non-aggression pact with Finland.

November 20, 1939. Soviet military forces invade Finland.

February 5, 1932. Soviet Union signs non-aggression pact with Latvia.

August 5, 1940. Latvia is forcibly incorporated into the USSR.

May 4, 1932. Soviet Union pledges non-aggression in agreement with Estonia.

June 16, 1940. Soviet military forces invade and occupy Estonia.

August 6, 1940. Estonia is annexed by USSR.

July 25, 1932. Soviet Union signs non-aggession pact with Poland.

September 17, 1939. Soviet troops invade Poland.

May 4, 1934. USSR-Poland extend non-aggession pact for 10 years.

September 29, 1939. USSR signs agreement with Nazi Germany to partition Poland.

June 9, 1934. USSR recognizes Rumania, guarantees its sovereignty.

June 27, 1940. Soviet army invades Rumanian provinces of Bessarabia and North Bukovina. Soviet occupation of these areas completed in four days.

September 15, 1934. USSR enters League of Nations pledging thereby "the maintenance of justice and a scrupulous respect for all treaty obligations in the dealings of organized peoples with one another."

August 23, 1939. USSR makes treaty with Nazi Germany, termed "a joint conspiracy to deprive Poland, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Finland, and Rumania of their independence and territory integrity."

August 21, 1937. Soviet Union signs non-aggression pact with Republic of China.

October 2, 1949. USSR breaks relations with ROC after recognizing Communist Chinese regime it helped to gain power.

July 30, 1941. USSR concludes agreement with Polish government-in-exile pledging mutual aid and cooperation.

April 25, 1943. USSR breaks relations with Polish government-in-exile on pretext of Polish request for Red Cross investigations of Katyn Forest massacre.

August 14, 1945, USSR enters into treaty with Republic of China, containing these pledges, "each high contracting party undertakes not to conclude any alliance and not to take any part in any coalition directed against the other high contracting party. The treaty comes into force immediately and shall remain in force for a term of 30 years."

February 14, 1950. These pledges were broken when the USSR made a new agreement with Communist Chinese regime it had helped create. Soviets did not even bother to change the basic wording. The new treaty also pledged: "Both high contracting parties undertake not to conclude any alliance against the other high contracting party and not to take part in any coalition or actions or measure directed against the other high contracting party. . . . The present treaty will be valid for 30 years."

March 10, 1947. Council of Foreign Ministers, meeting in Moscow, agrees that all German prisoners of war should be repatriated by December 31, 1948.

August 3, 1955. Soviet regime furnishes West German Red Cross with data on the health and whereabouts of only 20 of the approximately 14,000 Germans known to be still held in the USSR.

May 4 & June 30, 1949. Four Power Agreements of New York and Paris guarantee U.S., British, French, and Soviet joint control of Berlin, all access routes to and from the city and freedom of movement within the city.

September 20, 1955. USSR unilaterally transfers Soviet control over all access routes to and from Berlin to East German regime.

August 13, 1961. Construction of Berlin Wall completely prohibits free passage from Soviet sector to the Western sectors.

July 27, 1953. Military armistice established between U.N. Command and opposing communist forces assisted by USSR, China & North Korea. Armistice agreement pledges signers to "cease introduction into Korea of reinforcing military personnel."

July 11, 1955. U.N. Command details long list of armistice violations by Communist parties.

May 6, 1957. U.N. Command, in another of series of official complaints, charges that Communists have sent troops into Korea's demilitarized zones six times in a period of less than four months.

January 14, 1956. USSR signs agreement with Yugoslavia, pledging $110,000,000 in credits for industrial construction.

August 4, 1956. USSR pledges an additional grant of $175,000,000, bringing total to $285,000,000.

May 28, 1958. Yugoslav sources disclose USSR has postponed for 5 years the grant to Yugoslavia amounting to $285,000,000. This represented an attempt to retaliate against Yugoslavia for its refusal to accept the CPSU's ideological leadership.

September 24, 1941. USSR pledges adherence to Atlantic Charter, which provides that agreeing countries seek no aggrandizement, that the countries desire no territorial changes not made in accord with freely expressed wishes of the people concerned, and that they respect the right of all peoples to choose their own form of government.

Against these promises stands the USSR's record of occupation and domination of Rumania, Estonia, Latvia, Lithuania, Czechoslovakia, Tannu Tuva, Afghanistan territory, Hungary, East Germany, Albania, Bulgaria, Poland, North Korea, Mongolia.

January 29, 1942. USSR, with Iran and Britain, signs treaty of alliance, providing for military use of Iranian territory only until end of military operations against Germany.

Soviet Union refused to withdraw its troops from Iran at the end of World War II.

February 4-11, 1945. At Yalta Conference, USSR agrees on various postwar measures, including adoption of a resolution that the liberated peoples of Europe should have the opportunity to solve their economic problems by democratic means.

East Germany, Hungary, and Czechoslovakia, and other countries were forced into postwar roles as satellites of the Soviet Union.

February 11, 1945, USSR, at Yalta conference, agrees to declaration that Polish provisional government "shall be pledged to the holding of free and unfettered elections as soon as possible on the basis of universal suffrage and secret ballot.

January 5, 1947. Soviet Union refuses to participate in meeting with Britain and U.S. to secure compliance with the 1945 agreement pledging free elections in Poland.

January 19, 1947. Communist-controlled fraudulent election carried out under conditions of Soviet military occupation.

April 11, 1945. USSR signs 20-year treaty of friendship, mutual aid, and cooperation with Yugoslavia.

September 29, 1949. Soviet Union denounces this agreement.

June 14-18, 1945. President Truman and Premier Stalin agree, in an exchange of letters to "free access by air, road, and rail from Frankfort and Bremen to Berlin for United States forces."

April 1, 1948-May 12, 1949. USSR imposes the Berlin Blockade by severing all land and water routes between Berlin and West Germany. Western allies supply Berlin by airlift.

March 1962. USSR harasses flights by allied airplanes between Berlin and West Germany.

July 17-August 2, 1945. At Potsdam conference, USSR agrees that there should be uniform treatment of the German people throughout Germany. East Germany today continues to be a rigidly controlled Soviet satellite. Its people have been denied free elections, isolated from the people of West Germany, and victimized by the same kind of regimentation, police rule, and economic restrictions imposed on the peoples of all the Soviet Bloc states in Europe.

October 19, 1956. USSR-Japanese Joint Declaration pledges the Soviet Union to refrain from interference in Japan's internal affairs.

1958. During the weeks preceding Japanese elections of May 22. Soviet radio beams propaganda at Japan violently opposing the reelection of Premier Kishi's govenment.

1959-1960. USSR threatens Japan with the possibility of nuclear war if Japan ratifies United States-Japan Security treaty, signed January 19, 1960.

Soviet noncompliance with treaties is now indisputable, as is the record of Soviet forgeries, deceptions, and disinformation ploys. How can the U.S. continue arms control negotiations with so unreliable a nation as the Soviet Union? Arms control treaties in any case can not be relied upon to keep the peace. Only adequate U.S. military forces will do that.

But as bad as Soviet treaty noncompliance actions have been, we also can not ignore Soviet words. As noted, Stalin said in 1913:

"Words have no relation to actions—otherwise what kind of diplomacy is it? Words are one thing, actions another. Good words are a mask for concealment of bad deeds. Sincere diplomacy is no more possible than dry water or wooden iron."

V. I. Lenin stated: "Promises are like pie crusts, made to be broken."

The chief enemy of arms control is Marxism-Leninism. The Soviets are indeed waging ideological warfare through arms control negotiations. As Lenin also stated: "Every peace program (i.e., such as a nuclear weapons freeze) is a deception of the people and a piece of hypocrisy, unless the principal object is to explain to the masses the need for a revolution."

As Laurence Beilenson concluded in his famous and authoritative book, "The Treaty Trap":

"The pattern of evidence (i.e. in modern history) is that treaties of disarmament have been broken by powerful nations . . . the central pattern is habitual unreliability in performance and recurring treaty reliance . . . (Treaties have) been only a formal recording of the then respective strengths of the parties making it, and (have) lasted only by reason of the continuence of such relative strengths, irrespective of the treaty."

As President John F. Kennedy stated on March 2, 1963 in regard to the Limited Test Ban Treaty then under negotiation with the Soviets:

"We know enough about broken negotiations, secret preparations, and the advantages gained * * * never to offer again an uninspected moratorium."

EXHIBIT 2

CLARK VERIFICATION PANEL MAY HEAD OFF SUMMIT

Efforts by the State Department's Lawrence Eagleburger, White House aid Mike Deaver and others in the Administration to pave the way for a Ronald Reagan-Yuri Andropov summit next year have run into possible snag: the President's establishment of a strategic arms verification panel under the chairmanship of National Security Adviser William P. Clark.

According to informed Administration officials the Clark panel, which consists of policy level representatives and analysts from State, Defense, the Joint Chiefs and the intelligence agencies, is thoroughly investigating at least three major potential SALT I and SALT II violations. These sources maintain that the panel's conclusions—which may come as early as next month—are likely to have major repercussions on U.S. policy.

At least one official intimately acquainted with the information coming before the Clark group told us: "The practices of gross deception and concealment by the Soviets, combined with their crude responses to our legitimate concerns, are such that no official, senator or anyone else aware of these facts will any longer be able to ignore or excuse Soviet conduct."

Even now, it is contended, such "pragmatic" State Department types as Undersecretary Eagleburger and Assistant Secretary Richard Burt are worried about recent Soviet deceptive nuclear testing practices.

The major concern at the moment is an almost certain violation by the Soviets of the ABM treaty of 1972. Recent satellite photos of a sweep of the eastern Soviet Union reveal the construction of an immense radar system deep inside the Russian empire. Construction of the new radar complex is believed to violate directly the ABM treaty which prohibits any deployment of the ABM system capable of actually protecting either the U.S. or the U.S.S.R. from an offensive assault.

Indeed, the very purpose of the ABM treaty was to prevent either country from building an anti-missile system on the grounds that neither nation would then dare attack the other side since both sides would be left entirely vulnerable to a counter assault.

Examining the nature of the potential ABM violations, the Heritage Foundation, which possesses excellent defense and security contacts, recently observed:

"[The new radar system] closes the gap of coverage against incoming U.S. land- and sea-based missiles targeted against eastern Soviet territory and, together with already existing radar sites, will soon enable the Soviets to mount a formidable anti-ballistic missile defense against a retalitory strike by the United States."

Combined with the growing Soviet first-strike capabilities against our strategic deterrent (including land-based missiles, bombers and submarines) and a vigorous civil defense effort, "it becomes apparent," said Heritage, "that the Soviets are on the verge of acquiring all major elements for the potential to wage nuclear war against the United States at tolerable losses."

The potential ABM violation is the most serious of this nation's concerns, but there are two other possible violations that are also deeply troubling. The SALT II treaty allows only one new type ICBM to be developed by either side. The Soviets designated the PL-4 of last year as their new missile. But then, this spring, the U.S. discovered that the Soviets were testing still another new long-range missile, the PL-5.

The Soviets claimed this was just a follow-on to the old SS-13, but U.S. intelligence sources, insisted that the PL-5, in the words of Sen. Malcolm Wallop (R-Wyo.), a member of the Senate Intelligence Committee, differed in throw-weight by more than 200 per cent from the SS-13. The Soviets, according to the highest U.S. sources, have not yet been able to convince the American intelligence community that the PL-5 is not an entirely new missile.

The third potential serious violation surrounds the allegation that the Soviets—again in violation of SALT II—have developed and deployed a mobile missile, the SS-16.

What is fascinating about all this is that at the very moment the Clark panel is considering concluding that the Soviets have almost certainly violated both the letter and the spirit of the previous SALT agreements, the Soviets, in the new strategic arms discussions (START), are stubbornly refusing to discuss verification in any meaningful way.

Human Events asked a top arms controller about what the Soviets and the U.S. might have agreed to our recent SALT negotiations. This key expert informed us:

"What I can tell you about verification is that we have tried to get the Soviets talking about verification at every step, . . . and so on. We have tried to engage them in verification discussions, and they've said, no , no, let's put that off until later."

The same source also says they have continued to resist adamantly the idea of on-site inspections, though President Reagan once suggested this was the only way you could really detect the number of warheads the Soviets had in each missile.

The Soviet attitude toward verification at START is just part of the overall pattern of conduct the Russians have exhibited when getting into the subject of verifying past or future arms, agreements. So far, they have been able to conceal their secretive atomic weapons developments without fear of U.S. reprisals.

The Clark panel, however, could alter the course of history. For the first time, an authoritative government body may formally spell out the Soviet violations of both the spirit and the letter of the strategic arms agreements. And the reprecussions may turn out to be given greater than the killing of a possible summit in the spring or summer of election year '84

EXHIBIT 3

BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS: IMPLICATIONS FOR THE FUTURE OF ARMS CONTROL

(By William R. Harris*)

WHY DO BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS CONCERN US?

Why should we be concerned about breaches of arms control obligations?

Irrespective of their military significance, breaches of arms control obligations involve disregard of binding commitments under international law. International legal scholars, such as Professor Louis Henkin in a qualitative study, "How Nations Behave," and Professor Peter H. Rohn in a quantitative study, "Treaty Profiles," have demonstrated that compliance with binding international obligations is the rule and not the exception. Parties to treaties and other binding international agreements almost always comply with their obligations. Admittedly, many of the agreements create few incentives for breach. Bilateral military assistance agreements, treaties of collective self-defense, and treaties of friendship are among them. While many arms control agreements create stronger incentives for their breach, almost all of the parties to arms control agreements comply with their obligations without committing a material breach of binding obligations.

Consider the Geneva Protocol of 1925, or the Nonproliferation Treaty of 1968, or the Biological Weapons Convention of 1972.

The Geneva Protocol of 1925, in force with regard to at least 119 nations, prohibits the use of "asphyxiating, poisonous or other gases" and "the use of bacteriological methods of warfare." Italy, a Protocol party, used lethal chemical gases against Ethiopia in 1935, in violation of the Protocol, and various other nations circumvented Protocol restrictions in China, Mongolia, Yemen, Laos, Kampuchea, and Afghanistan. However discouraging the recurring disregard of the objective of banning any use of chemical and bacteriological weapons, the community of nations generally complies with the specific Geneva Protocol limits: at least 95 percent of the nations bound by the Protocol apparently comply with its terms and its underlying object and purpose.

The Nonproliferation Treaty of 1968, in force with regard to at least 116 nations, establishes duties for states with and without nuclear weapons to halt the spread of nuclear weapons. There is undoubtedly greater public attention to efforts of states to acquire nuclear weapons than to efforts of the far larger number of states committed to halt the spread of nuclear weapons. Many of the nations that seek nuclear weapons, or the freedom to acquire them later, will not ratify or accede to the Nonproliferation Treaty. Almost all nations that agree to be bound do, in fact, comply with their treaty obligations.

*Member of the California and New York Bars, and the research staff of The Rand Corporation, Santa Monica, California. Views expressed are those of the author and do not necessarily reflect the views or opinions of The Rand Corporation or any of its research sponsors.

The Biological Weapons Convention of 1972, in force with regard to at least 94 nations, prohibits the development, production, stockpiling or transfer of biological agents, toxins, and associated weapons and means of delivery. Apparently all of the nations bound by the Convention assert that they are in compliance with it, and almost all of them appear to be in compliance, in fact.

Under most conditions of international relations, parties to binding international agreements, including arms control agreements, comply with their obligations. Hence, the detection of a material breach, defined as an act or acts that defeat the object or purpose of the obligation, is a pathological event within the international system. A material breach is a warning of disequilibrium, a challenge to the rule of law and to the ethos of self-restraint, even if the specific gains to the violator appear modest.

Beyond challenging the rule of law, a nation that materially breaches an arms control agreement uproots expectations of a reciprocity of benefits. A nation that deliberately commits acts that defeat the objectives of other parties to an arms control agreement signifies an indifference, disregard, contempt, or antagonism to the sharing of these benefits of participation. Hence, detection of one or more material breaches of arms control obligations is a warning that the stake of the breaching party in the agreement is insufficient to deter acts that deprive other parties of a sharing of the benefits of the undertaking, the quid pro quo that gave rise to the mutuality of commitment.

Unless the violator of an arms control agreement is confident that violations will remain covert and undetected, a deliberate material breach or an inadvertent material breach that remains uncorrected after inquiry signifies a phenomenon even more disturbing than the abandonment of a commitment to reciprocal benefits: the violator's indifference to detection signifies the violator's anticipation of a failure of will or capabilities of victim states. The prospective violator has assessed the will and responsive capabilities of affected states, and found them wanting.

More than two decades ago, Fred Ikle illuminated the dilemma of the victim states. In his article, "After Detection, What?," Ikle emphasized the potential for failure of what he termed "restorative measures" and other sanctions, in part because the breaching state has already anticipated responsive measures and has not been deterred by them. Hence, the victim states face the challenge of reshaping the violator's assessment that the responsive will and capabilities of the victims are inadequate. Just eight months after Ikle published in Foreign Affairs, the Soviet Union in September 1961 breached its legally binding obligations under a nuclear test moratorium, even while a draft treaty to ban atmospheric testing was under negotiation in Geneva.[1] The violator's discounting of victim responses is of greater concern than the violation itself because the detected violation relates to a past decision, while the signaled failure of anticipated responses to deter violations relates to the entire range of anticipated future conduct of victim states.

A nation breaching its arms control obligations may discount the consequences of restorative measures in part because it anticipates that the detection of violations will be incomplete, untimely, or insufficiently persuasive to compel effective response.

From the perspective of a victim state, therefore, the detection of an arms control violation raises legitimate concerns that what is detected is incomplete, untimely for adequate response, or unpersuasive as to the facts of what is under way, unpersuasive as to the breach of legal duty, or unpersuasive as to the benefits of responsive measures.

A pattern of arms control breaches concerns us, therefore, because the violator signifies by his acts a discounting of the adequacy of the victim's compliance intelligence to pierce the veil of military concealment and deception, diplomatic chicanery, and illusions embedded in the arms control process.

In the United States, the public literature on arms control emphasizes the centrality of verification at the expense of compliance intelligence. In an important pamphlet drafted by Dr. Carnes Lord, then at the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency (ACDA), the Verification Bureau then supervised by Amron H. Katz defined "verification" as the process of assessing compliance with the provisions contained in arms control treaties and agreements. It is the attempt to ascertain whether states are living up to their international obligations. (ACDA Publication 85, March 1976)

In contrast, compliance intelligence should encompass not only verification of the fact of compliance or noncompliance, but also the assessment of the materiality of breach, the motives and causes of breach if known, and the likely consequences of responsive measures and other actions to implement a strategy to restore compliance. Compliance intelligence is a rarity within the U.S. intelligence community. Without such intelligence, decisionmakers within victim states tend to postpone measures responsive to arms control breaches. Such postponement of effective response may embolden the violator to extend defense programs that breach arms control commitments. A pattern of recurring arms control breaches, particularly breaches of increasing military significance, should raise concerns that the rituals of vertification have thwarted the development of an adequate compliance intelligence capability, and delayed the formulation and implementation of an arms control compliance strategy.

The detection of arms control breaches raises concern that what remains undetected may be of greater military significance than what has been discovered, or that the missions and capabilities of illicit armaments remain beyond the understanding needed to implement an effective response.

The symbiosis between the observer and the observed includes opportunities for a party to arms control agreements to utilize the verification and disclosure process of other parties to fine tune evasions and concealments of strategic significance. Hence, detection of breaches leads to the question, "Is what has been detected merely the 'tip of the iceberg'?" Amrom Katz states succinctly: "We have never found anything the Soviets have successfully hidden."[2] National technical means of verification are a double-edged sword: they might verify compliance or noncompliance with arms control obligations, but they might instead demonstrate apparent compliance or non-material breaches while missing a pattern of arms control breaches of military significance.

Of greater concern than the military significance of detected and undetected arms control breaches is the concern that breaches of arms control obligations have been precursors of war. The causes of war remain somewhat of a mystery even to historians. So we cannot be sure that breaches of arms control obligations and inadequate responsive measures have aggravated the momentum toward war. On the other hand, we cannot be sure that the failure of responsive measures did not embolden violators, hasten the collapse of self-restraint and loss of international respect, and lead to war.

Is it prudent to discount arms control breaches as precursors of World War II, and to risk repeating history in an era of unprecedented destructive power?

BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS AND THE FAILURE OF RESPONSES BEFORE WORLD WAR II[3]

The Inter-Allied Military Control Commission that supervised the disarmament provisions of the Treaty of Versailles withdrew from Germany in January 1927 and issued a final report:

"Germany has never disarmed, has never had the intention of disarming, and for seven years has done everything in her power to deceive and "counter-control" the Commission appointed to control her disarmament."[4]

The report was an inconvenience to the Allies, suppressed and largely ignored.

Before its demise in 1927, pursuant to the Pact of Paris of 1926, the Inter-Allied Military Control Commission provided a forum for dialogue, delay and disregard of Versailles Treaty breaches. Before departing, a British naval inspector, Commander Fanshaw, told his German counterpart, Lieutenant Renken:

"It is now time for us to separate. Both you and I are glad that we are leaving. Your task was unpleasant and so was mine. One thing I should point out. You should not feel that we believed what you told us. Not one word you uttered was true, but you delievered your information in such a way that we were in a position to believe you. I want to thank you for this."[5]

After the Allied inspectors departed, Germany expanded the scope of covert rearmament, utilizing the Council of the League of Nations to forestall and divert restorative measures of stronger League powers. Following his appointment as Chancellor in January 1933, Hitler supported secret training of German air pilots with Italian air forces, and obligatory "national labor service" as an evasion of the Versailles ban on military conscription. On April 4, 1934, Hitler issued a secret order for rearmament. Without countermoves, on March 10, 1935, Germany repudiated the disarmament provisions (Part V) of the Treaty of Versailles, and on March 7, 1936 repudiated Article 43, on demilitarization of the Rhineland.

Meanwhile, with regard to the Washington Naval Treaty of 1922 (United States, Great Britain, Japan, France, Italy), Japan constructed four Atago class heavy cruisers, from 1927 onward, with displacement about 45 percent greater than declared. Without responsive measures to covert breaches of the Treaty, Japan renounced the 1922 Naval Treaty in December 1934, with termination to occur in two years. Even before the Anglo-German Naval Treaty of 1935, Hitler supported construction of Scharnhorst class battleships as "improved 10,000-ton ships" with actual and illegal tonnage of 31,850. The subsequently-constructed Bismarck was even larger and also illegal. The Washington Naval Treaty of 1922 lapsed before the victims condemned the violators.[6] Perhaps more importantly, the appearance of general compliance with the Washington Naval Treaty discouraged other parties from building submarines and other vessels that remained unregulated.[7] Germany violated the naval treaty of 1935 before renouncing it on April 28, 1939.

[1] Footnotes at the end of article.

The League of Nations condemned German renunciation of the demilitarization clauses and Rhineland provisions of the Treaty of Versailles, as breaches of binding obligations under international law.

Italy, a Party to the Geneva Protocol of 1925 on chemical weapons, proceeded to use banned chemical weapons during the invasion of Ethiopia in October 1935, just one month after Ethiopia acceded to the Protocol. Again, the League of Nations condemned the violator, but recommended only limited economic sanctions.

With the failure of verbal and economic sanctions in a case of demonstrated violation by a Protocol Party, it is scarcely surprising that Japan, a Non-Party until 1970, used bacteriological weapons in China in 1939 and in Mongolia in 1940-42, despite prohibition of such weapons under the Geneva Protocol.

Barton Whaley summarizes effects of arms control breaches and the failure of responsive measures before World War II:

"The national leaders were easy prey for deception. By failing to demand rigorous verification of alleged infractions they showed apathy. By failing to apply sanctions when Intelligence did occasionally bring undeniable proof of infractions to their attention they showed themselves impotent as well. And the opponent's perception of this impotence was a spur of even more audacious infractions." [8]

Delay in detection, including the lapsing, refusal, or failure of on-site inspection; suppression of information from public view; dependency on verbal sanctions, words not deeds; and resignation to the continuation of treaty violations together signalled a toleration of arms control breaches and a collapse of the inter-war regime. By 1938-39 a decline in the publications on treaty breaches and sanctions implied a sense of futility that preceded war.[9]

Those who would suppress public knowledge of contemporary arms control breaches, thus public support for a strategy to restore compliance, should ask themselves whether resulting conduct of treaty violator would bring us closer or further from war?

MATERIAL BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS—WHAT ARE THEY?

The Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties (1969), signed by the United States but not ratified, and neither signed nor ratified by the Soviet Union, codifies and reformulates the standards for suspension, withdrawal, or renunciation of a treaty. Such rights and other self-help measures are privileged under condition of a material breach, defined in Article 60(3) of the Treaty:

(a) A repudiation of the treaty not sanctioned by the present Convention; or

(b) The violation of a provision essential to the accomplishment of the object or purpose of the treaty.

Material breaches may include:

Violations of bilateral or multilateral treaties or other agreements binding under international law, when the act or acts defeat a provision essential to a treaty object or purpose.[10]

Breaches of unilateral commitments authorized to bind a state and relied upon by another state, whether that commitment is written or oral and whether resulting from reciprocal commitments or from unilateral obligations.[11]

Evasions defeating an essential object or purpose, whether constituting fraud or other abuse of rights, but not breaching a specific provision of a treaty or other agreement.

[A] state is guilty of an abuse of rights when it seeks to evade its contractual obligations by resorting to measures which have the same effects as acts specifically prohibited by an agreement. Free Zones of Upper Savoy and the District of Gex (France v. Switzerland. 1932 PCIJ, Ser. A/B, No. 46 at 167).[12]

Acts which would defeat the object and purpose of a signed but unratified treaty or other international agreement, unless the state shall have made its intention clear not to become a party to the treaty or unless entry into force is unduly delayed.[13]

Customary international law, whether established by state practice or by peremptory norm through treaty codification.[14]

These are the main sources of obligations whose breach concern participants in the arms control process and those with a memory of earlier wars after arms control failed.

There should also be concern about disregard of unilateral statements that are not legally binding, as a breach of the duty of good faith incumbent upon all nations.

MATERIAL BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS—WHO COMMITS THEM?

How widespread is the practice of breaching provisions of arms control commitments so as to defeat an essential object or purpose of the agreement?

Before World War II the practice of breaching obligations that were essential to other nations spread like a cancer within the community of nations. What is the situation today?

Based upon the public record of treaty practices, if appears that the vast majority of nations today meet their arms control obligations. If there is a cancer within the body politic of arms control, surgical remedies should still be feasible.

The United States can be proud of an admirable record of compliance with outstanding arms control obligations. Appendix I, containing a review of SALT I compliance through 1977 illustrates a recurring pattern: instances of U.S. non-compliance are not deliberate and not of a magnitude and import to constitute a "material breach" of obligations. There is always room for improvement, for better inter-agency coordination, but the track record of the United States in arms control compliance has been excellent.

Other nations have done far worse. Vietnam, for example, not only breached its armistice arrangements with the United States but has concurrently ratified the Biological Weapons Convention and used toxin weapons in offensive operations in Laos and Kampuchea.[15] Storage of toxins and associated weapons is specifically prohibited by this Convention, but Vietnam proceeds to violate the Convention recurringly.

Despite this regrettable situation, it is the Soviet Union that is the source of this and various other arms control breaches. Hence, it is the public record of Soviet arms control breaches that is next considered.

THE PUBLIC RECORD OF SOVIET BREACHES OF ARMS CONTROL OBLIGATIONS

Secretary of State George Shultz testified before the Senate Foreign Relations Committee on June 15, 1983, "Moscow's continuing practice of stretching a series of treaties and agreements to the brink of violation and beyond" is of increasing concern. In particular, "Soviet practices—including the recent testing of ICBMs"—raised "questions about the validity of their claim of compliance with existing SALT agreements." [16]

The view that Moscow has gone to the brink of violations and beyond was not always held within official Washington, and is still not so held by persons who consider the arms control process essential to peace, and the finding of material breaches incompatible with that process. Appendix I sets forth the complete text of the February 1978 compliance report transmitted by the then-director of the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, Paul C. Warnke. In June 1978 State Department publication (No. 8947), the Department asserted:

In the SCC [Standing Consultative Commission of the U.S. and USSR], we have promptly raised with the Soviets any unusual or ambiguous activities which were, or could become, grounds for more serious concern. In every case, either the activity ceased or we obtained a satisfactory explanation. * * *

As recently as August 1979 the Department of State indicated a satisfactory Soviet record of compliance, while SALT II was before the Senate:

We have raised such [compliance] issues promptly with the Soviets, and in every case the activity has ceased, or subsequent information has clarified the situation and allayed our concern.[17]

Senator James McClure has pointed out:

While it is true that the SCC has "resolved" all U.S. compliance concerns about the Soviets, these concerns have been "resolved" by American acquiescence. At a Senate Foreign Relations Committee hearing in 1979, Ambassador Paul Nitze was asked how Soviet treaty violations before the SCC were resolved. He replied, "They were resolved by accepting what had been done in violation."[18]

Three illustrations should suffice: the replacement of SS-19 intercontinental ballistic missiles for "light" SS-11s under SALT I; the movement of an experimental ABM radar from Sary Shagan to Kamchatka in 1975; and the retention of as many as 50 excess launchers of SS-7 ballastic missiles in 1976-77, despite the SALT I Protocol.

THE SS-19 MISSILE DEPLOYMENTS EVADING THE LIMIT ON HEAVY ICBMS

In August 1977, during SALT II negotiations, the United States side acquiesced in the designation of the SS-19 as the largest of the "light" ICBMs.[19] But the Soviets defeated an essential U.S. object and purpose of SALT I by increasing the throw weight of the SS-19 by at least a factor of three over that of the SS-11, thus hastening the vulnerability of Minuteman missiles.[20] Public Law 92-448, enacted at the time of SALT I, set forth a U.S. purpose of assuring "the survivability of the strategic deterrent forces. . . ." For the Soviets to evade their commitment not to emplace a significantly larger missile in the SS-11 silos was more than a circumvention of the specific terms of SALT I. It was an abuse of rights, to accomplish by evasion that which was contrary to an essential limit on heavy missiles. This was no less than a material breach of SALT I, and a violation of the Second Principle ("efforts to obtain unilateral advantage at the expense of the other") of the May 29, 1972 Principles Agreement. But if the United States will acquiesce in an evasion of a qualitative limit under SALT I, should anyone be surprised if the Soviets were to attempt deployment of two "new type" missiles under SALT II, when only one was allowed?

When asked about the testing in February 1983 of a new Soviet ICBM considered a possible violation of SALT II's article IV(9), President Reagan shared his concerns with the press on February 23:

You could say, "I'm convinced that these are violations," but it would have been very difficult to find the hard evidence to make it hold up in court. This last one comes the closest to indicating that it is a violation.[21]

MOVEMENT IN 1975 OF AN EXPERIMENTAL ABM RADAR FROM SARY SHAGAN TO KAMCHATKA

Common Understanding C of the Anti-Ballistic Missile (ABM) Treaty of 1972 ruled out "the deployment of ABM launchers and radars which were not permanently fixed types." As the February 1978 compliance report (Appendix I) indicates, the Soviets moved an ABM radar (with NATO designation FLAT TWIN) from Sary Shagan to Kamchatka in the Fall of 1975. The 1978 compliance report focused attention of readers on whether the Soviets had adequately declared a second ABM Test Range. The more important issue was whether the Soviets were preparing to develop movable radars for ABM systems that could be produced and deployed with a significant reduction in warning time, all in contravention of the limitation to "permanently-fixed types" in Common Understanding C. By 1978 the Soviets knew not only that the United States would acquiesce in private but would apologize for the Soviet violation in a public report.[22]

What then would be the anticipated costs to the Soviets of taking further liberties with their duties under the ABM Treaty?[23]

RETENTION OF AS MANY AS 50 EXCESS SS-7 LAUNCHERS FOR ICBM'S

The SALT I Protocol required that once the Soviets deployed as many as 740 launchers on modern submarines for ballistic missiles, additional modern submarine launchers must be offset by dismantling of either older ICBM launchers or older-type submarine launchers. The Soviets did not comply with the SALT I Protocol by either method, despite experiments during the 1971-1975 Five-Year Plan aimed at gaining credit for "dismantling" SS-7 launchers to be retained in a ready reserve status. While 50 launchers for perhaps 50 to 100 older ICBM missiles may not appear to be of strategic significance to some Americans, the importance of retaining full coverage of U.S. land-based strategic targets should not be dismissed from a Soviet perspective. The Soviets reportedly violated the SALT I Protocol by retaining excess ICBM launchers in the 1976-1977 period, until enough of the more accurate SS-17, SS-18, and SS-19 missiles were deployed.[24]

After Soviet experiments to gain dismantling credit had failed, and the Soviets had acknowledged "delays" in dismantling in March 1976, anonymous U.S. officials who disclosed the first undisputed evidence of a SALT I violation advised the press in May 1976:

they were pleased that the Soviet Union had acknowledged the technical violation on its own. . . . The issue, while apparently no more significant than a two-month delay in achieving a deadline is a politically sensitive one to the Administration.[25]

As late as February 1978 the Carter Administration treated the problem of excess SS-7 launchers as "some minor procedural discrepancies," and implicitly dismissed the notion of retention by the Strategic Rocket Forces of a strategic reserve force of liquid fuel missiles, because the SS-7 launchers "cannot be used to launch missiles" and cannot be reactivated "in a short time" of undefined length.[26]

If the Soviets retained in a strategic reserve force SS-9s and SS-11s displaced from silos in the late 1970s by SS-17s, SS-18s, and SS-19s, such reserve forces would have evaded the SALT I launcher limits, and constituted an "abuse of rights" and material breach of the SALT I obligation. But what was the cost to the Soviets if they deployed away from declared silos equipment to launch older liquid fuel ballistic missiles?

How surprised should we be if the Soviets decided to retain excess ballistic missiles associated with soft-site launching equipment or undeclared missile launchers during SALT II?[27]

On March 9, 1983, Under Secretary of Defense Richard DeLauer testified before the House Armed Services Committee that the Soviets have a "large number" of SS-16 mobile intercontinental missiles that are not within SALT II limits. See Soviet Aerospace, March 21, 1983, p. 78. A recent article speculates that the Soviets seek missiles and launching capabilities beyond these allowed under SALT, and concealment of such capabilities to misdirect U.S. strategic targeting. See Samuel T. Cohen and Joseph D. Douglass, Jr., "Selective Targeting and Soviet Deception," Armed Forces Journal International, September 1983, pp. 97, 98.

The public record of the Soviet record of compliance with SALT I, the ABM Treaty, and SALT II is murky. The patterns that are perceived are in considerable measure formed by views of strategy, of Soviet style, of the resiliency of the arms control process when faced with material breaches of agreements, and of the need for or hazards of candor in treating past compliance practices.[28]

All that can be done in this review is to highlight aspects of the public record on arms control compliance. The Administration has the larger responsibility and opportunity to determine whether the Congress and American public should be advised of additional facts or interpretations of data. There has not been a SALT Compliance White Paper since 1979. A candid review could facilitate the implementation of a coherent strategy to strengthen incentives for arms control compliance.

In other sectors of arms control, there is a considerable body of official information and independent assessments of the facts and legal duties. In every year since 1979 the U.S. government has provided unclassified assessments and supporting information regarding Soviet transfer or use of chemical and biochemical weapons in South Asia. Other Soviet arms control breaches are so readily apparent as to enter the public domain almost immediately upon their occurrence. The Soviet decision to construct aircraft carriers at the Black Sea port of Nikolayev South virtually assures multinational observation of subsequent breaches of the Montreux Convention of 1936, when carriers of the "Kiev" class transit the Turkish Straits in contravention of the treaty.[29]

The record of Soviet practices with respect to arms control commitments is sufficiently complete to glimpse some of the patterns.

The Soviets appear to be more interested in implementing their Five-Year Defense Plans, or in lulling adversary defense efforts than in assuring substantial compliance with all of the arms control obligations of the Soviet Union.

The Soviets have breached treaties that they have both signed and ratified.

Examples include the Limited Test Ban Treaty of 1963 (confirmed extraterritorial venting of radioactive debris on at least 30 occasions);[30] the Biological Weapons Convention of 1972 (with documented use of banned toxins in Afghanistan, and overwhelming circumstantial evidence of Soviet involvement in the transfer for use by Soviet Allies in Laos, Kampuchea, and Afghanistan);[31] the previously-discussed Anti-ballistic Missile Treaty of 1972; the Montreux Convention of 1936 (with Kiev-class vessels constituting proscribed aircraft carriers.)[32]

The Soviets have breached other international agreements in force.

Examples include the SALT I Interim Agreement and Protocol previously mentioned (but without regard to deliberate concealment measures impeding verification); the Basic Principles of Relations of May 29, 1972 (with the SS-19 deployments taking unilateral advantage); and probably the agreement on the Prevention of Nuclear War of June 22, 1973 (with Soviet military actions in the October 1973 Middle East War causing a U.S. strategic alert, and otherwise endangering peace); and the provisions for notification of European states in connection with military maneuvers of 25,000 troops or more, under the Helsinki Final Act of 1975.[33]

The Soviets have breached binding unilateral obligations.

Examples include the breach of Chairman's Khrushchev's pledge of a Nuclear Test Moratorium, when the Soviets resumed atmospheric testing while a draft treaty banning such tests was under negotiation in Geneva in 1961;[34] a pledge that there would be No Offensive Weapons in Cuba, breached by covert MRBM and IRBM missile and launcher deployments to Cuba in 1962;[35] a pledge that Soviet submarines armed with long range missiles would stay out of Cuban territorial waters, breached in the 1970-1974 period;[35] and a pledge to halt the completion of Operational SS-20 IRBM Launcher Sites in the European Part of the U.S.S.R., reportedly breached when the Soviets completed launcher sites under construction between May 1982 and 1983.[36]

The Soviets have committed evasions defeating an essential object or purpose. Such evasions constitute abuses of rights and material breaches of agreements.

Examples include the previously mentioned emplacement of SS-19 ballistic missiles in SS-11 silos; and transfer of toxins and other illegal biochemicals or chemicals for use against Non-Parties to the Geneva Protocol of 1925. The Red Army convicted 12 Japanese Army officials for employing bacteriological agents in China (1939) and Mongolia (1940-42), when neither Japan nor

Mongolia were Parties to the 1925 Protocol. By implication, the Soviets concede that such conduct is a crime in violation of the customary international law of war.[37] If, however, the Soviet Union reserves its right to use Protocol-banned weapons against Non-Parties, it is still an "abuse of rights" for the Soviets to transfer toxins and chemicals to at least three Allies (Vietnam, Laotian forces, and Afghanistan) and to use such weapons without prior chemical weapons use against such forces. The purpose of discouraging any use, including especially first use, is defeated by a pattern of Soviet evasion of the Protocol restrictions.[38]

Soviet conduct raises questions of compliance with signed but unratified treaties.

Has the Soviet Union entered into an arms control agreement with an intention of violating it, as did the Germans with the Anglo-German Naval Treaty of 1935? Treaties that appear to raise this issue include the Biological Weapons Convention of 1972, between the signing on April 10, 1972 and the entry-into-force for purposes of stockpile destruction, on December 26, 1975; the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, in effect since March 1976, and the SALT II Treaty of 1979. Data that is publicly available does not permit an intelligent discussion of the issue, nor demonstration of a conclusion one way or the other.

The Soviets have breached obligations under customary international law. Specifically, the Conventional Weapons Convention of 1981 codifies the customary international law of war, by limiting the right to employ booby-trap mines or incendiary devices that unreasonably kill or injure civilians, Protocols II and III. Protocol I treats a novel subject, use of plastics resulting in fragments that are not detectable by x-ray devices. The obligations under Protocol I come into force six months after the 20th ratification, which occurred on June 2, 1983. In the interim, the Soviets are reported in the press to have violated Protocols II and III, codifications of customary international law.[39]

The Soviets have also committed recurring breaches of customary international law by repeatedly bringing warships into the territorial waters of other nations without their consent. A Swedish Royal Commission reported in April 1983 that at least 40 unconsented entries by foreign submarines into Swedish territorial waters had occurred in the year 1982 alone. In an incident involving the grounding of a Soviet WHISKY-class submarine within Swedish territorial waters, the Swedes detected radioactivity in the vicinity. The Oslo newspaper, Verdens Gang, reported in May 1983 that Georgiy Arbatov of the Institute for North American Studies in Moscow had proclaimed, "If the Scandinavians are so naive that they believe this traffic is going to stop, they are living in a dream world."[40]

In August 1980 the Soviets towed an ECHO-class submarine of a type equipped for nuclear armaments through Japanese territorial waters without Japanese consent. Only after the unconsented passage of the Yoron Jima did the Soviets assert that no nuclear weapons were abroad.[41] The U.S. Deputy to the U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations, Charles Lichenstein, reported that there have been 75 incidents in which Soviet aircraft violated U.S. airspace.[42]

Whether or not this pattern of disregard of the territorial integrity of other nations violates the 1973 Agreement on the Prevention of Nuclear War by increasing risks of a serious incident, this conduct breaches the duty of good faith incumbent upon all nations.

The duty of states with regard to arms control must include minimal standards of self-restraint in directing military air and naval vessels near the territory of other nations.

If Soviet territory is so "sacred" that the Soviets justify the deaths of 269 persons aboard an off-course civil aircraft, it is assuredly an abuse of rights for the Soviet military to trespass recurringly in the territory of other nations.

The pattern of Soviet breaches of arms control obligations would, however, be incomplete without noting the brighter side:

The Soviets appear to comply with arms control obligations designed to reduce the risks of accidental war, to halt the spread of nuclear weapons, or to prohibit extension of armaments to regions previously unarmed.

Agreements to reduce the risks of accidental war include the Hot Line Agreements of 1963 and 1971, and bilateral accidents agreements between the Soviet Union and the United States, the United Kingdom, and France.

Agreements to halt the spread of nuclear weapons include the Nonproliferation Act of 1968, International Atomic Energy agency guidelines for transfer of nuclear technology, and a Convention on the Physical Protection of Radioactive Materials.

Agreements relating to armaments not in operational forces include the 1959 Treaty on Antarctica, 1967 Outer Space Treaty, and the 1971 Seabed Treaty.

Those sectors in which the Soviets appear to have a good record of compliance tend to be the sectors of mutual interest between the Soviets and arms control partners. Those sectors in which the Soviets appear to breach recurringly arms control commitments include sectors of interests that are not mutual and that involve, at best, reciprocal interests. While compliance might assure stability of a quid pro quo relationship, undetected noncompliance or detected noncompliance that is excused offers the Soviets an opportunity to take the quid without the quo.

What are the implications of these patterns for the future of arms control?

IMPLICATIONS FOR THE FUTURE OF ARMS CONTROL

Some tentative thoughts follow from this preliminary review of arms control commitments and their breach:

1. It is important to distinguish between those arms control arrangements based upon a substantial mutuality of interests and those which, at best, are based on a reciprocity of interests. The former may not require verification of compliance. The latter require verification, and more than that, they require that a potential violator who would deprive other parties of their reciprocal benefits anticipate that after detection, there is effective self-help, collective security initiatives, and other responsivie measures.

2. Quantitative limits, qualitative limits, and operational limits on testing or employment of forces are generally sectors where interests are reciprocal at best. Without development and implementation of a strategy to restore substantial compliance, it will become increasingly imprudent to pursue such arms control agreements with the Soviet Union.

3. Even if it is not feasible to restore substantial compliance with these arms control agreements, some strategic confidence building measures, accident avoidance measures, nonproliferation measures, and other agreements may nonetheless be prudent if based upon a strong mutuality of interests.

4. To strengthen both incentives for compliance and disincentives for noncompliance, a program of anticipatory safeguards should be part of the design and implementation of arms control measures.

5. Following breaches of arms control obligations that are material, the victim's primary recourse lies in altering the course of conduct of the victim and allies, not in altering the course of conduct of the violator.

6. Even if further arms control agreements are not practicable, victims of material breaches of arms control obligations should continue the dialogue with violator states, if only to restore the respect of the violator for the victims who demonstrate a resolve to protect their interests.

7. Because the violator has already anticipated many of the responses of victim states, post-breach remedies are likely to be limited and often ineffective. Hence, the victim or potential victim of arms control breaches requires a greater emphasis upon timely and effective compliance intelligence, and reduced emphasis upon verification per se. Knowing whether there is a compliance problem is insufficient to sustain a strategy to strengthen incentives for compliance. Causes of breaches, and probable consequences of countermoves are appropriate topics of compliance intelligence.

8. In a democracy, the foundation of strength is public knowledge. The support that an Administration requires if it is to pursue a more prudent course in arms control depends upon a greater sharing of arms control compliance issues with the citizens of the nation. Both the Executive Branch and the Congress should pursue opportunities to share essential information with the public.

FOOTNOTES

[1] An earlier research memorandum considered relations between detection and deterrence. See F. C. Ikle, The Violations of Arms Control Agreements: Deterrence vs. Detection, The Rand Corp., RM-2609-ARPA, August 1960.

[2] Verification: The State of the Art and the Art of the State, The Heritage Foundation, Washington, D.C., 1980.

[3] See, inter alia, Historical Evaluation and Research Organization, Responses to Violations of Arms Control and Disarmament Agreements: Study RIPOSTE, 3 volumes, Contract Report GC-177, for the U.S. Arms Control and Disarmament Agency, 1964; Margaret P. Doxey, Economic Sanctions and International Enforcement, Oxford University Press, 1971; George W. Baer, The Coming of the Italian-Ethiopian War, Harvard University Press, 1967; Dan Maxim, Mary Walsh, and Barton Whaley, Covert Rearmament in Germany, 1919-39: Deception and Misperception, Office of Research and Development, CIA, and Mathtech, Inc., March 1979; and Barton Whaley, "Covert Rearmament in Germany, 1919-39: Deception and Misperception," Journal of Strategic Studies, vol. 5, No. 1, March 1982, pp. 3-39.

[4] John W. Wheeler-Bennett, The Nemesis of Power, London.

[5] Quoted in Whaley, p. 15.

[6] But see Paul G. Johnson, "Arms Control: Upping the Ante," U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings, vol. 109, August 1983, pp. 28-34, treating the Washington Naval Treaty of 1922 as a model of arms control design and compliance.

[7] On Japan's fortification of demilitarized islands, see Thomas Wilds, "How Japan Fortified the Mandated Islands, "U.S. Naval Institute Proceedings, No. 81, April 1955, pp. 401-407.

[8] Whaley, op. cit., p. 37.

[9] Among the pertinent inter-war literature on arms control breaches and sanctions are: D. Mitrany, The Problem of International Sanctions, London, 1925; P. B. Potter, Sanctions and Security:

An Analysis of the French and American Views, Geneva, 1932; J. Jahnz, La nature des mesures coercitives du pacte de la Societe des Nations, Varsovie, 1932; P. S. Wild, Jr., "Treaty Sanctions," 26 Am J. Int'l L., 488-501 (1932); A. E. Hindmarsh, "Self-help in time of peace," 26 Am J. Int'l L., 315-326 (1932); J. L. Brierly, Sanctions, London, 1932; Otto Bruck, Les sanctions en droit international public, Paris, 1933; A. E. Hindmarsh, Force Short of War in International Relations, Cambridge, MA., 1933; P. S. Wild, Jr., Sanctions and Treaty Enforcement, Cambridge, MA., 1934; C. G. Fenwick, "Denunciation of the disarmament clauses of the Treaty of Versailles," 29 Am J. Int'l L., 675-678 (1935); E. M. Borchard, 29 Am J. Int'l L., 286-290 (1935); E. W. Pavenstedt, "German Rearmament and United States treaty rights," 44 Yale L. J., 996-1024 (1935); Lord Davies, Force, London, 1935; H. Morgenthau, "Theorie des sanctions internationales," Revue de droit international et de legislation comparee, Nos. 3, 4 (1935); Phillips Bradley, Can We Stay Out of War?, New York, 1936; Charles W. Manning, Sanctions under the Covenant, Nottingham, 1936; Henry Rowan-Robinson, Sanctions Begone: A Plea and a Plan for Reform of the League, London, 1936; Edward Isak Hambro, L'execution des sentence internationales, Paris, 1936; M. J. Bonn, "How Sanctions Failed," 15 Foreign Affairs, 350-361 (1937); Phillips Bradley, "Some legislative and administrative aspects of the application of Article XVI of the Covenant," 22 Grotius Society, Problems of Peace and War, 13-29 (1937); George de Fredorowicz, "Historical survey of the application of sanctions," 22 Grotius Society, Problems of Peace and War, 117-131 (1937); Royal Institute of International Affairs, International Sanctions, London, 1938; A. E. Highley, The Actions of the State Members of the League of Nations in Applications of Sanctions against Italy, 1935-1936, Geneva, 1938; and A. E. Highley, The First Sanctions Experiment (a study of League Procedures), Geneva, 1938.

[10] See generally, Christine Chinkin, "Nonperformance of International Agreements," 6 Texas Int'l L. J., 387-432 (1982).

[11] The Permanent Court of International Justice determined in the Eastern Greenland case that an informal verbal undertaking of the Norweigian Foreign Minister bound the government of Norway, in the course of negotiations for reciprocal rights and benefits in disputed territorial and fishing rights. Denmark v. Norway, PCIJ Series A/B, No. 53 [1933]. In the French Nuclear Tests Case, Australia v. France [1974] ICJ 253, Zealand v. France [1974], ICJ 457, the International Court of Justice determined that an authorized unilateral undertaking could be binding without a reciprocal benefit.

[12] See Lauterpacht (ed.), 1 Oppenheim's International Law, sec. 155aa (8th ed. 1955); Gutteridge, 5 Cambridge L.J. 22-45 (1932). "The exercise of a right—or a supposed right, since the right no longer exists—for the sole purpose of causing injury to another is thus prohibited." M. Whiteman, 5 Digest of International Law at 224 (1965).

[13] See Article 18 of the Vienna Convention on the Law of Treaties, and Martin A. Rogoff, "The international legal obligations of signatories to an unratified treaty," 32 Maine L. Rev. 263-299 (1980); R. D. Kearney and R. E. Dalton, "The Treaty on Treaties," 64 Am. J. Int'l L. 495 (1970); Robert F. Turner, "Legal Implications of Deferring Ratification of SALT II," Va. J. Int'l L. 747-784 (1981).

[14] See V. A. Jordan, "Creation of customary international law by use of treaty," 9 AF JAG L. Rev. 38 (1967); and J. K. Gamble, Jr., "Reservations to multilateral treaties: a macroscopic view of state practice," 74 Am. J. Int'l L. 373-394(1980).

[15] See White Papers issued by the U.S. Department of State in November 1981, March (Special Report No. 98), and November 1982 (Special Report No. 104) for details.

[16] The phrases are quoted in a letter to the President dated June 22, 1983, signed by 34 U.S. Senators.

[17] Department of State Special Report 56, Verification of SALT II Agreement, August 1979, p. 3.

[18] Congressional Record, May 19, 1983, p. S7139, quoting the Washington Post, May 7, 1983.

[19] "For planning purposes," according to Secretary of State Vance, in Department of State Selected Documents No. 12B, SALT II Agreement, June 1979, p. 17.

[20] For one of many summaries, see David s. Sullivan, Soviet SALT Deception, section on "The SS-9 deception," 1979, pp. 1-3. Secretary of Defense Schlesinger estimated the throw weight as at least twice that of the SS-11 Mod 3 and at least three times the throw weight of the SS-11 Mod. 2. See Sullivan, p. 14, note 10.

[21] Office of the Press Secretary, the White House, Remarks of the President at Breakfast with Godfrey Sperling Group, Feb. 23, 1983, p. 16.

[22] The February 1978 compliance report states: ". . . This new system and its components can be installed more rapidly than previous ABM systems, but they are clearly not mobile in the sense of being able to be moved about readily or hidden. A single operational site would take about a half year to construct. . . ."

[23] In his fiscal year 1982 Military Posture Statement, Gen. David C. Jones, then Chairman of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, asserted that "Soviet phased array radars . . . may be designed to improve impact predictions and target handling for ABM battle management" and are "under construction at various locations throughout the U.S.S.R." and expected to become operational in the 1980's, p. 101. On Aug. 1, 1983, Senator McClure asserted that the Soviets have deployed a non-peripheral early warning radar in contravention of Article VI of the ABM Treaty. Press speculation includes: M. Getler, "U.S. Asks Soviets for Special Meeting," Washington Post, Aug. 13, 1983, p. A-7; "Soviet ABM Breakout," the Wall Street Journal, Aug. 16, 1983; Roland Evans and Robert Novak, "A 'Smoking Gun' in Siberia," the Washington Post, Aug. 17, 1983, p. 23; and "U.S. queries Soviet on radar station," Baltimore Sun, Aug. 19, 1983, p. 2.

[24] See the reference to 51 launchers in excess of the 740 baseline, and explanation of the Department of State in February 1978, reproduced as appendix I. In The Bitter Fruit of SALT, David S. Sullivan asserts that the Soviets retained excess SS-7 launchers through the expiration of SALT I.

[25] Bernard Gwertzman, "Soviet Concedes Arms Violation," the New York Times, May 25, 1976.

[26] See appendix I.

[27] Senator McClure asserted in a speech of Apr. 14, 1983, that SS-11 ICBM's appeared at SS-4 MRBM sites and that SS-9 ICBM's appeared "operational" at test ranges. See Congressional Record, p. S-2948, and speech of May 19, 1983, p. S-7135. Engene Rostow, Director of ACDA, 1981-82, expressed "great concern" about possible deployment of SS-16 launchers, banned by SALT II and the SALT II Protocol: "Q. It has been written that the Soviets have in excess of 100 SS-16 mobile ICBM's. Isn't that a prima facie violation of SALT II limitations? "A. I wouldn't concede the number 100 in your question, but certainly evidence has come along that causes great concern about whether the SS-16 provisions of SALT II are being respected . . ." San Diego Union, Oct. 3, 1982.

[28] A Carnegie Panel on U.S. Security and the Future of Arms Control advises: ". . . for a variety of reasons, it is almost always in our interest to let the Soviets know of any reasonable concern, if only to establish the principle of insistence on strict compliance." Challenges for U.S. National Security: The Soviet Approach to Arms Control: Verification, Problems and Prospects, Conclusions, 1983, p. 51. This Panel Report asserts: ". . . No arms limitation treaty has ever been abrogated by the United States, but neither have we evidence of a violation justifying such a course." Ibid., p. 55.

[29] See the annual Jane's volumes containing data for aircraft carriers of all naval powers. Jane's indicates that the Kiev first transited the Turkish Straits on July 18, 1976.

[30] See April 14, 1983 speech of Senator McClure for references to at least 30 confirmed tests with extraterritorial radioactive venting.

[31] See the Department of State White Papers of 1981, 1982, and supporting documentation in 1983. The natural occurrence of some mycotoxins is both irrelevant and not inconsistent with Soviet causation of the transfer and use of toxins in "yellow rain" and other illegal attacks. In the fiscal year 1983 Posture Statement released in February 1982, Secretary of Defense Caspar W. Weinberger asserted: "The United States now has good reason for believing that the Soviet Union has violated the Biological Weapons Convention." Also in February 1982 U.S. Ambassador Max Kampelman asserted that the Soviets operated a biological weapons research and production facility in Sverdlovsk and that "we are aware of five other such facilities in operation today." Baltimore Sun, February 17, 1982, p. 5. Secretary of State George Shultz stated in November 1982, "I regret, then, to report that chemical and toxin weapons are nevertheless being used in Laos, Kampuchea, and Afghanistan by the Soviet Union and its allies." Covering letter, Department of State Special Report No. 104, November 1982.

[32] Annex II of the Montreux Convention defines aircraft carriers as "surface vessels of war, whatever their displacement, designed or adapted primarily for the purpose of carrying and operating aircraft at sea." Articles 10, 11, 12, and Annex II together prohibit passage of aircraft carriers through the Turkish Straits. The Soviets first called the Kiev an "anti-submarine cruiser" but published concurrently with transit in July 1976 a legal claim that Black Sea powers can transit aircraft carriers while others cannot. See the legally fallacious article of Captain V. Serkov, "The Legal Regime of the Black Sea Straits," Moyskoi Sbornik, July 1976. See also F. D. Froman, Kiev and the Montreux Convention: The Aircraft Carrier That Became A Cruiser to Squeeze through the Turkish Straits," 14 San Diego L. Rev. 681-717 (1977). A Turkish commentator argues that denunciation of the Montreux Convention is not in Turkey's interests. S. Toluner, "The Regulation of Passage through the Turkish Straits and the Montreux Convention," 28 Annales de la faculte de droit d'Istanbul 79-95 at 94 (1981). The Soviets have built all of their aircraft carriers at Nikolayev South on the Black Sea. Without any noticeable responsive measures, other than diplomatic exchanges and debates in the British Parliament, the Soviets have built additional "Kiev"-class aircraft carriers and are planning an even larger one, despite the necessity of violating the Montreux Convention to reach the high seas. The 1983 edition of Soviet Military Power states: "In 1981, two Soviet KIEV-Class aircraft carriers were operational. Now, three units are on the high seas; a fourth unit has been launched; and development continues on a newer, larger class of aircraft carriers."

[33] After failing to provide so-called confidence building notifications of military maneuvers (SOYUZ-81, and ZAPAD-81) concurrent with the Polish crisis, the Soviets asserted that the notifications were "only 'guidelines', not 'requirements'." See the statement of Ambassador Max Kampelman, Oct. 30, 1981, in U.S. Department of State, Madrid CSCE Negotiations, 1980-81, Selected Documents No. 20, September 1982, p. 31. Before SOYUZ-81 the Soviets failed to provide notice of troop strength. Before ZAPAD-81 Izvestia materially misrepresented the troop strength as a "very limited" number of troops. Two days later, after the exercise had started, TASS conceded that there were "approximately 100,000 troops" involved, the largest maneuver number since the signing of the Helsinki Final Act. The Soviets have at least breached their duty of good faith, and have destroyed the "confidence building" aspect of the troop notifications by selective non-notification in crises. See the Semi-Annual reports of the President to the Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe.

[34] In a legally binding declaration to the Supreme Soviet on January 14, 1960, with worldwide dissemination of the text, General Secretary Nikita Khrushchev declared: ". . . I would like to stress again that in order to ensure the most favorable conditions for the early drafting of an agreement on the discontinuance of tests, the Soviet Government will continue to abide by its pledge not to resume experimental nuclear explosions in the Soviet Union unless the Western powers begin testing atomic and hydrogen weapons." Khrushchev added, with regard to a proposed test ban treaty, "If a party violates its obligations, the initiators of the violation will cover themselves with shame and the people of the whole world will brand them." Current Digest of the Soviet Press, vol. 12, No. 2, p. 8.

[35] For one account, see Raymond L. Garthoff, "Handling the Cienfuegos Crisis," International Security, vol. 8, No. 1, Summer 1983, pp. 46-66. See the separate statements issued by the White House and by TASS for the Government of the Soviet Union on Oct. 13, 1979. The U.S. statement appears to include Cuban territorial waters within the definition of Cuba, for purposes of banning offensive weapons of the United States favorable.

[36] On Mar. 16, 1982 Leonid Brezhnev announced a "decision of the Soviet Leadership" to "introduce, unilaterally, a moratorium on the deployment" of SS-20 missiles in the European part of the U.S.S.R." On May 18, 1982 Brezhnev stated that the commitment "also envisions a unilateral freeze on the preparations for the ultimate deployment of missiles. Yes, it does envision this, including an end to the construction of launching positions." According to Roberte Gillette, "More Soviet Bases for SS-

20s Reported in Asia," Los Angeles Times, May 8, 1983, p. 8. ". . . What the Soviets have done, according to U.S. officials, is to continue deploying missiles at all sites that were under construction at the time the moratorium was announced, 'even if only a shovelful of earth had been turned' . . ."

[37] See Lauterpacht (ed.), 2 Oppenheim's International Law Sec. 113 at p. 343, note 2 (8th ed. 1955); M. Greenspan, The Modern Law of Land Warfare at 358 Note 184 (1959); M. Whiteman, 10 Digest of International Law at 458 (1968). Records relating to a Red Army military tribunal in Khabarovsk, resulting in 12 convictions in 1949, are contained in U.S.S.R., Materials on the Trial of Former Servicemen of the Japanese Army: Trial of Otozoo, et al. (1949).

[38] At least 33 of the Parties to the Geneva Protocol, including the Soviet Union, reserved the right not to be bound in relation to Non-Parties. The unusually high rate of reservations (28 percent, as of June 1983) may indicate that the Protocol is only a peremptory norm when read in conjunction with the reservations of at least 33 Parties. But if the Soviets can convict 12 Japanese servicemen for use of prohibited weapons when their nation was not even a Protocol Party, then Soviet use and transfer for use against Non-Parties to the Geneva Protocol is at minimum an "abuse of rights" and a material breach of the object and purpose of the Protocol.

[39] The Soviet Union signed the Conventional Weapons Convention on April 10, 1981, and ratified the Convention on June 8, 1982. Evidence taken by the so-called People's Tribunal, founded by Bertrand Russell, led one participant to write: "After seeing booby-trap mines in the form of plastic toys, pens and pencils and valises, after holding in my hands gas masks removed from dead Soviet soldiers; after seeing photographs of the black, bloated faces of dead Afghan women and children. . . . I have no doubt that the Soviets have violated human rights and the rules of war. . . ." Agah Khan, quoted in the New York Times, Jan. 2, 1983, sec. 4, p. 14. Department of State Publication No. 104, November 1982, indicates that the Soviets applied an incendiary chemical to at least 60 civilians, including children, in an incident of Sept. 13, 1982, after Soviet ratification but before entry-into-force of the Convention. Since Protocol II and III incorporate longstanding rules against unnecessary injury to civilians, a breach of these Protocols is a breach of existing legal duties.

[40] Svein A. Rohne, "Kremlin Boast About Submarines—Andropov's Friend Warns of New Cruises in Norwegian Waters," Verdens Gang, May 11, 1983, p. 5.

[41] See Robert J. Grammig, "The Yoron Jima Submarine Incident of August 1980: A Soviet Violation of the Law of the Sea," Harvard International Law Journal, No. 22, 1981, pp. 331-354.

[42] "Soviets Violated Space 75 Times," Chicago Tribune, Sept. 4, 1983, p. 8.

EXHIBIT 4

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 26, 1983]

THE PRESIDENT'S SALT SCREWDRIVER

(By Rowland Evans and Robert Novak)

The 93-0 Senate vote demanding that the administration report on Soviet SALT violations gives President Reagan what he really wants but his diplomatic and political advisers don't: a rationale for concisely stated, provable charges of nuclear cheating by the Kremlin.

Reagan has dropped hints for months that the time has come to call the Soviets to account. Writing on Sept. 12 to a close friend who had complained about mild U.S. retaliation against the Soviet Union's shooting down of the Korean airliner, Reagan said: "We have some screws that can be tightened and I have screwdriver in hand." There is little doubt that the president was alluding to Soviet SALT cheating.

But each time he was ready to go public, advisers intruded. His diplomatic advisers feared that would ruin U.S.-Soviet arms control talks, and his political advisers worried about restoring Reagan's Attila the Hun image. Last Thursday's Senate vote changes all that, because a unanimous roll-call vote is hard to ignore. Whatever the State Department and White House West Wing think, Reagan is where he wants to be: under Senate command to report the disturbing pattern of Soviet cheating.

Moreover, even State Department detentists are fretting under escalating evidence of Soviet cheating. "They've busted the SALT agreements," a top Foggy Bottom policy-maker blurted out to us. That parallels the president's public rebuke to the Kremlin, nearly five months before the Soviets shot down Korean Air Lines Flight 007. On March 31 he warned about "increasingly serious grounds" for questioning Soviet compliance.

In their first effort to use the air tragedy to get an administration accounting of alleged Soviet violations, conservative Republican Sens. James McClure and Jesse Helms tried to tack their amendment to the congressional resolution condemning the Soviet Union for the Korean airline disaster. That failed, 45-50, because of a bipartisan deal—orchestrated by the White House—to accept no amendments. But in failing, the vote revealed to surprised Republicans a large reservoir of support from liberal Democrats.

That led to the second effort last Thursday, when the amendment was tacked on the State Department authorization bill. Sen. George Mitchell of Maine, a widely respected bearer of liberal Democratic colors, denied that he and his ideological brethren are not serious about charges of Soviet cheating by telling us: "This is a matter of such seriousness that it has gone far beyond slogans."

Support from such unaccustomed sources on a sensitive arms control question leaves Ronald Reagan in a position of unique strength to overcome nay-sayers in his own administration. He also has the evidence, thanks to the top-level Verification Panel set up last April. The panel's chairman, National Security Council Director William P. Clark, ordered an immediate study by NSC staffers documenting Soviet non-compliance.

That study, which has been completed on current intelligence data, details a long and sorry story: suspected Soviet testing of two "new type" ICBM missiles, despite a SALT II ban on more than one; deployment of what U.S. intelligence officials call a "battle-management" radar in the interior part of Siberia, violating the Anti-Ballistic Missile Treaty; consistent violations of the treaty, which forbids underground testing of weapons with an explosive force of more than 150 kilotons. The list is long and appears to be growing longer by the week.

Even though the SALT treaties are so notoriously ambiguous and porous that absolute proof is hard to obtain, the Senate means business in demanding an accounting of every piece of non-compliance evidence available to U.S. intelligence. The House will undoubtedly concur when it gets the Senate amendment.

That puts the president in an enviable position, considering his basic instincts. Under congressional mandate to produce, it will be easy for him to play the real Ronald Reagan and send the violations report to Capitol Hill. That may cause sulking on his White House staff and in top drawers of the national security bureaucracy, but it's what the president always has wanted. He now has his screwdriver in hand.

EXHIBIT 5

[From Business Week, Sept. 19, 1983]

WHAT THE SOVIETS ARE SO ANXIOUS TO CONCEAL

(By Yosef Bodansky)

Moscow is paranoid about penetration of its airspace in the Far East by foreign aircraft, especially at night, because of the vast expansion of its military establishment in the region. That is why the unarmed Korean Air Lines plane was doomed when it strayed over the Kamchatka Peninsula earlier this month.

The Soviets have been swiftly building up their military complex in East Asia since 1969, and they have been doing so by means of maskirovka, or concealment. Much of the activity is carried on at night in order to mask violations of both the SALT I and SALT II treaties with the U.S. The quantitative buildup in the Far East started after the invasion of Czechoslovakia and border skirmishes with the Chinese. But a quantitative leap came after 1972, with the appointment of General of the Army V. I. Petrov as commander of the Far East Military District. Petrov reorganized ground forces in four military districts—Central Asia, Siberia, Transbaikal, and the Far East—into one of Russia's new theaters of military operations. For his achievements there, Petrov was recently made a marshal and commander-in-chief of Soviet ground forces and was decorated as a Hero of the Soviet Union in May.

The Soviets have tried to portray the buildup in the Far East as directed toward China. It includes a boost in militarymanpower to 505,000 this year, up from 310,000 in 1979. In the same period, the number of tanks tripled to around 15,000, combat helicopters quadrupled to 1,000, and first-line aircraft jumped to 3,200 from 2,000. By depicting the expansion as being basically aimed at China, Moscow hoped to justify it to the West. By magnifying the West's perception of Moscow's fear of the People's Liberation Army (PLA), the Kremlin hopes to encourage Western expectations that in a war with NATO, Soviet troops would be tied down facing the Chinese.

On closer examination, it is clear that the Soviets envisage neither the capability nor the goal of occupying China and its billion-plus inhabitants. Rather, Russian strategy—dating to the imperial staff in the 1880's—in a war with China has looked toward Chinese dismemberment, the creation of local separatist governments, and the occupation of limited but crucial areas, strategically and economically, in northwest and north east China. Occupied land would include 56 percent of China territory and all of its nuclear installations but only 6 percent of its population, mostly non-Han minorities. The Russians propose to attain these objectives by lightning strikes against the PLA. which Moscow believes has virtually no offensive capability. Meanwhile, the Soviets have tried to cool down their feud with the Chinese, most recently by concessions to Beijing in the dispute over definition of the Ussuri River border.

The buildup of ground forces against China was completed in the early 1970's. Since then, the emphasis has been on special and highly maneuverable units. Russian capabilities in the Far East have been tested in a series of sophisticated exercises, including the mock capture of Etorofu, one of the islands in the Kuril chain that the Soviets took from Japan after World War II. Etorofu has become the center for projection of Soviet power toward the northern Japanese island of Hokkaido. The force includes an army headquarters, an air assault brigade with HIP and HIND helicopters, and a squadron each of MiG-21s and MiG-23s—and the expansion continues.

RETALIATION IN KIND

But what makes the Kamchatka Peninsula one of Russia's most sensitive areas is its stategic buildup. At Chukotskiy, on the northern tip of the peninsula, the Soviets have built the infrastructure for a vast installation of mobile missiles—SS-20s and/or SS-16s, or the operational version of the PL-5. The SS-20s could reach half of the U.S., while the SS-16s and PL-5s could cover most of the country. There are more than 115 SS-20s east of the Urals, and completion of the Far East buildup would double that number. The base at Chukotskiy appears to be the "retaliation in kind" that, Soviet propagandists have repeatedly warned, would follow modernization of U.S. missiles deployed under NATO in Europe.

The Soviets are also developing and testing a new generation of ballistic missiles and aerospace defense missiles on Kamchatka. In flagrant violation of SALT II provisions, the Soviets encode the telemetric information on these missile tests, while broadcasting false data to confuse the U.S. tracking system. For the PL-5, they have introduced another way of shielding secrets: night testing, which hampers the U.S. capability to observe the missiles and their impact points. All these activities are carried out under strict control of the Chief Directorate of Strategic Maskirovka. This agency of concealment was created by Marshal Nikolai Orgakov, now first deputy defense minister and chief of the general staff, when he was also chief Soviet military delegate to the 1969-71 SALT I talks.

Recently, the Soviets have increased their antiballistic missile (ABM) activities in southern Kamchatka, although these are prohibited in a 1972 agreement attached to SALT I. In 1974 the Soviets introduced ABM radar in Kamchatka—specifically prohibited by the ABM treaty—calling it a test installation. In fact, the radar has full operational capacity. The Soviets hope it, along with an operational radar in Komsomolsk in the Far East and an ABM radar recently discovered in Abalakova in Siberia, will shield their Far East strategic installations.

The Korean jumbo jet penetrated at night and by surprise, at an hour when Soviet activity is greatest and maskirovka is somewhat relaxed. Whether the Korean pilot noted anything he should not have is irrelevant. The Soviets put an absolute priority on protecting national security and, by their criteria, the intruder had to be destroyed quickly.

EXHIBIT 6

PRESIDENT REAGAN'S ACCUSATIONS OF SOVIET SALT VIOLATIONS

President Reagan himself has taken the lead in pointing out Soviet arms control violations, which I applaud as leadership and statesmanship in the best tradition of our republic. President Reagan has a realistic view of the Soviet Union and of the intentions of the Soviet Politburo. On January 29, 1981, Reagan said that the Soviets would "lie, cheat, commit any crime" to achieve their goals. He understands the dangers of Marxism-Leninism, and the degree to which this ideology guides and legitimizes the rule of the Soviet Communist Party. The American people share President Reagan's realism regarding the Soviets.

President Reagan has made the following five accusations of Soviet violations of five arms control treaties:

1. SOVIET VIOLATION OF THE UNRATIFIED SALT II TREATY

President Reagan made the following statement at a press breakfast on February 23, 1983 about Soviet flight-testing of a second new type ICBM in violation of SALT II: "* * * I'm convinced that these are violations * * *. This last one comes the closest to indicating that it is a violation."

There is an open and shut case on this SALT II violation, testing of 2 new type ICBM's when only one is allowed. President Reagan stated further in regard to Soviet SALT II violations on April 21, 1983 "* * * When have they stopped?"

2. SOVIET VIOLATION OF THE KENNEDY-KHRUSHCHEV AGREEMENT OF OCTOBER 28, 1962

This agreement was supposed to "halt further introduction of such weapons systems (i.e., Soviet offensive missiles and other offensive weapons, which Khrushchev even defined as including Soviet troops) into Cuba "as firm undertakings" on the part of "both" the U.S. and the Soviet governments.

President Reagan stated at a press conference in May, 1982: "You know, there's been other things we think are violations also of the 1962 agreement."

There is conclusive physical evidence of Soviet military activity in Cuba in violation of the Kennedy-Khrushchev Agreement. On September 14, 1983, President Reagan repeated his accusation. He stated: "As far as I'm concerned, that agreement has been abrogated many times by the Soviet Union and Cuba in the bringing of what can only be considered offensive weapons, not defensive, there."

3. SOVIET VIOLATIONS OF THE THRESHOLD TEST BAN TREATY OF 1974

President Reagan stated on March 28, 1983: "We have reason to believe that there have been numerous violations * * *"

On the Threshold Test Ban Treaty, the U.S. has 95 percent confidence of several Soviet violations of the TTBT at militarily significant levels.

4. AND 5. SOVIET VIOLATIONS OF THE CHEMICAL WARFARE GENEVA PROTOCOL OF 1925 AND THE BIOLOGICAL WARFARE CONVENTION OF 1975

President Reagan stated on January 26, 1983: "There is overwhelming evidence of Soviet violations of international treaties concerning chemical and biological weapons."

President Reagan also stated on June 17, 1982 at the United Nations: "The Soviet Union and their allies are violating the Geneva Protocol of 1925 . . . and the 1972 (i.e. ratified in 1975) Biological Warfare Convention. There is conclusive evidence."

There is conclusive physical evidence of these Soviet violations in South East and South West Asia, as well as at Sverdlovsk in the U.S.S.R.

In addition, President Reagan has made two further statements on Soviet arms control compliance in general. On May 9, 1982, President Reagan stated:

"So far, the Soviet Union has used arms control negotiations primarily as an instrument to restrict U.S. defense programs and in conjunction with their own arms buildup, as a means to enhance Soviet power and prestige. Unfortunately, for some time suspicions have grown that the Soviet Union has not been living up to its obligations under existing arms control treaties." (Emphasis added.)

President Reagan added recently, on March 31, 1983:

"And I am sorry to say, there have been increasingly serious grounds for questioning their (i.e. Soviet) compliance with the arms control agreements that have already been signed and that we have both pledged to uphold. I may have more to say on this in the near future . . ." (Emphasis added.)

The President is not alone in his concerns about SALT II violations. On April 7, 1983, Defense Secretary Weinberger was asked if the Soviet Union was violating the SALT II Treaty, particularly with regard to testing a second new type ICBM. Weinberger answered:

"They're (i.e., the Soviets) doing a lot of things that seem to us to involve work with two missiles, whereas the SALT treaty appears to limit the one. They're doing a lot of things about encryption * * * which the SALT treaty appears to ban * * * there may be a violation, indeed, and this would not be the first time. The real violation of the Soviets is with the chemical treaties and the use of chemical warfare in Afghanistan and Kampuchea. And that isn't a question of interpretation. That's unfortunately a flat fact." (Emphasis added.)

Weinberger added that there may be several Soviet SALT II violations. According to Human Events of April 16, 1983:

"A high-level interagency group, cochaired by Admiral Jonathan Howe, head of the State Department Political-Military Bureau, and Assistant Secretary of Defense Richard Perle, unanimously agreed on March 8 that the Soviets blatantly violated the SALT II treaty that both the Soviets and the United States have agreed not to undercut. William E. Jackson, who served with the Arms Control and Disarmament Agency in the previous Administration and is now with the Brookings Institution, confirmed the report. In a press conference last week, Jackson said the Soviets, in violation of SALT II, tested a missile on February 8 that may have had twice the warhead payload of the SS-13, rather than the 5 percent allowed. He also said the agreement allows only one new type of ICBM to each side, but that the Soviets have developed two."

Assistant Secretary of State Richard Burt stated on March 20, 1983: "You can be sure that if the Soviet Union has violated any arms control agreement, this Administration will come forward and talk about it."

President Reagan already has accused the Soviets of five violations of five arms control treaties, although this fact is not well known in the Congress or throughout the country. Richard Burt seems also to be unaware of the President's accusations.

In addition to President Reagan's five accusations, there are two other violations charges which deserve mention. First, the Soviets have violated the SALT I ABM Treaty, according to former Secretary of State Henry Kissinger. Second, the Soviets have violated the SALT I Interim Agreement in many ways, such as, by replacing light ICBMs with heavy ICBMs. Henry Kissinger called this "sharp practice" and former Defense Secretary Melvin Laird called it a violation.

ROBERT C. BAILEY: AN EXAMPLE OF THE STRENGTH OF AMERICA

Mr. MATSUNAGA. Mr. President, earlier this month I was among those who attended the funeral services of a dear friend and longtime neighbor, Robert C. Bailey.

As a U.S. Senator I am privileged to know many people—the great and the near great—people of importance and influence in the affairs of state and commerce, and, on occasion, those who have gained transient fame by dint of singular achievement or unusual happenstance. It has also been my great privilege to meet and befriend individuals who receive neither public adoration nor media acclaim, but who nevertheless make great and lasting contributions to the daily life of America and which make this country, such a great place in which to live.

When I attended Bob's funeral, I clearly saw how important are those men and women of quiet competence, both in work and domestic life. Out of the public glare, they cheerfully tend families, friends, businesses, and communities, as did Bob. For nearly 50 years, 30 of them in the Washington, D.C., area, Bob worked as an actuary, eventually serving as a vice president of the Equitable Life Insurance Co. of Washington. Never content to have only one interest, he also was a Mason and an active member of the Friday Morning Music Club.

It is only by knowing individuals such as Bob Bailey that one is truly enriched. By his devoted love and concern for his dutiful wife, Agnes, his sons, George and John, and daughters-in-law, Lisa and Elizabeth, he was an example for us all to emulate. Bob's commitment to his profession and willingness to lend his time to his community sorely will be missed and surely will be remembered by all for whom his life was spent. With your permission, Mr. President, I ask unaniamous consent to have printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD the eulogy presented by Rev. Gordon Forbes of the Westmoreland Congressional Church at the memorial service for Robert C. Bailey. I wish to do this because it was one of the most moving statements I have ever heard or read about a man who had quietly, without ostentation, in his own way, enriched the lives of those who were fortunate enough to know him.

There being no objection, the eulogy was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

MEMORIAL SERVICE FOR ROBERT C. BAILEY, SEPTEMBER 9, 1983

Dear Friends of Robert Bailey: We have come here to worship God and recall with thankfulness the life of Robert Bailey.

Hear, if you will, a letter from the family of Mr. Bailey:

DEAR DAD: Thoughts fill our heads and it is difficult to summarize our gratefulness for having you as our husband and father.

Quite simply, we want to thank you for the fine human qualities we have learned from you through your example. In your peaceful way, you showed us the power of compassion, empathy, faith, honesty, and humor. You set an example of the purpose and satisfaction to be achieved through education and learning.

It seemed like you never complained, but were more concerned about others' needs and troubles. Your constant loving support for Mom was obvious to all who knew you.

In your last hours of life, you appeared to know that we were all beside you. Perhaps you knew we had discussed how we would stay beside you as you passed from physical being no matter how prolonged. Perhaps you even perceived this as a burden on us, but it would not have been—how insignificant our problems were by any measure.

You have taught us one final, priceless lesson in the dignity and peace with which death can be faced. You have become the family's pioneer in this transformation and you have given us the power to continue.

Dad, though you are gone from our sight, you are immortal in soul, and others will see you as reflections in us for the remainder of our years.

With deepest love, thank you,

YOUR FAMILY.

How shall we remember this life? Memory is a powerful thing. It has the power to liberate or to haunt. It has the power to evoke rejoicing and thanks or regret and remorse. It has the power to move and inspire or to shrivel and demean. Memory is a powerful thing.

Those who have known and loved Robert Bailey bid us to remember all of those qualities which endeared him to them and to us. They bid you remember his gentleness. Robert was a gentle man who had his own convictions but gave space and freedom for others to have theirs. Remember his gentleness.

We bid you to remember his patience. The difference between a patient and an impatient person is found in the capacity to "wait." Waiting is not a virtue we hold dear in American culture. Robert Bailey had the capacity to wait. Remember his patience.

The testimony is that Robert was a reflective and philosophical man. Broadly read and deeply stimulated by a large range of interests, Robert had the capacity to put present things into broad and full perspective. There was an unusual capacity to see things wholly. While not empowering of decisiveness, such a quality is encouragement to wisdom. So remember his wisdom.

Finally, we bid you to remember his strength and support. His family thrived because of Roberts' presence. His aid, his practical wisdom, his encouragement to all that was satisfying and helpful to his family's welfare shall be deeply missed. Remember his quiet and unassuming support.

Memory is a powerful thing. We bid you, then, remember Robert Bailey in this way that his death may liberate, evoke rejoicing, and inspire all that is good. Let us pray:

O God of the living and the dead, who has knit us together in one bundle of life through the resurrection of Christ from the dead, we come before you in quietness and peace. Hallow for us all good and tender memory. Stir within us thanksgiving for the gift of Robert's life. Cleanse us of any regret and remorse. And so dwell with us in this hour of sadness and grief that we may dwell safely in this darkness awaiting the coming again of your light and joy. In Christ's Name we pray.

Amen.

Dear Friends: There are two words that our Scripture holds up for our reflection and meditation at this moment of memorial and remembrance.

The first is contained in Paul's letter to the Corinthians. He writes, "We look not to the things that are seen but to the things that are unseen. For the things that are seen are passing but the things that are unseen are eternal." Personal qualities can not really be seen, that is, touched and held. We can experience their effect. We can receive and benefit from their fruits. But qualities are unseen. Those qualities are eternal. They live on long after someone has died. Robert's patience, gentleness, and wisdom continue to live on. They live on in those who received their benefit. They live on in all who seek to embrace similar qualities. They live on in the heart of God who is the ground of all gentleness, patience and wisdom. "We look not to the things that are seen but to the things that are unseen. For the things that are seen are transient but the things that are unseen are eternal." Our faith reminds us that the highest quality in life is love. Love is eternal. The love we have received from Robert and the love we have given have not been lost.

The second word is contained in Paul's letter to Rome. He writes, "I am persuaded that neither death nor life * * * nor anything in all creation can separate us from the love of God in Christ Jesus Our Lord." It is a statement that nothing in death can separate us from the love of God. Death may be the close of a chapter but it is not the finish of a book. It is an end of a movement but not the close of a symphony. Even now we can be assured that our loved one lives in the broader and deeper love of God. Nothing in death can separate us from God's love.

Nor can anything in life. Death is a difficult moment for those of us who survive. A great hole and a great gap is left in our lives. A very real and present love has gone. In the midst of that grief and loss our faith assures us that we are loved eternally and that nothing in life, nothing in this grief, can separate us from that love. Let us pray.

YAZ: ALWAYS A CHAMPION

Mr. TSONGAS. I was proud yesterday to join my colleague, the senior Senator from Massachusetts, in support of his resolution (S. Res. 232) passed unanimously by the Senate, honoring Carl Yastrzemski, captain of the Boston Red Sox. Today I rise to add a personal tribute to "Yaz" and his contributions to baseball which have enriched the lives of all of us in Massachusetts and New England, and no doubt, most Americans everywhere.

Mr. President, from the retirement of Boston's beloved Ted Williams, when there appeared in Fenway's famed left field a new rookie—Carl Yastrzemski—through the woeful losing years of the early sixties, through the "Impossible Dream of 1967" and the team in 1975 which captured the Nation's heart and forced the "Big Red Machine" of Cincinnati to a seventh game in World Series, and through the heartbreaking loss to the hated Yankees in a special playoff in 1978, Carl Yastrzemski has always been at the center of things in the clutch. No one from young "kids" to the "old vets" ever worked harder. Yastrzemski taught everyone the value of hard work and training in the off-season as his incredible body seemed to get younger every year.

Yaz played the game to win. One could rely upon the yearly quotes from Florida in which Yastrzemski expressed the certitude that "this year" the Red Sox would win the pennant and the Series. He never quit. The many memories tumble out, too numerous to mention—Carl Yastrzemski running the bases with abandon, Carl Yastrzemski the batting champ hitting to the opposite field concentrating on singles and doubles, Carl Yastrzemski the pull-hitting power hitter smashing 44 home runs and winning the triple crown, Carl Yastrzemski, designated hitter and senior statesman of the Red Sox, Carl Yastrzemski developing a classy style as a first baseman late in his career and Carl Yastrzemski patrolling left field. And, oh what a left fielder. No one has ever played it better—not just at Fenway, but all around the league Yaz' circus catches and magnificent throws became almost commonplace.

Mr. President, it is hard to capture in words what Yaz has meant to us in New England. He is a man of dedication and dignity—a man who would be respected in whatever his profession was. He performed on a baseball diamond in public—but he represents for many of us the professionalism and excellence which we strive for in whatever we do.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed the following article by Mike Barnicle from the Boston Globe following my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

YAZ: ALWAYS A CHAMPION

(By Mike Barnicle)

Once, it was a simple game played on grass under the sun and fans deceived themselves into thinking that men played it only for fun. Over the years, the night took it from warm afternoons and there are green carpets now instead of lush lawns and the explosion of dollars has turned the music of the sport into the sound of an adding machine.

Kids no longer pose in playground shadows pretending to be DiMaggio, Mays or Mantle. The ballet involved in chasing long fly balls or the visual poetry of a double play is still there, but free agency and labor disputes have resulted in loyalty that has turned to rust.

Lawyers and owners speak in Wall Street tones; players mutter in some dead language that always has a clause for cash; and all three parties are part of a deceit that has robbed the game of its magic and the fans of a piece of their youth.

Yet through it all, across all the years, you can always find a handful of athletes who act and perform as if they are the custodians of the game's reputation, as if their every time at bat is going to help restore a piece of the dream that every child once held in his heart whenever baseball was played.

Carl Yastrzemski is such a man.

He never had the power of a Jackson or a Schmidt. He never had the speed of a Clemente. He does not have the size or strength of someone like Winfield or Rice.

He approached the game the way a carpenter frames a house. His foundation was desire; the walls were made of intensity; the roof was nailed down with heart.

His career has stretched across the terms of six presidents, a couple of mayors and two decades that have changed the face of this country forever. There are people just one year out of college whose entire memory of the Red Sox is book-ended by the name Yastrzemski.

He played on some awful teams, some good ones and, perhaps, one great one. He was stacked in batting orders with players who were pathetic and a few others who had better natural ability and physical gifts than No. 8 did.

Through it all, the first- and last-place finishes, the embarrassment and the applause, it was always Carl Yastrzemski's pride that bound those teams together and carried them through the long season. From March to October, he ran everything out.

He was "The Captain," but his speeches were given in the batter's box and out along the cinder track in left field. He was an all-star but the glitter in his game came from his consistency. He was a steady light in the sky, not some shooting star that faded in a haze of adhesive tape, whirlpools and excuses.

His talent was always disguised within a body better suited for a journeyman infielder. And there were years when he was hurt nearly all the time and the numbers from those seasons libel his career when looked at separately.

But he played. He altered his stance or favored his back. He limped a bit and took a little off the throw in to the cutoff man but, always, he played.

And all the games across all the years do not encompass one third the effort that Carl Yastrzemski poured into his sport. Box scores don't show callouses picked up from hours in a batting cage and statistical totals don't compute the sweat, pain and sacrifice of a life devoted to a game.

In September of 1967, he became a legend. No man has ever had a month, a season, like Yastrzemski did sixteen summers ago. Day in and day out, he lugged at marginal collection of baseball players toward the dream of a first-place finish.

In the fall of 1975, he was an aging left fielder on a team of considerable talent. But it was Yastrzemski who took a ball off the left field wall, turned and fired to throw out Reggie Jackson, who had thought he could take second on an old man's arm, and when the umpire called him out, the Oakland A's died right there in the copper-colored dust of the infield.

By 1978, there was a touch of gray at his temples and the lines around his eyes were not from laughing. And it is in a scene from a crisp, clear October afternoon of that year that Carl Yastrzemski will live forever in my mind.

His Red Sox had bled themselves into a tie for first place with the Yankees of New York. Now it was the ninth inning of a playoff game and 32,295 fans stood in silence for the duel: "The Captain" against "The Goose."

They say the ball finally came down in Graig Nettles' glove. They say there was a final score, and that the Yankees won. But they are wrong because legends live forever and there are dreams that never die.

In places beyond New England, there are people who claim that "The Captain" never played on a team that won a World Series. Yet on that autumn day, and on every day he wore the uniform, Carl Yastrzemski, No. 8, was always champion.

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

Mr. GORTON. Mr. President, today is the last day for us in the Senate to have our statements of mourning regarding Senator Jackson's death put in the RECORD for collection into a single book in memory of Scoop. Mr. President, I have a statement from Senator Warren Magnuson here that he delivered at Scoop's funeral in Everett. Mr. President, I think it would be appropriate for Maggie's statement to be at the beginning of the collection of our eulogies for Scoop and ask unanimous consent that it be so printed. I also ask unanimous consent that the attached statement be printed at this point in the RECORD.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR WARREN MAGNUSON

I naturally was shocked and stunned when I was informed of Senator Jackson's death—untimely as it was. I often thought of Scoop as being indestructible. His personal habits, his way of life just made him that indestructible to me.

It's almost unreal, that as I stand here * * * well, I couldn't sleep that night. I tried to go to sleep, hoping I'd wake up and it was just a dream. But it's real. As I stand here beside the casket, I know it's real.

He lived a great life. But he's going to leave a great void that I doubt any person can fill. It's going to take a big man to fill even partially his shoes.

We served together in the House and the Senate almost a half a century. That's a long, long time. We worked as a team, shoulder-to-shoulder, on different projects and problems which faced our State.

Now that team is dissolved. I don't know when it will ever come back again—44 years in Congress and 28 years in the United States Senate. It not only is a long, long time, but it brings back many memories to me, that if I tried to list them all I'd have you here all afternoon. So we mourn his loss and that void. I don't know when it's ever going to be filled.

There was a funeral in Rome years ago in which a prominent Roman stood up and said, "I've come to bury Ceasar, not to praise him." I'm going to paraphrase that and reverse it: "I come not to bury Henry Jackson, but to praise him." Because his achievements, his contribution to world peace, to human rights and to the people of this State and the Nation will be going on and on forever, and he'll be immortal by them.

His private and personal life, and his political life, were almost immaculate. And do you people realize, like I do, that there's never been one breath of scandal that's ever hovered around Henry Jackson in half a century of public service? That's something in this day and age.

I was always amazed and marveled at his knowledge and grasp of foreign affairs. And I watched him over the years grow up to be a giant, not only in the Congress, but in international affairs.

He always said to me over the years, I'm going to vote tomorrow—whenever the vote would be in the Senate—to what I think is in the best interest of these United States. Sometimes he was criticized for it, but he never wavered; he never swayed to the winds of popular opinion.

And people sought and went to him for advice and wisdom on foreign affairs. He was almost a prophet—a prophet in his time. He was pretty nearly always right, and that's what made him what he was.

There's another side of Scoop that I knew very well. That is his human side. There never was a problem in all the years we were together, too small for Scoop to take time out of his busy world to help. And there's scores of incidents, hundreds, that I went through with him.

He used to drop by my office pretty nearly every morning when we were in session. He'd say "Who's in trouble today? Who at home is in trouble? Who can we help?" And we'd get together and work it out, the best we knew how.

So when the headstone, is written, I hope they'll say, he was a humane, compassionate man. I hope they'll say "here lies Henry Jackson, a decent man, a loyal public servant—but above all, a man of the people." God bless you, Scoop.

TRAVEL AND TOURISM

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, I rise today to commend a very distinguished group of individuals who have contributed much of their valuable time, talent, and personal expenses to the development of a historic private sector initiative that could profoundly improve our Nation's competitiveness for international travel and tourism business. Some of the best marketing minds in the industry have come together to develop a marketing strategy to promote the United States as an international travel destination.

Tourism is our second largest service industry, but our international tourism receipts have dropped from 13 percent of the world market in 1976 to 10.6 percent in 1982, paralleling a steady decline in the Federal promotion effort. This represents more than $2½ billion in foreign exchange earnings, and a large share of our trade deficit. Action must be taken to reverse this decline of the U.S. competitive position in the world tourism marketplace. We have made great strides in this area by increasing the budget for the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration (USTTA). This cooperative effort from the private sector will greatly assist the effort to promote the whole of the United States and reduce our trade deficit. I applaud them for their efforts.

The time has come for the leaders of this Nation to recognize the travel and tourism industry as a major force in the growth of the American economy for the decades ahead.

The travel and tourism industry is not only the second largest retail or service industry in the United States, but it is the second-largest private employer as well. Statistics on its other economic contributions speak for themselves: In 1982, for example, the industry generated 4.5 million American jobs, $183 billion in business receipts, $41 billion in payroll income, and over $20 billion in Federal, State, and local tax revenue. Inbound international tourism constitutes our Nation's third largest source of export income. Last year alone, international visitors to the United States spent $11.3 billion, generated $640 million in Federal tax revenue, and supported 300,000 jobs.

In view of Government efforts to minimize and to reduce unemployment, to generate additional Federal, State, and local revenue, and to improve our balance of payments, travel, and tourism is clearly a force to be reckoned with and nurtured. Certainly, our current economic situation dictates we can no longer afford to ignore the demonstrated economic contributions of this dynamic growth industry.

If we are to return to the 1976 world market share of 13 percent, the Federal Government must first commit itself to fulfilling its proper role in adequately promoting this country abroad—competitive with the efforts of other national governments. In recent years, funding of the U.S. Travel and Tourism Administration (USTTA), the Federal Government's principal instrument of national tourism policy implementation, has incrementally fallen to a barely functional level. Through broad-based industry and congressional resistance to this decline, it now appears that this negative trend may be reversed. Recent actions indicating a growing sense of appreciation and respect for this industry are reflected in the Senate and House Appropriations Committees' recommended funding levels for USTTA of $10.1 million and $12.8 million respectively in fiscal year 1984, representing a significant improvement over the proposed $5.4 million.

In the process of obtaining this reversal, however, there is an absence of a comprehensive international tourism marketing strategy for the Nation which would outline what the policy, priorities, and activities of the Federal Government should be, given an increased level of funding. This is because the executive branch only permits USTTA to submit a marketing plan based on a prescribed and predetermined funding level.

In response to USTTA's dilemma, the Travel Industry Association of America (TIA) has embarked upon a most difficult, but very worthwhile endeavor. Acting in its capacity as the umbrella association representing the various sectors of the travel and tourism industry, and with the encouragment of industry leaders and USTTA, TIA has assembled a committee of senior international travel marketing executives to guide the development of an international marketing plan. This cooperative effort of the best marketing minds in the industry will also include methods through which the private sector, States, and cities can play a major role in implementing the Federal effort.

The objective of the International Marketing Plan Development Committee is to develop a 5-year marketing strategy to return the United States to a 13-percent market share of international tourism, which will create 200,000 new jobs and increase foreign exchange from inbound tourism 60 to 70 percent.

On August 11, the Committee met for the first time in Washington to begin developing a sophisticated marketing strategy that will merit implementation by USTTA. The industry plans to complete and submit its suggested marketing plan to Congress and the administration by the end of this year.

As chairman of the Senate Subcommittee on Business, Trade and Tourism, I enthusiastically endorse the mission of the International Marketing Plan Development Committee. I hasten to point out the Committee also has received the endorsements of other officials in the executive and legislative branches of Government, including Commerce Secretary Malcolm Baldrige, the Congressional Tourism Caucus chairman, and the chairman of the House authorization committee with jurisdiction over Federal Government tourism promotion efforts.

I commend the voluntary efforts of those individuals involved in this worthy initiative to optimize the contribution of the travel and tourism industry to economic prosperity, full employment, and the U.S. international balance of payments.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete roster of the International Marketing Plan Development Committee be included as part of my statement.

There being no objection, the roster was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

INTERNATIONAL MARKETING PLAN DEVELOPMENT COMMITTEE

CHAIRMAN

James C. Collins, Senior Vice President, Marketing, Hilton Hotels Corporation.

MEMBERS

J. Kay Aldous, Vice President, Public and Government Policy, American Automobile Association.

Roger Ballou, Senior Vice President, Vacation & Leisure Travel, American Express Company.

William Blaziek, Senior Vice President Sales and Marketing, Resorts International Casino Hotel.

Chris Browne, Senior Vice President, Marketing, Holiday Inns, Inc.

Gordon L. Downing, Vice President General Sales Manager, National Car Rental System, Inc.

Sig S. Front, Senior Vice President, Director of Marketing, The Sheraton Corporation.

Robert Giersdorf, President, Exploration Holidays and Cruises.

Edward N. Gilbert, Director, Florida Division of Tourism.

Charles Gillett, President, New York Convention & Visitors Bureau.

Elliott Heit, International Marketing Director, Tauck Tours, Inc.

James W. Hurst, Executive Vice President, Greater Los Angeles Visitors & Convention Bureau.

Samuel B. Jamieson, Jr., Vice President Marketing, Short Line Tours.

Michael L. Jenkins, Director, Business Marketing, American Telephone & Telegraph Co.

Thomas J. Koors, Executive Vice President, Sales and Marketing, Northwest Airlines, Inc.

Jack B. Lindquist, Executive Vice President, Marketing, Walt Disney Productions.

William S. Norman, Group Vice President, Marketing and Corporate Planning, Amtrak.

Malcolm D. Pynn, President, Holiday Americas.

Don Ryan, President, Camping Group, Kampgrounds of America, Inc.

Martin R. Shugrue, Jr., Senior Vice President, Marketing, Pan American World Airways, Inc.

William D. Slattery, President & CEO, Braniff International.

Robert Smalley, Sr., President and Chief Executive Officer, American Land Cruisers.

Bradley Smith, Executive Director, Foremost West, Four Corners Regional Tourism Organization.

Brian Smith, Vice President, Marketing, Busch Entertainment Corporation.

John Stockton, Vice President, Marketing, Roy Rogers Restaurants.

John A. Ueberroth, President, Ask Mr. Foster First Travel Corporation & Ask Mr. Foster Travel Service.

Terry L. Underwood, Vice President, Passenger Marketing, Greyhound Lines, Inc.

A. Russell Upshaw, Jr., Vice President, Government Affairs, Eastern Air Lines, Inc.

EX-OFFICIO MEMBERS

William H. Edwards, National Chairman, Travel Industry Association of America, and President, Hilton Hotels Division, Hilton Hotels Corporation.

William D. Toohey, President, Travel Industry Association of America.

TECHNICAL STAFF MANAGEMENT

Michael F. Sarka, Senior Vice President, Travel Development, Travel Industry Association of America.

Thomas G. Lloyd, Senior Policy Analyst, Travel and Tourism Government, Affairs Council.

Dr. Douglas C. Frechtling, Director, U.S. Travel Data Center.

Members of the International Marketing Plan Development Committee are senior travel industry executives, experienced in marketing, from the following industry components: attractions, car rental, communications, food service, gaming, accommodations, outdoor recreation, regional tourism organizations, sightseeing, State government tourist offices, tour sales, transportation (including air, automobile, cruise, motorcoach and rail) and urban tourism organizations.

THE 42D ANNIVERSARY OF THE MASSACRE OF JEWS AT BABI YAR

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, this week marks the 42d anniversary of the massacre of over 34,000 Russian and Ukranian Jews by the Nazis at Babi Yar, a ravine near Kiev. I rise today to pay my respects to the martyred Jews; an act which the Soviet Union refuses to do, even in the face of urgent international appeals to truthfully acknowledge their own fallen citizens.

Mr. President, it pains me to recount before this body the method by which the Jewish population of Kiev was rounded up by the SS and Gestapo commandoes under the guise of relocation, forced to strip naked and lie down in the ravine. They were then shot with automatic rifles, covered with dirt, and the next group awaiting execution was forced to lie down on top of them and be shot in the same manner. After two days of nonstop murder, half the Jews of Kiev were slaughtered. What is almost as distressing is the fact that the Soviet Government adamantly refuses to admit the uniquely Jewish feature of that tragedy.

In 1961, the Soviet poet Yevgeny Yevtushenko published the poem Babi Yar, which touched off a national outcry over the absence of a memorial for the massacre victims. Twenty years later, when the Government finally erected a memorial over the extermination site, it neglected to mention that the overwhelming number of Babi Yar's victims were Jews who were killed simply because of their faith.

Mr. President, the horrific scale of the Babi Yar murders cannot accurately be depicted in mere adjectives. Rather, the enormity of the atrocity and its coldly calculated precision defy the imagination of any person with a modicum of human emotion. I am outraged that the Soviet Government continues to suppress the true nature of the massacre, and I appeal to the Soviets not to make this forced disassociation an element of national policy. As Yevtushenko aptly noted, "Everything still screams out in silence." The issue of officially sanctioned anti-Semitism in the Soviet Union debilitates that society, and inhibits its full participation in the community of nations.

In commemorating the fallen Jews of Kiev at Babi Yar, I can only implore the Soviets to cease ignoring the Jewish element of the massacre, and take all necessary steps toward ending its own rampant anti-Semitism. Its heavyhanded manipulation of the past only serves to indelibly taint the lenses through which it views the present, and does not bode well for the future.

In July 1982, my wife Joan and I visited Babi Yar and were enormously moved by this monument and the knowledge of what had happened here. From Kiev, we traveled to the village of Batcklurina, some 165 miles from Kiev, where my father, Harry Specter, was born and lived until 1911 when he immigrated to the United States at the age of 18.

My personal connection with the Ukraine underscores my deep concern about the massacre at Babi Yar, the current plight of Soviet Jewry, and the importance of remembering the tragic event.

COMPUTER AND BUSINESS EQUIPMENT MANUFACTURERS ASSOCIATION

RECOMMENDATIONS FOR ECONOMIC GROWTH

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, this week the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association, known throughout the country by its initials, CBEMA, held its fall meeting in Washington, D.C. CBEMA and its member companies are well known in Washington. It represents businesses with total sales of over $75 billion and over 1 million employees.

The member companies of CBEMA are in the forefront of investment, research and development, and creativity in the United States. CBEMA's membership includes such well-known companies as IBM, Xerox, Control Data, Honeywell, Apple Computer, and even my own former company, Bell & Howell.

CBEMA members make a very positive contribution to our trade balance. Last year, they exported a surplus of $6 billion. When so many American industries see overseas markets shrinking because of the strong dollar and other factors, it is indeed an important achievement that this industry made a significant contribution to reducing the U.S. trade deficit. With projections of as much as a $70 billion trade deficit this year, every business must strive to export to help reduce that deficit. All of us in the Senate congratulate CBEMA members for their leadership in expanding exports and for their farsightedness in planning for future business growth.

During the Washington meeting of CBEMA, its board of directors discussed an important position paper on industrial policy. On Wednesday, the board adopted that paper after a healthy discussion of the meaning of industrial policy and what impact it might have on our economy.

Mr. President, this excellent statement by the CBEMA board should be read by certainly all of us in the Senate and by any American interested in the continued growth of our economy. I ask unanimous consent that it be included in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

(See Exhibit 1.)

Mr. PERCY. CBEMA does not subscribe to an interventionist industrial policy, as the term is often used. But they feel that there are very important changes we need to make in our laws that will foster industrial expansion and growth of market opportunities. Let me just highlight a few.

First, they recommend changes in Federal tax policy that would encourage capital formation and research and development. Tax policy should also encourage exports through instruments like the DISC or a similar alternative.

Second, CBEMA recommends changes in R&D policy so that the Federal Government does not inhibit joint research ventures in the private sector. This industry already invests about 5 percent of its revenues annually in R&D and has total invested capital equal to about 60 percent of revenues.

Third, the CBEMA statement urges mutually open markets for expanded trade opportunities, expanded GATT coverage of services and investment and realistic export licensing procedures.

Fourth, they recommend that the Government cooperate with the private sector in a limited way to help train workers for new technologies. CBEMA specifically cites the Job Partnership Training Act, passed by Congress, as the type of cooperative undertaking they have in mind.

Fifth, CBEMA calls for more competition in telecommunications, a wider variety of telecommunications services, and greater access for all Americans to basic telecommunications equipment.

Mr. President, these are very helpful suggestions to come from one of our most important national industries. I urge my colleagues to study these recommendations and join with CBEMA to make many of them realities.

EXHIBIT 1

FOREWORD

This paper has been prepared in response to the growing national debate on the relationship of government to private industry. It represents the views of the Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association, whose member companies are involved in the computer hardware, software, services and forms business. These companies, dedicated to increasing productivity throughout the world, have demonstrated an ability to compete in difficult economic times. Their record of continuing growth rests on the quality and utility of their products and on their ability to compete internationally.

The computer and business equipment manufacturers association

The Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association (CBEMA) represents 42 member companies involved in the manufacture, servicing and sale of computer, telecommunications and business equipment, software and services. In 1982, those members had combined sales of more than $75 billion.

Industry profile

CBEMA members are part of a very dynamic industry, the computer hardware, software, services and forms industry, which:

Employs over a million people in the United States alone.

Contributes a positive balance of trade, now in excess of $6.6 billion per year.

Invests approximately 5 percent ($5.2 billion in 1982) of its revenues annually in research and development. The computer hardware segment spends over 7.5 percent of its annual revenues for research and development.

Has total invested capital that averaged 60 percent of revenues in 1982.

Has one of the highest effective tax rates of all U.S. industry.

INTRODUCTION

Over the past decades, the United States has developed a de facto industrial policy. It is not a cohesive policy directed toward a single objective. Rather, it is the sum of all laws, regulations and judicial decisions that govern the way we do business, the way the marketplace grows and changes and the way the domestic and international marketplaces interact.

Two phenomena have placed U.S. industrial policy under serious scrutiny. First, the number of unemployed has been at its highest level since the depression of the 1930's. Second, some countries whose economies are—or seem to be—more centrally planned offer serious competitive challenges to U.S. preeminence in the worldwide economy.

In addition, business leaders have warned of the collapse of some U.S. industries and retarded growth in others unless our government develops programs to strengthen the international competitiveness of domestic industry.

Because of these concerns, some political leaders have introduced bills in Congress that propose increased macro- and microeconomic planning and intervention in the industrial arena. Many of these bills contain elements that undermine the market system, such as:

Government-sponsored economic planning councils that would affect or control key areas like wages, prices, investments and the allocation of resources across or within industries.

A "National Development Bank" or Reconstruction Finance Corporation-type facilities that would allocate capital to industries and companies selected on the basis of politically-determined priorities.

The Computer and Business Equipment Manufacturers Association (CBEMA) opposes such measures. Attempts to legislate or massively regulate what should be marketplace decisions can lead only to a confused and stagnant economy, periodically can seriously disrupted by changes in political philosophies.

However, CBEMA does support improvements to government policies that create broad incentives for business expansion through:

Tax and monetary policies that avoid inflation and encourage capital formation and investment.

A combination of tax, general business, anti-trust and procurement policies that encourage research and development.

Policies that expand international trade and investment opportunities while protecting national security.

Telecommunications and other policies that promote competition, access to international networks and free flow of information across national borders.

Education, training and investment policies that produce a well-trained and productive workforce able to enter expanding job markets.

Policies that create a realistic balance among competing spending demands to reduce federal budget deficits.

Policies that foster a reduction in the competition for capital between private enterprise and government.

Following are CBEMA's recommendations for changes in current U.S. industrial policy. We believe that these changes will promote the competitiveness of our industry domestically and internationally without undermining other segments of the U.S. economy—segments that contain virtually all of our domestic customers. These changes may also have the desirable effects of reducing exchange rate volatility and of bringing the U.S. dollar into more reasonable parity with other world currencies.

TAX POLICY

Tax policy should encourage industrial expansion and the growth of domestic and international markets. It should avoid imposing additional taxes on those already under high effective tax rates.

(1) Tax policy encourages capital formation and growth.

High technology industry has a tremendous need for capital. Most technological innovation requires large-scale investment, possibly only when capital is available. Furthermore, our industry's products are largely capital goods; thus our customers also need capital availability.

CBEMA favors general measures for insuring the availability of capital, such as policies that:

Encourage savings and investment. Savings incentives would stimulate the accumulation of capital in forms available to our industry and others.

Provide a higher award for investors who take capital risks that have potential to expand the economy. A favorable differential for capital gains is essential to attract funds to these high-risk high-technology ventures.

(2) Tax policy should extend rapid depreciation benefits to high-technology industries.

Because their assets are typically short-lived, the intended tax benefits of the 1981 and 1982 Accelerated Cost Recovery System (ACRS) provisions were in fact detrimental to high-technology firms. This situation should be corrected.

(3) Tax policy should promote investment in research and development.

Research and development (R&D) are the bedrock of continued world leadership in high technology. Companies in our industry currently invest about 5% of their revenues in research and development, one of the highest rates in all U.S. industry. But this is not enough. Continued technological leadership requires government to:

Make the R&D tax credit permanent. This credit is due to expire in 1985.

Make computer software eligible for the R&D tax credit in the same manner as is hardware. Both hardware and software require considerable R&D expense. (This proposal is currently under consideration by the Internal Revenue Service.)

Alter Section 861 of the Internal Revenue Code so that research expenditures are allocated to sources within the United States. The present regulation, currently under suspension, does not allow R&D expenses incurred in the U.S. to be fully allocated against income generated in the U.S.

(4) Tax policy should not subject overseas earnings of American firms to double taxation.

Double taxation discourages exports and overseas investment by American firms. It also artifically inflates the prices of U.S. products abroad. The U.S. should:

Retain the foreign tax credit, which allows a dollar-for-dollar credit for overseas taxes paid to income earned overseas.

Retain the current system of taxing the income of U.S. overseas subsidiaries only when such income is remitted to the United States.

Preempt state laws that tax overseas income on a unitary basis, thereby taxing income that the Federal Government does not. This action will require the passage of federal preemptive legislation.

(5) Tax policy should help expand international markets by creating a Domestic International Sales Corporation (DISC) alternative that is legal under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

According to recent U.S. Treasury reports, high-technology industries have created significant export and job opportunities through the DISC concept. However, the U.S. risks retaliatory duties if it continues to use DISC, since the GATT has declared the DISC an illegal export subsidy.

CBEMA urges immediate legislative enactment of a GATT-legal substitute that would apply to computer software and services as well as to other products.

RESEARCH AND DEVELOPMENT

Research and development (R&D) are the vital underpinnings of high technology industry. The U.S. government already substantially influences these industries through research it finances at federally-funded R&D centers.

Support of basic research is clearly a government activity that contributes greatly to technological product development. In addition, government-sponsored research to meet space and military requirements has contributed to innovation in our industry, just as commercial R&D has contributed to U.S. government efforts. In fact, more than one-half of the nation's support for R&D originates in non-federal sources, of which industry supplies about 95 percent. This nonfederal R&D support is estimated for 1984 at about $52 billion.

The well-being of the U.S. depends in part on our industry's ability to continue to develop new products and sell them. Therefore, in addition to the R&D tax provision discussed in the previous section, we believe that:

(1) R&D policy should encourage and not inhibit joint research ventures in the private sector.

Uncertainties in the interpretation and application of U.S. antitrust laws to cooperative research impedes U.S. technological innovation. And U.S. companies must now compete with large and well-organized research consortia in Japan and Western Europe, particularly in high technology industries.

To enhance the international competitiveness of U.S. high technology industries, therefore, the application of antitrust laws to joint R&D ventures should be clarified and the uncertainty of treble damage antitrust attack dispelled. In addition, the number of dilatory lawsuits should be diminished through assigning defendants' legal costs to unsuccessful plaintiffs.

The clarification of future joint ventures, however, should not bring into question the continuation of present joint ventures that comply with current laws.

(2) R&D policy should support advanced research projects where there is a defined national need and where technology requirements and costs are beyond the practical commercial horizon.

Government should involve universities and business as partners to undertake projects that foster national leadership in high technology. However, where commercial capability exists to support the needed research, the government should not compete.

(3) R&D policy should not inhibit the publication and diffusion of non-classified scientific information.

Exchange of scientific information is vital to rapid advances in high technology. Free exchange that does not endanger U.S. security must continue. In addition, U.S. companies must be able to interchange technical data among affiliated units worldwide, free from unreasonable export controls.

INTERNATIONAL TRADE AND INVESTMENT POLICY

Historically, our industry has consistently contributed a large surplus to the U.S. balance of trade. In 1982, that surplus amounted to $6.6 billion. If this contribution is to remain and grow, the U.S. must foster a trade environment conducive to U.S. high-technology exports.

(1) Trade policy should promote mutually open markets.

It should:

Promote open markets at home by avoiding protectionist legislation (for instance, "domestic content").

Promote open markets abroad, opposing unfair practices of foreign governments that shield domestic producers from fair competition.

Encourage market development through continued duty-free access to the U.S. market for exports from developing nations, while at the same time encouraging these nations to assume the obligations of full-fledged trading partners under the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade (GATT).

Discourage trading partners from creating barriers to high-technology trade to foster a domestic industry for which there is no infrastructure.

(2) Trade policy should emphasize expanding markets.

The GATT has proven its value in assisting liberalized trade. Modifying the GATT to provide open and realistic coverage of services and investment would help improve our balance of payments and protect U.S. investors from unreasonable and economically damaging interference by foreign governments.

The U.S. government should also work toward expanding the entities under the GATT procurement code. Those entities should include telecommunications organizations owned or controlled by foreign governments, such as PTTS. Contracts other than sales should also be included under the code.

(3) Trade policy should help reduce trade barriers.

It should promote:

Adoption of the Harmonized Commodity Code to help reduce trading costs.

Uniform customs treatment of computer software.

International, voluntary-consensus product standards to increase acceptance of U.S. products overseas and reduce or eliminate the cost of altering products to a different standard.

Acceptanc. of product certification tests and manufacturer self-verification across national borders.

(4) Trade policy should achieve a balance between export controls and export enhancement programs.

Effective export controls are vital because they deny adversary countries access to militarily critical goods and technologies. However, the current export licensing process contains unnecessary delays that undermine U.S. competitiveness in West-West trade.

Since most illegal exports occur outside the licensing process, government should focus on a strong export control enforcement program. It should remove unnecessary restraints and avoid additional licensing requirements.

(5) Trade policy should include specific export incentives.

It should:

Expand the role of the Export-Import Bank by providing additional funding and by lowering the Bank's thresholds to small and medium-size U.S. companies.

Adopt a GATT-legal alternative to the DISC. (See Tax Policy, No. 5.)

Improve benefits from the Overseas Private Investment Corporation, the federal Credit Insurance Agency and the Agency for International Development.

(6) Trade policy should protect investments in software development.

Computer software development represents a major industrial expenditure. The U.S. should help protect this investment by participating fully in the upcoming examination of the existing international copyright protection by the United Nations Educational, Social and Cultural Organization and the World Intellectual Property Organization. If the study reveals that software is not adequately protected, then the U.S. should support a new international treaty on software protection.

POLICY ON EDUCATION AND THE ACCEPTANCE OF TECHNOLOGY IN THE WORKPLACE

As technology enters the workplace, government is under competing pressures. On the one hand, businesses and government seek to increase productivity by the use of technology. On the other hand, organized labor often wants to slow the pace of change to avoid workforce dislocations and unemployment of their members.

We share the goal of reducing permanent unemployment and workforce displacement. But slowing the pace of the introduction of technology also slows the long-term benefits of job creation. It is not the solution to temporary workforce displacement.

The workforce will need to make adjustments as new industries replace old ones and as new jobs demand new skills. But there is no evidence that there will be fewer jobs or less desirable "under-skilled" jobs in the future. On the contrary, we expect three results from the application of information technology in the workplace:

Increased productivity.

Higher incomes, leading to increased purchasing power.

New Products, leading to new demands.

These results will lead to overall economic growth that creates new jobs and enriches work.

Government, industry, labor and individuals must plan for the training and retraining of affected workers. But we must also allow full rein to the dynamic sectors of our economy, which, through their use of new technologies, create new jobs, raise incomes and develop opportunities to bring displaced workers into the economic mainstream. Restricting these sectors will create an artificial class of unemployed citizens dependent on government income programs.

(1) Technology policy should help ease the transition to new work and emphasize training workers for emerging jobs.

Training workers in new technologies is a joint responsibility of industry and government. Government training programs must assist transitions without intruding unnecessarily into businesses. The Job Partnership Training Act and job search assistance are examples of the types of programs needed.

Government programs should also avoid granting substitute pay for long periods to displaced workers. Such programs are a disincentive to retraining and tend to prolong periods of unemployment.

(2) Technology policy should emphasize improvements in scientific and technical education.

Government should seek:

Correction of the functional illiteracy problem.

Extensive improvements in math and science programs in grades K-12 and in post-secondary schools.

Incentives for corporate contributions to schools.

(3) Technology policy should provide information and scientific facts about workplace technologies while avoiding unnecessary interference in employer/employee relations.

Increased government research can help calm misplaced fears about workplace safety and health, particularly as those fears center on visual display units. However, much of the controversy on the introduction of new technology into the workplace centers not on health and safety but on issues traditionally reserved to employer-employee negotiations, in which government should not play a role. These issues include work rules, length of the workweek, plant location and overtime pay.

TELECOMMUNICATIONS POLICY

Telecommunications underlies and supports the entire U.S. economy, making possible rapid communication between business, its suppliers and its customers. In addition, U.S. telecommunications equipment and services provide excellent export opportunities.

(1) Telecommunications policy should endorse competition and deregulation within the domestic telecommunications industry.

Government should:

Avoid imposing regulation on currently unregulated areas.

Monitor new technologies and let them develop without regulation unless abuses are demonstrated.

Provide clear and adequate safeguards to ensure that revenue from regulated telecommunications services does not underwrite competitive, non-regulated telecommunications offerings.

(2) Telecommunications policy should support the concept of universal service while at the same time supporting cost-based pricing of telecommunications services.

The concept of universal service, in which all members of society have access to basic telecommunications equipment and services is reasonable. However, the cost for this service should be borne by all of us who use the public switched network, not by those who use other telecommunications services.

(3) Telecommunications policy should encourage industry to offer the widest possible variety of enhanced services.

As new telecommunications technologies emerge—technologies like the integrated services digital network (ISDN), cellular communications, cable systems, digital termination services and satellites—standards established for one should not be applied to retard innovation for the use of others. And government should respect principles of cost-based pricing as new technologies are offered to the public.

(4) Telecommunications policy should promote international policies that foster growth and provide maximum flexibility in offerings.

The U.S. should encourage international telecommunications competition while taking into consideration the interests of other sovereign nations and the recommendations of such international telecommunications bodies as the International Telecommunications Union. The U.S. should:

Develop a strategy to foster international telecommunications deregulation.

Seek international agreements that discourage the extension of existing monopolies to enhanced services.

CONCLUSION

The five-part program outlined in these pages will serve as the cornerstone to CBEMA's work with legislative and regulatory bodies throughout the coming year. Our association stands ready to enter the national debate on industrial policy and the economic future of the United States. Our goal is a business climate that fosters economic growth, job expansion and the overall security of our nation.

FARM EXPORTS

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, the decline in agricultural exports in recent years is of great concern to many Americans and has an impact on the entire U.S. economy. I have always been a strong advocate of increased farm exports and supported efforts to promote agricultural exports.

Even though many of our agricultural promotion efforts have been successful, agricultural exports have declined in recent years. The decline has been attributed largely to the strong U.S. dollar and the worldwide recession. Recently, an excellent article on the effect of a strong dollar on U.S. agricultural exports was published in the Chamberlain, S. Dak., newspaper. For the benefit of my colleagues, I ask unanimous consent that the article be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

STRENGTH OF DOLLAR LOWERS AG EXPORTS

The average price farmers receive for their grains has declined over the last two years, yet other nations are importing less of these grains from the United States.

Farm exports are down because the strength of the U.S. dollar is up in relation to other nations' currencies, so the actual cost of the grain to most foreign countries has gone up, according to Art Sogn, Extension grain marketing specialist for South Dakota State University, Brookings.

One of the main reasons grain exports are important to U.S. farmers is that normally production is far in excess of domestic use, according to Sogn. "Our total ag policy has been one of high production, high exports and low consumer prices," Sogn said.

In 1980, for example, exported wheat represented 67 percent of production, corn 38, and sunflowers 76. But by 1982, export percentage had decreased to 43 percent for wheat, 23 percent for corn and 67 percent for sunflowers.

The average price farmers received for their crops dropped from 1980 to 1982, according to Sogn. Soybeans dropped 20 percent, wheat 10 percent and corn 17 percent.

"Why then have exports decreased in grains when prices have decreased from 10 to 20 percent?" Sogn asks. "Exports have decreased in part, because while U.S. prices have gone down, the actual costs of the grain to most foreign countries have gone up because of the strength of the U.S. dollar in relation to other currencies."

In August, 1983, the dollar made a nine-year high relative to the Deutschemark, Sogn said. From 1980 to Aug. 10, 1983, the Deutschemarks required to equal a dollar went up from 1.82 to 2.71, or 33 percent. The French Franc required to equal a dollar went up from 4.23 to 8.15, or 48 percent.

The same was true to a lesser extent of the Dutch Gilder, the Japanese Yen and the Canadian dollar.

In 1980, a bushel of soybeans at $7.57 cost $13.78 in Deutschemark units. In 1982, that comparable figure had risen to 18.97 units of the Deutschemark for soybeans priced at only $7.

Looking at corn, similar things happened. A bushel of corn in 1980 at $3.11 a bushel cost 6.19 in Dutch Gilder units. In 1982, that same bushel of corn at $3 costs 9.09 in Dutch Gilders.

"But some may say farm exports only help farmers and may rise the price of food," Sogn said. "However, there is plenty of evidence that ag exports help the entire nation.

"Ag exports create over one million jobs in the United States, including 500,000 in production and 630,000 in the non-farm sector.

"Ag exports have been estimated to have a multiplier effect of $2.05. Another way of saying that is that for every $1 of export business, there is a total business of $2.05 created," Sogn said.

"Ag exports contribute substantially to the balance of trade, making it possible for us to continue to buy foreign fuels and other products," Sogn said.

Ag exports showed a $24 billion surplus in the balance of trade in 1982, according to Sogn, but non-agricultural trade showed a $57 billion deficit, for a net deficit of $33 billion.

"Ag exports are very important to all U.S. citizens. They cannot be forced upon anyone. They must be cultured and earned with integrity in all our agreements," Sogn said.

SENATOR HENRY M. JACKSON

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, my first meeting with Scoop Jackson after I took office as a Senator on November 8, 1978, was in his office. It was almost 2 weeks after I came to the Senate in my first try for elected office. I wanted to be a member of the Energy and Natural Resources Committee and he was its internationally reputed Chair. We settled down in the easy chairs in his office and that was impressive. We talked energy policy, but because of its relevance it was not long before we were into Middle East foreign policy. Knowing my situation, he deftly moved the conversation into the special values of the predominantly northern European roots of the constituencies we both represented. He made me feel the importance of the obligation I was undertaking as no person yet had done.

I did not—and as yet have not—made it to the Energy and Natural Resources Committee. But I met and made a friend not just a new colleague and it is that loss of a friendship which distinguishes Scoop's sudden departure.

Now as I sit here on the 29th day of September listening to the final arguments in the debate over the first congressional exercise of its War Powers Act jurisdiction in 10 years, I find I have run out of time to say goodbye. It is made all the harder because I wish he were here now when we all need him most.

Somehow or other it struck me in both the Governmental Affairs Committee and the Intelligence Committee in which I sat so often with Scoop Jackson that he had both a sense of history and a sense of perspective that was not colored by his strongly held views, his Presidential aspirations, or his prejudices. But because he had views and he had aspirations and support for those aspirations and because he had strong feelings he continually caused us to go back to the roots of problems to examine the nature of those roots, not just the nature of the problem. I wish he were here to help us understand ourselves and our role right now.

Yes, Scoop Jackson was a special kind of a friend. When my wife Penny needed a friend to push me to the Senate gym, Scoop became a cross between a medical doctor, family counselor, big brother. And the friendship extended throughout our family. Our oldest son, Charlie, and his daughter, Anna Marie, became very good friends over the last year. Charlie spent a weekend with the Jacksons in Everett, as Anna Marie's escort to her debutante ball. It was left to Anna Marie at the funeral service to remind us of how her Dad's feet were bigger than hers, and often all over hers as they swept around the dance floor. Charlie's memories were only of the applause and appreciation of the audience for Washington's senior Senator and his daughter.

I thought I would never forgive Scoop for his leadership this year in limiting outside earned income of his colleagues, especially when there was no similar effort with regard to unearned income. We felt the impact at home. And I doubt if Anna Marie has ever forgiven Charlie for bringing it up in their relationship.

We learned many things from our association with Scoop and Helen and Anna Marie and Peter. I learned not as one learns from a teacher by instruction, but from a parent by observation. My favorite reminder of parenting is a "saying" that a former Minneapolis police officer had mounted in his bedroom: "The measure of how well you do as a father is how your children refer to you when speaking to a friend." This series of references to Scoop by all his colleagues, in which I am honored to participate, should please him and his family to no end.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 10:08 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. WHITTEN, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. NATCHER, Mr. SMITH of Iowa, Mr. ADDABBO, Mr. YATES, Mr. ROYBAL, Mr. CONTE, Mr. MCDADE, Mr. EDWARDS of Alabama, and Mr. MYERS as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following joint resolution, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 159. Joint resolution providing statutory authorization under the War Powers Resolution for continued United States participation in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon in order to obtain withdrawal of all foreign forces from Lebanon.

At 6:03 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes; it recedes from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 7, 9, and 14, and has agreed thereto, each with an amendment, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the following joint resolution:

H.J. Res. 366. Joint resolution to provide for the temporary extension of certain insurance programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes.

The message further announced that the House has agreed to the following resolution:

H. Res. 325. A resolution relating to the election of the Honorable Jim Wright as Speaker pro tempore.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bill, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 4042. An act to continue in effect the current certification requirements with respect to El Salvador until the Congress enacts new legislation providing conditions for United States military assistance to El Salvador or until the end of fiscal year 1984, whichever occurs first.

ENROLLED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

The message further announced that the Speaker pro tempore has signed the following enrolled bills and joint resolutions:

S. 602. An act to provide for the broadcasting of accurate information to the people of Cuba, and for other purposes;

H.R. 3415. An act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes;

H.J. Res. 284. Joint resolution commemorating the twenty-fifth anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration; and

H.J. Res. 366. Joint resolution to provide for the temporary extension of certain housing and community development, and for other purposes.

The enrolled bills and joint resolutions were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

HOUSE MEASURE REFERRED

The following bill was read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

H.R. 4042. An act to continue in effect the current certification requirements with respect to El Salvador until the Congress enacts new legislation providing conditions for United States military assistance to El Salvador or until the end of fiscal year 1984, whichever occurs first; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

ENROLLED BILL PRESENTED

The Secretary reported that on today, September 30, 1983, he had presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bill:

S. 602. An act to provide for the broadcasting of accurate information to the people of Cuba, and for other purposes.

EXECUTIVE AND OTHER COMMUNICATIONS

The following communications were laid before the Senate, together with accompanying papers, reports, and documents, which were referred as indicated:

EC-1813. A communication from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission transmitting pursuant to law, a report on the Commission's determination to extend time for evidentiary process in Aluminum Assoc., Inc., et al. v. Alton & Southern Railway Co., et al. and Reynolds Metal Co. v. Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Co., et al.; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

EC-1814. A communication from the Acting Assistant Secretary of the Interior transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to eliminate as unconstitutional, under INS v. Chadha, the requirement for congressional review of contracts in excess of $200,000; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1815. A communication from the Director of the Office of Minority Economic Impact of the Department of Energy transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to clarify definition of term "minority" for determining eligibility for Department's minority economic programs; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC-1816. A communication from the Deputy Administrator of the General Services Administration transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to require submission to Congress of an explanatory statement for each negotiated disposal of real property in excess of $500,000; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1817. A communication from the District of Columbia Auditor transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on landlord-tenant relations in the District of Columbia; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC-1818. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the feasibility and advisability of special refugee reception centers; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

EC-1819. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on the status and accomplishments of the Runaway and Homeless Youth Program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1820. A communication from the Secretary of Health and Human Services transmitting, pursuant to law, the annual report on the status of handicapped children in Head Start programs; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

EC-1821. A communication from the Secretary of Education transmitting, pursuant to law, final regulations for the Student Assistance General Provisions and the Pell Grant Program; to the Committee on Labor and Human Resources.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. PACKWOOD, from the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, without amendment and with a preamble:

S. Con. Res. 67: A concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that it is not appropriate at this time to transfer ownership or management of any civil meteorological satellite system and associated ground system equipment to the private sector (Rept. No. 98-260).

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment:

H.R. 2173: A bill to amend the Contract Services for Drug Dependent Federal Offenders Act of 1978 to authorize additional appropriations to carry out such Act.

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary, without amendment and with a preamble:

S.J. Res. 54: Joint resolution to authorize and request the President to designate the month of January 1984 as "National Eye Health Care Month".

S.J. Res. 114: Joint resolution to request the President to proclaim September 1983, as "National Professional Security Month".

S.J. Res. 122: Joint resolution to designate the week of November 27, 1983, through December 3, 1983, as "National Home Care Week."

S.J. Res. 145: Joint resolution to designate the week of October 2, 1983 through October 8, 1983, as "National Port Week."

S.J. Res. 147: Joint resolution to designate the week of September 25, 1983, through October 1, 1983, as "National Rehabilitation Facilities Week."

S.J. Res. 155: Joint resolution to designate the week beginning November 6, 1983, as "National Disabled Veteran's Week."

S.J. Res. 168: Joint resolution to provide for the designation of a month as "National Sickle-Cell Anemia Awareness Month."

EXECUTIVE REPORTS OF COMMITTEES

The following executive reports of committees were submitted:

By Mr. THURMOND, from the Committee on the Judiciary:

Francis M. Mullen, Jr., of Virginia, to be Administrator of Drug Enforcement;

C. Roger Vinson, of Florida, to be United States District Judge for the Northern District of Florida;

Maryanne Trump Barry, of New Jersey, to be United States District Judge for the District of New Jersey; and Martin L. C. Feldman, of Louisiana, to be United States District Judge for the Eastern District of Louisiana.

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second time by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated.

By Mr. HUMPHREY:

S. 1907. A bill to defer congressional pay adjustments until the first March 1 following the beginning of the Congress next following the Congress during which certain actions with respect to pay rates are taken, to provide that appropriations of funds for congressional pay be considered separately from appropriations for other purposes, to require a recorded vote in each House on such appropriations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Govermental Affairs.

By Mr. HECHT (for himself and Mr. LAXALT):

S. 1908. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain real property to the Pershing County Water Conservation District; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 1909. A bill for the relief of George Hook Wo Young; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 1910. A bill to adapt principles of the Administrative Procedures Act to assure public participation in the development of certain positions to be taken by the United States in international organizations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 1911. A bill to insure the independence of certain administrative law judges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 1912. A bill to eliminate the requirement that eight members of the District of Columbia Commission on Mental Health be physicians; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. HUDDLESTON (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1913. A bill to provide for improvements in the school lunch and certain other child nutrition programs; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

By Mr. TSONGAS:

S.J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 9, 1983 through October 16, 1983, as "National Coast Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. MURKOWSKI:

S.J. Res. 175. Joint resolution to prohibit the Department of the Navy or any federal agency from using funds to dispose of the Naval Arctic Research Laboratory near Barrow, Alaska, except under certain circumstances; read twice and placed on the calendar.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. NUNN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS and Mrs. HAWKINS):

S.J. Res. 176. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 16, 1983 through October 22, 1983, as "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. HECHT (for himself and Mr. LAXALT):

S. 1908. A bill to authorize and direct the Secretary of the Interior to convey certain real property to the Pershing County Water Conservation District; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

PERSHING COUNTY WATER CONSERVATION DISTRICT

Mr. HECHT. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation for myself and Senator LAXALT to transfer certain Bureau of Reclamation lands in Nevada to the Pershing County Water Conservation District. This bill is nearly identical to H.R. 2551, introduced in the House of Representatives on April 3 by my colleague BARBARA VUCANOVICH.

The Battle Mountain community pasture is a 30,000 acre tract of land in Lander County, Nev. In the early 1930's, this property and its accompanying water rights were acquired by the Bureau of Reclamation to better utilize the storage capacity of Rye Patch Dam, a main feature of the Humboldt reclamation project some 125 miles downstream on the Humboldt River.

Because the land and its water rights were sold together to the Government, the full cost of the land became a reimbursable cost under the water district's repayment contract with the Bureau of Reclamation. Today, having fulfilled its repayment obligations, the Pershing County Water Conservation District is seeking to regain title to these lands which, in essence, it has already paid for.

The lands are primarily used as summer pasturage for many of the district farmers' cattle, and the district presently employs a full-time pasture manager on the site. It is a well-run operation, and as the Bureau of Reclamation attests, the use of these lands for community pasturage adds an important element to the economic viability of the Humboldt project.

The necessity for special legislation to bring about this transfer arises from the fact that under reclamation law, a water user's right in a project is limited to the beneficial use of water, even after contract payout. Reclamation project works such as dams, canals, and other appurtenant structures necessary for project operation remain under title to the U.S. Government. In the case of these pasture lands, however, the Bureau of Reclamation has long recognized that Government ownership is not necessary for project operation.

This bill has the full support of the Bureau of Reclamation, and I ask unanimous consent that a letter dated June 13, 1983, from Commissioner Bob Broadbent be included at this point in the RECORD, followed by a copy of the bill itself.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

U.S. DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR, BUREAU OF RECLAMATION,
Washington, D.C., June 13, 1983.

Hon. CHIC HECHT,
U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR HECHT: Thank you for your letter of May 12, 1983, soliciting our views on a bill to transfer all rights and title to approximately 30,000 acres known as Battle Mountain Pasture to the Pershing County Water Conservation District (PCWCD).

Our general policy is to transfer surplus Federal property at fair market value. However, we recognize that, as with any broad general policy, there exists extenuating circumstances that make variations and exceptions to the policy not only acceptable, but desirable. In this particular case we recognize that while the pasture land is technically surplus to Federal needs, it is an integral and vital economic necessity to the constituents of the Humboldt Project belonging to PCWCD. We also recognize that the fair market value of the land and accompanying water rights, since separated, were included in the amount of project costs to be repaid by PCWCD. These costs have since been fully repaid and, of subsequent loans made against the project equity, all but approximately $300,000 has been repaid.

While the above circumstances exist, under Reclamation Law (43 U.S.C. 485h–4) a water user's right in a project is limited to the beneficial use of water acquired under Reclamation Law. Article No. 15(a) of the contract between the United States and PCWCD for Rehabilitation and Betterment of Works of Humboldt Project, executed August 22, 1975, clearly states ". . . title to the Project shall be and remain in the name of the United States until otherwise provided by the Congress, notwithstanding the fact of full payment of the Contractor's obligations to the United States." The district has paid for a right to the beneficial use of water but has not secured a right to the lands. The lands included in S. 2203 are necessary to the PCWCD members as a supplemental outside grazing area. Without this supplemental grazing, the economic viability of some of the farms could be jeopardized and the repayment capacity of PCWCD reduced.

The Battle Mountain community pasture is a well-run operation; the district employs a full-time pasture manager on the site. The community pasture has become a vital economic facet of the livestock operations of ranches in Lovelock Valley. It has been a boon to smaller units by providing them with summer grazing and allowing them to have a livestock operation which would otherwise be impossible. About 25 percent of the district's farmers have no outside grazing and would not be livestock producers were it not for the district's management of the community pasture. The district's repayment ability, as well as its economy, is enchanced by the community pasture operation. The extent of this pasturage makes it possible for a larger number of cattle on the project, replaces pasturing of alfalfa on the irrigated project lands, and makes a local market for the additional alfalfa. If these lands were no longer available for use as community pasture, the livestock operations of ranches presently using the lands would be disrupted and the smaller operators would probably be forced out of business.

Even though these lands are unneeded for Bureau of Reclamation's operations, our authority does not permit us to transfer title to PCWCD. An equitable and acceptable solution is special legislation to insure that PCWCD is able to retain this necessary pasturage. The passage of special legislation, such as S. 2203, would accomplish this. However, we felt that bill needed a minor amendment. We propose to amend the bill by striking all between "convey" and "to" in lines 3 and 4, page 1, and inserting in place thereof: "Upon payment of administrative costs incurred in making the transfer, . . ." This would bring the bill into compliance with the Administration's policy of having beneficiaries of a Federal action pay for the cost of that action. There will be minimal administrative costs incurred by the Bureau of Reclamation in conducting surveys and preparing descriptions and transfer documents.

We appreciate your interest in the welfare of the members of PCWCD. Because of the longstanding extenuating circumstances in this case, we support the introduction and passage of a bill similar to S. 2203.

While the views expressed above are our views, in response to your question regarding the background on S. 2203, an identical bill H.R. 5652 was introduced into the last session of the House. On September 17, 1982, the Department of the Interior comments were offered on this bill opposing its passage. A copy of those comments is enclosed for your reference. The Department has also made a recent (May 27, 1983) response to a request similar to yours from Congresswoman Vucanovich. A copy of that response is also enclosed.

If we can be of any further service, please contact us.

Sincerely yours,

JED D. CHRISTENSEN,
(For Robert N. Broadbent, Commissioner).

S. 1908

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the Secretary of the Interior shall upon payment of administrative costs incurred in making the transfer, the Pershing County Water Conservation District, all right, title, and interest of the United States in and to the land described in section 2 of this Act.

SEC. 2. The land referred to in the first section of this Act is described as follows:

Portions of those parcels of land described in the warranty deed between Charles S. Aldous, et ux. and the United States dated January 17, 1935, and in the warranty deed between Filippini Ranching Company and the United States dated January 26, 1935, said lands being in the County of Lander, State of Nevada, and described as follows:

All of section one (1) in township 32 north, range 44 east, M.D.B. & M.

All of sections 3, 4, 5, 6, 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 22, 23, and 24; all of section 7 excepting therefrom portions of lots 3 and 4 and the southwest quarter more fully described by metes and bounds as follows:

Beginning at the intersection of the centerline of the westbound lane of Interstate Route 80, project I-080-3(12)229, and the west boundary of section 7, township 32 north, range 45 east, M.D.B. & M., at highway engineer's station "Bw" 241 + 36.69 P.O.C., said point of beginning further described as bearing south 0 degrees 02 minutes 18 seconds west, a distance of 1,571.26 feet from the west quarter corner of said section 7; thence north 0 degrees 02 minutes 18 seconds east along west boundary of said section 7, a distance of 379.00 feet to a point; thence south 34 degrees 02 minutes 55 seconds east a distance of 754.84 feet to a point; thence from a tangent which bears the last described course, curving to the left with a radius of 1,500 feet, through an angle of 34 degrees 06 minutes 42 seconds, an arc distance of 893.04 feet to a point; thence south 68 degrees 09 minutes 37 seconds east a distance of 731.06 feet to an intersection with the south boundary of said section 7; thence south 89 degrees 58 minutes 33 seconds west along said south boundary a distance of 1,787.00 feet to the southwest corner of said section 7; thence north 0 degrees 02 minutes 18 seconds east along the west boundary of said section 7; a distance of 1,071.65 feet to the point of beginning; said parcel contains an area of 20.91 acres, more or less, excepting therefrom all oil, gas or any and all minerals in or under the above described land and reserving the same to the United States providing that exploration, recovery, and removal of said oil, gas, and minerals shall be done in a manner as not to interfere with facilities constructed under this conveyance. Also excepting therefrom, the southeast quarter of said section 7. Also excepting therefrom, a strip of land having a uniform width of 30 feet where measurable at right angles, lying within 15 feet on each side of the following described centerline:

Beginning at a point in the south boundary of the northeast quarter of said section 7 distant therealong west 660.0 feet from the east quarter corner of said section; thence north 513.0 feet to a point on the south bank of the Reese River, that is distant south 17 degrees 16 minutes west 2,223.2 feet from the northeast corner of said section 7, the sideline boundaries of said strip of land are to be lengthened or shortened as the case may be, so as to begin in the south boundary of the northeast quarter of said section 7 and terminate on the south bank of the Reese River, said parcel contains an area of 0.35 acre, more or less.

The west half of section, 8; the northeast quarter of section 9; all that portion of section 15 lying south of the old channel of the Humboldt River, and containing 340 acres, more or less. The southeast quarter of section 17 (except that portion thereof conveyed to C. W. Burge by deed recorded in Book 52 of Deeds, page 476), described as follows: That certain field known as the Mattos field, situated near the big bridge on county road, on Humboldt River bottom, and more fully described as follows, to-wit:

Beginning at a point corner numbered 1, on section line between southeast corner and the northeast corner of section 17, township 32 north, range 45 east, M.D.B. & M. Thence to southeast corner, section 17 bears south 1,015 feet. Thence north (on section line) 1,625 feet to east quarter corner, section 17. Thence, same course, 1,525 feet to northeast corner numbered 2. Thence south 43 degrees 56 degrees 56 minutes west 2,019 feet to west angle corner (along wagon road). Thence south 39 degrees 33 minutes east 2,200 feet to corner numbered 1 place of beginning, containing 50.65 acres.

The northeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 18, excepting therefrom a strip of land having a uniform width of 30 feet where measurable at right angles, lying within 15 feet on each side of the following described centerline:

Beginning at a point in the east boundary of said section 18 distant therealong south 1,127.9 feet from the northeast corner of said section; thence entering said section 18 north 30 degrees 20 minutes west 1,306.8 feet to a point in the north boundary of said section distant therealong west 660.0 feet from said northeast corner, the sideline boundaries of said strip of land are to be lengthened or shortened, as the case may be, so as to begin in the east boundary and terminate in the north boundary of said section 18, said parcel contains an area of 0.90 acre, more or less.

The north half of the north half, and the south half of the northeast quarter of section 26, all contained in township 32 north, range 45 east, M.D.B. & M.

All of sections 7, 8, 9, 10, 11, 15, 16, 17, 18, and 20; the south half of section 1; the south half of section 2; the south 21/40 of south half of section 3 containing 168 acres; the south 21/80 of section 4 containing 168 acres; also in said section 4 all that portion of that certain 39.5 acres tract of land deeded on December 13, 1894, by J. H. Crum and others to James Faris (deed recorded at page 151 in Book 49 of Deeds, records of said Lander County) which is not included in that certain parcel or tract of land deeded May 22, 1903, by James Faris and Annie Faris to Southern Pacific Company (deed recorded at page 770 in Book 49 of Deeds, records of said Lander County); the south 33/80 of section 5 containing 264 acres; the south half of the south half, and the north half of the southeast quarter, and the north half of the southwest quarter (undivided one-half interest) of section 6; the north half of section 12; the northwest quarter of section 14; the north half of section 19; the north half of section 21; and the north half of the northwest quarter, the northwest quarter of the southwest quarter, and the southwest quarter of the northwest quarter of section 22; all contained in township 32 north, range 46 east. M.D.B. & M.

The north half of the south half of section 6 contained in township 32 north, range 47 east, M.D.B. & M.

The southeast quarter of the northeast quarter of section 12 contained in township 33 north, range 44 east, M.D.B. & M.

All of sections 5, 6, 7, 8, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 28, 29, 30, 31, 32, and 33; the southwest quarter of section 9; the southwest quarter of section 27; the south half and the north half of the northeast quarter of section 34; and the southwest quarter of section 35; all contained in township 33 north, range 45 east, M.D.B. & M.

The southwest quarter of the southeast quarter and southwest quarter of the southwest quarter of section 36 contained in township 34 north, range 44 east, M.D.B. & M.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary shall not carry out the conveyance specified in the first section of this Act until the Pershing County Water Conservation District (hereafter in this Act referred to as "the District") enters into a recordable agreement, in consideration of such conveyance, that is satisfactory to the Secretary as to form and legal sufficiency: Provided, That—

(1) the District will remain subject to its existing contracts and repayment obligations to the United States pursuant to the terms of Contract Nos. I1r-774, 14-06-400-429 and 14-06-200-8194A with the Department of the Interior, Bureau of Reclamation, and all other existing contracts and obligations to the United States; and

(2) the District will continue to protect water rights for the Humboldt project, a portion of which was purchased with the lands described in section 2 of this Act.

(b) No provision of this Act shall be construed to repeal or amend any existing lawful contracts for land use entered into by the United States prior to the date of enactment of this Act.

By Mr. PRESSLER:

S. 1910. A bill to adapt principles of the Administrative Procedures Act to assure public participation in the development of certain positions to be taken by the United States in international organizations, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

INTERNATIONAL ORGANIZATIONS PUBLIC PROCEDURES ACT OF 1983

Mr. PRESSLER. Mr. President, today I am introducing the International Organizations Public Procedures Act of 1983. Before explaining the purposes and provisions of this bill, I would like to briefly describe its background and the reasons that led me to introduce it.

With growing and alarming frequency, international organizations of which the United States is a member have turned their attention from their primary goals to the dubious business of regulating economic activity. This activity includes the regulation of business practices, transnational corporations and transborder data, as well as the development of consumer protection guidelines.

These proposals have as their common denominator the questionable extension of the authority of these international organizations over aspects of the domestic and international economy of the United States. Under our Constitution, the regulation of commerce is vested in Congress and not in the executive branch employees who attend these meetings and participate in the development of these international regulatory proposals. With the proliferation of these activities, the time has arrived for Congress to assert its constitutional responsibilities in this arena and provide meaningful oversight of, and direction to, the executive branch.

Many of the proposals have been poorly conceived and may very well have an unnecessary adverse impact upon the free flow of goods and information in the international marketplace. To express the sense of the Senate that such restrictive proposals should be opposed by U.S. representatives to the organizations considering them, I introduced Senate Resolution 115 on April 15, 1983. Subsequently, that resolution was adopted by the Foreign Relations Committee as an amendment to the fiscal year 1984 State Department authorization bill, S. 1342.

On May 19, 1983, I chaired a hearing before the Subcommittee on Arms Control, Oceans, International Operations and Environment, of the Committee on Foreign Relations. During that hearing, in a discussion with U.N. Ambassador Jeane J. Kirkpatrick, it became clear to me that there are no adequate procedures for assuring that parties that would be affected by these regulatory proposals have an opportunity to comment on them.

For example, a set of consumer guidelines was recently considered by the U.N. Economic and Social Council. The American business community would most certainly be affected by these guidelines. Yet, for the most part, they have been unaware of their existence. The only public notice issued by the Federal Government was a three-sentence insert in the Federal Register of December 3, 1982, by the Department of Health and Human Services. That is hardly adequate notification, yet it is fairly typical of the haphazard manner in which these proposals are exposed for public debate.

In the United States, under the Administrative Procedures Act, persons who may be adversely affected by a proposed regulation are given notice of the proposal and an opportunity to comment upon it. The congressional hearing process provides similar opportunities. In contrast, the international regulatory process provides none of these essential safeguards against arbitrary and ill-conceived action. We are all familiar with the Federal Register, and I believe proposed international rules and regulations should be included in its coverage.

For example, while the consumer protection guidelines have been under consideration for nearly 4 years, another U.N. proposal, a ban on harmful substances, was introduced and approved within a few months. Since interested parties cannot rely on procedural safeguards at the United Nations itself, we must strive to create such safeguards within our own governmental system.

Against this background, Mr. President, my bill has the following four major purposes:

First. It would require public notices of proposals under consideration in international organizations that could directly or indirectly affect the commerce of the United States.

Second. It would require that interested persons are provided with timely notice and opportunity to comment on such proposals in advance of the time the proposals are to be acted upon.

Third. It would require that the U.S. Government take into account the views of interested persons before adopting final positions on the proposals.

Fourth. It would require that U.S. citizens be informed of the positions taken by their Government on matters affecting their interest.

The detailed procedures that would be set up by the bill are spelled out in its text and a section-by-section analysis, both of which, Mr. President, I request be printed in the RECORD at the end of my remarks.

In broad outline, however, the procedures that would be established by the International Organizations Public Procedures Act of 1983 are comparatively simple and would work as follows. With respect to any proposal under consideration by an international organization that may affect the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States, the Secretary of State would provide for notice and an opportunity to comment by means of publication in the Federal Register. The notice would afford adequate time for the preparation and consideration of comments prior to the adoption of a final U.S. position on the proposal. The Secretary would then publish a detailed statement of the final position adopted by the United States.

Mr. President, through these fair procedures—which are roughly patterned after those required for agency rulemaking in the Administrative Procedures Act—I believe my bill addresses the growing problems discovered in this area by the Foreign Relations Committee. Further, the bill achieves this in a way which protects the legitimate interests of our citizens without interfering with the proper role of the executive branch in the formulation and execution of our foreign policy.

I ask unanimous consent that a section-by-section analysis of this bill and the text of the bill itself be included at this point in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

SECTION 1: Short Title. This section declares the short title to be the International Organizations Public Procedures Act of 1983.

SEC. 2: Findings and Purposes. Subsection (a) of this section sets out Congressional findings to the effect that (1) international organizations of which the United States is a member are increasingly involved in the consideration of proposals that can affect the commerce of the United States, (2) these proposals can exceed the authority of the international organization considering them, intrude on the Constitutional authority of the Congress to regulate the commerce of the United States, discriminate against United States businesses, workers and exports, and be inimical to the free enterprise system. Subsection (a) also finds that these proposals and the United States positions on them are not adequately publicized and considered pursuant to open and fair procedures allowing interested persons to comment on them. Subsection (b) states the purpose of the Act to be to publicize these proposals, establish procedures to assure that interested parties will have an opportunity to comment on the proposals, require that these comments be taken into account in the development of United States positions, and inform interested parties of the actions being taken by their government relative to proposals that affect their interest.

SEC. 3: Definitions. This section defines: "international organization" to mean a public international organization of which the United States is a member and includes subsidiary units, committees or other subgroups of such organizations and the employees or agents of such organizations acting within the scope of their employment or agency; "proposal" to mean any written resolution, report or other statement containing the recommendations, suggestions or views of the international organization with respect to the actions, policies and practices of governments or the conduct or practices of persons including corporations and other organizations; "position" to mean any written or oral official statement, setting forth the views or recommendations of the United States with respect to the action or disposition to be taken on a proposal under consideration in an international organization; and "Secretary" to mean the Secretary of State.

SEC. 4: Notice and Comment. This section requires the Secretary of State to provide timely notice and an opportunity for interested persons to comment on those proposals under consideration by international organizations. The proposals covered by the section are those which the Secretary has determined may affect the commerce of the United States or affect policies or programs of the United States, and, since the federal government and the states have policies and programs that affect commerce, the section also covers proposals that affect such policies and programs.

SEC. 5: Original Notice. This section establishes the requirements for publication in the Federal Register of an original notice concerning proposals covered by section 3 of the Act. Publication is to be sufficiently in advance of the adoption of a United States position on the proposal to enable interested parties to prepare their comments and have them considered by the Secretary. The section sets out the minimum information required to be included in the notice as follows: an invitation to comment, the text of the proposal or, if the text is not available, a description of the proposal in as much detail as possible, the name(s) of the person(s) to whom comments are to be sent and from whom additional information may be obtained, the location of the public file, description of the process by which the United States position will be developed including the United States agencies expected to participate in the process, a description of the process by which the international organization will consider the proposal including the names of the persons responsible for the proposal who are employed by the organization, the entities of the international organization expected to consider the proposal and the anticipated schedule for such consideration, and an explanation of the authority under which the international organization is considering the proposal. Finally, the notice is to contain an invitation to interested persons to submit their names in writing if they wish to be placed on the mailing list.

SEC. 6: Supplemental Notices. This section requires supplemental notices to be published in the Federal Register whenever there has been a significant change in the information published in a prior notice. The supplemental notice is to explain any changes by comparison to the pertinent information contained in the earlier notice.

SEC. 7: United States Position. This section requires publication in the Federal Register, as soon as practicable, of a detailed statement of the final position of the United States on any proposal covered by this Act.

SEC. 8: Public Files. This section requires establishment and maintenance in Washington, D.C. of a public file on each proposal covered by this Act with such files to be available for public inspection and copying. The section specifies the minimum contents of the public file to include the following: relevant portions of the charter and rules of the international organization authorizing the proposal, the text of the proposal and any supporting information provided by the international organization, the original notice and any supplemental notices, copies of correspondence with affected persons, any written comments received from the public or affected persons, copies of any documents referred to in the proposal or the notices, the mailing list, and any other information helpful to the public in accomplishing the purposes of this Act.

SEC. 9: Mailing List. This section requires maintenance of a mailing list on each proposal covered by the Act. The list is to be composed of interested parties who advise the Secretary of their desire to be included thereon.

Since publication in the Federal Register may be delayed, this section also requires copies of any supplemental notices to be mailed to persons on the list at the same time such notices are sent to the Federal Register.

SEC. 10: National Security Exception. This section provides that the Act does not apply to any proposal which the Secretary certifies affects the national security of the United States and that compliance with the Act would impair the national security.

SEC. 11: Annual Report. This section directs the Secretary to report annually to the Foreign Relations and Foreign Affairs Committees of the Senate and House, respectively, on the activities carried out under the Act.

S. 1910

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SHORT TITLE

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "International Organizations Public Procedures Act of 1983".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSES

SEC. 2. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) international organizations of which the United States is a member are increasingly involved in the consideration of proposals that may have a significant impact on the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States;

(2) such proposals can exceed the authority of the international organization considering them, intrude on the constitutional authority of the Congress to regulate the commerce of the United States, discriminate against United States businesses, workers and exports, and be inimical to the free enterprise system; and

(3) these proposals and the positions of the United States with respect to them are not adequately publicized or considered pursuant to open and fair procedures available to interested persons.

(b) The purposes of this Act are to—

(1) publicize proposals under consideration in international organizations that may affect United States commerce;

(2) provide interested persons with notice and an opportunity to comment on such proposals;

(3) assure that the positions of the United States on these proposals take account of these comments; and

(4) inform United States citizens of the positions taken by their Government on matters affecting their interest.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. As used in this Act—

(1) the term "international organization" means a public international organization of which the United States is a member and includes subsidiary units, committees, or other subgroups of such organizations and the employees or agents of such organizations acting within the scope of their employment or agency;

(2) the term "proposal" means any written resolution, report, guidelines, code of rules or other statement containing the recommendations, suggestions or views prepared under the auspices of an international orgnization regarding the actions, policies and practices of governments or the conduct or practices of persons, including corporations and other organizations;

(3) the term "Secretary" means the Secretary of State; and

(4) the term "United States position" means any written or oral official statement, setting forth the views or recommendations of the United States Government with respect to the action or disposition to be taken on a proposal under consideration in an international organization.

NOTICE AND COMMENT

SEC. 4. Except as otherwise provided by section 10, in order to carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary shall provide interested persons with timely notice and an opportunity to comment on such proposals under consideration in international organizations as he or she determines may affect the interstate or foreign commerce of the United States or the policies or programs of the United States Government or of any State which affect such commerce.

ORIGINAL NOTICE

SEC. 5. The Secretary shall cause to be published in the Federal Register an original notice concerning any proposal covered by section 4 of this Act, and such notice shall afford interested parties adequate time to prepare their comments and have them considered prior to the adoption of the United States position on such proposal. In addition to an invitation to comment, the original notice shall—

(1) contain the text of the proposal or, if the text is not available, a description of the subject matter and contents in as much detail as feasible;

(2) identify the person or persons to whom comments on the proposal should be directed and from whom additional information may be obtained;

(3) identify the location of the public file established pursuant to section 8 of this Act;

(4) describe the process by which the United States position on the proposal will be developed, including the identity of United States agencies that are expected to participate in formulating the United States position;

(5) describe the process by which the international organization will consider the proposal, including the persons responsible for the proposal who are employed by the international organization, the committees or other entities expected to consider the proposal, and the anticipated schedule for such consideration;

(6) explain the authority of the international organization to make the proposal; and

(7) invite interested persons to request to be placed on the mailing list described in section 9.

SUPPLEMENTAL NOTICES

SEC. 6. The Secretary shall cause to be published in the Federal Register timely supplemental notices concerning proposals covered by section 4 of this Act whenever there has been a significant change in the information contained in prior notices. Any such supplemental notice shall explain the changes by comparison to the pertinent information contained in prior notices.

PUBLICATION OF THE POSITION OF THE UNITED STATES

SEC. 7. The Secretary shall cause to be published in the Federal Register as soon as practicable, a detailed statement concerning the final United States position on any proposal covered by this Act.

PUBLIC FILES

SEC. 8. The Secretary shall establish and maintain in Washington, D.C., a public file on each proposal covered by this Act and the contents of such file shall be available for public inspection and copying. The public file shall contain—

(1) those portions of the charter and rules of the international organization that provide authority for the proposal;

(2) the proposal and any information supplied by the international organization relating to the proposal;

(3) the original and supplemental notices and copies of the correspondence with affected persons;

(4) any written comments on the proposal received from the public or affected persons;

(5) copies of documents that are referred to in the proposal;

(6) the mailing list described in section 9; and

(7) any other information that the Secretary believes would be helpful to the public and that carries out the purposes of this Act.

MAILING LIST

SEC. 9. The Secretary shall maintain a mailing list composed of persons who advise the Secretary in writing of their desire to receive supplemental notices under this Act. The Secretary shall mail a copy of any supplemental notice of those persons on such mailing list at the same time that such notice is sent to the Federal Register.

NATIONAL SECURITY EXCEPTION

SEC. 10. This Act shall not apply to any proposal for which the Secretary has submitted to the Speaker of the House of Representatives and the President of the Senate a written certification that—

(1)(A) Such proposal concerns a matter involving the national security of the United States; and

(B) the national security of the United States would be impaired by complying with this Act.

ANNUAL REPORT

SEC. 11. Beginning one year after the date of enactment of this Act and at intervals of one year thereafter, the Secretary shall prepare and transmit to the Committee on Foreign Relations of the Senate and the Committee on Foreign Affairs of the House of Representatives a report on the activities carried out under this Act.

By Mr. PRYOR:

S. 1911. A bill to insure the independence of certain administrative law judges; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADMINISTRATIVE LAW

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, today I am introducing legislation which would establish a Health and Human Services Review Commission with jurisdiction over the administrative law judge corps of the Health and Human Services Department, and which would serve in the capacity of the current Office of Hearings and Appeals.

Specifically, this legislation would accomplish the following:

First. Create the Health and Human Services Review Commission to hear and decide cases for the Department, but independent of the various component of DHHS responsible for administering their respective programs.

Second. Provide for five Commissioners—one serving as chairman—appointed by the President for 6-year terms with the advice and consent of the Senate, to constitute the Review Commission.

Third. Provide for the appointment and supervision of ALJ's, in accordance with the Administrative Procedures Act, and other employees as required.

Fourth. Provide for the transfer, on the effective date of this act, of all ALJ's and necessary employees from other components of DHHS to the Review Commission.

Fifth. Authorize the Review Commission to make such internal rules and procedural regulations as are necessary or desirable for the orderly transaction of its proceedings, subject to the APA, but providing for the application of existing procedural rules and regulations in the interim.

Sixth. Provide for remand authority by the Commission to other components of DHHS, as appropriate.

Seventh. Provide for review of ALJ decisions at the discretion of the Commission, but limited by substantial evidence rule.

Eighth. Provide for appeal, to the U.S. district court, by a party adversely affected by a decision of the Commission, within 60 days after such decision is issued, with the court applying the substantial evidence rule in its review of the Commission's decision.

Mr. President, there has been a problem within the SSA's Office of Hearings and Appeals that goes back many years, and centers around the independence of the ALJ's, and administrative setting of productivity goals and allowance rates. This problem was exacerbated by the disability program expansion which took place during the 1970's, because many more individuals were applying for disability benefits, being denied, and appealing SSA's decision to the ALJ level.

In 1980, Congress enacted the Social Security Disability Amendments of 1980, which required triannual reviews of the nonpermanently disabled beginning in January 1982. With the implementation of this section, in March 1981, mass terminations of beneficiaries took place and continues to take place, bringing the problem of termination appeals to crisis proportions, and placing further pressures on SSA's ALJ's with increasing workloads.

In addition, the Bellmon amendment, which was also a part of the 1980 disability amendments, directed the Secretary of HHS to review "decisions rendered by administrative law judges as a result of hearings * * * under the Social Security Act, and shall * * * report to the Congress * * *" The final legislation gave no authority to the Social Security Administration to evaluate ALJ's on their individual rates of claim approvals or denials of benefits, and certainly did not direct the Secretary to take corrective action against those judges with high reversal rates of the State DDS's initial decisions. Health and Human Services Department officials have, however, used this provision to justify and continue SSA's targeting of individual administrative judges whose benefit allowance rates are above the acceptable level. It is obvious that SSA's goal is not to achieve better quality decisions, but rather to remove as many individuals as possible from the disability rolls in its efforts to meet budget reduction levels. Otherwise, a sincere effort would be made to not only review allowance decisions, but denial decisions of the administrative law judges, and even DDS decisions by States. These attempts are not being made.

In addition to placing an ALJ on Bellmon review, the Social Security Administration has other, more subtle methods for applying pressure for low allowance rates. ALJ's are called to Washington for retraining, harassed by letters and phone calls from the Office of Hearings and Appeals regarding allowance rates, and subjected to other indignities. ALJ's who meet or surpass set productivity goals, or are successful in reducing their allowance rates are given praise for their accomplishments. All of these actions threaten the independence of the ALJ's decisions, and thwart the intent of the Administrative Procedures Act.

Above and beyond these practices, the Social Security Administration also refuses to acquiesce to district or circuit court rulings in disability cases beyond the individual decision. This places the ALJ's in a very precarious position—that of having to decide between pleasing the SSA or complying with the decisions of the courts having jurisdiction over these cases.

All of these actions on the part of the SSA make it difficult for these judges to do their work in a fair and judicious manner. But of even greater concern to me are the tens of thousands of individuals who are being denied a fair review of their claims for disability benefits which they have earned, merely because the SSA has decided that certain levels of allowances are acceptable, and others are not. I learned this from witness after witness testifying at a Senate hearing in Fort Smith, Ark., last year. A recent report of the Subcommittee on Oversight of Government Management of the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs entitled, "The Role of the Administrative Law Judge in the Title II Social Security Disability Insurance Program" documents many of the points that I have made today.

Mr. President, I believe that it is time that the Congress do something to correct these problems that have gone on for so long. It is essential that we do everything within our power to restore the integrity of the social security disability program. I firmly believe that the legislation that I am proposing, along with a comprehensive reform of the disability statutes, will attain this goal.

At a recent hearing of the Senate Judiciary Committee on legislation to establish a separate administrative law judge corps for all administration agencies, Judge Joseph Kennedy of the Federal Mine Safety and Health Review Commission and chairman of the ad hoc committee of administrative law judges discussed the serious problems within the Office of Hearings and Appeals at the SSA, and expressed strong support fo: legislation of the type I am introducing today. I urge my colleagues to join with me in seeking speedy enactment of this legislation.●

By Mr. INOUYE:

S. 1912. A bill to eliminate the requirement that eight members of the D.C. Commission on Mental Health be physicians; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

MEMBERSHIP OF THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COMMISSION ON MENTAL HEALTH

● Mr. INOUYE. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today that would amend the D.C. Commission on Mental Health provisions in order to insure that each of our traditional mental health disciplines will be eligible for membership on this most important Commission.

Under the current law, the Superior Court of the District of Columbia has the authority to appoint the members of the Commission and the Chairman of the Commission shall be a member of the bar of the court who has engaged in an active practice of law in the District of Columbia for a period of at least 5 years prior to his or her appointment. The eight additional members of the Commission at the current time must be physicians who have been practicing medicine in the District of Columbia and who have not had less than 5 years experience in the diagnosis and treatment of mental illness.

In my judgment, the time has come to broaden the membership of the Commission so that members of the psychiatric nursing profession, the clinical social work profession, and the psychological profession will also be deemed eligible for appointment.

Mr. President, I request unanimous consent that the text of my proposal be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1912

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That section 502(a) of title 21 of the District of Columbia Code is amended by striking out the last sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "Eight members of the Commission shall be mental-health professionals practicing in the District of Columbia who have had not less than five years' experience in the treatment of mental illnesses.".●

By Mr. HUDDLESTON (for himself, Mr. COCHRAN, Mr. BOREN, Mr. ANDREWS, Mr. EAGLETON, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mr. PRYOR):

S. 1913. A bill to provide for improvements in the school lunch and certain other child nutrition programs; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry.

IMPROVEMENTS IN CHILD NUTRITION PROGRAMS

● Mr. HUDDLESTON. Mr. President, today I am introducing a bill that would make needed improvements in the school lunch and other child nutrition programs.

In 1981, Federal aid for child nutrition programs was reduced by 30 percent, or $1.5 billion. The end result was that thousands of schools and millions of children, including 1 million children from low-income families, stopped participating in the school lunch program. Major reductions also occurred in the other programs—school breakfast, summer feeding, child care food, special milk, and nutrition education.

In June of this year, Congress adopted the first concurrent resolution on the budget for fiscal year 1984, House Concurrent Resolution 91. That resolution provides for an increase of $150 million above the current law level for child nutrition programs to insure that the nutritional needs of children from low- and middle-income families will be met.

Although this additional money only represents approximately 10 percent of the $1.5 billion reduction made in 1982, many important improvements in the child nutrition programs can be accomplished with the $150 million. My bill contains a group of coordinated proposals that, I believe, will make the best use of the added funding.

I understand that a bill similiar to the one I am introducing today will be introduced in the House of Representatives by the chairman of the Committee on Education and Labor, CARL PERKINS, and Representative BILL GOODLING, the ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Elementary, Secondary, and Vocational Education.

My bill, too, enjoys bipartisan support and I hope that the Senate and House will consider these measures expeditiously.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the text of the bill and a summary of its provisions be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1913

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the National School Lunch Act is amended by—

(1) in subsection (e) of section 6—

(A) inserting "(1)" after the subsection designation; and

(B) adding at the end thereof a new paragraph (2) as follows:

"(2) Each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available to the States for the transportation and storage of commodities donated under this section an amount equal to 3 percent of the value of such food. The States may not charge recipient agencies for the distribution of such commodities an amount that is in excess of the State's direct cost of transporting and storing such commodities for recipient agencies minus the amount provided by the Secretary to the States under this subsection.";

(2) in section 9(b)—

(A) in the second sentence of paragraph (1)(A), striking out "For the school years ending June 30, 1982, and June 30, 1983, the" and inserting in lieu thereof "The";

(B) striking out the third sentence of paragraph (1)(A);

(C) adding at the end of paragraph (2)(C) a new sentence as follows: "The requirement imposed on local school food authorities in the preceding sentence shall not take effect until the pilot study under section 803(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is completed and analyzed and a report of the Department of Agriculture's findings from the study is submitted to the Committee on Agriculture of the House of Representatives and the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of the Senate."; and

(D) striking out the last sentence of paragraph (3) and inserting in lieu thereof a new sentence as follows: "Income that is used for unusually high medical expenses that cannot be reasonably anticipated or controlled by the household shall be excluded when determining eligibility for free or reduced-price meals.";

(3) in section 11(a)(2)—

(A) striking out "40 cents" and inserting in lieu thereof "25 cents"; and

(B) adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "The price charged for a reduced-price lunch shall not exceed 25 cents.";

(4) in section 11(f), striking out "section 9(b)(3)" and inserting in lieu thereof "section 11(a)(2)";

(5) in section 12(d)(5), striking out ", except private schools whose average yearly tuition exceeds $1,500 per child"; and

(6) in section 17(f)(2)(B), striking out "two meals and one supplement" and inserting in lieu thereof "three meals and two supplements".

SEC. 2. The Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended by—

(1) in section 3(a)—

(A) adding after the first sentence a new sentence as follows: "Notwithstanding the preceding sentence, the special milk program be available to all children in kindergarten programs operating through nonprofit schools."; and

(B) striking out the last sentence;

(2) in section 4(b)(1)(B)—

(A) amending the second sentence to read as follows: "The national average payment for each reduced-price breakfast shall be 15 cents less than the national average payment for each free breakfast, adjusted to the nearest one-fourth cent,"; and

(B) adding at the end thereof a new sentence as follows: "Notwithstanding the preceding sentences, an additional 6 cents shall be provided for each breakfast served under this Act and section 17 of the National School Lunch Act, to be used to improve the nutrient content of breakfast.";

(3) in section 4(b)(1)(C), striking out "30 cents" and inserting in lieu thereof "15 cents";

(4) in section 4(b)(2)(B)—

(A) inserting after "such free breakfast shall be" "(i)";

(B) striking out "(i)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(I)";

(C) striking out "(ii)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(II)"; and

(D) inserting before the period at the end thereof a comma and a new clause as follows:

"(ii) plus additional 6 cents for each breakfast served under this Act and section 17 of the National School Lunch Act to be used to improve the nutrient content of breakfasts";

(5) in section 4(b)(2)(C), striking out "thirty cents" and inserting in lieu thereof "15 cents";

(6) in section 15(c)(A), striking out ", except private schools whose average yearly tuition exceeds $1,500 per child"; and

(7) in section 19(j)—

(A) striking out the subsection designation "(j)" and inserting in lieu thereof "(i)";

(B) striking out paragraph (1);

(C) redesignating paragraphs (2) and (3) as paragraphs (1) and (2), respectively; and

(D) amending paragraph (1), as redesignated, by—

(i) striking out "For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and for each fiscal year ending on or before September 30, 1984, there" and inserting in lieu thereof "There"; and

(ii) striking out "$15,000,000 for fiscal year 1981, and not more than $5,000,000 for each subsequent" and inserting in lieu thereof "$8,000,000 for each".

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall issue such regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions of this Act.

(b) All amendments made by this Act shall become effective upon enactment, except for the amendment made by section 1(2)(D), which shall be implemented no later than July 1, 1984.

SUMMARY

The National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 would be amended to provide for improvements in the school lunch, breakfast, and child care food programs.

Specifically, the bill would—

(1) provide funds to the States for the storage and distribution of USDA entitlement commodities in an amount equal to 3 percent of the value of the commodities donated;

(2) eliminate the tie between the eligibility guidelines of the school lunch program and the eligibility guidelines of the food stamp program;

(3) delay the requirement that local school food authorities verify information on applications for free and reduced-price meals until the second phase of the pilot study under section 803(c) of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 is completed and analyzed;

(4) in determining eligibility for free and reduced-price meals, provide a special medical hardship deduction for unusually high medical expenses that cannot be reasonably anticipated or controlled by the household;

(5) lower the cost to the student of a reduced-price lunch from 40 cents to 25 cents;

(6) allow private schools with an average yearly tuition in excess of $1,500 to participate in the child nutrition programs;

(7) expand the reimbursement made to institutions and day care organizations under the child care food program to include three meals and two supplements served per day per child;

(8) allow all children in kindergarten programs operating through nonprofit schools to participate in the special milk program;

(9) lower the cost to the student of a reduced-price breakfast from 30 cents to 15 cents;

(10) improve the nutrient content of breakfasts served by providing an additional reimbursement of 6 cents for each breakfast served; and

(11) provide a permanent authorization of $8 million for each fiscal year to carry out the purposes of the nutrition education and training program.●

By Mr. TSONGAS:

S.J. Res. 174. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 9, 1983 through October 16, 1983, as "National Coast Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL COAST WEEK

Mr. TSONGAS. Mr. President, in October of 1982, the first annual Coast Week was celebrated by local Leagues of Women Voters in the coastal communities of Massachusetts.

During Coast Week, the Massachusetts Office of Coastal Zone Management held a weekend conference for local public officials and citizens of coastal communities. The primary purpose was to acquaint the communities with their opportunities and the resources available for them to carry out wise management of the coastline so that the environmental and economic values of the coast will be sustained.

Mr. President, the national sponsors and participants of this year's Coast Week include the League of Women Voters, the National Association of Retired Persons, the Sierra Club, the Coastal Alliance, the Coastal Society, and the Coastal States Organization.

The week will be marked by a broad range of activities in coastal States around the Nation, including a major wetlands conference planned for the southeastern coast of the United States, a Smithsonian Museum tour of the Chesapeake bird migration, public policy forums on coastal and oceans policies, workshops, petition drives and many, many activities planned to celebrate the preciousness and beauty of our coastline.

I want to share with my colleagues the words of Barbara Fegan, the League of Women Voters' Coastal Specialist who writes in the September issue of The Massachusetts Voter, "There has been progress—we can celebrate. The coast is a renewing experience—we can celebrate. There is still work to be done—but we can celebrate!"

I commend the League and all of the organizations involved in the effort to call to the attention of all Americans the critical issues facing our coastal zones, and celebrating the enormous natural riches which they represent. I am today introducing a joint resolution to designate October 9-16 as National Coast Week.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the full text of the joint resolution be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the joint resolution was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S.J. RES. 174

Whereas our nation's coastline include more than one hundred thousand miles of beaches, mountains, estuaries, islands, bays, and wetlands is an invaluable and finite resource;

Whereas the coast has provided the nation with a rich scenic, cultural and historic heritage;

Whereas the marine environment is one of the nation's most valuable food resources;

Whereas the coastal zone plays a major role in fulfilling energy requirements, in providing opportunities of recreation and tourism, and as an important economic resource;

Whereas in all parts of the nation, access to desirable coastal areas is becoming increasingly difficult;

Whereas Congress finds that there is a need to encourage private and public protection of dunes, sandbars, the quality of coastal salt and fresh water, fish and wildlife habitat in coastal wetlands and estuarine areas, and public access to the coast: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of 9th through the 16th, October, 1983 be officially designated as National Coast Week throughout these United States.

By Mr. BOSCHWITZ (for himself, Mr. BURDICK, Mr. NUNN, Mr. HELMS, Mr. HOLLINGS, and Mrs. HAWKINS):

S.J. Res. 176. Joint resolution to designate the week of October 16, 1983 through October 22, 1983, as "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week"; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

NATIONAL FETAL ALCOHOL SYNDROME AWARENESS WEEK

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I rise today to introduce a resolution which proclaims the week of October 16, 1983, as "National Fetal Alcohol Syndrome Awareness Week." As one of the three leading cause of birth defects and accompanying mental retardation in this country, fetal alcohol syndrome is easily preventable. All it takes is for women to abstain from alcohol consumption if they are pregnant.

Fetal alcohol syndrome ranks behind Down's syndrome and spina bifida as a leading cause of birth defects with accompanying mental retardation. Experts tell us there has never been a baby born with fetal alcohol syndrome whose mother did not drink during pregnancy.

Mr. President, fetal alcohol syndrome can result in a number of heartbreaking problems. Effects can include deficiency in both pre- and post-natal growth. The fetus may experience a reduction in height, weight, and head size—reductions that will not be made up as the child grows. And with the reduction in head size comes a reduction in the size of the brain, which is associated with mental retardation. Developmental disabilities also occur, with the infant experiencing delays in learning to walk and talk. Various heart defects, including a whole between the pumping chambers of the heart, may also occur.

Even if a full-blown case of fetal alcohol syndrome is avoided, infants may still experience what are termed fetal alcohol effects which show up as problems such as increased irritability during the newborn period or hyperactivity.

Mr. President, it has only been in the last decade that the connection between a pregnant woman's drinking and the health of her newborn has been made. Indeed, until recently some physicians have even recommended that an occasional drink might ease the tensions a woman can experience during pregnancy. Unfortunately, since the recognition of fetal alcohol syndrome and fetal alcohol effects as major health problems has occurred only recently, there is still much to be learned about them. For example: Why is the child of one woman who drinks unaffected, while the child of another woman who drinks experiences difficulties? How much alcohol is harmful? Is there a point during pregnancy where drinking may be particularly dangerous? These are among the many questions that remain unanswered.

Because so much is unknown about fetal alcohol syndrome, the Surgeon General of the United States has issued an advisory stating that pregnant women or women considering pregnancy should not drink.

The resolution will provide an excellent opportunity for National, State, and local health officials to publicize the problem, and warn pregnant women or those considering pregnancy of the dangers of alcohol. I am pleased to report that similar legislation has been introduced in the House by Representative JOHN KASICH and already has 72 cosponsors.

Mr. President, we must "get the word out" to all who care about the health of America's children. This resolution is one step in this effort, and I urge my colleagues to support it.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 619

At the request of Mr. TSONGAS, the name of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. ANDREWS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 619, a bill to reauthorize, extend, and enhance existing Federal programs to encourage conservation and the use of renewable energy by this Nation's consumers.

S. 996

At the request of Mrs. KASSEBAUM, the name of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) was added as a cosponsor of S. 996, a bill to amend the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 to limit natural gas prices and to improve natural gas pricing and marketing practices, and for other purposes.

S. 1201

At the request of Mr. MATHIAS, the name of the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. BINGAMAN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1201, a bill to amend title 17 of the United States Code to protect semiconductor chips and masks against unauthorized duplication, and for other purposes.

S. 1608

At the request of Mr. TSONGAS, the names of the Senator from Maryland (Mr. MATHIAS), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) were added as cosponsors of S. 1608, a bill to amend the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938 to provide persons may not be employed at less than the applicable wage under that act.

S. 1613

At the request of Mr. TRIBLE, the names of the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), and the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. ANDREWS) were added as cosponsors of S. 1613, a bill to amend title 10, United States Code, with respect to the provision of medical benefits and post and base exchange and commissary store privileges to certain former spouses of certain members or former members of the Armed Forces.

S. 1615

At the request of Mr. MATSUNAGA, the name of the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1615, a bill to amend title XVIII of the Social Security Act to authorize payment for occupational therapy services under part B of the medicare program.

S. 1680

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the names of the Senator from Missouri (Mr. Eagleton), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) were added as cosponsors of S. 1680, a bill to clarify the circumstances under which territorial provisions in licenses to distribute and sell trademarked malt beverage products are lawful under the antitrust laws.

S. 1707

At the request of Mr. WILSON, the names of the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. RUDMAN), the Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH), the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. HECHT), the Senator from Texas (Mr. BENTSEN) were added as cosponsors of S. 1707, a bill to provide a moratorium until June 30, 1988, on changes to the Federal Communications Commission rules regarding network television syndication, network television financial interests, and prime time access.

S. 1736

At the request of Mr. DURENBERGER, the name of the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. COCHRAN) was added as a cosponsor of S. 1736, a bill to establish a process that provides for the submission to the Congress each year of a regulatory budget that recommends the costs to be incurred during the fiscal year beginning on October 1 of such year by specified economic sectors in complying with the laws of the United States and the rules promulgated thereunder, and for consideration by the Congress of a bill containing proposals for legislation to implement such regulatory budget.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 112

At the request of Mr. INOUYE, the name of the Senator from Florida (Mrs. HAWKINS) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 112, a joint resolution to proclaim the month of March 1984 as National Social Work Month.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 147

At the request of Mr. WEICKER, the name of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Joint Resolution 147, a joint resolution to designate the week of September 25, 1983, through October 1, 1983, as "National Rehabilitation Facilities Week."

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 153

At the request of Mr. MOYNIHAN, the names of the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), and the Senator from Maryland (Mr. SARBANES) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 153, a joint resolution to congratulate the people of the county of New York on the occasion of the tricentennial of the founding of the county of New York.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 160

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. ANDREWS), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 160, a joint resolution to designate the week of October 17, 1983, through October 24, 1983, as "National Adult Continuing Education Week."

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 62

At the request of Mr. MATTINGLY, the names of the Senator from Alaska (Mr. MURKOWSKI), and the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON) were added as cosponsors of Senate Concurrent Resolution 62, a concurrent resolution to direct the Commissioner of Social Security and the Secretary of Health and Human Services to develop a plan outlining the steps which might be taken to correct the social security benefit disparity known as the notch problem.

SENATE RESOLUTION 201

At the request of Mr. PRESSLER, the name of the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Resolution 201, a resolution expressing the sense of the Senate concerning the use and/or provision of chemical warfare agents by the Soviet Union.

AMENDMENT NO. 2166

At the request of Mr. BOSCHWITZ, his name was withdrawn as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2166 proposed to H.R. 3363, a bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2167

At the request of Mr. BOSCHWITZ, his name was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2167 proposed to H.R. 3363, a bill making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, last week during consideration of the Interior appropriations bill, Senator TSONGAS offered an amendment (No. 2167) to increase funding for certain energy conservation programs. I cosponsored and supported that amendment. On page S 12510 of the RECORD, my name was correctly listed as a cosponsor of the amendment when the bill clerk reported the amendment.

However, later in the same day's RECORD, under the amendments submitted section, I am not listed as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2167. Instead I was incorrectly listed as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2166 which I did not support, and in fact, voted against.

I had hoped to clarify this inconsistency in the next day's RECORD. However, again it was incorrectly listed and my name was added as a cosponsor of No. 2166, which I opposed, and withdrawn as a cosponsor of No. 2167, which I wanted to cosponsor.

So today, Mr. President, I would once and for all like to clear this up. I request that my name be added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2167 and withdrawn as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2166.

AMENDMENT NO. 2252

At the request of Mr. LEVIN, the name of the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. BRADLEY) was added as a cosponsor of amendment No. 2252 proposed to S. 1887, an original bill to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 18 months, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENT NO. 2253

At the request of Mr. BYRD, the names of the Senator from Illinois (Mr. DIXON), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. LEVIN), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. BINGAMAN), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE), the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN), and the Senator from West Virginia (Mr. RANDOLPH) were added as cosponsors of amendment No. 2253 proposed to S. 1887, an original bill to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 18 months, and for other purposes.

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED

FOREIGN RELATIONS AUTHORIZATION, 1984

MATHIAS AMENDMENT NO. 2256

Mr. MATHIAS (for himself and Mr. EAGLETON) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1342) to authorize appropriations for the fiscal years 1984 and 1985 for the Department of State, the United States Information Agency, and the Board for International Broadcasting, and for other purposes, as follows:

On page 24, between lines 19 and 20, insert the following:

PREPUBLICATION REVIEW OF WRITINGS OF FORMER FEDERAL EMPLOYEES

SEC. 122. The head of a department or agency of the Government shall not, before April 15, 1984, enforce, issue, or implement any rule, regulation, directive, policy, decision, or order which (1) would require any officer, employee, or former officer or employee of the Government to submit, after termination of employment by the Government, his or her writings for prepublication review by an officer or employee of the Government and (2) is different from the rules, regulations, directives, policies, decisions, or orders (relating to prepublication review of such writings) in effect on March 1, 1983.

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

PERCY (AND DIXON) AMENDMENT NO. 2257

Mr. PERCY (for himself and Mr. DIXON) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1887) to extend the Federal supplemental compensation program for 18 months, and for other purposes; as follows:

In section 602(e)(3)(C) of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982 (as amended by section 3 of the bill), strike out "exceeds 6 percent" and insert in lieu thereof "exceeds 5.5 percent,".

DEPARTMENTS OF LABOR AND HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES APPROPRIATION, 1984

HAWKINS AMENDMENT NO. 2258

(Ordered to lie on the table.)

Mrs. HAWKINS submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by her to the bill (H.R. 3913) making appropriations for the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies, for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes; as follows:

On page 20, line 1, strike out "$367,396,000" and insert $378,396,000".

On page 20, line 3, insert before the colon a comma and the following: "and of which $11,000,000 shall be available for grants for preventive health programs for tuberculosis under section 317 of the Public Health Service Act".

EXTENSION OF FEDERAL UNEMPLOYMENT BENEFITS

SPECTER (AND OTHERS) AMENDMENT NO. 2259

Mr. SPECTER (for himself, Mr. FORD, and Mr. PRYOR) proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1887, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

EXTENSION OF SUPPLEMENTAL RAILROAD UNEMPLOYMENT COMPENSATION

SEC. 9. (a) Section 17 of the Railroad Unemployment Insurance Act is amended—

(1) in subsection (a) (2), by inserting ", or the benefit year beginning July 1, 1983" after "July 1, 1983";

(2) in subsection (e), by striking out "June 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "June 30, 1984"; and

(3) by amending subsection (f) to read as follows:

"(f) (1) For purposes of this section the term 'period of eligibility' means, with respect to any employee for the benefit year beginning July 1, 1982, the period beginning with the later of—

"(A) the first day of unemployment following the day on which he exhausted his rights to unemployment benefits (as determined under subsection (b)) in such benefit year; or

"(B) March 10, 1983,

and consisting of five consecutive registration periods (without regard to benefit year); except that for purposes of this paragraph, any registration period beginning after June 30, 1983, and before the date of the enactment of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, shall not be taken into account for purposes of payment of benefits, or in determining the consecutiveness of registration periods.

"(2) For purposes of this section the term 'period of eligibility' means, with respect to any employee for the benefit year beginning July 1, 1983, the period beginning with the later of—

"(A) the first day of unemployment following the day on which he exhausted his rights to unemployment benefits (as determined under subsection (b)) in such benefit year; or

(B) the date of the enactment of the Federal Supplemental Compensation Amendments of 1983, and consisting of five consecutive registration periods; except that no such period of eligibility shall include any registration period beginning after June 30, 1984.".

(b) The amendments made by this section shall apply with respect to days of unemployment during any registration period beginning on or after the date of the enactment of this Act.

(c) Amounts appropriated under section 102(b) of Public Law 98-8 shall remain available without regard to fiscal year limitation for purposes of carrying out the amendments made by this section.

SPECTER AMENDMENT NO. 2260

Mr. SPECTER proposed an amendment to the bill S. 1887, supra; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following:

TITLE —HEALTH CARE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

GRANTS TO STATES

SEC. . (a) Title XX of the Social Security Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"HEALTH CARE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

"SEC. 2008. (a)(1) Notwithstanding section 2005(a)(4) and any other provision of this title, any State (as defined in paragraph (4)) may establish a program under this section for providing health care coverage for unemployed workers, subject to the provisions of this section.

"(2) The State may choose those groups of individuals (and their immediate families) who shall be covered under the program, the duration of such coverage, and the duration of the program, as the State determines to be appropriate, except that—

"(A) no coverage may be provided to any individual (or his immediate family) unless such individual (i) is receiving regular, extended, or Federal supplemental compensation, railroad unemployment compensation, or any other Federal unemployment compensation, or (ii) is unemployed and has exhausted his rights to such compensation (other than for cause) by reason of payment of all such compensation for which he is eligible, within the prior 6 months, or (iii) was eligible for such compensation within the prior 30 days but lost such eligibility on account of employment;

"(B) no coverage may be provided for the first 6 weeks during which an individual is eligible for compensation (referred to in subparagraph (A)) in a benefit year (as determined under the applicable unemployment compensation law);

"(C) no coverage may be provided to any individual unless such individual was enrolled in a group health plan of the employer by whom he was employed at the time he last became eligible for compensation described in subparagraph (A) (and in making a determination with respect to prior enrollment, and with respect to coverage described in subparagraphs (F) and (G), the State may use the broadest possible determination of proof);

"(D) no coverage may be provided with respect to any services provided prior to October 1, 1983, or services provided for an individual prior to the time such individual is determined to be eligible under such program, or inpatient services provided in a continuous period which began prior to such date or such eligibility;

"(E) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is otherwise eligible for medical assistance under the State plan under title XIX or who is eligible for benefits under title XVIII;

"(F) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is covered under a group health plan for which a contribution toward the cost of the plan is being made by an employer, former employer, union, or any entity other than the individual, or who could have been so covered if an election had been made and premiums had been paid on a timely basis;

"(G) no coverage may be provided for any individual who is covered under a group health plan of such individual's spouse for which a contribution toward the cost of the plan is being made by an employer, former employer, union, or any entity other than such spouse, or who could have been so covered if an election after the date of the enactment of this section had been made and premiums had been paid on a timely basis; and

"(H) no coverage may be provided for any individual whose family income exceeds an amount equal to 100 percent of the median family income in such State for a family of the same size as such individual's family (and in making a determination with respect to an individual's family income, the State shall determine the declaration or proof of income to be required, the type of income to be included, and the time period over which the income is to be measured).

"(3)(A) The Secretary may waive the requirements of paragraph (2)(H) to the extent that special circumstances permit presumptions about the family income of applicants which make it unnecessary to apply the means test described in such paragraph on a case-by-case basis.

"(B) The provisions of paragraph (2)(H) shall not preclude a State from imposing a means test that is more restrictive than the test described in such paragraph.

"(4) Notwithstanding section 1101(a)(1), for purposes of this section the term 'State' means the 50 States, the District of Columbia, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands.

"(b)(1)(A) Services under the program established under this section may include only—

"(i) inpatient hospital services;

"(ii) emergency outpatient hospital services;

"(iii) routine and emergency physician services (including those provided in health clinics but not including those provided in nursing care or intermediate care facilities);

"(iv) prenatal, delivery, and post partum care;

"(v) laboratory and diagnosis X-ray services;

"(vi) X-ray, radium, and radioactive isotope therapy;

"(vii) services of nurse midwife, described in section 1905(a)(17); and

"(viii) home health services in cases where the State determines that the coverage of such services is cost effective.

"(B) The State must include under the program some ambulatory and some institutional services.

"(C) No drugs or biologicals shall be included within the covered services described in subparagraph (A) unless provided as part of inpatient hospital services.

"(2) The State shall determine the amount, duration, and scope of the covered services described in paragraph (1) which shall be included under the program, but in no event shall the amount, duration, or scope of such services under the program under this section exceed the amount, duration, or scope of such services included under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A).

"(3) Services may be provided through various arrangements made with providers by the State, but no such arrangement may provide services which are more generous than those provided under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A).

"(4) No cash payments may be made under the program to individuals participating in the program.

"(c)(1) The State may provide for a weekly contribution for any individual participating in the program under this section, without regard to whether such individual is receiving compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)), but no such contribution may exceed an amount equal to 8 percent of the amount of compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)) for which such individual is eligible for such week or for the last week for which he was eligible for such compensation. Such contributions may vary for individual coverage and family coverage and by provider arrangement.

"(2)(A) The State may require that deductibles and coinsurance amounts be imposed for users of services under the program. If the State chooses to require such deductibles and coinsurance amounts, they shall be at least the same amounts imposed under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A), subject to the limitations in this paragraph.

"(B) The estimated average monthly amount of such deductibles and coinsurance amounts for outpatient services may not exceed an amount equal to 5 percent of the average monthly benefit amount in such State for unemployment compensation referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A).

"(C) The amount of such deductibles and coinsurance amounts for inpatient services may not exceed the maximum amount of deductibles and coinsurance amounts which could be imposed by the State under its State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1905(a)(10)(A) consistent with the provisions of title XIX, subject to the limitations in subparagraphs (D) and (E) of this paragraph.

"(D) No deductibles or coinsurance amounts may be imposed for prenatal, delivery, or post partum care.

"(E) No deductibles or coinsurance amounts may be imposed until after public hearings which provide adequate notice and opportunity for public participation have been held by the State with respect to such imposition.

"(F) Subject to the limitations specified in this paragraph, such deductibles and coinsurance amounts may vary with respect to different groupings of eligible individuals, different types of services, different provider arrangements, and various coverage periods.

"(3) Any contribution amount imposed by the State must be used by the State to pay the State share of the cost of the program under this section, or to provide additional services or periods of coverage to individuals eligible for coverage under such program.

"(d)(1) Payment by the State for services provided to individuals eligible for the program under this section shall be made through the same administrative mechanisms through which payments are generally made under the State plan for medical assistance under title XIX; however, the State may provide for arrangements with carriers or providers which provide for cost effective financing and delivery systems, and may selectively make arrangements with a specific group or provide for capitation reimbursement, but no such arrangement may provide for services which are more generous than those provided under the State plan for medical assistance for individuals described in section 1902(a)(10)(A). Services provided through a prepaid capitation arrangement need not be provided through an organization meeting the requirements of section 1903(m).

"(2) Any limitations under the State plan for medical assistance on the amount that a provider of services may charge the recipient of such services shall also apply to the program under this section, except that contributions deductibles, and coinsurance may be charged in accordance with subsection (c).

"(e)(1) Determinations of qualification for coverage under the program under this section shall be made by the State agency administering the State's unemployment compensation law approved under section 3304 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954. The State may administer the services program under this section directly through the State agency administering the State plan for medical assistance under title XIX of this Act, or through arrangements with others.

"(2) Upon becoming eligible for compensation (referred to in subsection (a)(2)(A)), an individual shall be informed of the eligibility criteria for coverage under the program established under this section and the benefits provided, and shall have four weeks in which to voluntarily enroll in such program. Such individual shall also be informed of the possibility that such individual may be eligible to enroll in a health plan of his spouse. If the individual declines the opportunity to enroll, or later voluntarily terminates his enrollment, he may not again enroll in such program unless he subsequently becomes eligible for compensation (referred to in subsection (A)(2)(A)) for a new benefit year (as determined under the applicable unemployment compensation law).

"(3) In the case of any State which chooses to require the payment of a contribution, the State may deduct the amount of the contribution from the amount of such compensation paid to an individual enrolled in such program.

"(4) Any State which chooses to cover under its program individuals residing in such State who are or were receiving railroad unemployment compensation, may enter into an agreement with the Railroad Retirement Board under which—

"(A) the Railroad Retirement Board shall notify those unemployed railroad workers who may be eligible under the program of the availability of the program in accordance with paragraph (2);

"(B) the Board shall furnish the State agency making eligibility determinations with such information as the State agency may require in order to make eligibility determinations with respect to such unemployed railroad workers or shall, to the extent feasible, perform such determinations for the State agency;

"(C) the Board shall deduct contribution amounts from any railroad unemployment compensation payable to such unemployed railroad workers in the same amounts as if such workers were receiving unemployment compensation under the State unemployment compensation law, and transfer such amounts to the State; and

"(D) the State shall reimburse the Board for administrative costs incurred under such agreement, and such amounts shall be paid into the railroad unemployment insurance administration fund.

"(5) The Railroad Retirement Board is authorized to carry out those functions required of it under any agreement entered into under paragraph (4).

"(f)(1) Notwithstanding sections 2002 and 2003, payments to States having programs established under this section shall be made in accordance with the provisions of this subsection, but subject to subsection (g). Payments under this subsection are in addition to any amounts to which a State is entitled under section 2002, and payments made under section 2002 may not be used for purposes of this section. An amount, not to exceed the State's allotment determined under paragraph (2), equal to the Federal percentage (as determined under paragraph (6)) of the amount expended by such State for its program established under this section (excluding administrative costs) shall be paid to the State in the same manner as payments are made under section 1903(d).

"(2) The Secretary shall allot $750,000,000 to carry out this section for each of the fiscal years beginning on October 1, 1983, and October 1, 1984, among the States as follows:

"(A) One-half of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of insured unemployed individuals who reside in each State as compared to the total number of insured unemployed individuals in all the States.

"(B) One-half of such amount shall be allotted among the States on the basis of the relative number of individuals who have been unemployed for 26 weeks or more and who reside in each State as compared to the total number of such individuals in all the States.

"(3) Allotments shall be made on the basis of the most recent 12-month period, preceding the month in which the Secretary makes such allotments, for which adequate data is available.

"(4) Funds shall be allotted at the beginning of each fiscal year referred to in paragraph (2), but payment shall be made as described in paragraph (1). Amounts allotted for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1984, may be paid to States for expenses incurred in providing services under the program for individuals who are enrolled in the program on Septemer 30, 1985, until their eligibility for such program terminates, or March 31, 1986, whichever is earlier.

"(5) Any funds allotted for a fiscal year to a State which did not establish a program under this section shall be reallotted to those States having a program, at the end of such fiscal year. Such funds may be expended in the same manner as described in paragraph (4).

"(6)(A) For purposes of this section, the Federal percentage is 100 percent with respect to services provided prior to April 1, 1984, and, with respect to services provided on or after April 1, 1984, is—

"(i) 95 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment (as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970) for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 5 percent:

"(ii) 80 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 4 percent but is less than 5 percent;

"(iii) 65 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 3 percent but is less than 4 percent; and

"(iv) 50 percent with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's insured unemployment rate for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is less than 3 percent.

"(B) The Federal percentage otherwise applicable under subparagraph (A) for any week beginning on or after April 1, 1984, shall be increased by 15 percentage points (but not to a percentage greater than 95 percent) with respect to services provided in any State during a week for which the State's rate of insured unemployment for the period consisting of such week and the preceding 51 weeks is equal to or exceeds 120 percent of the average of such rates for such State for the corresponding 52-week period ending in each of the preceding 2 calendar years.

"(C) Any State which qualifies for a particular matching percentage under clause (i), (ii), (iii), or (iv) of subparagraph (A), or under subparagraph (B), shall continue at such percentage for a period of not less than 6 months, unless it subsequently qualifies for a higher percentage under such provisions, beginning with the first week in which such State so qualifies, and may subsequently requalify for a particular higher matching percentage upon reaching the required rate of insured unemployment after the end of such 6-month period. No such period may extend beyond March 31, 1986. Notwithstanding the first sentence of this subparagraph, the matching percentage for each State with respect to services provided after September 30, 1985, and before April 1, 1986, shall be the matching percentage in effect for such States with respect to services provided on September 30, 1985.

"(7) The Secretary shall make payments for administrative costs incurred in carrying out the program established under this section, in a total amount not to exceed $150,000,000 for each of the fiscal years beginning on October 1, 1983, and October 1, 1984, $70,000,000 of such reimbursement for each fiscal year shall be made to the State agencies administering the services program under this section in accordance with the allotment formula in pargraph (2), and $80,000,000 of such reimbursement for each fiscal year shall be made to the Department of Labor for payment to the State agencies (of those States having a program under this section) administering the State's unemployment compensation law in accordance with the distribution formula used for purposes of title III of this Act. Payments under this paragraph may be made with respect to program costs incurred after March 31, 1986.

"(g)(1) Only a State having a rate of insured unemployment (as determined for purposes of section 203 of the Federal-State Extended Unemployment Compensation Act of 1970) for a period consisting of any week and the 51 preceding weeks, of 2 percent or more, may enroll new individuals in the program under this section during such week. If a State qualifies to enroll new individuals under the preceding sentence, such qualification shall continue for a period of not less than 6 months beginning with the first week in which such State so qualifies, and any State may subsequently requalify upon reaching the required rate of insured unemployment after the end of such 6-month period, but no such period may extend beyond March 31, 1986.

"(2) During a period in which a State may not enroll new individuals in its program by reason of paragraph (1), payment under this section may be made with respect to individuals previously enrolled in such program until their eligibility expires, or, if sooner, March 31, 1986.

"(h) Any State establishing a program under this section shall submit a report to the Secretary on August 1, 1984, on the program's implementation and impact. A final report shall be submitted in May 1986 by any State which carries out its program for any period after March 31, 1984, upon expiration of its program. The form and content of the reports required under this subsection shall be determined by the Secretary.

"(i) The State shall provide that the payment for any services received by an individual under the program shall be secondary to, and shall be reduced by the amount of, any other payment which is or could be made with respect to such services under any other health plan or public program, or from a third party, including any workmen's compensation law or plan, any automobile or liability insurance policy or plan (including a self-insured plan), and any no fault insurance. The State shall require each individual enrolled in the program to assign all rights to such payments as he may have to the State as a condition of enrolling in the program.

"(j)(1) No payment may be made under this section to any State unless such State provides, subject to paragraph (2), that any group health plan for employees of such State, provided by such State or to which such State makes a contribution, provides for open enrollment in accordance with section 4912(b) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

"(2)(A) Except as provided in subparagraph (B), the requirements of paragraph (1) shall apply to enrollment periods for employees whose spouses are involuntarily laid off or separated more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this section.

"(B) In the case of a group health plan which was subject to a collective bargaining agreement in effect on the date of the enactment of this section, the date on which such agreement expires (determined without regard to any extensions agreed to after such date of enactment) shall, if later, be substituted for the date (60 days after such date of enactment) referred to in paragraph (1).".

(b) Section 3304(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by redesignating paragraph (18) as paragraph (19), by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (17), and by inserting after paragraph (17) the following:

"(18) if the State establishes a program under section 2008 of the Social Security Act, the State agency administering the State unemployment compensation law shall carry out the functions required of it under such section; and".

(c) Section 3304(a)(4)(C) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and section 303(a)(5) of the Social Security Act are each amended by inserting "or health care" after "health insurance", and by inserting "or a contribution amount under section 2008 of the Social Security Act" after "program approved by the Secretary of Labor".

OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIRED FOR EMPLOYEES HAVING UNEMPLOYED SPOUSE

SEC. . (a) Chapter 41 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subchapter:

"SUBCHAPTER B—HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS WHICH DO NOT MEET OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS FOR SPOUSES OF THE UNEMPLOYED

"Sec. 4912. Tax on health plans of large employers which do not meet open enrollment requirements for spouses of the unemployed.

"SEC. 4912. TAX ON HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS WHICH DO NOT MEET OPEN ENROLLMENT REQUIREMENTS FOR SPOUSES OF THE UNEMPLOYED.

"(a) TAX IMPOSED.—In the case of a large employer, there is hereby imposed for each taxable year a tax equal to—

"(1) $500, multiplied by

"(2) the aggregate number of failures to meet the requirements of subsection (b) during such taxable year under any group health plans offered by such employer.

"(b) OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—A group health plan meets the requirements of this subsection only if it provides a qualified open enrollment period for each married employee—

"(A) who is (or at a previous time was) eligible to enroll or is enrolled under the plan, and

"(B) whose spouse loses eligibility for coverage under a group helath plan due to the involuntary layoff or involuntary separation (other than for cause or mandatory retirement) from the spouse's employment.

"(2) TERMS AND CONDITIONS SAME AS FOR ENROLLMENTS FOR NEW EMPLOYEES.—

"(A) IN GENERAL.—The terms and conditions of an enrollment during a qualified open enrollment period shall be the same as the terms and conditions which would be offered by the group health plan to the married employee described in paragraph (1) if such employee began employment for the employer on the first day of such period.

"(B) EMPLOYEES ALREADY COVERED MAY NOT INCREASE LEVEL OF BENEFITS.—In the case of an employee who is covered under a group health plan before the qualified enrollment period, subparagraph (A) shall not require a group health plan to allow such individual to elect a higher level of benefits than that provided by such coverage.

"(C) COMMENCEMENT OF COVERAGE.—Any enrollment during a qualified open enrollment period need not take effect before the date on which the loss of coverage described in paragraph (1)(B) takes effect.

"(c) DEFINITIONS; NONTAXABLE ENTITIES.—For purposes of this section—

"(1) QUALIFIED OPEN ENROLLMENT PERIOD.—For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'qualified open enrollment period' means the 30-day period beginning on the day on which an appropriate State agency notifies the spouse of a married employee described in subsection (b)(1) that such spouse has become eligible for receipt of unemployment compensation under any Federal or State law by reason of the separation or layoff described in subsection (b)(1)(B).

"(2) LARGE EMPLOYER.—The term 'large employer' means an employer who, on each of some 20 days during the calendar year or the preceding calendar year, each day being in a different calendar week, employed for some portion of the day 10 or more individuals.

"(3) EMPLOYER.—The term 'employer' does not include the Government of the United States, the government of the District of Columbia or any territory or possession of the United States, a State or any political subdivision thereof, or any agency or instrumentality (including the United States Postal Service and Postal Rate Commission) of any of the foregoing, except that such term includes nonappropriated fund instrumentalities of the Government of the United States.

"(4) GROUP HEALTH PLAN.—The term 'group health plan' has the meaning given such term by section 162(i)(2).

"(5) NONTAXABLE ENTITIES.—In the case of a large employer who is not subject to tax under this title, the calendar year shall be treated as such employer's taxable year.

"(d) CROSS REFERENCES.—

"(1) For provision denying deduction for tax imposed by this section, see section 275(a)(6).

"(2) For provisions making deficiency procedures applicable to tax imposed by this section, see section 6211 et seq.".

(b)(1) Chapter 41 of such Code is amended by striking out the chapter heading and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"CHAPTER 41—PUBLIC CHARITIES; CERTAIN HEALTH PLANS OF LARGE EMPLOYERS

"Subchapter A. Public charities.

"Subchapter B. Health plans of large employers which do not meet open enrollment requirements for spouses of the unemployed.

"Subchapter A—Public Charities".

(2) The table of chapters for subtitle D of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to chapter 41 and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"Chapter 41. Public charities; certain health plans of large employers.".

(3) Subparagraph (B) of section 6104(c)(1) of such Code is amended by striking out "or chapter 41 or 42" and inserting in lieu thereof ", subchapter A of chapter 41, or chapter 42".

(c)(1) Except as provided in paragraph (2), the amendments made by this section shall apply to enrollment periods for employees whose spouses are involuntarily laid off or separated more than 60 days after the date of the enactment of this Act, in taxable years ending after such date.

(2) In the case of a group health plan which was subject to a collective-bargaining agreement in effect on the date of the enactment of this Act, the date on which such agreement expires (determined without regard to any extensions agreed to after the date of enactment of this joint resolution) shall, if later, be substituted for the date provided by paragraph (1).

STUDY OF PRIVATE SECTOR HEALTH CARE COVERAGE FOR UNEMPLOYED WORKERS

SEC. . The Secretary of Health and Human Services is directed to conduct a study of changes which might be made in employer-provided health care coverage which would provide adequate continuing health care coverage and conversion privileges for employees who are involuntarily terminated from employment. Such study shall include estimates of the costs which would be incurred by employers in providing continuing health care coverage of various durations, and at various contribution levels by the former employee (including a zero contribution level). The Secretary shall report the results of the study to Congress not later than January 1, 1985, and shall include any recommendations for legislation which would provide for such continuing coverage.

TITLE —INCOME AVERAGING

SEC. . PERCENTAGE BY WHICH INCOME MUST EXCEED BASE INCOME INCREASED FROM 120 TO 140.

(a) INCREASE MUST EXCEED 140 PERCENT OF AVERAGE BASE PERIOD INCOME.—Sections 1301 and 1302(a) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to income averaging) are each amended by striking out "120 percent" and inserting in lieu thereof "140 percent".

(b) EFFECTIVE DATE.—The amendments made by this section shall apply to taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.

INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

DANFORTH AMENDMENT NO. 2261

Mr. DANFORTH proposed an amendment to the bill (H.R. 3813) to amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980; as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert in lieu thereof the following:

NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY INVOLVING THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT, 1983

SECTION 1. The International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980 (19 U.S.C. 1356k, et seq.) is amended—

(1) by striking out "1976" in sections 2, 3, and 5 and inserting in lieu thereof ", 1983", and

(2) by striking out "for such period prior to October 1, 1983 as the agreement remains in effect" in section 2, and inserting in lieu thereof "before October 1, 1986".

REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS FOR WORKERS AND FIRMS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317) is amended by striking out "each of fiscal years 1982 and 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1982 through 1985".

(b) Section 285 of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1985".

"CONTRIBUTED IMPORTANTLY" TEST FOR GROUP ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 3. (a) Section 222 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2272) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "were a substantial cause of such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and of such decline" and inserting in lieu thereof "contributed importantly to such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and to such decline"; and

(2) by amending the last sentence to read as follows: "For purposes of paragraph (3), the term 'contributed importantly' means a cause which is important, but not necessarily more important than any other cause.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to petitions for certification filed under section 221 of the Trade Act of 1974 on or after October 1, 1983.

PREFERENCE FOR FIRMS HAVING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 255 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2345) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"PREFERENCE FOR FIRMS HAVING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

"(i)(1) When considering whether to grant a direct loan or to guarantee a loan to a corporation which is otherwise certified under section 251, the Secretary shall give preference to a corporation which agrees with respect to such loan to fulfill the following requirements—

"(A) 25 percent of the principal amount of the loan is paid by the lender to a qualified trust established under an employee stock ownership plan established and maintained by the recipient corporation, by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation, or by several corporations including the recipient corporation,

"(B) the employee stock ownership plan meets the requirements of this subsection, and

"(C) the agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust relating to the loan meets the requirements of this section.

"(2) An employee stock ownership plan does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless the governing instrument of the plan provides that—

"(A) the amount of the loan paid under paragraph (1)(A) to the qualified trust will be used to purchase qualified employer securities,

"(B) the qualified trust will repay to the lender the amount of such loan, together with the interest thereon, out of amounts contributed to the trust by the recipient corporation, and

"(C) from time to time, as the qualified trust repays such amount, the trust will allocate qualified employer securities among the individual accounts of participants and their beneficiaries in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (4).

"(3) The agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless—

"(A) it is unconditionally enforceable by any party against the others, jointly and severally,

"(B) it provides that the liability of the qualified trust to repay loan amounts paid to the qualified trust may not, at any time, exceed an amount equal to the amount of contributions required under paragraph (2)(B) which are actually received by such trust,

"(C) it provides that amounts received by the recipient corporation from the qualified trust for qualified employer securities purchased for the purpose of this subsection will be used exclusively by the recipient corporation for those purposes for which it may use that portion of the loan paid directly to it by the lender,

"(D) it provides that the recipient corporation may not reduce the amount of its equity capital during the one year period beginning on the date on which the qualified trust purchases qualified employer securities for purposes of this subsection, and

"(E) it provides that the recipient corporation will make contributions to the qualified trust of not less than such amounts as are necessary for such trust to meet its obligation to make repayments of principal and interest on the amount of the loan received by the trust without regard to whether such contributions are deductible by the corporation under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and without regard to any other amounts the recipient corporation is obligated under law to contribute to or under the employee stock ownership plan.

"(4) At the close of each plan year, an employee stock ownership plan shall allocate to the accounts of participating employees that portion of the qualified employer securities the cost of which bears substantially the same ratio to the cost of all the qualified employer securities purchased under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection as the amount of the loan principal and interest repaid by the qualified trust during that year bears to the total amount of the loan principal and interest payable by such trust during the term of such loan. Qualified employer securities allocated to the individual account of a participant during one plan year must bear substantially the same proportion to the amount of all such securities allocated to all participants in the plan as the amount of compensation paid to such participant bears to the total amount of compensation paid to all such participants during that year.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term—

"(A) 'employee stock ownership plan' means a plan described in section 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(B) 'qualified trust' means a trust established under an employee stock ownership plan and meeting the requirements of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(C) 'qualified employer securities' means common stock issued by the recipient corporation or by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation with voting power and dividend rights no less favorable than the voting power and dividend rights on other common stock issued by the issuing corporation and with voting power being exercised by the participants in the employee stock ownership plan after it is allocated to their plan accounts, and

"(D) 'equity capital' means, with respect to the recipient corporation, the sum of its money and other property (in an amount equal to the adjusted basis of such property but disregarding adjustments made on account of depreciation or amortization made during the period described in paragraph (3)(D)), less the amount of its indebtedness.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

AMENDMENTS TO CERTAIN INDIAN LEGISLATION

MURKOWSKI AMENDMENT NO. 2262

Mr. BAKER (for Mr. MURKOWSKI) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1530) to make technical amendments to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act and other acts; as follows:

At the conclusion of the parentheses on line 8, page 1, strike the period, quotation mark, and second period and add the following proviso:

"Provided, that a grant agreement or a cooperative agreement may be utilized in lieu of a contract under sections 102 and 103 of this Act when mutually agreed to by the appropriate Secretary and the tribal organization involved."

HENRY M. JACKSON FOUNDATION FOR THE ADVANCEMENT OF MILITARY MEDICINE

TOWER AMENDMENT NO. 2263

Mr. BAKER (for Mr. TOWER) proposed an amendment to the bill (S. 1894) to designate the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine as the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine," and for other purposes; as follows:

At the end of the bill add the following new section:

Sec. 2. (a)(1) Section 178 of title 10, United States Code, is amended—

(A) by inserting "The Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation" in the section heading; and

(B) by inserting "Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" in subsection (a).

(2) The item in the table of sections at the beginning of chapter 7 of such title relating to section 178 is amended to read as follows:

"178. The Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine.".

(b) Section 2113(j) of title 10, United States Code, is amended by inserting "Henry M. Jackson" before "Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine" each place it appears.

CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

HELMS AMENDMENT NO. 2264

Mr. HELMS proposed an amendment to the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate No. 6 to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984; as follows:

In lieu of the language proposed to be inserted, insert the following:

(b) Such amounts as may be necessary for projects or activities not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution and for which appropriations, funds, or other authority would be available in the following appropriation Acts:

Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 at a rate for operations and to the extent and in the manner provided for in the Act as passed the House of Representatives as of October 1, 1983 Provided, That appropriations or loan authorization for the following agencies or activities are available at not to exceed the following annual rates and the totals are adjusted accordingly:

Agricultural Research Service:
Salaries and Expenses.....	$478,000,000

Buildings and Facilities...	28,602,000
Cooperative State Research Service:
Special grants	25,234,000
Competitive grants	17,000,000
Animal health and disease grants	5,760,000
Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service: Salaries and Expenses.....	263,259,000
Federal Crop Insurance Corporation:
Administrative and operating expenses	200,000,000
FCIC Fund	110,000,000
Office of Rural Development Policy	2,000,000
Rural Housing Insurance Fund: Moderate income loans	0
Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund:
Insured soil and water loans.....	30,000,000
Economic emergency loans.....	0
Rural Development Insurance Fund: Water and waste disposal loans.....	270,000,000
Rural Water and Waste Disposal Grants.....	90,000,000
Rural Electrification Administration: Guaranteed loans, not less than .	3,360,000,000
Commodity Futures Trading Commission:
Salaries and Expenses.....	26,400,000
ADP Limitation.....	3,626,000

: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, section 184 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 785), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (b) the following: ", or for the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984": Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, the provisions of subsection (f) and (i) of section 3 and section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, concerning private, nonprofit drug addiction or alcoholic treatment and rehabilitation programs, shall also be applicable to publicly operated community health centers: Provided further, That, hereafter, in order to restore and maintain U.S. share of world markets and to restore capital of the Corporation for its operations, any restrictions or limitations on the authorities and obligations of the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell in world markets, as provided by its Charter, may be waived or suspended by the Secretary of Agriculture; and Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 (H.R. 3363), notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, except section 102, such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects, or activities provided for in such Act (H.R. 3363), to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report and joint explanatory statement of the Committee of Conference filed in the House of Representatives, as if such Act had been enacted into law.

NOTICES OF HEARINGS

COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE, NUTRITION, AND FORESTRY

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I wish to announce that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry will conduct a markup session on Wednesday, October 5, 1983, at 10 a.m. in room SR 328-A.

The bills to be considered are: S. 663, a bill to prohibit incentive payments for certain commodities produced on highly erodible land and S. 566, S. 1503, and H.R. 24 (S. 129), four bills dealing with land conveyance.

Anyone wishing further information please contact the Agriculture Committee staff at 224-0014 or 224-0017.

COMMITTEE ON GOVERNMENTAL AFFAIRS

Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, the Senate Committee on Governmental Affairs will hold a continuation of the markup on S. 121, the Trade Reorganization Act of 1983 on Tuesday, October 4, 1983, at 9:30 a.m. in room SD 342 of the Dirksen Senate Office Building. For further information, please contact Mr. Michael Mitchell at 224-4751.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

50TH ANNIVERSARY OF FORCED FAMINE IN UKRAINE

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on October 2, thousands of Ukrainian Americans from across the Nation will gather at the Washington Monument to commemorate the 50th anniversary of the tragic events of 1932-33, when an estimated 7 million Ukrainians perished as a result of Stalin's forced famine. The untold suffering of the Ukrainian peasant—the result of the Soviet regime's attempts to finance industrialization and insure collectivization through the forcible confiscation of grain—illustrates the cynical depth of the Stalin dictatorship's contempt for human life.

In an attempt to break the will of an independent-minded and nationally conscious Ukrainian peasantry and to create a new Soviet man, the Stalin regime, in the early 1930's, resorted to truly draconian measures. Peasants were ordered to turn all grain into the state. Those who refused were deported or executed. Those forced to work in newly formed collective farms who so much as bit the root off a sugar beet were considered to be enemies of the people subject to execution, long terms of imprisonment, or confiscation of all property. Starving villagers who attemped to leave areas stricken by the famine were turned back. Indeed, individual stories related by survivors of this dark chapter of human history leave one filled with a sense of revulsion and horror.

Ironically, while millions were starving to death, the Soviet Union, in an effort to finance its industrialization program, was selling grain on the international market. During the period 1932-34, the Soviet Union exported more than 4 million metric tons of grain. The demographic catastrophe suffered by the Ukrainians clearly illustrates the magnitude of this crime. While the population of the U.S.S.R. as a whole increased by 15.7 percent between 1926 and 1939, the number of Ukrainians decreased by almost 10 percent. Academic researchers, analyzing the evidence, conservatively estimate that at least 7 million Ukrainians lost their lives as a result of the forced famine.

HORRORS OF SOVIET SYSTEM CONTINUE TODAY

Mr. President, in focusing our attention on the great famine, we must not forget that the system capable of producing such horrors in the past is still in existence today. The recent downing of the unarmed civilian Korean jetliner starkly illustrates that the Soviet system is capable of perpetrating crimes which are clearly contrary to any standard of civilized behavior. Indeed, this same system continues to flagrantly violate the rights of individuals, in stark contrast to its pronounced commitments under a variety of international agreements. The Commission on Security and Cooperation in Europe, on which I serve as cochairman, continues to persistently voice its deep concern over the Soviet Government's continued violations of the Helsinki Final Act. Only by remaining steadfast in our efforts on behalf of those whose rights are violated, and only by stressing the importance that we attach to the dignity of the individual, can the occurrence of inhuman acts such as the famine of 1932-33 be prevented in the future.●

RECRUITMENT AND RETENTION READINESS ACT OF 1983

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with my good friend Senator SIMPSON in cosponsoring his bill—the Recruitment and Retention Readiness Act of 1983.

As my good friend knows, and as my colleagues on the Veterans' Affairs Committee know, I have been very supportive of a new GI bill. In fact, I have cosponsored new GI bill proposals in the past two Congresses. My reasons for this are simple. First, I do not believe the current education program available to veterans is effective or adequate. And second, I continue to be concerned about recruiting and retaining high-quality military recruits.

This bill I am cosponsoring today addresses the second of my concerns. Currently, enlistment rates are good and high quality enlistments are up as well. In 1980 only 49 percent of the Army's recruits were high school graduates—last year the percentage had jumped to 87 percent. For 1983, the projection is a 90-percent level. In comparison during the draft era, this level was only about 70 percent. For those of us interested in improving the skill level of our Armed Forces this is certainly welcome news.

However, one of the major reasons for this rise in enlistments is the state of the economy. Historically, during poor economic times military enlistment increases. But when the economy rebounds (as it is doing now), history shows that the good economic times mean bad times for military recruiters. This will especially be true, if military pay is again allowed to fall well behind the civilian sector. And when in 1986 the proportion of military-age youth in the population begins a steep decline, our pool of available recruits will shrink even further.

The bill I am cosponsoring today attempts to address this potential problem by requiring the President to submit a complete report on the status of recruitment and retention within the armed services. Within the report, the President must also include potential solutions—if, in fact, the possible recruitment or retention problems do occur. The report would be required to be brought to Congress by mid-1987, or earlier, if problems occur sooner.

I think this bill is a good interim step, and I hope my colleagues will be willing to support it.●

MAKING BETTER USE OF BOXCARS

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, over the last several months there has been a great deal of attention paid to the issue of boxcar deregulation. On May 2 of this year the Interstate Commerce Commission announced a decision to deregulate boxcar traffic. This issue has proven to be quite controversial among shippers, railroads—particularly short lines—and the leasing companies of the boxcars.

Estimates as to the current surplus of boxcars vary between 65,000 and 75,000. Yet under the current rules boxcars are moving empty an extraordinary amount of the time. Conrail, which the Federal Government hopes to sell as a profitable entity to the private sector, is the biggest loser under the current scheme. The incentive provided by the existing rules, to move empty boxcars around, is now scheduled to terminate on November 7. It costs Conrail over $100 million per year. Conrail has announced initiatives to arrange bilateral agreements with other railroads to reduce costs industrywide and assure the availability of boxcars to Western railroads once boxcars are deregulated.

While Conrail might be the big loser under the present rules, it is not the only railroad which supports the ICC decision. Railroads throughout the country have supported this order. The Delaware Otsego Corp. which runs shortline service in several Eastern States including New Jersey, strongly support the ICC order.

On Monday, September 26, an article discussing this decision appeared in the New York Times. I commend this article to my colleagues for their examination of an issue which may soon come before this body, and ask that it be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

MAKING BETTER USE OF BOXCARS—I.C.C. MOVES CREATE FUROR

(By Agis Salpukas)

CAMDEN, N.J., Sept. 21.—Jack P. Bolyard, the terminal superintendant of the Pavonia rail yard here for Conrail, gestured toward a freight train that was being formed. "See those freight cars," he said. "They're going back empty."

The cars belonged to the Southern Pacific Railroad, which serves the Soutwest, and for each day they sat or traveled empty, Conrail was paying Southern an average of $16 each. To Mr. Bolyard, as to many other railroad officials, it is a waste of equipment and money.

Returning boxcars empty is a long-standing practice in the industry, supported until last May by the Interstate Commerce Commission, which has required the payments for empty cars. At least one economist has estimated that 81 percent of the nation's boxcars returned to their point of origin empty in 1981, costing railroads as much as $360 million.

DEREGULATION MOVE

All this is scheduled to change Nov. 7, under an I.C.C. deregulation decision that will limit the payments and provide other incentives to make better use of the nation's boxcars.

The empty-car payment system was created by Congress and the Interstate Commerce Commission in the 1970's to spur boxcar construction. But the need for such an incentive has long past. Boxcars generally carry twice the load, by weight, of trucks and for that reason are still the carrier of choice for many bulk shippers. More than that, railroads use less energy than trucks to transport the same amount of goods, and are seen as important competition that keep truck freight rates down.

Although the I.C.C.'s moves seem certain to save many rail lines a lot of money, the new policies have provoked a storm of protest from boxcar owners, short-line railroads, many shippers and legislators on both sides of Capitol Hill.

"As far as I can tell, never in the history of the commission has there been such an outcry over an I.C.C. decision," said Reese H. Taylor Jr., the chairman of the commission. He said that he has personally heard from 73 senators and 143 members of the House of Representatives who are considering supporting legislation to delay the deregulation.

RESULT OF INTENSE LOBBYING

Their objections are the result of intense lobbying. Some major boxcar companies, such as the Brae Corporation and the Itel Corporation, are afraid of losing the revenue from the empty car payments. Many short-line railroads are worried that the new I.C.C. decision could put them at the mercy of the larger lines, which will tighten their control of boxcar traffic. Some shippers are worried that the new policies will promote the storing of boxcars, leaving them without enough cars for their own shipments.

To Conrail, however, the I.C.C. move is a new lease on life. The federally subsidized railroad believes that the existing system would lead eventually to the collapse of its boxcar business, now about 10 percent of Conrail's total traffic. The number of boxcar loads Conrail carries annually has been dropping, to 288,000 by 1982, from the 796,000 it carried in 1977.

Conrail admits that it originally asked for the change, two years ago, and that the change would help it more than it would help most other railroads. Since most commodities that are carried in boxcars, such as wood and paper products, move from the Northwest or the South to the Northeast, Conrail is the terminating point for much of this traffic, and therefore is paying a disproportionate share of the empty car fees.

At the same time, manufactured goods from the Northeast such as appliances and furniture are now primarily moved by truck. Thus there is less volume to fill the empty boxcars going back to their starting points. Conrail therefore, ends up with more empty boxcars than other railroads.

The recent recession compounded this problem. The poor economy became an incentive for the railroads to load their own cars, instead of the empties of their competitors. That way, a Conrail boxcar, for example, would end up with another railroad and Conrail would collect, instead of pay, an empty car fee.

FEES INCREASED IN RECESSION

During the recession, because of complications in the Federal rate formulas, the empty car fees increased, allowing truckers to undercut rail rates and capture even more business from the boxcars.

"It's a crazy, backwards thing," Charles N. Marshall, the vice president of marketing for Conrail, said in an interview in his office at the railroad's headquarters in Philadelphia.

Conrail, however, now has been given some formidable tools by the commerce commission to change the system and reduce the shuttling of empty boxcars. The commission's plan will encourage railroads to store empty boxcars at no cost after three days. The fee for those first three days will vary widely, but will average about $16. The idea is to provide an incentive for railroads and other boxcar owners to keep cars from moving empty on other railroads.

The I.C.C. will, however, allow railroads to charge up to 35 cents a mile for moving empty boxcars when the move is authorized by boxcar owners, providing further incentive to the owner to find a load for the car.

According to Mr. Marshall, Conrail is negotiating with other railroads for more flexible freight rates, instead of relying on such punitive measures as the 35-cent backhaul charge. And it has already announced rebates and a reduction of some of its empty-car fees in an attempt to fill its boxcars.

SUPPORT OF OTHER RAILROADS

In addition, the carrier has won the support of several major railroads that initially opposed the commission's decision. They include the Southern Pacific, which runs primarily through the Southwest and Midwest, the Burlington Northern, which runs mainly from the Northwest to the Midwest, and some shortline carriers such as the Delaware Otswego system and the Bay Colony Railroad, which have signed agreements that conform with the new I.C.C. policies.

Nevertheless, Mr. Taylor, the I.C.C. chairman, is concerned that Congress could undo all of this. The original decision has sparked enough concern on Capitol Hill that he is afraid it could galvanize a coalition that would not only try to overturn the decision, but also slow the general move to deregulate the nation's railroads.

Mr. Taylor has felt all along that the commission should not have become involved in the issue because the railroads were already dealing with it themselves. "It's a classic example of needless Government interference in the private sector," he said. Mr. Taylor, in fact, was the lone dissenter to the commission's May 2 decision.

He also opposed it because he believes that boxcars are becoming obsolete. They have, for instance, been losing some of their markets to so-called piggy back carriers, railroads that carry truck trailers on flat cars, a form of transport that has been promoted by the railroads themselves. "We're helping to prolong something that will not be competitive anyway," said Mr. Taylor.

ACHIEVEMENT SCHOLARSHIP PROGRAM

● Mr. ARMSTRONG. Mr. President, many people look at the problems that confront our society and conclude that there is nothing an individual can do. But 10 years ago Helene Monberg, Washington news correspondent, decided that something could be done about the problem of youthful offenders who were continally in trouble with the law.

She launched a program called the achievement scholarship program designed to provide second-chance opportunities for youthful parolees and probationers in the Washington area. This privately funded program with strong volunteer effort has been very successful and provides an example to individuals and communities of how to constructively work toward permanent solutions to the problems of youthful offenders.

I commend Helene Monberg, a native of Leadville, Colo., for her untiring efforts on behalf of this program and ask that the attached description of the achievement scholarship program be printed in the RECORD. If is a program that deserves support and I commend it to my colleagues attention.

The material follows:

A PROGRAM FOR OUR TIME

The Achievement Scholarship Program (ASP) is a successful private industry and individual response to a tough social problem.

It has largely closed the revolving door for the ex-offender who qualifies for ASP help.

Founded in 1973, ASP provided seed-money, second-chance scholarships, now $1,000 per awardee, to parolees and probationers in the Washington metro area to go to college, trade school and special school. In the past year ASP has also started a limited community on-the-job training (OJT) program.

The results speak for themselves.

Recidivism is very, very low.

From March 1973 thru September 1983 ASP awarded 185 scholarships to 184 students, of whom 35 have completed their courses in college, trade school or special school, with several more scheduled to graduate before the end of the year. ASP's completion rate of 20 percent is equal to that of the general population, even tho all ASP awardees are ex-offenders.

During the fall of 1983 about 30 ASP awardees are in college or trade school, virtually all on ASP scholarships.

Since Sept. 16, 1982, ASP has filled 14 on-the-job training slots; six trainees are still at work in the ASP-opened job slots.

ASP has won five community service awards and citations in the past five years, mainly for its scholarship program, thru its volunteer executive director.

ASP has also had a major disappointment this year. It is unable at this time to enter into new OJT contracts with private employers because of lack of $$$$ to carry on both its scholarship program and a new community OJT program, so funding is going into the on-going successful scholarship program.

WHAT ASP IS

ASP provides seed-money scholarships and other help to Washington area ex-offenders on parole and probation toward their education. It was started in February 1973 by Helene C. Monberg, a veteran Washington news correspondent with long experience in working with youth as a volunteer, to help move ex-offenders back into the community as productive, contributing, law-abiding citizens. Its aim is to provide a positive alternative to the ex-offender to help him help himself. It is based on the premise that rehabilitation of ex-offenders can work, if carefully targeted.

The ultimate goal of ASP is to explode the myth that those who go thru the criminal court system are losers. ASP believes that many, even most, ex-offenders can become productive useful citizens thru education and training.

ASP works only thru established parole and probation offices in the Washington area. ASP awardees are carefully screened before they are given their scholarships to determine whether they have both the inherent ability and sufficient stability to "hack it" in college or trade school. They must maintain at least a C average to keep their scholarships.

Because ASP has always been privately funded, ASP has been able to experiment more than similar-type public agencies. ASP's sole interest is to meet a community need, not to build a bureaucracy.

ASP is a Washington, D.C-based nonprofit organization with two tax exemptions, one from the U.S. Internal Revenue Services and the other from the District of Columbia.

A unique feature of ASP is that virtually all paid employment goes to its awardees and trainees, all ex-offenders. ASP has employed eight awardees and trainees since 1975. Three currently work for ASP part-time.

Here are some ASP success stories:

An ASP awardee who recently graduated from college became a minister this year and plans to take over the ministry of a church next year.

A former ASP coordinator now works for the National Center on Institutions and Alternatives in the Washington area, and another has worked for the Washington Post.

An ASP awardee who attended a tractor-trailer driving school on ASP financing is now driving a truck-trailer for a major grocery chain in this area.

A former ASP awardee is an assistant engineer for the Washington Suburban Sanitary Commission and is also a registered real estate broker in Maryland. He also serves on the ASP board of directors.

A current ASP awardee recently said, "I have learned to measure success not only by test scores and grades, but also by individual commitment and effort made to improve our community—the greater Washington metro area—thru ASP."

This indicates ASP's long-term goal is doable: to have its own awardees ultimately take over the operation of the program.●

DEREGULATION OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS

● Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, recent reports have indicated an alarming deterioration in the quality of education in American schools. These analyses have made us all painfully aware of the critical need to reassess our education policy and search for ways in which we can restore excellence in education.

I strongly believe that the problem with the quality of education and the solution to that problem lie in one simple word, "Choice." The lack of choice has caused the failure in our educational system. Providing choice to every American will restore educational greatness.

To make choice effective, the consumer must come equipped not only with a choice of providers, but the financial ability to make his or her choice effective. We can do so through a system of vouchers, loans, tax credits, or grants.

Hopefully, we will design a national voucher financing program—not national vouchers. Education is a national priority, but its provision is a matter for community design. As a result, the financial access will be provided for those with the largest public financial burden. At the present time, that burden remains with the States. Accordingly, it is at the State level, rather than at the national level, that a voucher system could be designed to be administered at the community level.

Financing consumers would relieve families from the limitations of residential location. A State voucher program combined with a State-local tax source to finance it could eliminate property taxes as a source of local control and improve some of the existing intercommunity fiscal disparities which plague many States, particularly in older areas of the United States.

I also believe consumer financing and the increased competition it would bring would stimulate enthusiasm and increased professionalism amongst the teaching profession. In no other profession are those who actually deliver the services unable to reap the rewards of their efforts. Doctors, lawyers, dentists, all professionals must answer to their respective clients. In turn, however, they are rewarded for excellence. The teaching profession should be no exception.

Vouchers, while my preference, are not the only way to stimulate choice. As we debate various mechanisms to restore excellence in education, I believe it is important that we listen carefully to those individuals who have had extensive experience with choice in our educational system.

Gerald Rauenhorst, chairman of the Opus Corp. in Minneapolis, has served as a member of the Governor's Commission for Evaluation of Elementary and Secondary Teaching and is a member of the Minnesota Business Partnership studying Minnesota's educational system. Mr. Rauenhorst recently wrote an editorial for the Catholics Today magazine which clearly identifies the need for choice in education.

I would like to share his article with my colleagues, and I ask that the next of the article, "Deregulation of Public Schools Might Improve Education," be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

DEREGULATION OF PUBLIC SCHOOLS MIGHT IMPROVE EDUCATION

(By Gerald Rauenhorst)

(Rauenhorst, a regular contributor to the Catholic Bulletin, is chairman of Opus Corporation, a past member of the Governor's Commission for Evaluation of Elementary and Secondary Teaching and a member of the Minnesota Business Partnerhsip studying Minnesota's K-12 educational system.)

There is one public service provided to U.S. citizens in which the recipient has no choice of provider. A citizen who receives Medicare has the right to select his hospital and doctor. A food stamp recipient may select his own grocery store. Welfare payments and unemployment benefits are provided in dollars; the recipient chooses where to spend them. In one most important service, however, there is no choice whatsoever—education.

Each community has only one public school system. A family living on "A" Avenue and "B" Street is usually required to send its children to "C" school where each child is assigned to teacher "E" or "F". This assignment to school and teacher is regardless of the quality of education provided. The recipient's options are limited to accepting the assignment or to abandoning the system and forfeiting the government's support of this service. A family may choose a private school alternative—as long as the private school is government approved—and pay directly for education. However, for many the financial burden is so heavy that the private school is not a viable alternative.

The educational system in America today has been soundly criticized by the National Commission on Excellence in Education, which wrote "if an unfriendly foreign power had attempted to impose on America the mediocre educational performance that exists today, we might well have viewed it as an act of war. As it stands, we have allowed this to happen to ourselves." Given the composition of this commission—prominent educators and public spirited citizens—this is indeed a serious indictment of American public education.

I suggest that the time is right for deregulation of education. In this age of concern for the consumer, our government has seen fit to deregulate the telephone company and the airlines, and is working on the banks. AT&T has been cut up into eight separate companies, even though, unlike our public education system, no one disputes the fact that it is the world's best telephone company. With deregulation, the airlines are now free to fly to any cities they choose. The consumer has responded with delight to the options which have resulted from competition; he can choose to fly to Florida for $99 or $300.

It's my contention that until such time as the educational system is deregulated and the consumer is allowed an element of choice in schools and in teachers, we will see little, if any, improvement. A voucher system would be one way to introduce consumer choice in the selection of education services. However, given the strong opposition to a voucher system and the lobbying strength of the Minnesota Educational Association (MEA) locally and the National Education Association nationally, the voucher alternative has little chance of passing.

In Minnesota, after years of concerted effort to populate the legislature with teachers and former educators, the MEA has amassed considerable political power. As near as I can tell, there are more than 40 Minnesota legislators with public education ties. Somehow we must utilize or neutralize that power and find ways to move—however slowly—toward increasing each family's options, when selecting schools. Gradually, we must provide real freedom of choice. Only then will we significantly improve education quality for all.

Four years ago, I served on the governor's commission to evaluate elementary and secondary teaching in Minnesota. I was appalled to learn that there is only one criterion for the retention of teachers—seniority. In a layoff situation, a school's worst teacher who has been there 12 years would be retained while a school's best teacher with lesser seniority, say 11 years, would be terminated.

If indeed the situation is as bad as the national commission states, and I believe it is, it's time for every citizen to take an active part in correcting the system. I suggest that we begin by promoting competition, rewarding superior performance, and eliminating seniority as the sole criterion for teacher retention.

Unless these weaknesses are corrected by action of the citizens of this nation who are paying for our educational systems, we can expect the education of our youth to continue to deteriorate.●

THE SBIC PROGRAM MARKS ITS 25TH ANNIVERSARY

● Mr. BOSCHWITZ. Mr. President, four Minnesota business leaders were honored on Tuesday evening, September 27, when some 250 SBIC managers, government officials, and small business executives gathered in Washington to mark the 25th anniversary of the passage of the Small Business Investment Act.

These four individuals exemplify the spirit that has prevailed in Minnesota's business community for so long. I congratulate these individuals for their well-deserved honors, and am proud that my State's business leadership was once again recognized at the SBIC celebration.

Two of the honored guests were successful businessmen whose companies are nationally recognized leaders in their fields of operation. Luther Price is president and chief executive officer of Ault, Inc., of Minneapolis, 1 of the 12 businesses chosen for honors at the dinner. Ault, Inc., manufactures external power conversion products for computers and telecommunications equipment. Northwest Growth Fund, Inc., an SBIC in Minneapolis, first invested in Ault in 1968 when the firm had 130 employees, sales of $1.7 million, and was not profitable. In its latest fiscal year, Ault has grown to 370 employees, sales of $13.1 million and a high level of profitability. On August 25, 1983, Ault, Inc., had a successful public offering of its stock and is one of the very few black-owned businesses to sell its shares to the public.

The second successful Minnesota entrepreneur honored on September 27 was Wayne Huelskoetter, president of DICOMED Corp., also of Minneapolis. DICOMED designs and manufactures high performance computer graphics systems; it is a pioneer in the field of digital impage processing and its equipment was utilized by the Jet Propulsion Laboratory to convert computer data sent from spacecraft to those spectacular color photographs of Saturn and Mars which thrilled the entire Nation. First Midwest Capital Corp., a Minneapolis SBIC first invested in DICOMED in 1976.

Alan K. Ruvelson was honored as the founder and president of First Midwest Capital Corp., the country's first SBIC when it was licensed on March 19, 1959. First Midwest Capital has been an active supplier of venture capital to new and growing businesses in Minnesota and the upper Midwest for almost 25 years. Bud Ruvelson is also an important resource for our State. Active in Minnesota business and civic affairs, Mr. Ruvelson has also served as chairman of NASBIC and president of the Midwest Regional Association of SBIC's.

The fourth citizen of Minnesota who played an important role in the September 27 ceremony was Robert Zicarelli, chairman of Northwest Growth Fund and chairman of NASBIC this year. Mr. Zicarelli is a veteran venture capitalist; he has been in the industry for 30 years and has headed investment activities for Northwest Growth Fund since it was organized in 1960.

In a message delivered to the September 27 dinner, President Reagan congratulated the SBIC industry for investing over $4.5 billion in some 60,000 small businesses and also said:

But of more importance are the human resources developed by this program as private sector financial managers who operate the SBIC's and provide significant management expertise to many small businesses.

Mr. Ruvelson and Mr. Zicarelli exemplify the human resources praised by the President.

The celebration was jointly sponsored by the National Association of Small Business Investment Companies (NASBIC), the American Association of Minority Enterprise Small Business Investment Companies (AAMESBIC), and the Small Business Administration. This cooperative endeavor was most appropriate, because the SBIC industry is a pioneering example of a partnership bringing together the accomplishment of a public policy goal—equity capital for small business—with the drive of for-profit private companies.

I wish to add my congratulations to the SBIC industry for a job well done and pledge my assistance in making the program even more effective in promoting entrepreneurship and business growth.●

GSA AIR SERVICE CONTRACT PROGRAM

● Mr. MATHIAS. For the past several years, the General Services Administration (GSA) has obtained reduced air fare contracts for Government travel. As I understand the program, GSA awards contracts to airlines on a competitive basis, and Federal employees are required to use the air carrier awarded the contract for a particular route.

Mr. ABDNOR. That is correct. The GSA program generates revenue and passengers for the participating carriers, while reducing the overall cost of Federal travel. Through the implementation of this discount program, the Government has saved over 50 percent in fares on the most widely used routes.

Mr. MATHIAS. I commend GSA's efforts to keep down the cost of Government travel. I am concerned, however, about the GSA's unintentional creation of an artificial barrier between Baltimore-Washington International (BWI) and the two Federal airports in its negotiations for air travel in the greater Washington area. GSA is under the impression that BWI serves just Baltimore, and thereby compels Federal workers in Washington to forgo services at BWI by awarding contracts only to airlines serving Dulles and National Airports.

Mr. ABDNOR. If I understand the Senator, the exclusion of BWI from negotiations for the Washington market prevents those Federal workers living in the proximity of BWI from enjoying the most efficient and most convenient traveling arrangements.

Mr. MATHIAS. That is correct. For many Federal workers, particularly those in the Maryland suburbs of Prince Georges and Montgomery Counties, BWI is as convenient or more convenient than National and Dulles. By compelling them to use the two Federal airports, GSA is increasing overall travel costs. I am simply asking that GSA accept standard aviation industry practice by including all three airports in its Washington contract. In so doing, GSA will extend Federal employees the same choice of airports available to the public generally.

Mr. ABDNOR. You have made a persuasive case. This strategy should be successful in further reducing overall travel time and cost for Government business.

Mr. MATHIAS. Yes, The House has included language in the appropriations bill that does just that, by directing GSA to include BWI as an area of service to Washington. I trust the conference committee will be instructed to accept this rational approach to Government travel.

Mr. ABDNOR. This is certainly an approach which should be followed. I can assure you that I will take steps to insure that GSA begins to include BWI in the Washington contract area.●

DUCKTRAP RIVER FISH FARM

● Mr. COHEN. Mr. President, a recent edition of MaineLife magazine featured a story about Des Fitzgerald's Ducktrap River Fish Farm which I believe will be of interest to many Members of the Senate. This story describes a unique and promising aquaculture enterprise that has been operating in Lincolnville, Maine, for the past 5 years and, I am pleased to announce, is fast becoming an established Maine business.

Food production from aquaculture has a bright future in our Nation and will complement our commercial fisheries. Although the domestic consumption of fish and fish products is only slowly increasing, this high-protein, low-fat food will be gaining more and more acceptance in American homes as health-conscious consumers become more familiar with fish and how to prepare it.

Des Fitzgerald makes eating fish easy, removing the need for his customers to prepare it by providing a ready-to-eat smoked product. Not only does Des smoke the trout that he raises on the farm; he also purchases salmon and mussels from outside sources and smokes and packages them for sale across the country.

The Ducktrap River Fish Farm epitomizes the pioneering spirit needed in American business and I am pleased to bring this delicious Maine aquaculture enterprise to the attention of my colleagues.

Mr. President, I ask that the article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

DUCKTRAP RIVER FISH FARM: A DELICIOUS MAINE ENTERPRISE

(By Robert Sardinsky)

The pungent odor of smoked fish drifts around Des Fitzgerald's place. As I stood on the slope overlooking his Ducktrap River Fish Farm I couldn't keep from imagining biting into one. I kept thinking of that smell, but I was there to speak with Des.

Des was down by the fish ponds below throwing tin-fulls of feed to his trout. His face beamed with satisfaction. I quickly saw why. As the feed pellets hit the water each pond erupted into a frothing mass of activity as the dark-speckled and silver-streaked bodies of thousands of trout broke through the surface and snatched the chow. Twenty seconds later there wasn't a ripple on the water.

Between rounds feeding the fish, checking in on the smoker, packaging orders, preparing ingredients for brine cures and phoning customers, Des told me about the evolution of his business. He established Ducktrap River Fish Farm in 1978 when he constructed the eight ponds he was now standing among. "In the beginning," he recalled, "I hoped to supply fresh fish to local markets and to earn a weekly paycheck which I could comfortably live on and support a family with. Later I started the smoking operation because the demand for fresh fish slackened during the winter months when there are fewer people in these parts. I felt this would be a good way to diversify and expand the business." While Des's business and reputation have grown considerably since 1978, he is still trying to develop his operation to a point where it is more profitable and doesn't consume the bulk of his waking hours.

Des Fitzgerald is an articulate, easygoing, 31-year-old Harvard graduate who has worked with or been around fish for much of his life. He is one of only a handful of fresh water aquaculturists in New England who produce fish for the "table market." None of the others also operates his own smokehouse. Besides raising and smoking the fish, he manages the business and markets his products in this unique combination of complementary ventures. "There is almost nothing more exciting than establishing a small business and making it succeed," Des said with conviction, "but it takes an incredible amount of work and sacrifice. I like keeping busy and having my hands in a little of everything. I'd go crazy if I had to do just one thing all day long."

HATCHING A PLAN

Des first thought seriously about starting his own fish farming business while working with a trout farmer in California after completing his college biology studies. From California he traveled north to the University of Washington where he took courses in aquaculture for a year. During this time he decided that starting a trout farm would be a wonderful way to combine his interest in biology with running a business and working outdoors. With the decision made he moved to Maine, where he had spent much of his childhood, and set out to find a suitable site.

Good aquaculture sites were extremely hard to find, especially for trout, which need lots of cool, clean water year-round. In addition Des wanted to be near the coast where a large market existed for his fish and established shipping routes were within easy reach. After trodding through farmers' fields and overgrown woods for a year measuring stream temperatures and flow rates, he put a deposit on a piece of land outside of Lincolnville which bordered on Kendal Brook, a tributary of Ducktrap River. The brook's temperature proved to be a little too warm in summer and cool in winter, so Des needed a high-capacity well to moderate the water's temperature fluctuations before he could proceed. However, the hydrologist and geologist he consulted felt the site held little hope of producing the volume of water needed.

Out of desperation, Des decided to see if a dowser could find water on his land where conventional methods had failed. He called Edgar Libby, "the water witch of Thomaston." Edgar had worked for more than 400 clients during his 25-year dowsing career in the mid-coastal region. Just moments after he began walking the land, Edgar's dowsing rod lept towards the ground. After several more passes he exclaimed, "By Gawd, Des, she's a corker! The biggest I've ever dowsed."

Sure enough, after drilling through 190 feet of bedrock Des struck a vein yielding 150 gallons of water per minute. With two high-volume wells drilled and the proper fish raising and stream diversion permits secured, he took possession of the land. After clearing and leveling a wooded site, Des constructed eight five-foot-deep gravel and dirt raceways ranging in size from 12 by 50 feet to 50 by 75 feet.

By the fall of 1978, 60,000 three-inch fingerlings were swimming in the new ponds. Unfortunately, much of the local wildlife quickly learned of the fingerlings' presence. Otter, mink and raccoons emerged from the woods to sample the menu. Osprey, herons and kingfishers dropped in for a meal from above. At 30 to 40 cents per fingerling, Des's costs quickly mounted. He stretched nets over the ponds and set out traps around the perimeter to deter or remove these unwelcome predators. Des also got insurance coverage from Lloyds of London, the only company that would write the policy, to protect him in case of major loss.

"The first winter was horrendous," Des recalled. "I spent most of my time trying to keep the fish healthy and alive. The ponds leaked, pumps failed and leaves continuously clogged the screen covering the brook intake pipes. I knew, though, that if I made it through the first winter, things would be okay."

Des survived the winter and so did most of the trout. By summer he was selling fish weighing one-half to one pound. His customers were delighted with the taste and freshness. "In the beginning I made a decision to offer the finest quality and freshest fish possible," Des explained. "I figured the only way I could compete against the large, commercial fish farms in places such as Idaho, where most of the trout you buy in New England comes from, was to offer a superior product." Des accomplished this by keeping close watch on his fish, giving them high quality feeds and getting harvested fish to market quickly. The relatively small scale of his operation, which he runs with the help of one full-time and three part-time employees, enables him to pay close attention to the fish. Des harvests about 70,000 Rainbow and Brook trout a year, but some large commercial fish farms harvest this amount in one week.

A CONCERN FOR QUALITY

Des could automate much of his operation, as the larger facilities do, but it is very important to him from a husbandry point of view to observe the fish frequently, especially at feeding time. "I look forward to going out each day and feeding the fish—except when the black flies are real hungry," Des said. "I can pick up on problems caused by poor water quality, disease or even the presence of predators by watching how they feed. It's crucial that there be adequate dissolved oxygen, proper water temperatures and enough water flow to carry away the fish wastes. If the trout are under any kind of stress they won't feed."

The trout convert every two pounds of feed into one pound of meat. Their protein-packed diet consists of trout chow, which is mostly Penobscot Bay herring, and shrimp meal, a by-product of the local canning industry. Of course the trout help themselves to the large indigenous insect population as well. The fish grow about one inch per month and are ready for market six to seven months from the time the hatchery-bred fingerlings arrive.

Des and his crew don their waders and grab their harvest nets two or three times a week. Once caught, the fish are quickly rinsed and dressed before being shipped out. Fish markets and restaurants across the state usually receive them within two to six hours, so the customer gets an exceptionally fresh, pink-meated fish which looks and tastes as if it were just caught in a local stream. In comparison, most trout in New England markets take four days to get there and have paler colored and blander tasting meat.

When the demand for Des's trout slowed during his first winter in full production he started taking some of his fish to be smoked at a facility in Saint George. Many of his fresh fish customers loved the new product, and Des launched into the smoked fish business. He couldn't afford to buy a smoker, so he continued to have fish smoked in St. George, an hour away. The back and forth traveling time mounted, though, and Des lacked control over the quality of the finished product. A year and a half later he invested in an English-made smoker capable of handling 200 trout. Since then, he has doubled his smoking capacity.

The smoker, a glistening, rectangular, stainless steel box measuring nine feet long by three feet high by two feet deep, is located inside a 30-foot square, pine-sided building which sits on a hillside overlooking the fish ponds. This structure also contains a small office, walk-in cooler and a fish processing and shipping area.

Des quickly learned that it takes practice and know-how to make a great-tasting smoked fish. His expensive equipment had little value until he developed the recipes to prepare and flavor the fish and the techniques to use the smoker effectively. Most commercial smokehouses use automated processing equipment and commercially prepared cures and flavorings. There are few old-time smokers left carrying on the traditional ways in which Des was interested. To learn these old methods he spoke with other smokers, studied traditional recipes and started experimenting.

"I burned up a lot of fish, lost a fair bit of money and spent many late nights learning the fine art of smoking," Des recalled. "The chemical reactions between the wood smoke, brine solution and proteins and fats in the fish meat are extremely complex. There are hundreds of variables to consider in smoking fish. These include everything from the age of the fish to the humidity and temperature in the smoker." Of equal importance, the brine—which includes salt, spices, herbs and sugars—must be properly balanced and its temperature and the soaking time of the fish controlled. All of these factors must be in sync to get a good product with consistent quality.

Des fills the smoker's three shoebox-sized fireboxes with wood chips and shavings which produce slow-burning, smoldering embers. He carefully regulates a fan which draws smoke from the firebox through the smoking chamber where up to 400 trout can be smoked at a time. The cool smoke flavors and tans the meat but doesn't cook it. This process is precisely controlled with an electric heating element.

Once he had mastered the art of smoking trout Des started to experiment with several varieties of Western salmon, Atlantic salmon and cultivated Maine and Irish grown mussels—two other types of smoked delicacies which he hoped to market successfully.

FINE POINTS

Des uses many different recipes and methods to smoke the fish he works with. Like most smokers he gave me a general idea of what procedures and recipes he uses, but I didn't find out about many of the fine details or the ingredients which make his product unique: These are trade secrets.

Smoking salmon involves the most work. The Western salmon, Atlantic salmon, trout and mussels are each enriched in a different brine of salts, sugars, herbs and spices and then enhanced by a cold or hot smoking process using fruitwoods and hardwoods. Des adds a minimal amount of salt to the brine along with ingredients such as ginger, dill, garlic, pepper, honey and brown sugar. The abundance of sawmills in the area gives him a great variety of woods to choose from. For example, he combines oak, maple, cherry and apple to produce a richly tanned side of smoked Western salmon. Des uses different types and combinations of woods with the Atlantic salmon and the trout and mussels. The salmon undergo a slow cold-smoking process which can take up to 24 hours, while the trout and mussels are hot smoked in about six and three hours, respectively. During the process he adjusts the temperature four times to properly "firm up" the meat. In cold smoking, the temperature is set no higher than 100 degrees Fahrenheit, while in hot smoking it is raised up to 180 degrees Fahrenheit.

Des refuses to add artificial color, flavor or preservatives to his fish though many commercially smoked fish are pumped full of these. "Many large smokehouses use chemical smokes in place of the real smoking or will buy inferior fish and artificially color them to improve their appearance," Des said, "I've seen some packaged smoked fish with a stamped shelf life of one year. Most smoked fish ordered through the mail are filled with preservatives as well. Smoked fish is very perishable. Rather than use these I smoke my fish fresh on order and send them out in insulated, iced boxes. This way my customers get a fresh, pure product."

Within a year of acquiring his smoker, the demand for Des' smoked and fresh fish exceeded the amount of fish he could supply from his own ponds. Des couldn't construct any more raceways because of limited water resources, so he started buying fresh Idaho trout to smoke with his own. By then he also had outgrown his first smoker, so he replaced it with a unit with twice the capacity.

NOTHING BUT THE BEST

Since there is a great deal of competition in the smoked fish business, Des decided the only way he could create a demand for his fish in this market was to produce a high-quality product which would appeal to people with a fine sense of taste and aesthetics. "Our total product is our signature," Des said, "not just our fish or logo. We go to great lengths in every step in our work, ranging from getting the best salmon available to beautifully packaging our smoked fish for mail order customers, to provide a superior products." Last year, his fourth of smoking fish, he sold 20,000 pounds of trout, 10,000 pounds of salmon and 2,000 pounds of mussels. This year he expects to sell twice as much trout and salmon and five times the amount of mussels. Ninety percent of this goes to restaurants, fish markets and gourmet shops; Des sells the rest through the mail.

Des sends his fish all across the country. People find out about it by word of mouth and through the small advertisements he places in such publications as the New York Times and Bon Apetit. Because of Des' growing reputation many people want to stop by for a visit. Unfortunately, Ducktrap isn't open to the public. Des and his small crew are kept busier than they like just tending and smoking fish. Besides, company disturbs Des' trout, so he likes to keep things quiet around the farm.

Des shipped over 1,000 boxes of smoked fish during the three weeks prior to last Christmas alone. The fish are beautifully packaged in pine boxes, and the lids are branded with Ducktrap River Fish Farm's name and trout logo. Des's customers find a row of golden-tanned smoked trout inside or a lush-pink, richly colored salmon fillet. A Balsam fir bough in the corner of each box provides some contrasting green coloring and adds "just a little bit of Maine" to each order. It's a very pretty sight. Some customers probably have a hard time deciding between eating the fish or framing the box and its contents. That is, until they smell the fish.

Des is proud of the growth of his business. It gives him satisfaction to produce a good product and employ people, especially when there is something left for him after paying bills and handing out paychecks. But he'd like to be better paid for his efforts. "It's easy to exploit and cheat yourself when you're the sole proprietor of a business. You have to step back from your work to get a realistic view of how a business is doing," he said. "Without an objective analysis it's easy to delude yourself into thinking that the business is or will be profitable. You can kid yourself at the end of the week for only so long. I need to expand my business to bring in the kind of revenues which adequately compensate me for investment in time and money." To accomplish this Des is dreaming once again of purchasing a larger smoker. In the meantime he is keeping busy tending his trout, stoking the smoker, filling orders, recruiting new customers and trying not to eat up all the profits.

Marketing his products is the biggest challenge Des has at this time. Whenever he gest a chance he takes samples of his products to owners of fish markets, restaurants and gourment shops up and down the East Coast, but his responsibilities at Ducktrap don't give him the free time he needs to market his products as aggressively as he'd like. "My product is better than the others," he said, "but I can't tell people how it's different—they have to taste it. That's fine, though, because then my product becomes my most important sales tool. It sells itself once I can give people a chance to try it."

By the end of my stay at Ducktrap River Fish Farm I was famished. All day we had talked about fish, and I had smelled the tantalizing aromas coming from the smokehouse, so I asked Des if I could try his fish. He invited me into the smokehouse to taste some trout, salmon and mussels. After savoring several succulent morsels of each I understand why Des couldn't explain the subtle differences between his smoked fish and others. I couldn't describe them either, but his was the best I had ever tasted.●

THE JETS IN NEW JERSEY

● Mr. LAUTENBERG. Mr. President, last Sunday, sports fans throughout the Metropolitan New York area and many watching on television saw a thrilling overtime victory by the New York Jets over the Los Angeles Rams. Yesterday's New York Times brought other thrilling news—the Jets might well be playing next season in the Meadowlands Sports Complex in New Jersey.

New Jerseyites are justly proud of the sports facilities located in the Hackensack Meadowlands Giants Stadium, as it is presently known, is one of the best places to watch a football game that one could hope to find.

Jets fans, their management, and players, have a proud tradition. This team is of Super Bowl caliber with such outstanding performers as Richard Todd, Wesley Walker, and Freeman McNeil. New Jersey is anxious to have the Jets and their fans, old and new, in the Meadowlands in 1984.●

A PROFILE OF SENATOR MAX BAUCUS

● Mr. PRYOR. Mr. President, a recent issue of the Journal published by the National Association of Retail Druggists included a profile of our colleague, MAX BAUCUS, the distinguished Senator from Montana. In this article he is described as "the young, attractive, hard-working Big Sky Country Senator."

I agree with this assessment, and with the further point that he knows the right approaches to the health problems of this country. I wish to have this article from the NARD Journal published in the RECORD at this point.

The article follows:

HILL'S MARATHON RUNNER ON HEALTH—MONTANA'S BAUCUS WIELDS INFLUENCE ON PHARMACY ISSUES

Most policy makers in Washington, D.C., have a hard time understanding that the solutions to health problems in Manhattan, New York, are not the same as they are in Manhattan, Montana." Montana? All health providers, including NARD members, will want to become more familiar with the young, attractive, hardworking Big Sky Country Senator who made that observation: Max Sieben Baucus.

Baucus has never had difficulty getting attention and results. When he was a newly elected congressman in 1975, he recalled for NARD that he is certain that Joe Califano, then head of HEW, "still remembers me delivering a pick-up truck full of angry letters to his office." The cause of concern: federal health guidelines that discriminated against small rural communities.

Baucus has made health issues—especially long-term care and health in rural communities—his congressional specialty. Early on, he served on the House Appropriations Committee with jurisdiction over the FDA. After his election to the Senate in 1978, at age 36, he was appointed to serve on the prestigious Judiciary and Finance Committees. Today, he is the chief Democrat on the Health Subcommittee chaired by Senator Dole. Baucus and subcommittee chairman David Durenberger, with whom he works very closely, will shape the future of all public third-party programs, but especially Medicare and Medicaid.

ON THE RUN

If, as it is said, fairness, hard work, and sincerity are characteristic of those from our Western Mountain region, Baucus is the prototype. When asked about Baucus, one of his colleagues commented: "In addition to the immense responsibilities, he spent last fall knocking on doors from dawn to dusk campaigning and then flew to New York to run the 26-mile marathon in three hours and six minutes. Need I say more?"

Baucus supported NARD's 1981 victorious campaign to retain Medicaid recipient's freedom of choice for pharmaceutical services and products. He was less enthusiastic, however, about continued funding for DESI drugs. In 1982, he joined a bipartisan majority of the Finance Committee in rejecting the Reagan proposed 3 percent cut in the optional Medicaid Drug Program. Presently, he and his staff are working with NARD on the copay and fixed fee.

When asked by NARD about the Reagan Medicare proposals, including the anti-small business competitive bidding for DME, Baucus observed: "I and others—including a number of moderate Republicans—are concerned about this. We fear that this Administration's health experts work in Medicare like they'd peel an onion. Without being too dramatic, it's as if they strip away layer after layer, year after year—until all you're left with is the tears."

MEDICARE SOLVENCY

The senator's primary concern is the solvency of the Medicare Part A hospital insurance trust fund. About the impending financial crisis, Baucus reports, "Actuaries project that the fund will be exhausted sometime during 1987. 1987!" Subjecting hospitals, the major culprit, to prospective payment in 1982 was in his view "a step in the right direction." But, he is concerned that cost shifting might lead to all-payer rate regulation.

As chairman of the Democratic Medicare Task Force, he has called on the Administration to establish a bipartisan assessment of Medicare similar to the recent Social Security Commission approach.

Baucus, likewise, is concerned about the escalating costs of private health insurance. He volunteers that "health benefits add an extra $20 to the price of a ton of steel and as much as $400 to each automobile." As to the future, he has no predictions, but adds that Congress "will be guided less by ideological commitment to regulation or competition strategies than by pragmatism. If an approach saves money, Congress will give it serious condsideration."

As with any major policy maker, the more that can be learned about his home and programs in the home state, the better equipped one is to understand Max Baucus and Medicaid. Geographically, as the fourth largest state, the borders of Montana could comfortably contain 11 other states including New York, Pennsylvania, and Maryland. Yet, with a population approximating that of Baltimore, Maryland, or only .35 percent of the U.S., each square mile in Montana finds only six people in contrast to 426 in Maryland, 733 in Massachusetts, 979 in New Jersey, or 60 in Texas.

Under Montana's $3.3 million Medicaid Drug Program (the U.S. total is $1.57 billion), which serves 30,000 recipients, there are no quantity of medication or dollar limits, refills are as directed by practitioners, and there is no formulary. After deducting a .64 percent federal share, the state of Montana expends $21 million of its $900 million budget for its total Medicaid program. While Medicaid budgets in several states equal Montana's total budget, its state and local expeditures for services per capita ($1,145) is well in excess of the average for the East, Midwest, and Southern states—respectively, 1,108, 951, and 829. Each of these factors provides additional insight.

KEY POSITIONS

"Max," as his colleagues call him, has assignments impacting independent pharmacy in many areas in addition to the third-party programs. He has chaired the IRS Oversight Committee and championed the estate and gift tax reform, of which he is also a strong advocate as a member of the Senate Small Business Committee. On the Judiciary Committee, his priorities include regulatory and bankrupty reform as well as crime control. As a key member of the Laxalt Crime Subcommittee, he has sponsored the NARD pharmacy robbery legislation. Additionally, he finds time to serve as Deputy Whip to Senate leaders Cranston and Byrd.

Prior to his election to the Senate, Senator Baucus served two terms in the U.S. House of Representatives. From 1967 to 1969, Baucus served as a staff attorney with the Civil Aeronautics Board in Washington, D.C., and was on the legal staff at the Securities and Exchange Commission from 1969 to 1971. He served as legal assistant to the Chairman of the SEC from 1970 to 1971.

Returning to Montana, Senator Baucus entered private law practice in Missoula in 1971. He served as acting executive director and committee coordinator of Montana's Constitutional Convention and, in 1972, was elected to the Montana Legislature.

Baucus was born in Helena, MT forty-one years ago. He earned a B.A. in economics from Stanford University in 1964, and received his LL.B from Stanford Law School in 1967. He is married to the former Wanda Minge and has a six-year-old son named Zeno.

NARD members should keep an eye on this long-distance runner, who shares their commitment to hard work and free enterprise. It is unlikely, however, that we will be looking at him from over our shoulder.●

CHILD HEALTH DAY, 1983

● Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, October 3 will mark the observance of Child Health Day, 1983, proclaimed by President Reagan to enlist the American people—parents, volunteers, health professionals, and educators—in a new effort to insure that no child who need medical care is denied access to the care that he or she needs.

In his proclamation, the President invited all citizens, and agencies and organizations interested in child welfare, to unite in activities directed to broadening the general awareness of the health care needs of our Nation's children. As cochairman of the recently formed Senate Children's Caucus, I am acutely aware that the health care needs of our youth are great.

An important purpose of our Senate caucus is to work with local and national children's groups collecting and disseminating critical information we hope can form a base for effective action. One organization with whom we cooperate is the National Children's Eye Care Foundation, which is doing important work in pediatric ophthalmology. In a recent report to NCECF members, Dr. Marshall M. Parks, president, provided some heartrending facts.

One in 20 preschoolers, 3 to 5 years old, has a visual problem. Among school-age children, 6 to 17, the number is 1 in 4. Nearly 700,000 under age 17 suffer vision impairment, and more than 40,000 under 20 are blind. "The problem is real, it is big, and it is growing," Dr. Marshall said. A tragic truth, indeed.

Mr. President, I ask that the President's Proclamation of Child Health Day, 1983, and Dr. Marshall's recent report on the staggering problem of visual impairment among American young people be printed in the RECORD.

The information follows:

CHILD HEALTH DAY, 1983

(By the President of the United States of America)

A PROCLAMATION

More than anything else, we seek the blessing of good health for our children. We hope for the sound minds in sound bodies that lead to lives of strength and achievement.

Through the resources of a health care system second to none, this Nation strives to protect all of our children from preventable diseases, to encourage behavior that fosters good health, and to treat their episodic illnesses.

Unfortunately, some children are burdened with disabilities and chronic illnesses and need long-term healing and care. Their ability to thrive and to contribute to society depends on their receiving the kinds of treatment and health care that are available in this country as in few other places on earth.

Our task on this Child Health Day, 1983, is to fuse our efforts as parents, volunteers, health professionals, and educators to help all children—particularly those with special health needs—take advantage of opportunities that enable them to heal, to grow, and to achieve everything of which they are capable.

Now, therefore, I, Ronald Reagan, President of the United States of America, pursuant to a joint resolution of May 18, 1928, as amended (36 U.S.C. 143), do hereby proclaim Monday, October 3, 1983, as Child Health Day, 1983.

I urge all Americans to join me in encouraging good health habits and attitudes in our children and invite all citizens and all agencies and organizations interested in child welfare to unite on Child Health Day with appropriate observances and activities directed toward establishing such practices in the youth of our country.

In witness whereof, I have hereunto set my hand this 8th day of Aug., in the year of our Lord nineteen hundred and eighty-three, and of the Independence of the United States of America the two hundred and eighth.

RONALD REAGAN.

VISUAL DISABILITY OF AMERICA'S CHILDREN—A NATIONAL TRAGEDY

(Report by Marshall M. Parks, M.D., President, National Children's Eye Care Foundation)

The number of children afflicted by some sort of visual disorder is alarming. One in 20 pre-schoolers, ages 3 to 5, has a visual problem. Among school-age children, 6 to 17, the number jumps to one in four. Nearly 700,000 under age 17 suffer vision impairment with more than 50,000 new cases reported each year. And more than 40,000 under the age of 20 are blind, representing 8 percent of the U.S. total and increasing at the rate of 5,000 cases per year. The total economic cost of visual disorders in the U.S. exceeds $5 billion a year. The point here is not to stagger you with statistics, but to define the scope of the problem. The problem is real, it is big, and it is growing.

But perhaps more than any of these, the problem is tragic because many of these cases could have been prevented in the first place or corrected with early diagnosis and treatment. One of the most common causes of visual problems in children, for example, is amblyopia, or "lazy eye." Caught in time, this condition is almost always reversible. Yet today, more than 5 million Americans suffer to some degree from amblyopia.

While a number of organizations deal with the sight in general, the National Children's Eye Care Foundation is the only one dedicated solely to advancing medical, surgical and preventive care for children's eyes. Founded about 10 years ago as a regional group, NCECF evolved as a national organization in 1981, much as pediatric ophthalmology evolved as a discrete medical discipline. In other words, the medical community has started to recognize children as children, not as "tiny" adults.

Today, NCECF devotes its resources to three principal areas—training, research and education. The Foundation has launched a nationwide program of grants and loans to fund post-residency fellowships that have trained more than 20 doctors in the specialty of pediatric ophthalmology.

At the same time, NCECF has actively supported research, providing more than $350,000 for research relating to children's eye care.

The third and, in many ways, most important endeavor of the foundation is education. The process is targeted at parents, guardians and teachers. The child is often the last to know if he or she is having difficulty seeing. After all, a child has no frame of reference other than his or her own vision. Moreover, children live in a close-up world of immediate surroundings, making it even more difficult for them to isolate a problem.

The Foundation provides valuable guidelines for early detection and care of visual disorders in children. Some of these require careful attention to the child's behavior and physical appearance. Others are nothing more than basic common sense. Parents and educations should not wait for symptoms to "pass" or assume their children or students will "outgrow" them.

Finally, we must redouble our safety efforts. Nearly 200,000 school children between the ages of 5 and 7 sustain serious eye injuries each year. Many of these result in permanent loss of vision in one or both eyes. And nearly all preventable. Three-fourths of these injuries occur during unsupervised play or sports.

Again, the onus falls squarely on adults.●

DR. MARTIN M. CUMMINGS

● Mr. MATHIAS. Mr. President, tomorrow, Dr. Martin M. Cummings, the man who has directed the National Library of Medicine of the National Institutes of Health for two decades, will retire. Dr. Cummings' distinguished career has spanned nearly 40 years of Federal service.

Dr. Cummings has been an outstanding public administrator. During his tenure as Director of the National Library of Medicine, he was noted not only as an excellent manager, but a scholar who encouraged his staff to pursue biomedical research as well as to enhance their technical reponsibilities. Thanks to his leadership, the Library has met the challenge of acquiring and disseminating the unprecedented mass of new medical information published in recent years. He, himself, has more than 100 scientific and historical publications to his credit.

The enduring legacy of Martin M. Cummings is that he termed the concept that a national library devoted to medicine can be more than a mere collection of books and journals into a reality. The medical world and the entire Nation owe him a great debt of gratitude.●

ORDERS FOR ACTION TO BE TAKEN DURING THE ADJOURNMENT AND ON MONDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1983

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate convenes on Monday, October 3, 1983, the reading of the Journal be dispensed with, no resolutions come over under the rule, the call of the calendar be dispensed with, and following the recognition of the two leaders under the standing order, there be a period for the transaction of routine morning business not to exceed 1 hour in length, with Senators permitted to speak therein for not more than 10 minutes each; and provided further that the morning hour be deemed to have expired.

I further ask unanimous consent that during the adjournment of the Senate over until Monday, the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to receive messages from the President of the United States and the House of Representatives and that they be appropriately referred and the Vice President and President pro tempore be authorized to sign duly enrolled bills and joint resolutions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXTENSION OF AUTHORITIES UNDER THE EXPORT ADMINISTRATION ACT

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask the Chair to lay before the Senate, Calendar No. 414, H.R. 3962.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alaska?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The bill (H.R. 3962) to extend the authorities under the Export Administration Act of 1979 until October 14, 1983.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, this is a clean bill. It is a simple extension of the Export Administration Act for a period of 14 days.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is before the Senate and open to amendment. If there be no amendment to be offered, the question is on the third reading and passage of the bill.

The bill (H.R. 3962) was ordered to a third reading, was read the third time, and passed.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

EDUCATION AND CONSOLIDATION AND IMPROVEMENT ACT OF 1981

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Labor Committee be discharged from further consideration of H.R. 1035, Education and Consolidation and Improvement Act of 1981, and I ask that it be placed on the calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Alaska?

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, there is no objection.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ORDER FOR MODIFICATION IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 3929

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that in the engrossment of the bill H.R. 3929, extend Federal supplemental benefits, that the Cohen amendment No. 2227, be modified to reflect January 1, 1984, instead of January 1, 1983.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, is there an order for convening on Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. There is no such order.

ORDER FOR ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1983

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in adjournment until 12 noon on Monday.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ADJOURNMENT UNTIL MONDAY, OCTOBER 3, 1983

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, if there be no further business to come before the Senate, I move, in accordance with the order previously entered, that the Senate stand in adjournment until the hour of 12 noon on Monday.

The motion was agreed to and, at 7:03 p.m., the Senate adjourned until Monday, October 3, 1983, at 12 noon.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate September 30, 1983:

DEPARTMENT OF COMMERCE

Richard L. McElheny, of Arizona, to be an Assistant Secretary of Commerce.

BOARD FOR INTERNATIONAL BROADCASTING

Michael Novak, of the District of Columbia, to be a member of the Board for International Broadcasting for a term expiring April 28, 1985.

DEPARTMENT OF STATE

Terence A. Todman, of the Virgin Islands, a career member of the Senior Foreign Service, class of Career Minister, to be Ambassador Extraordinary and Plenipotentiary of the United States of America to Denmark.

The above nominations were approved subject to the nominees' commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.

IN THE ARMY

The following-named Army Medical Department officers for appointment in the U.S. Army to the grade indicated under the provisions of Title 10, United States Code, Sections 611(a) and 624:

To be permanent major general

Brig. Gen. William P. Winkler, Jr., xxx-xx-x... xxx-... Medical Corps, U.S. Army.

Brig. Gen. Tracy E. Strevey, Jr., xxx-xx-x... xxx-... Medical Corps, U.S. Army.

IN THE AIR FORCE

The following-named officer under the provisions of title 10, United States Code, section 601, to be reassigned to a position of importance and responsibility designated by the President under title 10 United States Code, section 601:

To be general

Gen. Jerome F. O'Malley, xxx-xx-xxxx FR, U.S. Air Force.

The following-named officer under the provisions of title 10, United States Code, section 601, to be assigned to a position of important and responsibility designated by the President under title 10, United States Code, section 601:

To be general

Lt. Gen. Lawrence A. Skantze, xxx-xx-xxxx xxx-... FR, U.S. Air Force.

The following-named officer under the provisions of title 10, United States Code, section 601, to be reassigned to a position of important and responsibility designated by the President under title 10, United States Code, section 601:

To be lieutenant general

Lt. Gen. Robert D. Russ, xxx-xx-xxxx FR, U.S. Air Force.

Air Force nominations beginning Philip N. Brown, and ending Sal A. Leone, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on September 20, 1983.

Air Force nominations beginning Gary J. Abbate, and ending Wayne R. Zimmerman, which nominations were received by the Senate and appeared in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD on September 20, 1983.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, September 30, 1983

The House met at 10 a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
September 29, 1983.

I hereby designate the Honorable JIM WRIGHT to act as Speaker pro tempore on Friday, September 30, 1983.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. James David Ford, D.D., offered the following prayer:

O God, with these words of prayer we praise Your name and give You thanks for this new day. Yet, make us aware that words alone do not feed the hungry or protect the weak or give hope to the needy. Remind us that the good words that we speak are made real in the actions that we take. We pray in Your holy name. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Pursuant to clause 1, rule I, the Journal stands approved.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate agrees to the Report of the Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3415) entitled "An Act making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.".

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 3, 5, 7, 9, 10, 11, 13, 14, 16, and 20 to the above entitled bill.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 284. Joint resolution commemorating the Twenty-fifth Anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment, in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 366. Joint resolution to provide for the temporary extension of certain insurance programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes.

TODAY IS DAY REAGAN PROMISED TO BALANCE THE BUDGET

(Mr. ALEXANDER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, I come to the well to point out that today is the day that Ronald Reagan promised to balance the budget.

Last night there was a debate about the deficit. The distinguished minority leader took the floor to defend Mr. Reagan's deficits. He invoked the traditional Republican rhetoric claiming that the deficit like the previous one—it is the fault of Congress and is because of domestic spending, not Mr. Reagan's tax giveaways for the rich or the massive military spending that have actually produced these record deficits.

Mr. Speaker, let the record show that this claim does not represent the facts. In both fiscal years 1981 and 1982 this Congress voted to cut domestic spending by amounts greater than those requested by Mr. Reagan.

Furthermore, the record will show that between 1943 and 1982—over 40 years—Congress actually appropriated less money than was requested by any President in every year except three.

Mr. Speaker, last night's frantic defense of the current economic mess by the minority leader reminds me of the guilt-ridden Lady Macbeth, who imagines indelible bloodstains upon her hand and cries in vain, "Out, out damn spot!"

PRESIDENTIAL ARCHIVAL DEPOSITORIES REFORM

(Mr. REID asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REID. Mr. Speaker, at a time when American taxpayers are demanding serious cuts in governmental spending, those same taxpayers will be paying about $14 million to support seven Presidential libraries.

Though the price tag might seem small compared to the multidigit figures we discuss daily, I take issue with such self-glorification. This taxpayer expense has increased to 220 times what it was at inception 28 years ago, when the Presidential Libraries Act was created.

Basically, this law gives the Government the option to take deed to, and maintain, the privately built libraries of former Presidents.

But, the price has become too great, and the Federal Government no longer can bear this responsibility. We must show taxpayers we are serious about bringing the budget under control.

I assert that the deletion of such a self-indulgent program is a necessity. The Government no longer can afford to accept lands, buildings, and other gifts earmarked to perpetuate the memory of former Presidents.

IF IT AIN'T BROKE, DON'T FIX IT

(Mr. DORGAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, in the small town in North Dakota, where I grew up they used to say, "If it ain't broke, don't fix it."

But look at what is happening to the telephone system in this country. The Federal courts, the Justice Department, the Federal Communications System, are all trying to fix what was the best telephone system in the world. In the process of trying to fix it, unfortunately, the rural areas of the country are going to be facing $30 and $40 a month basic telephone charges unless something is done. The threat of that happening in the very near future is a very real threat.

Now, what do we do about that? Well, I think if we want to avoid taking a giant step backward in this country and pricing telephones out of the ability to pay for those who are on fixed incomes, who are elderly citizens, then we in Congress have to take some action.

This week a subcommittee in the House, a subcommittee of the Energy and Commerce Committee, took some positive steps to prevent some of the access charges from going into effect and also to create a universal service fund to help keep down the rates in some of those rural communities and some of those areas in the country where we would otherwise have dramatic increases in telephone bills.

Now, I am hoping that all Members of the House will get active in this fight. We have to take action. We have to take action quickly to forestall the otherwise dramatic increases in basic telephone service costs for Americans. We cannot accept that. The people living on fixed incomes and senior citizens of this country cannot accept the kind of steep increase in telephone rates that will come unless this House takes action. So I urge my colleagues to act, and act quickly.

THE PRESIDENT SHOULD REMEMBER BENIGNO AQUINO AND STAY HOME

(Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WILLIAMS of Montana. Mr. Speaker, as the President prepares for his November trip through Asia, he is still considering the advisability of visiting the Philippines. As the leader of this Nation which is dedicated to democracy and freedom, it is incumbent upon President Reagan to give full consideration to the Marcos regime's pernicious attack upon the freedom of the people of the Philippines. Ferdinand Marcos has created a system called constitutional authoritarianism. His authority has replaced that nation's constitution. He has denied freedom of assembly, freedom of the press. He has denied workers in the Philippines the right to strike and, of course, he has canceled free elections.

So as President Reagan remembers Mr. Marcos and his actions, he should also remember another Philippine leader, Benigno Aquino, and his actions.

RONALD REAGAN PROMISED A BALANCED BUDGET TODAY

(Mr. MITCHELL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MITCHELL. Mr. Speaker, today is the day on which Mr. Ronald Reagan promised the American people a balanced budget. Instead, we find today that Mr. Reagan has produced the greatest Federal deficit in the history of this country.

I bring this up because last night the leadership of the Republican Party took to the floor to defend their policies of high deficits, deficits of astronomical military spending and tax reductions for the rich. They were excellent. Sometimes the tone was a little strident, sometimes the tone was a little bellicose. It was a stellar bravery performance, I must admit; but what really disturbed me was that at no time did any of those eloquent, strident, bellicose speakers say that they were going to disassociate from the President, that they were going to abandon Reagan's policies which have created the fiscal mess we now are faced with. Not one of them cried "Mea Culpa."

Not one of them said, "I am sorry, I'm guilty."

Not one of them said, "I want to disassociate from these disastrous Federal deficit policies spawned by the Reagan administration."

It is clear, I guess, that the Republican Party is the party of deficits.

□ 1010

What I cannot understand is, and I insist our Republicans explain, how can they run such deficits when you flagellate the poor, when you hurt the hard working, and when you give us the mess that you have given us—how is it possible?

TIME FOR A DEDICATED EFFORT TO REDUCE DEFICITS

(Mr. GLICKMAN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Speaker, the deficit problems are indeed quite critical, as indicated by my colleague BILL ALEXANDER. But there seems to be a continuing fixation emanating from both parties about who is responsible for massive Federal deficits that is getting ridiculous. We are facing deficits so large that the world economic order is threatened and yet we haggle over who is at fault. Who caused the deficits is not relevant. If there are those who insist that the cause is more important than resolving the problem, then let us simply split the current deficit in half. You Republicans get one half and we Democrats get the other half.

Now, we have affixed the fault and we can move on to doing something about the real problem—getting the deficits down. That means consensus politics must go to work, as has been the case of our colleagues LEON PANETTA and RALPH REGULA in recent weeks. The Congress, and particularly the President, must set about to find some way to be more flexible. As Winston Churchill once said, "It is not enough that we do our best, sometimes we must do what is required." What is required now, not after November 1984, is a dedicated effort, unencumbered by affixing blame, to reduce deficits.

MR. HESS IS MAKING NEW YORKERS BITTER, CYNICAL AND UNHAPPY

(Mr. MRAZEK asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MRAZEK. Mr. Speaker, there is such a thing as a New York sports fan. Whether he is a bus driver on Sixth Avenue or a stock market messenger or a Congressman or a high school student—we are the Ralph Cramdens of the world—young and old—fat and thin—and there are a lot of us who go through pain for our New York teams.

We are the poor jerks whose lives are somehow made happier because Darryl Strawberry finally started to hit. We have invested 3 years of prayers in him.

For years we had to sit by while M. Donald Grant screwed up the Mets, culminating in selling off Tom Seaver in a moment of pique.

When our teams are really bad like the Mets were in the early 1960's, we found solace by adopting players like Hot Rod Kanehl, Choo Choo Coleman, and Harry Chiti.

When they were wonderful like the Jets in 1968 with Broadway Joe Namath hitting Don Maynard and George Sauer, we revelled in the fact that they were New York's team from Brooklyn to the Upper East Side to way out in Mineola.

It is a horrible thing for those of us who suffer along with Wesley Walker's hamstrings or who love Joe Klecko, to think that somebody could take our team away from us.

The New York Jets are not Leon Hess' team. The Jets are New York's team and we have nurtured it through the years as surely as Dr. James Nicholas tended its knee injuries.

No one, certainly not a bitter old man, should have the right to take our team away from its fans.

Of course, that is what Mr. Hess is looking for—to make as many people as possible as bitter and unhappy and cynical as he is.

SKY-HIGH DEFICITS

(Mr. SMITH of Florida asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. Speaker, in 1981 Ronald Reagan promised economic recovery through the ambrosia of more money for defense, less money for social programs, and massive tax reductions for the well-to-do. What we actually received was a bitter gruel of recession, unemployment, and outrageous deficits.

We have just completed a fiscal year with the greatest deficit in our Nation's history, and continuing monumental deficits shawdow not only our future, but also that of future generations. Has anybody heard recently of the administration's contingency taxes for the future? Today the administration seems content to sit back and let the deficit eat its way into the fragile economic recovery. After all, it is far more pleasant to point to short-term success than to realistically account for the long-term effects of those policies.

Suddenly, deficits no longer seem important to the administration. Its policies have produced the largest sea of red ink in the Nation's history, but it continues to sail those rough waters on a leaky raft of overinflated economic theories.

Spending cuts alone cannot reduce the deficit. Tax increases alone cannot balance the budget. We must deal with both horns of the dilemma that created this problem in the first place.

Those best able to pay for the benefits they receive from Government should pay their fair share. Those who have paid in the past or who cannot pay now should not be required to bear an even greater burden in the future.

If the administration ever decides to face reality and cooperate with those of us in Congress who want to reduce deficits, then maybe we will part this red sea and together reach the dry land of real economic growth and stability.

THE IMMEDIATE NEED FOR SYNTHETIC FUELS RESEARCH

(Mr. WISE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WISE. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a piece of legislation designed to strengthen our country's synthetic fuel program. I use the word "program" very loosely because in my view it has never gotten off the ground.

Specifically, my bill amends the Energy Security Act to provide new support for synthetic fuel research and development.

Incredibly there is no mention in the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's charge to give priority to a firm which has a research and development-oriented program for synthetic fuel development.

Unfortunately, this administration has almost canceled almost all coal research and development. My amendment restores synthetic fuels to research and development.

My own State of West Virginia stands ready to participate in such a program, although our coal resources and know-how have been overlooked by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Coal liquifaction and gasification are only two ways my State's resources can be used.

Mr. Speaker, we cannot wait until people are subjected once again to petroleum blackmail by foreign nations. The time to act is now, not after the lines at the gas station have already started to form.

Thank you.

TRIBUTE TO COMMISSIONER ARMANDO RODRIGUEZ

(Mr. TORRES asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. TORRES. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to a great American who has distinguished himself as a teacher, a college president and more recently as a Commissioner of the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission. Armando Rodriguez is about to retire from the Commission after having served with great distinction. His commitment to implementing and administering title VII of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Equal Pay Act and the Age Discrimination in Employment Act is commendable and is to be lauded.

Those of us who have followed his dedication to seeking greater justice for working Americans would think that President Reagan might prevail in extending the term of the Commissioner as to avail our Nation to his continued services at EEOC.

Mr. Speaker, prior to his appointment to the Commission, Mr. Rodriguez was president of East Los Angeles College from 1973 to 1978. On a campus with more than 18,000 students, a staff of 1,500, and an annual operating budget of more than $24 million, President Rodriguez guided the community college through an extensive expansion of curriculum and outreach into 49 satellite campuses. He also initiated a $23 million building program to accommodate the increasing enrollment and curriculum offerings.

Mr. Rodriguez served in the U.S. Office of Education as Assistant Commissioner of Education in the office of Regional Office Coordination. In this position, Mr. Rodriguez was responsible for the administration of 10 regional offices with a program budget of more than $50 million and a staff of more than 600. Before this assignment he was Director of Mexican-American Affairs Office.

Mr. Rodriguez began his career in education as a teacher and administrator in San Diego, Calif. From 1963 to 1965, he was a member of the Compensatory Education Commission for the State of California and in 1966 was appointed chief of the bureau of intergroup relations in the California State Department of Education.

Mr. Rodriguez has been a regent's lecturer at the University of California at Riverside, Calif., a visiting professor at the University of Southern California, and at California State University in Los Angeles. He served a term as an adjunct professor at Antioch College, Yellow Springs, Ohio. Mr. Rodriguez was a member of the board of trustees of Redlands University from 1974 to 1978.

Mr. Rodriguez was a member of the RISE Commission (Reform of Intermediate/Secondary Education) for the California State Department of Education in 1974–75. He also participated in the Skyline-Wide Education project, "Education in the Year 2025," in Dallas, Tex.

Mr. Rodriguez has been a member of the Board of Directors of the Los Angeles Branch of the Federal Reserve Board of San Francisco. He was chairman of the bilingual education committee of the William Randolph Hearst Foundation. He has been a member of the board of directors of KCET-TV in Los Angeles, Calif. He has served as a member of the board of trustees of the Los Angeles Art Museum. He was a member of the Los Angeles County Public Policy Commission. He served a term on the California State Commission on the Humanities. He was a member of the board of directors of the United Way in Los Angeles, Calif., from 1975 to 1978. He was on the board of directors of the National Urban Coalition from 1975 to 1979.

Mr. Rodriguez holds a bachelor and masters degree from San Diego State University. He was named alumnus of the year at San Diego State University in 1979.

Born in Gomez Palacio, Durango, Mexico, Mr. Rodriguez came to the United States at the age of 9 and settled in San Diego, Calif. He became a naturalized citizen in 1943.

Mr. Armando M. Rodriguez and his wife, Beatriz, now live in Alexandria, Va. They have two married children, Christina and Rodrigo, and four grandchildren, Armando, Emiliano, Miguel, and Nicholas.

ALASKAN OIL EXPORTS

(Mr. YOUNG of Missouri asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. YOUNG of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, today as we vote on H.R. 3231, the Export Administration Act, I urge my colleagues to come together in full support of section 117, which extends for 4 years the language of section 7d of this act to ban the exportation of Alaskan oil.

It is commonly known among my colleagues that currently, OPEC countries supply the United States with one-third of its oil imports. Last week's newspaper accounts of the international energy agency oil crisis simulation once again highlighted the U.S. vulnerability in our energy supply as we rely on unstable OPEC nations. This simulation showed that a cutoff of oil supplies from the Persian Gulf would raise the price of oil to $98 a barrel. The impact of this simulated crisis, which is too real to be placed aside as hypothetical nonsense, would be devastating to the American economy. It would put several million Americans out of work. Farmers would be unable to harvest their crops. Gas rationing would be a reality. These are only the tip of the iceberg when one looks at the effects of an oil crisis as simulated in this study.

Given this scenario, it is clear that we must not allow the exportation of Alaskan oil to Japan. We need to keep the United States oil in the United States. If we were to allow these exports it would not only harm our progress toward energy independence, but would immediately harm the industry.

The impact of cutting off the transport of Alaskan oil to the Gulf Coast of the U.S. by allowing it to be transported to Japan would force 40 U.S. flag tankers to be laid up, placed on reserve, or scrapped. This would mean the immediate loss of 20,000 shipboard and seaside workers in the industry.

As Americans, we can not afford to accelerate the depletion of a critical U.S. resource by exportng it to Japan, and we surely can not afford to put 20,000 more Americans out of work.

It is urgent that we continue the current ban on the export of Alaskan oil. So, I ask my colleagues to join in full force to support the Alaskan oil provisions of H.R. 3231 and oppose any weakening amendments.

NATIONAL OPTICIANS MONTH

(Mr. WYLIE asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, it is my pleasure to call to the attention of this Congress and our Nation the achievements of retail dispensing opticians. Under the auspices of the Opticians Association of America, currently headed by one of my constituents, Mr. Robert E. Hagman of Columbus, Ohio, October is being observed as National Opticians Month. It is a most appropriate time, therefore, to highlight the key role of opticians in providing the public with accurate and affordable spectacles, contact lenses, low-vision aids, and a variety of other eyewear products and services individually tailored to the needs, tastes and pocketbooks of Americans who need vision correction.

Opticians, whether employed in large national chains or in small partnerships and proprietorships that operate retail stores, compete among themselves as well as with ophthalmologists and optometrists who sell eyewear. Thus opticians provide the competitive base for the Nation's eyewear delivery system, creating incentives for quality and cost control that help assure the best interests of the consumer.

Mr. Speaker, I understand today some 25,000 opticians in the United States practice this ancient and honorable craft in the field of optics. Opticians are to be commended not only for important technological contributions in contact lenses and other areas of optics, but also for their success, in cooperation with eye doctors, in safeguarding and supporting good vision for our citizens.

□ 1020

FIRST IN A SERIES OF MEMORIALS TO VICTIMS OF KOREAN AIR LINES FLIGHT 007

(Mr. LAGOMARSINO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, the entire world has echoed with shock and outrage in the wake of the shooting down by the Soviets of a civilian plane carrying defenseless men, women, and children, By this action the Soviets have once more shown themselves to be contemptuous of not only international law, but of all standards of civilized behavior. The Soviet disregard for human life and human rights displayed yet again in this incident has been made manifest for all the world to see.

This horrifying tragedy claimed the lives of 269 people, including a distinguished Member of this Congress, and it must not be forgotten.

This is one in a series of 269 1-minute speeches which will memorialize each of the individuals whose lives were snuffed out in the barbarous attack, and which will call on the Soviets—in the name of simple justice—to partially rectify the wrong that has been done by giving life and freedom to one of thousands of Soviet subjects—each as innocent as the KAL 007 flight victims—currently occupying Soviet prisons, hard-labor camps, and psychiatric hospitals.

Today, Mr. Speaker, I would like to eulogize a man distinguished in the field of medicine for over 23 years. Dr. Michael Truppin of Manhattan was a pioneer in the field of laser surgery, and was affiliated with Mount Sinai Hospital. A father of two children, he worked together with his wife, Jan Moline, in private practice. She too perished in the flight. It is a shame that someone so dedicated to saving human life should have his own life taken in such a brutal way. We realize, of course, that there is nothing we or the Soviets can do to bring back the lives of these victims. However, we can and we will ask the Soviets to give new life and freedom to others as a fitting reparation for this deed. Specifically, we call upon the Soviets, in reparation for the life of Michael Truppin, to release another man of conscience, Yuriy Romanovych Shukhevych. He was first arrested in 1948 at age 14 for being the son of the Ukrainian insurgent army commander in chief; his father fought both the Nazis and Communists. He spent 10 years in prison, and was rearrested the day his term expired and sentenced to 10 more years. He was arrested 14 years later, and sentenced to 5 years in a strict regime labor camp for "anti-Soviet propaganda." Shukhevych became a member of the Helsinki Watch Group in January 1979, and was then put into internal exile for another 5 years. During this period, he became blind. He is now in a sanitarium in Siberia.

VOTING RECORD SPEAKS LOUDER THAN RHETORIC

(Mr. DANNEMEYER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DANNEMEYER. Mr. Speaker, I notice that some of my distinguished Democrat colleagues have become aware of the significance and the existence of the Federal deficit and that is just heartwarming. I suppose that there are many people around this country who are confused as to the effort of the politicians in Congress to shift the blame, to say it is not me, it is the other guy.

Let me suggest to my colleagues and the people of this country that there is one recognizable way that the people, the taxpayers, our constituents can figure out who is on first, who is doing what to whom, and that is to look not at what we say but how we vote. The voting record will speak very loudly and clearly as to whether we truly want to rein in our runaway spending.

For instance, on May 25, 1982, last year, every Member of the House had an opportunity of voting to cut spending by $70 billion. What do you know? Seventy-one percent of the Republicans, 137 of our membership, voted to do that; and 79 percent of the Democrats, 191, voted against doing that.

Then again on October 1 of last year we had another measure, a proposed constitutional amendment which would say the Federal Government had to balance its budget. How did the Members vote? One hundred and sixty-seven of the Republicans, 87 percent of our total, voted to do that; and significantly, 167 of the Democrats, 69.6 percent of their membership, voted against doing that.

If the people of this country want to find out who is responsible for the deficits, look at how we voted, not what we say.

THE FACTS ON WHO IS CREATING THE DEFICIT

(Mr. DREIER of California asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DREIER of California. Mr. Speaker, suddenly we are hearing a great deal of talk from those who created "the Great Society" spending binge. Now they say that deficits are bad.

Well, my friends, unfortunately they have not learned the lesson. The lesson they should have learned is that deficit spending is bad.

Let us look at the facts. Although the majority screams loudly about deficits, just last week there was a vote on the House floor to hold spending within the Democrat fiscal year 1984 budget levels. When the role was called on a motion by Mr. FRENZEL to limit spending on the Trade Adjustment Act to the Democrat budget levels, 202 Democrats—more than three-fourths of those in the House of Representatives—voted to bust the budget.

Or examine the vote last year on the amendment to balance the budget. While Democrats demagoged the issue of deficits, almost 70 percent of the House Democrats voted against the balanced-budget amendment.

Mr. Speaker, it is getting increasingly difficult to believe that the House Democrats mean what their new political ads say.

CONFERENCE DELAYED BY EXTRANEOUS AUTHORIZATIONS TO THE REHABILITATION ACT

(Mr. GUNDERSON asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GUNDERSON. Mr. Speaker, I now note with considerable interest the apparent difficulties our colleagues in the other body—the Committee on Labor and Human Resources in particular—are having appointing conferees for the consideration of H.R. 3520, the Rehabilitation Act reauthorization. This, of course, is the formally noncontroversial legislation to which the Education and Labor Committee chose to attach 10 new authorization figures for programs under its jurisdiction.

While I am the first to agree that some of those programs justify increases—vocational education for example—we are now receiving our "just dessert" for having played politics with this important authorization. Instead of considering each of these authorizations on their own merits, it was decided to attach them to the rehabilitation reauthorization, a program which had clear bipartisan support.

Now, apparently, what was forecast by many of us has occurred. Today is September 30 and as yet we have no new authorization legislation. In fact, the conference committee has yet to meet. As such, Congress has chosen to abandon the leadership and assistance the over 1 million disabled Americans require and deserve.

I sincerely hope we have learned our lesson, and not at the expense of those who should not have been used as an example in the first place.

AUTOMOBILE IMPORTS

(Mr. HILLIS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks and include extraneous matter.)

Mr. HILLIS. Mr. Speaker, yesterday the Congressional Automotive Caucus had the opportunity to host a breakfast with Philip Caldwell, chief executive officer of the Ford Motor Co.

I was particularly interested in Mr. Caldwell's comments about the threat posed by Japanese auto imports if we do not renegotiate an extension of the current voluntary restraint agreement. According to Mr. Caldwell's figures, 1 million more cars could be sold in the United States next year than were sold this year. However, unless the Japanese are held to the current level of imports, one-half of those new cars could be Japanese-made.

The U.S. Department of Commerce has estimated that our total trade deficit next year could be as high as $100 billion. Furthermore, about half of that deficit can be attributed to automobile imports. A $100 billion trade deficit means $25 billion in lost tax revenues and $15 billion in extra unemployment costs as 2½ million U.S. jobs disappear.

We cannot allow one-half of the growth in new cars sales to come from Japan. That growth must be in American manufactured automobiles. Therefore, I introduced a concurrent resolution yesterday expressing the sense of the Congress that the current agreement be extended. I feel it is extremely important that as many Members of the House as possible cosponsor this resolution in order to help Ambassador Brock in his negotiating with the Japanese.

I am placing a copy of the text of the resolution in the record at this point.

H. Con. Res. 178

Whereas the trade deficit is expected to reach $100 billion next year, undermining the recovery by eliminating 2.5 million American jobs and increasing U.S. Government budget deficits by $40 billion due to lost tax revenues and increased costs of welfare benefits; and

Whereas auto trade represented $54 billion or one-third of the total U.S. bilateral trade deficit with Japan over the past five years; and

Whereas maintaining Japanese car exports to this country at present levels is indispensible to any measures designed to restore a more reasonable balance of trade between the two countries; and

Whereas the original expectations for the restraint program did not materialize, causing it to be less effective in increasing U.S. production and jobs; and

Whereas the Japanese experienced a "windfall" of 700,000 sales because they did not reduce the export limit when U.S. car industry demand fell short of original expectations; and

Whereas the critics' expectations of forced consumer choice and abnormal car price increases due to restraints did not materialize; and

Whereas the strength and durability of the U.S. auto sales recovery is still uncertain, and domestic auto companies need time to rebuild their balance sheets; and

Whereas each 500,000 unit loss in U.S. auto production represents the output of two assembly plants, one engine plant, one transmission plant, and 60,000 auto worker jobs plus 400,000 tons of steel and another 40,000 jobs in the supplier stream, and $3 billion in the U.S. trade deficit; and

Whereas misaligned exchange rates and tax inequities continue to disadvantage U.S. auto producers and account for over half of the total Japanese cost advantage; and

Whereas nearly 90% of the world car markets outside of the United States and Japan restrict or monitor Japanese imports, thereby representing a risk that Japanese export units could be diverted to the United States.

Resolved by the House of Representatives (the Senate concurring), That it is the Sense of the Congress that the President and his representatives should urge the Japanese to extend the voluntary auto export limits beyond March 31, 1984, at the present level without any exceptions, as a concrete measure to foster recovery of U.S. auto production and employment, and keep the U.S. trade situation from further deteriorating.

STATE WATER RIGHTS FOLLOWING DEFEAT OF THE COAL PIPELINE ACT

(Mr. REGULA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Speaker, throughout much of the debate on the Coal Pipeline Act, the question of State water rights was at the center of debate.

The 1982 Supreme Court decision of Sporhase against Nebraska, classifying water as an article of commerce, and therefore bringing water under the jurisdiction of the commerce clause of the U.S. Constitution, has brought into question the right of each individual State to determine the use of water contained within its borders.

This Supreme Court decision has had the effect of reversing nearly 200 years of tradition in the resolution of State water disputes. According to this tradition, States have decided for themselves both how water within their borders, and how their State portion of the water shared with other States, would be utilized.

The effects of the Sporhase case are far-reaching and not yet fully realized. Under the Commerce clause which now regulates the oversight of water allocation for each of the States, water may now be removed from States without their agreement to such action. This action presents problems for both Western States which have traditionally experienced water scarcity and for the Great Lakes States. These several States have been virtually stripped of their authority to veto the use of the water contained within their borders or shared with other States.

The language contained in the Coal Pipeline Act of 1983 dealing with State water law, represented a first step in returning to the States their traditional jurisdictional roles. Despite the defeat of the bill itself, it is important that we continue our efforts with regard to State water law. Beyond the Coal Pipeline Act, we must search for new means of returning water allocation authority to the States. I urge the Members to support this effort through my bill, H.R. 1207, which returns this authority to the States.

□ 1030

FEDERAL SPENDING IS GOBBLING UP OUR NATION'S RESOURCES

(Mr. PETRI asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. PETRI. Mr. Speaker, a number of our distingiushed colleagues this morning have been telling a woeful tale of Federal deficits. They are right to do so, for huge deficits are balooning interest rates and threatening our economic recovery. But they are dead wrong when they try to pin that tale on President Reagan. That tale belongs on the donkey and nowhere else. It is Congress that is responsible for the deficits. In fact, the total level of Federal spending is the chief culprit, and the insatiable appetite for Federal spending gobbling up our Nation's resources originates right here in this House. Why, just yesterday we passed a District of Columbia appropriations bill that was $31 billion more than even the District itself had asked for. So let us not run around blindfolded, trying to pin this woeful tale somewhere else. My colleague, the bucks are shoveled out here.

EXPANDING PARTICIPATION IN IRA RETIREMENT ACCOUNTS

(Mr. DAUB asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, in 1981 the Congress greatly expanded the participation in individual retirement accounts. Since that time millions of Americans have begun to save for their retirement that would not have done so otherwise. By any yardstick IRA's have proven a great success.

Unfortunately we did not go far enough. The 1981 law excluded from participation one group. I am talking about individuals who choose to work in the home and who are overwhelmingly female. In excluding them the Congress was taking the position that this work was less valuable and therefore undeserving of participation in retirement savings.

This was clearly a mistake and I have introduced legislation on January 28 of this year to correct this situation. H.R. 765, which has over 70 cosponsors in the House would allow a housewife to contribute to an IRA account using funds earned by her spouse.

This is positive, fair legislation, and I urge my colleagues to consider its support. We need to correct an inequity in the law that affects a group almost entirely female, any other action would belie this body's commitment to equal rights.

MACBETH?

(Mr. MICHEL asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) was kind enough to share with us his knowledge of Shakespeare just a few moments ago in an exchange of 1 minute. He said I reminded him of Lady MacBeth. I myself do not see the resemblance. But I can say that the Democratic leadership's economic policies remind me of the three witches in the same play.

Their schemes are filled with odds and ends and they need a magic spell to work and they make false predictions about the future to fool those they claim to help.

REAGAN DESERVES CREDIT FOR ECONOMIC RECOVERY

(Mr. GEKAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. GEKAS. Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, just as the incumbent President is being blamed for the deficits situation that faces us in the total budget, he must be given equal credit for the economic recovery that is now underway. At a time when unemployment is coming down, at a time when housing starts are up, when the average work week is up, when industrial output is up, if we look to the source of that and given blame where there are deficits to be conjured up, then we must give credit to the President of the United States, the incumbent President, for leading us into the new prosperity that we hope is around the corner.

The tax cut that everyone seems to decry as being one for the rich is one that every taxpayer of the country has benefited from.

Ironically that very same economy which is now on the upsurge, has come about largely because that tax cut went into effect, putting money back into the consumers' pockets to fuel the upturn which is ours at the moment.

BOGUS, BOGUS

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. LOTT. Bogus, Mr. Speaker. That is the way we would describe Democrats complaining about the deficits in Mississippi—bogus. Can you believe that? What a fraud.

Earlier, Shakespeare was quoted by the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER). Well, how about this line: "Methinks he doth protest too much."

Mr. Speaker, the Congress has the main and sole responsibility for determining how much money the Federal Government spends.

For the record, on 21 major votes this year the gentleman from Arkansas (Mr. ALEXANDER) voted to increase deficit spending by $48.8 billion. He voted 18 out of 21 times for higher spending.

The gentleman from Maryland (Mr. MITCHELL) who spoke earlier, voted to increase the deficit this year alone by $46.7 billion. He voted 20 of 21 times for higher spending. The gentleman certainly shares responsibility for the Federal deficit.

The gentleman from Kansas who gave a very moderate speech, voted 14 of 21 times to raise spending by $41.3 billion.

I see my friend from California sitting here. Looking at his record, the gentleman from California (Mr. FAZIO) gets the prize; 21 out of 21 times, a perfect record, he voted to increase spending by $49.6 billion this year alone.

Yes, I am afraid he did, gentlemen.

The gentleman from New York, my friend (Mr. DOWNEY) who is joining in the commentary here this morning, I am sure, voted 20 out of 21 times to increase Federal spending. Now I am sure that did not contribute at all to the deficit.

IT IS A REAGAN DEFICIT

(Mr. WRIGHT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WRIGHT. As long as we are quoting Lady MacBeth, I am reminded that she also said, "Tomorrow and tomorrow and tomorrow creeps in this petty pace from day to day."

In that connection, I hope there shall not be too many tomorrows in which we have $200 billion deficits.

There seems to be an argument as to whether deficits really matter. But a $207 billion deficit is not just the biggest we have ever had; it is three times as large as the largest ever suffered under any previous administration.

The devastating thing about it is that it soaks up some 78 percent of America's available liquid savings, leaving precious little to finance the wellsprings of recovery which have to come from investments in job-creating enterprises in the private sector.

Compare that 78 percent today with the 16 percent of private savings for all the years from 1960 to 1979, which was consumed for the sake of the national deficit, and we shall have an understanding of why it is important that we try to recognize the desperately wrong things that have created this deficit.

Well, it is easy to say "Stop spending so much." But the truth is we are spending $47 billion less this year on social programs than the 1980 level.

We are spending $100 billion more on defense than in 1980, and the Treasury has been sapped of $135 billion by the ill-advised and excessive 1981 Reagan tax cut. So it is a Reagan deficit. It is the clear result of Reagan policies. No amount of rhetoric can change that.

□ 1040

THE DEFICIT

(Mr. WALKER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, there was a country preacher up my way who was known for a bit of philandering. One Sunday morning after a particularly stirring sermon on the sin of adultery, the preacher was approached by a parishioner who said, "Reverend, do you practice what you preach?"

"Well, Miss Bessie," he replied, "my words are powerful, but they are not that powerful."

I am reminded of that when the majority leader speaks about deficits, because for the record, on 21 major votes this year, the gentleman from Texas, the majority leader, voted to increase deficit spending by $46.7 billion. He voted 20 out of 21 times, almost matching the record of the gentleman from California for higher spending.

JETS MOVING TO NEW JERSEY

(Mr. SCHUMER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, I would love to continue this fascinating colloquy on the deficit, but a more important issue is at hand. The Jets are moving to New Jersey.

Mr. Speaker, the Jets have not had a very good year. They first lost to the Seattle Seahawks. And their front line looked like Swiss cheese. They then lost to the New England Patriots. And the vaunted New York defensive line became the "sad-sack exchange." Freeman McNeil is now out for 8 weeks and Stan Waldemore is out for the season.

So the owner of the New York Jets, Mr. Leon Hess, thinks he can change his luck by moving to New Jersey. He ought to talk to his friend, Wellington Mara. Wellington Mara moved the Giants to New Jersey and the Giants have not gotten past the first round of the playoffs ever since.

Leon, if it did not work for the Giants, what makes you think it is going to work for you?

KEEP THE JETS IN NEW YORK

(Mr. DOWNEY of New York asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. New Jersey? New Jersey? When they move to New Jersey what will they be called, "the Parsippany Propellers?"

The vaunted New York sack exchange will become the Hackensack exchange.

Have you ever driven, Mr. Hess, from Babylon across the Bronx Expressway, across the George Washington, to get to the Meadowlands? You have got to spend the whole day doing it.

What is wrong with Shea Stadium? Well, it is a little less exciting maybe than the Meadowlands. There are a few less seats, but good Long Island Jet fans have filled it every single year you have been there.

I implore you. Reconsider this ill-fated move of yours. Keep the Jets in New York and keep them Jets.

JAMES WATT EDITS PRESS CLIPPINGS TO INTERIOR EMPLOYEES

(Mr. MARKEY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, this morning we read that the Secretary of Interior has now taken to editing the press clippings that are distributed to Interior Department employees. It seems that they are not supposed to read all of the news about the Secretary, just the good news about the Secretary.

George Orwell notwithstanding, 1984 will not be a good year for doublespeak. I think that we should assure those at the Department of Interior, who presumably have been left with only the Meskatatouk Daily Flycatcher to read, that the Washington Post has not vanished, that the New York Times has not disappeared, that the Wall Street Journal has not been vaporized. Here they are, all of the clippings—well, not all of them—about three or four of thousands of clippings across the country that talk about people who are calling for Secretary Watt's resignation, that are talking about the appalled reaction that they are having to his ill-considered comments about women and Jews, and minorities and the disabled in this country. For his cruel humor, for his ill-conceived policies and actions, James Watt must go. And yes, Virginia, there is a Washington Post.

EXPLODING DEFICITS

(Mr. MOODY asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. MOODY. Mr. Speaker, we are in the 11th hour of the budget process for fiscal year 1984, and beyond. Not only are the Nation's expenditure and tax policies for years to come at stake, but also the continuance of a very fragile recovery that is now threatened by exploding deficits that will surely lead to higher interest rates.

The President—and some of the other speakers this morning—have claimed that domestic spending is the culprit of these deficits, and that Democrats are particularly culpable.

Let us look at the facts. For the last 3 years under Mr. Reagan's directions the growth of military spending has been $155 billion in that period. Meanwhile, the revenue loss from the Reagan tax cuts have totaled $474 billion over the same 3 year period. At the same time, domestic spending—despite rollcall claims made this morning—have been reduced $265 billion over those 3 years. The net result was an enlarged deficit over the 3-year period of $464 billion, or about $155 billion per year which is almost exactly equal to the current structural deficit.

The fact is, Mr. Speaker, in light of current military spending and tax cut policies, we could eliminate all remaining discretionary domestic spending—all of it—and still not balance the budget.

What is the President doing in the midst of this crisis? He is sitting on the sidelines calling for more domestic cuts. We need the President now to acknowledge the failure of the Reagan-Stockman game plan and to help us devise a new game plan to get the Nation out of the fiscal mess we are in.

Mr. Reagan must recognize that to meet our responsibilities both the President and the Congress must come to grips with the two main spending items, military and entitlements, and with revenue needs for 1984 and beyond.

Otherwise, we will have political statement, mushrooming deficits and relapse into economic malaise and stagnation.

THE DEFICIT

(Mr. FAZIO asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. FAZIO. Mr. Speaker, the battle over who is responsible for the budget deficits that face this Nation has been well joined this morning, but I think it is without any rebutal that the deficit for the first 3 years of the Reagan administration is expected to average about $170 billion a year. That is nearly four time higher than the average deficit of the Carter White House years.

The question is does the Reagan administration expect the deficit situation to get better? Judging from their own statements, it does not appear they do.

Dave Stockman, the offensive coordinator for this administration, has indicated that he sees $200 billion a year deficits stretching for as far as the eye can see.

And Marty Feldstein, the President's own chief economic adviser, who unlike Secretary Regan, seems to be somewhat concerned about this problem, predicts that the combined deficits for 1983 through 1988 will total $1.2 trillion. That is more than the entire public debt that has accumulated during all of the previous administrations.

The question is what are we here in Congress, the President, and his executive branch going to do to attempt to resolve this problem? A number of us have called upon people from both parties outside the Government to join with us in an economic summit to see whether we can come up with a strategy that all of us can embrace to deal with the problem, rather than simply resort to finger pointing, political rhetoric.

It seems to me if the President would do more to join with the Congress in this spirit, rather than sitting outside the budget process talking about minor but symbolic cuts in domestic spending, deferring his discussion of tax increases until after the next election, and generally refusing to realize the effect of the strong dollar on the reduction of jobs for all Americans, our Nation would be far better off.

□ 1050

BANKRUPT FARM POLICIES

(Mr. HARKIN asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Speaker, as long as we are talking about bankruptcies, let us talk about another bankrupt part of this administration's program, and that is the administration's farm programs.

In 1981 and in 1982, this administration basically had the extreme position of having no farm programs. That led to huge, massive surpluses, and low prices. So this year we go to the other extreme, the most massive set-aside in the history of this country, the PIK program, which is going to cost us billions and billions of dollars, some say now between $16 billion and $20 billion for 1 year, and most of that money will be going to the large farmers, those farmers that caused the problem in the first place.

Yesterday, in Marion, Iowa, at the Farm Progress Show, Secretary Block announced next year's farm program. And guess what: We are going back to the extreme of the other way, the same thing we had in 1981, and in 1982—no farm program, essentially.

Next year's program is a program designed to force our farmers to plant fence row to fence row, and the cost is going to be enormous in terms of soil erosion and the number of farmers that will be forced out of business.

I feel sorry for our livestock farmers who have been whipsawed from one side of the room to the other and now are going to be whipsawed right back again.

The farm policies of this administration are bankrupt, and whether intended or not, the farm policies of this administration are going to drive farmers off the farm in record numbers, in higher numbers than we have seen since the Dust Bowl era of the 1930's.

Next year's farm program ought to be termed the FEP program, the farmer eradication program.

FARM POLICY

(Mr. DE LA GARZA asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. DE LA GARZA. Mr. Speaker, some people seem to think these days that the troubles in our farm economy are all over. That is not true. It is true that prices of some commodities, including corn, are up this fall because of an unusual combination of events—many farmers reduced acreage under a Government surplus control program, and then we were hit by the 1983 drought which cut the harvest even more. And with supplies of some crops reduced dramatically, we naturally got some increases in prices of those commodities.

I am very happy that prices of some crops have improved. But if anyone thinks this means that American agriculture is out of the economic woods, he or she is making a great mistake. If anyone thinks this means that the time has come to wash our hands of Government programs in agriculture, he or she is making a very dangerous mistake. The fact is that we still have serious economic problems in much of American agriculture. If we walk away from those problems, we could be setting the stage for continuing depression in the Nation's most basic industry. And we had better realize that depression in agriculture hurts more than the farmer. It can hurt every one of us badly.

Just what is the state of American agriculture today? Well, some farmers are clearly going to be better off this year than they were last year. An individual corn producer, for instance, who retired his entire corn acreage for 1983 under the payment-in-kind program, is going to be compensated by what amounts to a normal-sized harvest of grain which he can sell at a price which is up substantially from last year. But many farmers who did not enroll in the payment-in-kind program are not so lucky. The drought losses this year have been real and severe. And we have livestock and poulty producers in many parts of the country for whom the drought is becoming an economic disaster. Their feed supplies are down sharply, and when they buy extra feed the cost means they may be producing meat, milk, and other foods at a loss.

The point that nobody should forget is that even for farmers who will do better this year, 1983 comes at the end of a series of bad years. Farmers have been forced deeper and deeper into debt through the past few years, and many of them are still walking a narrow line between survival and bankruptcy. Thousands of farmers still may be forced off the land. If the next couple of years do not produce a sustained and healthy recovery, the situation in rural America is going to be grim.

I hear people talk about the Agriculture Department's prediction that net farm income is going to improve this year. If that forecast turns out to be accurate, I am going to be happy. But before anybody takes this forecast as a license for jerking farm programs away, we had better look closely at what the USDA tells us about farm income.

According to the Agriculture Department's most recent estimates, realized net farm income went down from $27.3 billion in 1979 to $26.8 billion in 1980. Then it went down again to $22.4 billion in 1981 and edged up slightly to $23.9 billion in 1982. This year, the current forecast is a range between $26 and $30 billion. The squeeze those previous 3 years put on hundreds of thousands of farm families was as great a tragedy as we have seen in other families where men and women have been out of work for years at a time. Earlier this year, the Nation's attention was focused on stories of farm foreclosures and bankruptcies. And the upturn in net farm income which USDA is predicting for this year has not cured all the troubles which piled up in the past.

What all this boils down to is the fact that if we want to avoid a deepening depression in agriculture, we are going to have to give high priority over the next couple of years to sensible farm policies.

We are going to have to recognize that if we allow new surpluses to pile up, we will be right back on the treadmill of low prices and increasing foreclosures.

We will have to face the fact that if the general economy continues to recover, there is going to be further inflation in the farmer's cost of production. And if we allow shortsighted policymakers to squeeze farm programs in this situation, the producer is going to be shopping for more red ink for his books.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to follow up on what my distinguished colleague, the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. HARKIN) has just mentioned, only to enlarge, in one respect, that developing a sensible farm policy is not only a problem or a matter for farmers to be involved in, but rather for business, for labor, for the consumer.

The future depends, to a large degree, on the kinds of decisions we make on farm policy, but it impacts from the futures industry to Wall Street to big to small to international banking. And the fact is that the policy can well decide how we survive as a nation.

I know it is very difficult for some of our colleagues to understand, but if the food is not there today, forget everything else that we do here in this House—war powers, Export Administration, budget, everything else that we do. If you do not have the food that day, forget it, that is the end of the ball game.

I would like to follow up with what my colleague has said that the responsibility is going to be ours, the consumer, labor, business, and all Americans to see that the base for our sustenance, which is the agricultural area, the farm sector, is sustained and maintained in a viable, productive posture so that it will help all of us for the future as a nation and as a people.

CONTINUING IN EFFECT CURRENT CERTIFICATION REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO EL SALVADOR

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Foreign Affairs be discharged from further consideration of the bill (H.R. 4042) to continue in effect the current certification requirements with respect to El Salvador until the Congress enacts new legislation providing conditions for U.S. military assistance to El Salvador or until the end of fiscal year 1984, whichever occurs first, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. ALEXANDER). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, and I shall not object, I do so for the purpose of asking the chairman of the Subcommittee on Western Hemispheric Affairs to explain what the bill does.

Mr. BARNES. If the gentleman will yield, I thank the distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Western Hemispheric Affairs for allowing me this opportunity to explain the bill.

Very briefly, the bill simply extends the current law with respect to conditions on military assistance to Salvador until we either pass the new bill which has been reported out of the Foreign Affairs Committee on which a compromise was worked out on the modification of the current conditions, or until the end of the new fiscal year, whichever is earlier. Obviously, we hope that the new conditions will be enacted into law in a brief time and that the former conditions would expire.

I am informed that, although the administration does not believe it is necessary to extend the current conditions, they do not object to this legislation. We had a unanimous vote yesterday, Republicans and Democrats, in the House Foreign Affairs Committee. So I would think that it is not controversial.

Basically, it would assure that we are still on record as wanting progress in certain areas. Particularly we are concerned, obviously about the prosecution of individuals who are responsible for the murders of American citizens; we are concerned about continuing violations of human rights; we are concerned about the land reform program. There was a march in the capital city, San Salvador, just a couple of days ago, 15,000 Campesinos, urging continuation of the program, and this simply will keep the Congress on record in support of those continued efforts of people in El Salvador to bring about these changes in conditions.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, we did receive word from the White House this morning that, as the gentleman says, while the administration did not ask for this extension, while they do not think it is necessary because, as they told us yesterday, they intend to comply with its conditions in any event, they do not object to it, nor do I.

I would like to say that while I think it would have been better to have passed the language, concerning conditions on military aid to El Salvador, that is in the pending foreign assistance legislation, I understand the reasons why that is not practical. The requirement of conditions and certification expires at midnight tonight. We can hardly do that today. And that would have to be the case. The House here would have had to been educated about the new provisions, the Senate would have had to been educated. They have a slightly different view of what ought to be done. There just is not time. I hope we can adapt the new proposals in the days and weeks to come.

I think it would be an unfortunately bad signal to send were we not to extend certification, not only to those who have been abusing human rights in El Salvador, but I think even more importantly, to those who want to do the right thing, who need all of the help they can get in bringing about democratic changes and changes in human rights in El Salvador.

● Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of H.R. 4042, a bill to continue in effect the current certification requirements with respect to El Salvador until the Congress enacts new legislation.

This bill is straightforward and noncontroversial. It simply extends the existing certification requirements for military aid to El Salvador until new legislation is enacted or until September 30, 1984, whichever occurs first.

We all recognize the deficiencies in the current certification process. However, we have not yet enacted new legislation on El Salvador for fiscal year 1984. Therefore, unless the current law is extended, there will be no conditions of any kind on military aid to El Salvador after September 30. So, while this may be an imperfect mechanism, I think it is the best one available until we are able to bring the new foreign assistance authorization bill to the floor.

I urge my colleagues to support the bill.●

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the bill, as follows:

H.R. 4042

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the requirements of section 728 of the International Security and Development Cooperation Act of 1981 (including the last sentence of subsection (e) of that section) shall continue to apply after the end of the fiscal year 1983 until such time as the Congress enacts new legislation providing conditions for United States military assistance to El Salvador or until September 30, 1984, whichever occurs first.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Maryland?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING TEMPORARY EXTENSION OF CERTAIN INSURANCE PROGRAMS RELATING TO HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 366) to provide for the temporary extension of certain insurance programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Page 5, after line 3, insert:

EXTENSION OF SECTION 8 OF THE EXPORT-IMPORT BANK ACT OF 1945

SEC. 6. Section 8 of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 31, 1983".

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I shall not object, but I take this time to ask the chairman if he would like to explain the bill to the House.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I would be delighted to explain to the very distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Housing that this represents an amendment the Senate tacked on to our extender of the HUD-FHA extension that we passed out on September 27, and all it does is extend the Export-Import Bank's authorization 30 additional days so that it will not die as of September 30, which is today.

□ 1100

Without this action, the basic authorization extending the Bank's authority, since it has not been passed by the Congress, would expire tonight. So this merely reflects the action we took on September 27, plus the amendment extending for 30 days the Export-Import authorization.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I yield to the ranking member of the full committee, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I support House Joint Resolution 366, which the Senate has amended and would extend the U.S. Export-Import Bank for 30 days. This will allow, as the distinguished chairman has said, the Eximbank to continue to finance and guarantee U.S. exports and, thus, help protect U.S. jobs which are dependent on these exports.

In addition to the extension of the Eximbank, it extends FmHA programs under the jurisdiction of the Farmers Home Administration, flood, crime, and riot insurance programs under the Federal Emergency Management Agency.

Mr. Speaker, I support these simple limiting extensions because I believe we still can get a housing bill as well as an Eximbank and an IMF authorization bill yet this year and I am going to continue to work with the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Rhode Island, Mr. ST GERMAIN, and my colleagues toward that end, and I hope we will be able, in obtaining passage of those pieces of legislation during this extension period.

Therefore, I join my colleagues, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ) and the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. MCKINNEY) in supporting this additional extension for 30 days.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I would just add that I am delighted that the Senate has put the Eximbank extension for 30 days.

In New England alone, 242 companies have received over $360 million worth of Eximbank loans within this last calendar year. The Eximbank is, to my way of thinking, nowhere near strong enough to compete with the financial machinations that our supposed trading allies are using to sell their goods, and I think that giving us 30 days to see if we can, in fact, come out of the Senate with some semblance of an idea as to what the Eximbank should be so it can continue its work, is something that we all look forward to.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. LOWRY of Washington. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this action. I compliment the gentleman and ranking minority member, and our chairman and our full chairman of the committee for the work they have done to try to do something that had to be done or we were in real danger of losing important international sales in the next 2 to 3 weeks.

Some figures ranged as high as $2 billion of pending sales in the next month. I compliment the gentlemen very much and I am grateful for the action taken.

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. McKINNEY. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to yield to the chairman, the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. GONZALEZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I just want to add my voice to that of the gentleman from Washington (Mr. LOWRY) and compliment my two very distinguished colleagues for their most constructive and harmonious cooperation in seeing that this vital legislation is approved and keeps these three viable institutions, HUD, the Export-Import Bank, and the FHA activities alive.

I just merely want the RECORD to show that we are grateful for their actions and their leadership.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas (Mr. GONZALEZ)?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. GONZALEZ. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the joint resolution just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Texas?

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2379, NATIONAL PARK SYSTEM PROTECTION AND RESOURCES MANAGEMENT ACT OF 1983

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 298 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 298

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2379) to provide for the protection and management of the national park system, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, the bill shall be considered as having been read for amendment under the five-minute rule. In lieu of the amendments recommended by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs and prior to the consideration of any other amendments to the bill, it shall be in order to consider an amendment in the nature of a substitute printed in the Congressional Record of August 2, 1983, by Representative Udall of Arizona, if offered by Representative Udall or his designee, and said substitute shall be considered as having been read. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order by this resolution. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. BEILENSON) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield the customary 30 minutes to the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TAYLOR), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 298 is the rule providing for the consideration of H.R. 2379, the National Park System Protection and Resources Management Act of 1983. The rule is an open one, providing for 1 hour of general debate to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. The bill is to be considered as having been read, and an amendment in the nature of a substitute offered by Chairman UDALL and printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of August 2 is to be considered in lieu of the amendments recommended by the Interior Committee. Finally, Mr. Speaker, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The amendment in the nature of a substitute that was printed in the RECORD does no more than to incorporate certain grammatical and technical amendments adopted by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs into a single amendment. The rule provides that the Udall substitute shall be considered at the beginning of proceedings on the bill under the 5-minute rule.

The National Park Protection and Resources Management Act is designed to insure that the natural and cultural assets of the people of our Nation are protected from activities that might contribute to the deterioration of those resources. The "State of the Parks" report completed by the National Park Service in 1980 cited instances of deterioration and threats of deterioration in every unit of the national park system. In many instances the sources of the deterioration were found to be visitor overuse, development, mineral extraction, and road construction.

H.R. 2379 proposes to avert many of the harmful activities contributing to park destruction by requiring that any project initiated or sponsored by the Federal Government that is to take place within or adjacent to a national park must first be scrutinized by the Secretary of the Interior to determine what possible detrimental impact the project may have on the park. The bill does not give the Secretary any new authority to prohibit the progress of projects initiated or sponsored by agencies of the Government not under his jurisdiction, but gives him the opportunity to review and comment on projects that may contribute to the abuse of resources found in our national parks. The bill fills a void in the administration of Federal programs by insuring that projects will not be initiated without their possible detrimental effects on the natural and cultural resources of our national parks having been fully studied and moderating recommendations having been made.

Mr. Speaker, there is some controversy over particular provisions of this bill even though all of us agree that our parks should be protected. The rule before us affords to each Member the opportunity to offer amendments to improve the bill. I urge my colleagues to support passage of the resolutions so that we may proceed to consideration of this important measure.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 298 is an open rule under which the House will consider legislation giving the Department of the Interior broad, new powers relating to land use around our national parks.

The rule makes in order H.R. 2379, and a substitute printed in the RECORD of August 2, 1983, by the gentleman from Arizona (Mr. UDALL). The substitute shall be considered as having been read, and will be offered prior to any other amendments under the 5-minute rule.

There are no waivers of any kind in this rule. It was supported by members of the Committee on Interior, some of whom oppose the bill as reported from that committee.

Mr. Speaker, the essence of H.R. 2379 is to require review of federally supported or initiated projects within or near national parks to determine whether such projects would threaten the resources within the parks.

There has been, and continues to be, a great deal of controversy about some of the legal definitions in the bill and the substitute. The Members should be aware that some bit of time will be taken up with amendments.

This legislation was originally scheduled for floor action in late June, under suspension of the rules. My information is that the Committee on Public Works and Transportation had some concerns about the bill, and it was delayed in order to provide time for the writing of amendments.

Several Republican members of the Committee on Interior testified in support of this rule, because it provides them the opportunity to amend the substitute.

I urge the House to adopt the rule.

□ 1110

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Utah (Mr. HANSEN), a member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

Mr. HANSEN of Utah. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman from Missouri (Mr. TAYLOR) for yielding time to me, and I appreciate the comments that have been made concerning this particular piece of legislation.

I know that as this legislation comes out, it appears to many that it is a motherhood type of issue, and there is no one, not one of us, who does not want to defend the parks. I would like to point out a few things, though.

I am supporting this rule, and I think it is the right thing to do. I also point out that there are a number of amendments that should be adopted, and we are prepared to offer those amendments at a later time.

I do not think people realize what we are doing in section 10 and section 11. As far as the parks per se are concerned, I have no argument whatsoever on doing a study on the parks. Where we run into trouble is that we get into words like "adjacent to." That is not defined in the bill. "Significant adverse effect" is not defined in the bill.

There are 334 parks in America that will come under the jurisdiction of this bill. I would like somebody to be able to define these terms.

I remember years ago the Democratic Governor of the State of Utah talking to a group of us who were legislators at the time and saying, "Don't give us legislation that will have to go to the bureaucrats or that will have to go into the courts."

On this particular piece of legislation, we have not determined in the hearings of the subcommittees or in the committee what these particular words specifically mean. In one subcommittee we determined that 10 miles would be "adjacent to." In one park in the State of Utah, that would be 4,600,000 acres that would come under the jurisdiction. That is the Glen Canyon Recreation Area.

So I say to those Members of this illustrious body who have national parks or who have national monuments in their districts, please read section 10.

There has been and there will be a motion to change section 11. I agree with it, and I think it perfects this piece of legislation.

Section 10 will be extremely harmful. If you have a city in that area, if you have agriculture, if you have mining, or if you have logging, you are going to find yourself in significant problems because this has not been worked out, and we are in effect saying as this body, "Let's leave it to the courts. Let's have the courts take a shot at it. Let's let a regulatory body have a shot at it, and let us not worry about it."

Mr. Speaker, I rise again to say that I do feel the Park Protection Act in other sections is a fine piece of legislation, but as to that particular part, having had it checked by the Congressional Research Service, by the GAO, and I do not agree with the language put out by those who are sponsoring the bill.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this rule.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time.

Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, I yield back the balance of my time, and I urge adoption of this rule.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 2912, DEPARTMENT OF JUSTICE APPROPRIATION AUTHORIZATION ACT, FISCAL YEAR 1984

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 239 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

Resolved, That at any time after the adoption of this resolution the Speaker may, pursuant to clause 1(b) of rule XXIII, declare the House resolved into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 2912) to authorize appropriations to carry out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes, and the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary, the bill shall be considered for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, each section of said substitute shall be considered as having been read, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5, rule XXI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. BEILENSON) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, for purposes of debate only, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Mississippi, Mr. LOTT, pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the resolution provides for the consideration of H.R. 2912, authorizing appropriations to carry out the activities of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1984, and for other pruposes. The rule provides that, following its adoption, the Speaker may at any time declare the House resolved into the Committee on the Whole, and provides that the first reading of the bill shall be dispensed with. An hour of general debate is allocated, with the time being equally divided between and controlled by the chairman and the ranking minority member of the Committee on the Judiciary. The amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on the Judiciary, now printed in the bill, shall be in order as the original bill for purposes of amendment and each section shall be considered as having been read. The rule waives points of order against the substitute for failure to comply with clause 5 of rule XXI, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill. Finally, one motion to recommit with or without instructions is made in order.

The waiver of clause 5, rule XXI contained in the rule is made necessary by the inclusion of the Judiciary Committee, in its amendment, of a provision that would allow the Director of the FBI to establish and collect fees to process fingerprints and identification records for noncriminal employment and licensing purposes. Of the amount collected, up to $13.5 million may be added to the Bureau's appropriation to pay salaries and other expenses incurred in the processing of such records.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 2912, as reported by the Committee on the Judiciary, authorizes the appropriation of $3.43 billion for the operations of the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1984. The authorization includes over $1 billion for the FBI, $600 million for the Immigration and Naturalization Service, $284 million for the Drug Enforcement Administration and approximately $500 million for the Federal prison system.

In addition, the bill suspends a set of regulations promulgated in March by Attorney General Smith relating to FBI investigations of groups that advocate violence to achieve social or political change. It prohibits the Department from filing suit against the Congress in the name of the United States and requires the Secretary to transmit a full explanation to the Congress of any policy decision he may make by which the Department would not enforce a duly enacted Federal law.

Another provision of the bill would prohibit the implementation of a plan to transfer 125 positions from the Department's legal division to offices of U.S. attorneys. The plan calls for a thinning of the Antitrust Division by 55 positions and could result in the closure of that Division's Cleveland field office.

Mr. Speaker, being an open rule, House Resolution 239 permits all Members to offer any germane amendments which they believe would improve the legislation. I urge my colleagues to vote in favor of House Resolution 239.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution makes in order consideration of H.R. 2912, authorizing appropriations for the Department of Justice for fiscal year 1984. House Resolution 239 provides for an open rule with 1 hour of general debate, which should give all Members an opportunity to amend the bill and should give this body a chance to work its will on this legislation.

After general debate, the bill is open to amendment under the 5-minute rule. An amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Judiciary Committee has been made in order. Under this resolution, the substitute will be considered as the original bill for the purpose of amendment, with each section considered as having been read. In addition, the rule waives clause 5 of rule 21, which prohibits appropriations in a legislative bill, for the substitute only. The rule provides for no other motion, except for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, I have no problems with the rule; but I do have several questions about the bill. First of all, I am concerned about an apparent contradiction between the bill itself and the committee report. The committee report does not reflect the agreement reached on record in the committee markup concerning a delay in the implementation of the Attorney General's revised guidelines for the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI). I hope this can be cleared up during general debate.

Also, it has been said, "Some folks are hard to deal with; some are impossible to deal with; and some can't be dealt with at all." In dealing with the Justice Department, I have met all three kinds of folks. I hope that the Justice Department can use some of the money authorized in this bill for better management, organization and decisionmaking within the Department.

Mr. Speaker, I would point out that the President's request for this authorization is $3.2 billion, the committee bill authorizes $3.4 billion, an increase of $800 million over last year's authorization of $2.6 billion.

□ 1120

Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL).

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, aversion to rules that contain waivers is well known. The waiver in this rule has been well documented.

I urge a vote against the rule, and I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BEILENSON. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the remarks and support of the rule by my friend, the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. LOTT).

Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the resolution.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 341, nays 43, answered "present" 1, not voting 48, as follows:

[Roll No. 371]

YEAS—341

Ackerman	Dyson	Kogovsek
Addabbo	Early	Kolter
Akaka	Eckart	Kostmayer
Albosta	Edgar	LaFalce
Alexander	Edwards (AL)	Lantos
Anderson	Edwards (CA)	Leach
Andrews (NC)	Emerson	Leath
Andrews (TX)	English	Lehman (CA)
Annunzio	Erdreich	Lehman (FL)
Anthony	Erlenborn	Leland
Applegate	Evans (IL)	Lent
Archer	Fascell	Levin
Aspin	Fazio	Levine
Badham	Feighan	Levitas
Barnard	Ferraro	Lewis (CA)
Barnes	Fields	Lewis (FL)
Bartlett	Fish	Lipinski
Bateman	Flippo	Livingston
Bates	Foglietta	Lloyd
Bedell	Foley	Loeffler
Beilenson	Frank	Long (LA)
Bennett	Frost	Long (MD)
Bereuter	Fuqua	Lott
Berman	Garcia	Lowery (CA)
Biaggi	Gaydos	Lowry (WA)
Biliey	Gejdenson	Lujan
Boland	Gephardt	Luken
Boner	Gilman	Lundine
Bonker	Gingrich	MacKay
Borski	Glickman	Madigan
Bosco	Gonzalez	Markey
Boucher	Goodling	Marlenee
Boxer	Gore	Marriott
Breaux	Gradison	Martin (NY)
Britt	Gray	Martinez
Brooks	Green	Matsui
Brown (CA)	Guarini	Mavroules
Broyhill	Hall (OH)	Mazzoli
Bryant	Hall, Ralph	McCain
Burton (CA)	Hall, Sam	McCandless
Campbell	Hamilton	McCloskey
Carney	Hammerschmidt	McCollum
Carper	Harkin	McCurdy
Carr	Harrison	McEwen
Chandler	Hatcher	McGrath
Chappell	Hawkins	McHugh
Clarke	Hayes	McKernan
Coleman (MO)	Hefner	McKinney
Coleman (TX)	Hertel	McNulty
Collins	Hightower	Mica
Conte	Hillis	Michel
Conyers	Holt	Mikulski
Cooper	Hopkins	Mineta
Coughlin	Horton	Minish
Courter	Howard	Mitchell
Coyne	Hoyer	Molinari
D'Amours	Huckaby	Mollohan
Daniel	Hughes	Montgomery
Daub	Hunter	Moody
Davis	Hutto	Moore
de la Garza	Hyde	Moorhead
Dellums	Ireland	Morrison (CT)
Derrick	Jeffords	Morrison (WA)
DeWine	Jenkins	Mrazek
Dickinson	Johnson	Murphy
Dicks	Jones (NC)	Murtha
Dixon	Jones (OK)	Myers
Donnelly	Jones (TN)	Natcher
Dorgan	Kaptur	Neal
Dowdy	Kastenmeier	Nowak
Downey	Kazen	O'Brien
Duncan	Kemp	Oakar
Durbin	Kildee	Oberstar
Dwyer	Kindness	Obey
Olin	Russo	Tauke
Ortiz	Sabo	Tauzin
Ottinger	Savage	Taylor
Owens	Sawyer	Thomas (GA)
Oxley	Scheuer	Torres
Packard	Schneider	Torricelli
Panetta	Schroeder	Towns
Parris	Schulze	Traxler
Pashayan	Schumer	Udall
Patman	Seiberling	Valentine
Patterson	Sensenbrenner	Vander Jagt
Pease	Shannon	Vandergriff
Penny	Sharp	Vento
Perkins	Shelby	Volkmer
Petri	Shumway	Walgren
Pickle	Shuster	Watkins
Porter	Sikorski	Weiss
Price	Sisisky	Wheat
Pursell	Slattery	Whitehurst
Quillen	Smith (FL)	Whitley
Rahall	Smith (IA)	Whitten
Rangel	Smith (NE)	Williams (MT)
Ratchford	Smith (NJ)	Williams (OH)
Ray	Smith, Robert	Wilson
Regula	Snowe	Winn
Reid	Snyder	Wirth
Richardson	Solarz	Wise
Ridge	Spence	Wolf
Rinaldo	Spratt	Wolpe
Ritter	St Germain	Wortley
Robinson	Staggers	Wright
Rodino	Stark	Wyden
Roemer	Stenholm	Wylie
Rogers	Stratton	Yates
Rose	Studds	Yatron
Rostenkowski	Stump	Young (AK)
Roth	Sundquist	Young (FL)
Roukema	Swift	Young (MO)
Rowland	Synar	Zablocki
Roybal	Tallon

NAYS—43

Bilirakis	Frenzel	Roberts
Brown (CO)	Gekas	Schaefer
Burton (IN)	Gunderson	Shaw
Chappie	Hansen (ID)	Siljander
Clinger	Hansen (UT)	Skeen
Coats	Hartnett	Smith, Denny
Conable	Hiler	Stangeland
Crane, Daniel	Hubbard	Vucanovich
Crane, Philip	Kasich	Walker
Dannemeyer	Lagomarsino	Weaver
Dreier	Mack	Weber
Edwards (OK)	Martin (IL)	Whittaker
Evans (IA)	Miller (OH)	Zschau
Fiedler	Nielson
Forsythe	Paul

ANSWERED "PRESENT"—1

Dymally

NOT VOTING—48

AuCoin	Florio	Martin (NC)
Bethune	Ford (MI)	McDade
Bevill	Ford (TN)	Miller (CA)
Boehlert	Fowler	Moakley
Boggs	Franklin	Nelson
Bonior	Gibbons	Nichols
Broomfield	Gramm	Pepper
Byron	Gregg	Pritchard
Cheney	Hall (IN)	Roe
Clay	Hance	Rudd
Coelho	Heftel	Simon
Corcoran	Jacobs	Skelton
Craig	Kennelly	Solomon
Crockett	Kramer	Stokes
Daschle	Latta	Thomas (CA)
Dingell	Lungren	Waxman

□ 1140

Mr. PHILIP M. CRANE changed his vote from "yea" to "nay."

So the resolution was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

EXPORT ADMINISTRATION AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1983

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to House Resolution 297 and rule XXIII, the Chair declares the House in the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill, H.R. 3231.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 3231) to amend the authorities contained in the Export Administration Act of 1979, and for other purposes, with Mr. SEIBERLING in the chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee of the Whole rose on Thursday, September 29, title I was open for amendment at any point.

Are there further amendments to title I?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WOLPE

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. WOLPE:

Page 13, line 2, strike out the quotation marks and second period.

Page 13, insert the following after line 2:

"(o) NUCLEAR EXPORTS.—Notwithstanding section 17 of this Act or any other provision of law—

"(1) no license may be issued under this Act for the export to a non-nuclear-weapon state of goods or technology which are to be used in a nuclear production or utilization facility, or which, in the judgment of the Secretary, are likely to be diverted for use in such a facility,

"(2) no authorization to engage, directly or indirectly, in the production of any special nuclear material in a non-nuclear-weapon state may be given,

"(3) no license may be issued for the export to a non-nuclear-weapons state of component parts or other items or substances especially relevant from the standpoint of export control because of their significance for nuclear explosive purposes, and

"(4) no retransfer to a non-nuclear weapon state of any goods, technology, special nuclear material, components, items, or substances described in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) may be approved, unless the country to which the goods, technology, components, items, or substances will be exported or retransferred, or in which the special nuclear material is to be produced, maintains International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all its peaceful nuclear activities. The restrictions contained in the preceding sentence shall apply to any decision made after August 1, 1983, to issue a license described in paragraph (1) or (3), to give an authorization described in paragraph (2), or to approve a retransfer described in paragraph (4). The restrictions contained in this subsection shall not apply in a particular case if the President determines by Executive order that to apply the prohibition in that case would be seriously prejudicial to the achievement of United States nonproliferation objectives or would otherwise jeopardize the common defense and security and if, at least 60 days before the export, retransfer, or other activity authorized is carried out, the President submits that Executive order, together with the reasons for his determination, to the Congress.".

Mr. WOLPE (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, the amendment that is now before the House would eliminate a dangerous inconsistency in U.S. nuclear export policy.

Under existing law, nuclear facilities and fuel cannot be exported to a country that refuses to accept full-scope safeguards. But nuclear technology transfers, and transfers and retransfers of nuclear components, can be authorized to such countries.

The amendment that I am offering here is necessary to close this loophole, a loophole that is currently being exploited to allow nuclear exports to India, to Argentina, and to South Africa.

The amendment being offered would impose the full-scope safeguards requirement across the board. Under existing law U.S. firms cannot send reactors, and reactor fuel to nonnuclear weapons countries that do not accept full-scope safeguards.

The effect of this amendment would be to prohibit, in addition, the transfer of components or technology to such countries.

The amendment would be retroactive to approvals made after August 1, 1983, in order to include the Department of Energy's approval of 143 tons of heavy water, a component, to Argentina.

Approvals of the export of components to India, and the transfer of technology to South Africa, are still pending and would be included prospectively if this amendment were to be enacted promptly. That is the reason that this amendment is being offered at this time.

Finally, the amendment provides for a Presidential waiver, consistent with current law, of the export prohibitions and for the reporting to Congress of the reasons for such a waiver 60 days before the export or transfer is to occur.

I want to emphasize that the Presidential waiver authority in this amendment, would be invoked if the President found that the application of the prohibition prejudiced the achievement of the country's nonproliferation objectives or ran contrary to our national security interests.

What we are proposing to do in this legislation is to make internally consistent the criteria that we apply to this most potentially dangerous of export commodities.

Mr. Chairman, the spread of nuclear weaponry to nonnuclear states and groups has often been obscured by the debate over the superpower arms race, a subject which itself directly effects the future of this planet. But in a sense, global proliferation represents an even more dangerous threat.

Through a combination of self-interest and restraint, the superpowers have successfully avoided the use of nuclear weapons for 28 years. But the spread of nuclear technology and information increases the threat of such capability being acquired by a nation or group that would not treat it so responsibly.

With only a small supply of plutonium a terrorist group could hold the entire world hostage.

□ 1150

With materials and technology diverted from a commerical nuclear facility, a small nation could turn a regional conflict into a catastrophic nuclear war. Indeed, one of the most likely scenarios for a nuclear exchange between the superpowers is one in which an initial attack is launched by a third party.

The United States, as the original nuclear weapons state and the world's largest supplier of nuclear materials, has a special responsibility to insure the prudent and peaceful use of this technology. And we have in fact always been mindful of that responsibility, from the passage of the Atomic Energy Act of 1946 to the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978, we have sought to regulate the flow of materials into nations relevant to nuclear weapons development. A host of responsible nations have joined with us, pledging to halt the trade in weapons-making technology and to accept international inspection of its own nuclear commerical facilities.

The law that is already on the books is an important law, but there are loopholes and there are imperfections.

This amendment is extracted from broader legislation that I have introduced this session, and that was originally introduced by Congressman JACK BINGHAM, the distinguished author of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978. My amendment addresses perhaps the most serious loophole in the 1978 act a loophole which is being used to justify exports to India, and to South Africa, and the authorization and retransfer of heavy water to Argentina.

So I would urge the adoption of this amendment.

Mr. BARNES. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word, and I rise in support of the Wolpe amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE).

It is important that, in our deliberations today on our export policies, we raise the issue of nuclear nonproliferation and recognize the necessity for controlling certain areas of trade which we know directly aids in the spread of nuclear items and technologies that can be used to make nuclear weapons.

The amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan would impose a full-scope safeguards requirement for all nuclear exports—including nuclear retransfers, components, dual-use items, and technology transfers.

The amendment also recognizes, as does the Atomic Energy Act, the need for Executive discretion in the final judgment on these exports. The amendment specifically grants Presidential waiver authority in cases affecting our national security interests.

Current law imposes the full-scope safeguards standard for NRC licensing of major nuclear equipment and fuel exports. These restrictions do not apply, however, to DOE, State, or commerce. The Wolpe amendment would cover, not only exports currently under the jurisdiction of NRC, but would also cover exports authorized by the other three agencies which are not currently restricted by law.

For example, in the case of subsequent arrangements—the use or transfer of U.S.-origin materials or components—the executive branch, primarily the Departments of Energy and State, has sole responsibility for granting these approvals and has the authority to grant approvals for shipment, for example, of U.S.-origin fuel from a third country to a country that does not accept internationally recognized safeguards. So, fuel that could not be licensed for export by the NRC, could be retransferred, once it is abroad, and could be used by a country and for a use which was unanticipated by the original NRC export decision.

The Wolpe amendment would prevent this from happening.

The Wolpe amendment is an important and timely proposal. It would require, for instance, that all retransfers and exports which have not been made as of the date of enactment of this bill be subjected to the full-scope safeguards requirement. It is critical that the Congress take this opportunity now to halt these potential exports, now pending approval, which will add significantly to the nuclear capability of countries we know to be on the path to making nuclear weapons.

Argentina is a case in point. Argentina's nuclear program has now reached a dangerous stage. Argentina has consistently maintained the right to develop and complete an independent nuclear fuel cycle and is clearly maintaining the option to develop nuclear explosive devices, and has publicly indicated that it intends to keep this possibility open. Anything we add to their program only helps them to move toward that goal.

Argentina has not adhered to the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty, or the Treaty of Tlatelolco, nor has it agreed to put all of its nuclear facilities under IAEA safeguards.

Despite the Argentine position, just recently the administration approved the licensing for shipment of U.S.-origin heavy water from West Germany to Argentina. (Heavy water is an essential element for operation of Argentina's reactors.) The administration also previously approved the sale of a computer system for an Argentine plant being used to produce heavy water. There are currently other licensing requests pending for Argentina, some of which are for significant components. The House should take this opportunity to stop these approvals by adopting the Wolpe amendment.

The New York Times recently ran an article by Philip Boffey entitled, "Experts Fear Argentina Is Planning A-Bomb." The Times said an intelligence report confirms that:

> Argentine officials have a "secret plan" to divert a ton of uranium from under the noses of international inspectors and use the material to make nuclear fuel elements. Such fuel elements could presumably be irradiated, through further clandestine steps, to produce plutonium for an atomic weapon, or they could presumably be stockpiled and saved to build a bigger arsenal at some future time.

Whether or not the Argentines could succeed in such a diversion is only part of the question. We should be primarily concerned with the Argentine Government's motivation in developing its nuclear program.

A State Department official with years of experience in this field is quoted as saying, "Argentina is probably closer than anybody else in the world today to completing an unsafeguarded nuclear fuel cycle. And there's nothing secret about it. That's the truly disturbing thing."

What is also disturbing is that in the face of Argentina's blatant rejection of internationally accepted nonproliferation standards, this administration continues to permit nuclear-related exports to Argentina. We may, effectively, be aiding Argentina on its course to the nuclear bomb. I would ask my colleagues whether they would have wanted Argentina to have nuclear weapons last year during the Falklands Malvinas war.

Argentina began its nuclear program 33 years ago. In 1974, it started operation of its first nuclear plant. It is now helping other developing countries, such as Pakistan (which has also refused to accept IAEA safeguards on all of its nuclear facilities), to enhance their nuclear programs, and as a supplier, it is not requiring any safeguards on its exports.

It is abundantly clear to me that we should not be in the business of nuclear trading with Argentina unless the country adheres to full-scope safeguards.

The Wolpe amendment would prohibit nuclear exports to Argentina, until Argentina accepts full-scope safeguards. Similarly, the amendment would cut off the sale of components to India's Tarapur reactor, as well as the sale of clearly dual-use items to South Africa. Both India and Argentina, we know, are among the few countries that have a significant nuclear capability and do not adhere to internationally recognized nonproliferation standards. We should, at the very least, scrutinize more carefully our exports to all of these problem countries. The Wolpe amendment provides an effective mechanism for that and allows us to control these sensitive exports.

CONCLUDING REMARKS

A strong U.S. nuclear nonproliferation policy will protect our national security interests and further our efforts for nuclear arms control. We live in a nuclear age, and technologies that have brought us to this point will be refined and improved, and scientific progress will continue. Nuclear power does not depend on the highly explosive materials and sensitive technologies that produce nuclear weapons. If we do not take the necessary steps today, the problem will have moved beyond our capacity to influence or manage it at all, the capability to make nuclear weapons will belong to many others, and the decision to use nuclear weapons will be an increasingly important factor in determining the state of international peace and security.

Nine years ago, India exploded its first nuclear device. By the end of this century, there may well be 20 more countries with that capability. We have the opportunity now to take the lead in determining how the technologies of the nuclear age will be used and whether or not they will be used for nuclear power or nuclear weapons.

This is the time for our country to continue and strengthen the leadership role we have had in the past.

I strongly urge my colleagues to support the Wolpe amendment.

□ 1200

Mr. FISH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BARNES. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. FISH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think this is an extremely important amendment. Its effectiveness lies in its simplicity.

We all should favor curbing the export of nuclear technology to nations who have not accepted international inspection.

We have the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978. However, it allows the export and retransfer of nuclear components and technology under less stringent requirements than those applying to direct exports.

This loophole is closed by the pending amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I personally think the greatest danger of war lies in countries which do not respect international restraint having a nuclear potential.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Wolpe amendment and commend his leadership in introducing it.

I am a cosponsor of his more comprehensive nonproliferation legislation, and with Senator HART from Colorado, a more comprehensive bill to strengthen nonproliferation safeguards; in both of those bills the Wolpe amendment is one of the important provisions.

As the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE) has indicated, his amendment closes a very important loophole in our present nonproliferation legal structure. It affects particularly the supply of U.S. technology and components, which at the present time do not require full-scope safeguards, to Argentina, South Africa, India, and Pakistan, countries that pose the greatest danger of a threat to the peace of the world though the development of nuclear weaponry.

I think that that threat is a far more real threat to the peace of the world than the nuclear problems that we are experiencing with the Soviet Union.

The Soviet Union knows that if it uses nuclear weapons, we have the ability to retaliate. But if Argentina in the Falkland crisis, if Pakistan and India get involved in further conflicts and both have nuclear weapons, if Qadhafi's irresponsibility, if he through reported cooperation with Pakistan ever got his hands on a nuclear weapon, the world could be blackmailed. That is a very real threat indeed. There is no way that we can through nuclear retaliation resolve that. The only way it can be resolved really is the action the Israelis took with respect to Iraq when they suspected that Iraq was developing a nuclear weapon. Israel went in with conventional weapons before the reactor could be started and bombed it. Proliferation poses a real threat of instigation of armed conflict throughout the world.

Unfortunately, this administration, for the first time, has sought to bypass the Non-Proliferation Act and to supply materials that before were embargoed under U.S. leadership. I think that closing this loophole is absolutely vital.

As the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BARNES) indicated, Argentina has been stated by the State Department to be "probably closer than anybody else in the world today to completing an unsafeguarded nuclear fuel cycle. And that is truly disturbing."

Argentina is constructing an unsafeguarded reprocessing plant within the sight of the Buenos Aires Airport which could extract weapons grade plutonium from spent fuel obtained from reactors operated on U.S. supplied heavy water. And 143 tons have been proposed by this administration for retransfer to Argentina.

South Africa now operates an unsafeguarded uranium enrichment plant capable of producing highly enriched uranium that can be used for nuclear weapons. South Africa is believed by some to have detonated a nuclear device in the South Atlantic Ocean in September 1979. The mysterious circumstances of what appeared on the Richter scale at that time have never been resolved. South Africa over a year ago was placed on a list of 63 countries by the State Department which need specific authorization by the Department of Energy to obtain any American technology, but full-scope safeguards are not required and again a transfer of technology is being contemplated by this administration.

India, of course, conducted a nuclear explosion using materials from a research reactor in 1974, much to the shock of the entire world. India, at the present time, appears to be preparing for another nuclear explosion in the Rajasthan Desert test site and some intelligence reports have indicated that that may be of a hydrogen device. It claims it is free to reprocess U.S. supplied nuclear fuel without U.S. approval after the agreement of cooperation lapses in 1993.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OTTINGER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. WEBER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OTTINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. WEBER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment and commend our colleague from Michigan for offering the amendment and the gentleman in the well for speaking on behalf of it.

If there is a point that I would like to make and I guess I make it to many of my friends on this side of the aisle, it is that many of us who disagree over philosophies of defense and strategic issues should not find reason to divide similarly on this particular issue. And I hope that Members who are listening will resist the temptation to lump this issue in with all other strategic and defense related issues.

It seems to me that the issue of nonproliferation crosses philosophical lines, crosses partisan lines, and is in the interest of all of us who favor a more secure world and a more secure America.

I very strongly commend the gentleman for his remarks and our colleague from Michigan for offering the amendment.

And I urge my colleagues to support the amendment.

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the gentleman for his important words of support.

Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OTTINGER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would appreciate it if the gentleman would yield for the purpose of my asking a question about the amendment to the distinguished gentleman from Michigan who authored it.

My question is, If this is adopted and becomes the law of the land, would the President be entitled, under the terms of this amendment, to issue a waiver with respect to the sale of spare parts to India for its Tarapur facility?

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. OTTINGER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. The answer is "yes." I would add that it would be my hope that the President would not choose to invoke that waiver authority. But if he found that failure to export the item would prejudice America's achievement of its nonproliferation objectives, or if there were some other national interest finding, then he would be able to issue that waiver. He would, however, be required to notify the Congress and there would be a 60-day lapse before the export occurred.

Mr. SOLARZ. So, leaving aside the wisdom of issuing such a waiver or its appropriateness, under the terms of the gentleman's amendment the President would clearly have the right to issue such a waiver, if he chose to do so.

Mr. WOLPE. That is correct, but what we are trying to do by this amendment is to apply the statutory criteria very explicitly and uniformly across the act. So I would hope that the President would at least pay some attention to that congressional expression. Nevertheless, the direct response to the gentleman's question is that the President would still retain the waiver authority.

Mr. SOLARZ. Does the waiver contained in the gentleman's amendment differ in any way from the waiver in the existing Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act with respect to the sale of nuclear components to other countries.

Mr. WOLPE. If I may respond, the answer is "no"; it does not. In fact, in this amendment we have simply taken existing waiver provisions and expanded their application.

Mr. SOLARZ. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER) has again expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. OTTINGER was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

□ 1210

Mr. OTTINGER. I outlined the dangers that are posed by nuclear weapons capability that is being acquired in Argentina, South Africa, and India. But Pakistan perhaps poses the greatest danger of all. Pakistan is the one country that the International Atomic Energy Agency, that conducts the inspections, has in fact reported it was no longer able to certify that diversions were not taking place. There is strong evidence that Pakistan indeed, because of the development of a nuclear weapons capability by India, is developing that capability itself, and there is some evidence that Libya may be cooperating with it in that endeavor.

That, it seems to me, poses a danger to world peace that is completely intolerable. It is, therefore, of paramount importance that the mechanisms of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act be extended, as the Volpe amendment would provide, to nuclear technology. As the gentleman has pointed out, it has the same waiver provisions as presently exist in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act.

Mr. Chairman, I strongly urge adoption of the amendment.

The amendment surely provides that nuclear trade administered by the Departments of Commerce and Energy and the Nuclear Regulatory Commission be carried out under a uniform, full-scope safeguards requirement under which nuclear trading partners of the United States, that are not nuclear weapons countries, must agree to open all their nuclear facilities to international inspections of the International Atomic Energy Agency as a condition for trade. Under existing law, the export of nuclear technology and related components now require safeguards only on the facilities in which these items will be used.

This strengthened safeguard standard makes a great deal of sense for several important reasons.

First, it is now widely recognized that nuclear components and technology are as important in the development of nuclear weapons capabilities as are nuclear facilities and fuel. Under existing law nuclear facilities and fuel can be exported only if the recipient country has already agreed to full-scope safeguards. The export of items once considered to have less significance for proliferation, but now believed to be more important, should also require the application of full-scope safeguards.

Second, it is important to note that this requirement would not unilaterally impose an onerous requirement on our trading partners (as some have already suggested).

To date, 115 nonnuclear weapons countries have already signed the Non-Proliferation Treaty (NPT). Under article 3 of the NPT, those nations have already undertaken to open all their civilian nuclear facilities to IAEA safeguards inspections.

Only a handful of countries, including Argentina, South Africa, India, and Parkistan, refuse the application of full-scope safeguards or to sign the NPT.

It is no surprise that these same countries are the subject of our nonproliferation concerns.

This U.S. initiative can be the beginning of a uniform agreement among all nuclear suppliers that full-scope safeguards are to be an essential prerequisite for all nuclear trade amongst nations.

By this means will we begin to come to grips with this vital problem.

I strongly urge its adoption.

Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong opposition to this amendment, which however well-intentioned can only wreak diplomatic havoc and reduce this country's ability to positively influence other countries in the nuclear arena. The administration has developed a policy of "constructive engagement" in nuclear policy matters which amounts to: One, case-by-case consideration of nuclear proliferation aspects of nuclear exports, and two, an evaluation of such exports based on whether the technology is sensitive, for example, reprocessing or advanced enrichment technologies, from the point of view of nuclear weapons proliferation.

I had thought that one lesson this body had learned from the nearly 4 years of President Carter's unilateral nonproliferation policy was that we simply cannot practice an approach based on denial. President Carter realized this in the last year of his administration and our actions over the past 2 years have given some credibility to our claims of wishing to remain a reliable supplier of nuclear technology and materials. Equipment and activities affected by this amendment would include safety equipment and minor parts for reactors as well as materials for South Africa's safeguarded power station which was built by the French. We should look upon these types of nuclear supply exports as well as agreements to provide reactor know-how as opportunities to remain such a strong player that we cannot be ignored in the nuclear plans of any of these nations, including Israel. To adopt this amendment will put us a long way on the road back toward diminished influence and result in simply a proliferation of nuclear suppliers while not achieving any real progress in nonproliferation with regard to control of nuclear weapons. I hope that my colleagues will support a rational and constructively deliberate policy approach to nuclear exports by rejecting this amendment.

According to the U.S. State Department this may cut off exports to Israel.

Mr. LEVINE of California. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise to support this amendment, and I would like to commend my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan, for bringing this matter before the House.

Ultimately, there are few issues of greater consequence either to this country or to the world than the issue of preventing the further spread of nuclear weapons. This is an issue which we must take up seriously with all nations of the world, both those nations who supply and those nations who potentially receive nuclear materials.

Under current law, the United States can still export nuclear components and technology to countries which have not made internationally recognized commitments to nonproliferation such as adherence to the NPT, the Treaty of Tlatelolco, or acceptance of comprehensive full-scope safeguards on all of its peaceful nuclear activities. Continuing to contribute to these countries' increasingly sophisticated nuclear fuel cycles seems to reward them for their continued rejection of international nonproliferation goals and objectives, rather than exerting the strongest influence on them to be more responsible in the development of their nuclear programs. It is important for the security of all nations that the United States take a strong lead in trying to promote nuclear nonproliferation. To do this, we must be willing to use the strongest, most effective means at our disposal to influence other countries to adhere to nonproliferation goals and to guarantee that their nuclear programs will not be used for the development of nuclear weapons.

I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the gentleman from Michigan's amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think there is a Member in this Chamber who wishes to see nuclear weapons spread to other nations. Such a proliferation of these weapons of mass destruction represents an extreme threat to our national security.

We spend many days in this House debating the defense budget and its implications to our national security. We spend many days debating our national security in terms of the nuclear threat posed by the Soviet Union.

But I think that too often we do not give enough attention to the threat to our national security and the security of other peace-loving nations by the spread of nuclear weapons to countries that presently do not have them.

We forget that while threat of nuclear war between the United States and the Soviet Union represents the ultimate problem for this planet, the most immediate problem we face is the ever-increasing likelihood that another nation besides the superpowers will use nuclear weapons.

The most immediate nuclear problem we face today is the threat of a nation like Libya, Iraq, Pakistan, or Argentina acquiring a nuclear weapon and using it.

It is ironic, Mr. Chairman, that we have been deeply concerned lately about the drain of military-related technology to the Soviet Union.

We have all been worried, and justifiably so, that this drain represents a security threat to the United States.

But for some reason, we have been very cavalier in our concern over the export of nuclear equipment and technology that could very well pose a national security threat to this Nation.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Michigan's amendment addresses the concern we all should have over nuclear equipment and technology exports that could pose a national security threat to this Nation.

I hope my colleagues will support this amendment because it makes good national security sense and it makes good defense sense.

Quite simply, this amendment would close some of the loopholes that presently exist in our export-licensing process for nuclear equipment and technology.

It would require what I think is a very minimal standard for a nation to meet to receive nuclear equipment and technology.

It would require that the export or retransfer of U.S. nuclear goods, technology, special material, components, items, or substances may not be made to a country unless that nation maintains International Atomic Energy Agency safeguards on all its peaceful nuclear activities.

As I said, this is only a minimal requirement—that a country receiving nuclear equipment and technology from the United States must have full-scope IAEA safeguards in place. It is a requirement that a country with a truly peaceful nuclear program would have no problem meeting.

In fact it is a requirement that a country with a peaceful nuclear program should welcome.

And I say that if a country balks at accepting these requirements, we should recognize that resistance as a clear signal that its nuclear activities may be other than peaceful.

I would also like to point out that this amendment would still allow the President to waive these restrictions, if the President determines by Executive order that the prohibition would be seriously prejudicial to the achievement of U.S. nonproliferation objectives or would jeopardize the common defense or national security, if that Executive order is submitted to Congress for review at least 60 days before the export.

In other words, this amendment contains the right of Presidential waiver that is presently in the 1978 Non-Proliferation Act.

As I mentioned before, Mr. Chairman, this amendment would close some of the loopholes that presently exist in our export-licensing procedures for nuclear equipment and technology. And I might add that these have been loopholes that the current administration has eagerly exploited.

Last month, for example, the administration approved the retransfer of 143 tons of U.S.-origin heavy water to Argentina.

□ 1220

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore (Mr. DURBIN). The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MARKEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. MARKEY. Argentina has not signed the 1970 Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty. It has refused full-scope safeguards.

It has refused to ratify the Treaty of Tlateloco, which would prohibit nuclear weapons in Latin America. It has refused to rule out the possibility of acquiring nuclear bombs.

And some experts have predicted that Argentina will be able to produce a nuclear bomb by the end of this decade.

Now, I ask you, if then-President Galtieri had had access to a nuclear bomb as the British aircraft carrier fleet was in the Falkland Islands area as his regime was dying and needed something to prop it up, would he have considered using it? I do not think we can answer that question affirmatively. I do not think we know. I do not think that we should continue to have commerce with a country that refuses to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty.

Yet, here we are, allowing the export of heavy water to Argentina, and that heavy water is a key ingredient in the production of nuclear weapons.

Another example of a loophole is the possibility that the State Department will approve the licensing of an American firm to provide services to the Koeberg nuclear reactor in South Africa.

South Africa is another nation that has refused to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty and has refused to accept full-scope safeguards.

Also, many intelligence experts believe that South Africa may have already exploded a nuclear device.

In still another example, last June, the Secretary of State assured the Indian Government that it would receive reactor components for its Tarapur atomic power station.

India, you will remember, exploded a nuclear device in 1974 using material diverted from its civilian nuclear program. India has also refused to sign the Non-Proliferation Treaty, has refused to accept full-scope IAEA safeguards, and has refused to rule out the possibility that it, in fact, would develop a nuclear weapons program.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. DOWNEY of New York, and by unanimous consent, Mr. MARKEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. Clearly, Mr. Chairman, this country has no business exporting nuclear material to nations that refuse to demonstrate that their nuclear facilities are being used for nonnuclear purposes and refuse to rule out the possibility that they will explode nuclear bombs.

This amendment therefore is a sound amendment that is in our national security interest and I strongly urge its adoption.

I would say to my colleagues that if you are concerned about the export of sensitive military technology to the Soviet Union, you should be just as concerned about the export of nuclear technology that would pose an equal, if not greater, national security threat to this Nation.

We will be in a position, as the Pentagon has indicated in a last December study, that by the year 2000 we will have to equip our intermediate range aircraft with nuclear weapons in order to strike out at the threats throughout the entire Third World if we do not now begin to try to stem the tide of this rising number of countries in this world that gain access to nuclear weapons through peaceful civilian nuclear programs.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in strong support of the Wolpe amendment. I guess it was several weeks ago that Pope John Paul II termed the period of time that we are living in no longer the postwar period but potentially the prewar period.

I think that if there is any concern that overrides questions of the deficits or even questions of strategic policy between ourselves and the Soviets, it is how many members of the nuclear club there exist on this planet. Currently we have, I guess, about seven or eight. It depends on whether you want to count Israel or South Africa or not. The U.N. report estimates that by the end of this century there will be 20 members of the nuclear club.

What role does the United States have to play, if any, in limiting the numbers of the nuclear club, or trying to regulate their behavior? Clearly, the export of nuclear technology and nuclear materials is critical to that question.

The Wolpe amendment simply addresses some of the shortcomings in the 1978 law. All we are asking for, and as the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) correctly pointed out, there are Presidential waivers in the event that that should be necessary, is compliance with the 1978 law, with a recognition that you should be part of worldwide agreements if you are prepared to use nuclear fissionable material or nuclear technology.

The gentleman from Massachusetts also pointed out something that we do not spend very much time thinking about. During the war between Britain and Argentina, there is no doubt in my mind that if you are with your back against the wall and you have the capability to use nuclear weapons simply against combatants, and that is all you would have been able to kill with nuclear devices if you are Argentina, a flotilla several hundred miles off your coast would have quickly changed the complexion of that war.

Yet we are prepared to provide heavy water to the Argentines to further their ability, possibly before the end of the decade, to have nuclear weapons.

All throughout the world we have regional conflicts that have lasted for hundreds of years, and the United States is slowly and in many instances unwittingly providing nations with the ability to wage nuclear war against one another. The Indians, the Pakistanis, the South Africans and the border states around them will all become potential areas for nuclear conflict unless we act, and act firmly.

The argument has been made, "Is not the best way to deal with this question by being a reliable source?" Well, it may be, but is it not a better way to have a clear vision of what you want your country to be and have a clear understanding on the part of other nations that they have to comply with your laws before you will provide them with services that they desire?

It seems to me the decision should be clear in our mind. There is no greater question than reducing the availability and the opportunity for nation states across this planet to have nuclear weapons.

Mr. UDALL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. I would be happy to yield to my friend, the gentleman from Arizona.

Mr. UDALL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I think the gentleman is making a very important statement and I associate myself with his remarks.

I have always believed that if the ultimate horror of nuclear war comes to this planet, it will probably come not from miscalculation by the Soviets and by ourselves, but by one of the smaller powers threatened, as the gentleman indicated, with their national pride at stake, like the Argentinians. It would be much easier to enter into a nuclear exchange in that situation.

It is up to all of us to strengthen the International Atomic Energy Agency. That is vital. It does not guarantee anything particularly, but it does say that we are moving in this area.

I want to congratulate the gentleman. I just wish that our former colleague, Jonathan Bingham, who championed this cause so effectively for so many years, were here to join in this debate, because I followed his lead and I am glad to follow the lead of those like the gentleman from Michigan who are working in this Congress.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. I thank the gentleman.

Of course, the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) should be remembered for his courageous and insightful leadership over the years in this matter.

□ 1230

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Of course, I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I just wanted to inject into the debate at this point something the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) used to mention over and over again. The issue is not really whether or not we are a reliable supplier; it is whether or not we have reliable customers.

We have always been a reliable supplier. What we are trying to do now is put on the books a law which makes sure that the customers that we sell these materials to do not divert them to purposes other than those for which they were intended in the contract that is signed between our Government and theirs.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman makes an excellent point. I think it is also important to recognize that we cannot do this in a vacuum.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. DOWNEY) has expired.

(On request of Mr. OTTINGER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. DOWNEY of New York was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, on the subject of our being a reliable supplier, I think that is very important.

The legislation that I have introduced would include our supplying uranium to countries at a very low cost to induce them not to reprocess or enrich their materials and produce bomb-grade materials.

We can be a reliable supplier to anybody who is willing to be a responsible customer and who is willing to engage in the international treaty against proliferation and to subject their facilities to safeguards, as the vast majority of countries do. Some 193 countries have signed this treaty, and we are reliable suppliers with respect to those countries, but they have to be responsible customers in order to qualify.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. It clearly is a two-way street. We hear it said all the time that the United States has to do this or that to get this customer. For instance, our tax laws have to be predicated on what the French, the British, and the Germans do. That is a lot of nonsense.

The United States, as the preeminent world military and economic power, should set a tone and an example. That is not much to expect from a great country, to provide that sort of leadership and to provide that sort of example.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. I yield further to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, the real problem in this area is that we have for the longest time stated publicly that our goal is to raise the issue of nonproliferation, and that preventing the spread of nuclear weapons is the No. 1 issue in the world. That is the stated national goal of our Government. But at the same time, while stating that as a goal, we have allowed short term, diplomatic, military, and economic considerations to gut that long-term nonproliferation goal.

What we are trying to state once again firmly is that that is our goal, and that we are not going to allow the short-term problems of a President, a Secretary of State, or a private company in our country to override that long-term goal which ultimately leads to the security of our country and the world.

Mr. DOWNEY of New York. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. MARKEY) makes a superb point. There is always a reason temporarily for us not to force someone to comply with the rigors of a policy that is visionary.

The only thing I could end on that I think would be appropriate as a quotation is one from the Bible: "Where there is no vision, the people perish." In this area of nuclear nonproliferation, vision is imperative.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that the amendment is well intentioned, but I have been surprised about what happens whenever this kind of an amendment is added onto a bill.

The thing that concerns me is that because of our unreliability as a nuclear supplier, we have suffered the loss of jobs in this country. Because of this attitude, because of laws such as these that are enacted perhaps in a spirit that is well meant, what happens is that in my home State of New Mexico, for example, the uranium mining industry has been devastated, simply because we have lost all our trading partners because of well intentioned, but certainly not very meritorious, kind of amendments.

Let me give the Members an example. About a year and a half ago I attended a conference of the Pacific Basin States in Mexico. The subject was, of course, nuclear energy. At that time Mexico was considering buying 20 nuclear powerplants, and we were, of course, eager to sell those powerplants to them. An American company was already constructing one powerplant there.

I was amazed when the leaders of that country in the production of electricity said that of those 20 that they are going to buy, not 1 of them will be bought from the United States.

Now, we are their No. 1 trading partner, and yet in this particular area they would go anywhere in the world other than the United States to buy those nuclear powerplants. And when we talk about the cost of one of those plants being $2 billion, or whatever the figure may be—perhaps it is a lot less in their own country than it is in ours—we have to look at the balance of trade and look at the jobs that are lost in this country because of our nuclear policy.

I asked them specifically why they would not buy them from the United States. They said, "We need a reliable partner. Your nuclear policy doesn't make sense, either your domestic policy or your export policy."

So, Mr. Chairman, it seems to me that we do more damage by adding this kind of an amendment to such a bill. Certainly none of us want any of these nations to get into production of nuclear weapons, but we are not talking about exporting nuclear weapon production capability; we are talking about exporting nuclear powerplants. When our No. 1 trading partner—at least we are their No. 1 trading partner—tells us that they are not going to do business with us because of the kind of attitude we have in our country, it seems to me that we have gone just a little bit too far.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I will yield in a minute.

Mr. Chairman, this particularly concerns me because no more than 50 miles or 60 miles from where I live in Albuquerque, over in the Grants, N. Mex., area, the uranium mining industry is just devastated because of our nuclear policy. And the people in Mexico were absolutely correct. We do not have a rational nuclear policy; in acting in this way, we just shoot ourselves in the foot.

Now, Mr. Chairman, I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I am hard pressed to understand the rationale of the gentleman from New Mexico. Is he saying that he believes that we ought to revive the uranium industry in New Mexico by increasing our exports to Argentina, Brazil, South Africa, and India? Because that is what this bill is about. This bill is about exports of technology, equipment, and components, to those countries.

I am hard pressed to believe that the people in the gentleman's State would justify the creation of new uranium jobs on the basis of exporting materials to countries that have not signed the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty, to countries that have not disavowed an interest in creating nuclear bombs.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time, what I am saying is that time after time in all the legislation that we seem to be working on in this body, we look for the opportunity of political expression and the offering of such nonsensical amendments.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. LUJAN) has expired.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. LUJAN) be allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. LUJAN) wish to be recognized for 2 additional minutes?

Mr. LUJAN. All right, Mr. Chairman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

Mr. LUJAN. I will be glad to yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts, Mr. Chairman.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I wanted the gentleman to be allowed to conclude his statement.

Mr. LUJAN. No; I had concluded, Mr. Chairman.

My point was that we look through all pieces of legislation when we have this antinuclear attitude in this country, and this just means more limitations. There are enough safeguards. The Secretary has the authority now, and no Secretary in his right mind is going to deliver that capability to a country that does not have a nuclear weapons capability. But this is just an expression of what is perhaps already being done, and it just muddies the water further by having this kind of an amendment.

Would the gentleman disagree that the Secretary already has that prerogative of denying an export license to any country where it will become a nuclear weapons-capable state?

Mr. MARKEY. Exactly right, but let me state the problem.

Mr. LUJAN. Can the Secretary do it? Then, if that is correct, if he does have that, why in the world do we need to put an amendment in this bill here? The reason for it escapes me.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. MARKEY. It is because the Secretaries of Energy and Commerce and the NRC do not have the proper direction from us.

□ 1240

They are in fact now in the process of approving contracts with Argentina, with India, with South Africa, and with China without the proper safeguards.

Mr. LUJAN. Did the gentleman mention Israel? Is the gentleman trying to prohibit the shipment of nuclear powerplants to Israel?

Mr. MARKEY. I am saying that the restrictions ought to apply to all countries.

Mr. LUJAN. So if Israel wants, as they do, to develop a nuclear weapons capability, the gentleman thinks we ought to deny them that right?

Mr. MARKEY. What I am saying is that the Congress should decide.

Mr. LUJAN. Well, just yes or no; either the gentleman does or he does not.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. Markey, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LUJAN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LUJAN. What the gentleman is doing, he is taking those states that he does not personally think ought to have them and starts throwing rocks at them. But let us include Israel in this. Is it the gentleman's intention that we not be able to ship nuclear technology to Israel because they would want to have a nuclear weapons capability? Is that the gentleman's intention? Yes or no.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I will answer it, as the legislation has been drafted. Under the legislation, for 60 days this proposal must come to Congress for our deliberation. At that point in the context of the particular sale of the particular component for the particular purpose for which it is intended, Congress will then deliberate upon that.

We, however, do not have the right to overrule what the White House has decided. The President can grant the waiver, only that we in Congress will have that as the subject for debate or for proposal, 60 days prior to the actual export.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. OTTINGER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LUJAN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. LUJAN. Listen, I just wanted to make a little statement in support of American industry. I do not mean to get into a big discussion about what states we like or what we do not or who we are going to discriminate against and all those things.

Does the gentleman believe seriously that we should bring to this Congress every proposal of sale of any nuclear powerplant anywhere in the world, or just those that the gentleman thinks that maybe we can throw rocks at some particular country in the general debate, or should we bring every single sale to this Congress to be debated?

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I will be glad to answer that question. I do not think that most of them would command the attention of the Congress here, but I think those that pose nonproliferation threats to this world and to the security interests of the United States, I believe that we ought to debate them here. I believe that there will be a nuclear war somewhere in this world in the next decade. I do not believe it will be between the United States and the Soviet Union.

I do believe at that point we will have the most important political, moral and philosophical debate in the history of this world on this issue.

I just ask that we play our proper role in trying to restrict access to countries that are most likely to use it and create that war to have these materials.

If the gentleman wants to give a blank check to every country in the world that can come in here with the dollars, put them on the table, we shove them this merchandise ultimately on to the street, hawk it to anybody that can come up with the money, then fine, so be it. Just say it. Anything for jobs in New Mexico, anything, we will sell to anyone that wants it. You just say those words.

I believe we have a greater moral responsibility than that. I believe that we will ultimately rue the day that we set this world upon a plutonium economy and I believe when those million of lives are lost, most likely brown faces or black faces somewhere in this world in the next decade, that we will regret our total abdication from the decisionmaking process.

Mr. LUJAN. I had no idea that we were getting into an ethnic discussion on this thing. I think if we do create that situation, it will be bad for everybody; but the point is that the Secretary now has that capability.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico has again expired.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman may proceed for 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I reserve the right to object, only to note that we have 30 amendments pending to the Export Administration Act, many of which are very technical. We have limited time today in which to consider all of them, so I would hope that we could scale down this debate and move on with the votes, so that we can take up the remaining amendments.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER) that the gentleman from New Mexico may proceed for 1 additional minute?

There was no objection.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUJAN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I just would like to settle the question that the gentleman raised with respect to Israel. Israel does not import from the United States its nuclear technology nor its fuel. It has its own fuel capability, so I think that is a shibboleth that is being raised here that really does not apply.

What we are asking is that the same rules that apply under the Non-Proliferation Act to all countries in the world be applied to nuclear technology, as well as to nuclear facilities. Israel is not affected any more by this amendment than by the basic Non-Proliferation Act.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, may I ask the gentleman, does the Secretary now have the authority to deny the shipment of nuclear products to a country that he believes is going to use them for nuclear weapons purposes? Does the Secretary have that authority now?

I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. OTTINGER. It does not now come for licensing. He does not now have the authority under law to be able to deny that technology, except as he might under the Export Administration Act feel that this is sensitive equipment that should not go to a hostile nation.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I do not think it will come as any surprise so any of us to hear that the administration strongly opposes this amendment.

Although the administration, and I, appreciate the concerns which have motivated this amendment, I believe that such a policy would not only fail to achieve the nonproliferation objectives which apparently have motivated its sponsors, but would substantially reduce the chances of making meaningful progress on these issues.

Let me just point out a few items on why I believe this amendment should be opposed.

First, imposition of such a restraint on all nuclear cooperation with nonnuclear weapons States, which currently do not accept comprehensive safeguards, even insignificant health and safety assistance to safeguarded civil nuclear power programs, and I should point that out. As I understand the amendment, it would not only apply to unsafeguarded facilities in a country, but even to those that are safeguarded in those countries and it would eliminate any U.S. influence on the direction of the nuclear programs of those countries. Particularly, it would make it difficult, if not impossible, to convince such countries to adopt broader safeguards coverage over their nuclear programs.

Second, existing stringent export requirements adopted by Congress as part of the 1978 Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act, which many of us voted for, after long and careful consideration, establish a reasonable and effective framework for determining which types of nuclear cooperation should be controlled because of their proliferation risk. Unlike the carefully balanced controls in existing law, this measure fails utterly to make any distinction between trivial, nonsensitive assistance to foreign nuclear programs and activities which actually warrant concern and control.

This change in the legislative framework is not only unnecessary, but would cause foreign governments to seriously doubt the judgment of the United States about what is significant from a nonproliferation perspective, and what is not.

Further, the effect of this amendment would be to adopt a major new change to the Atomic Energy Act without appropriate consideration by the relevant committees of the Congress.

My understanding is that this amendment was not considered in hearings before the House Foreign Affairs Committee or its subcommittee.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I yield to the gentleman on that point.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Most of the elements of this amendment were, in fact, included in the Bingham legislation that was considered and passed by both subcommittees that have jurisdiction over this question, and by the full committee in the last session. In this session there has been one hearing on the more comprehensive bill from which this amendment was extracted.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. But this particular amendment was not discussed?

Mr. WOLPE. No, it was not.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Further, such a sweeping alteration of a carefully structured export control system, without thorough consideration, would have major and perhaps unforeseen consequences for U.S. trading relationships going far beyond the nuclear field. It would call into question the U.S. reputation as a predictable and reliable trading partner.

I am informed by the State Department that the Wolpe amendment would preclude all nuclear cooperation with the State of Israel.

It would also preclude all nuclear cooperation with the Republic of Argentina, which will be holding its first Presidential elections in 7 years next month.

□ 1250

It would be extremely shortsighted I think to punish a newly elected democratic government with whom we are trying to improve relations before we even see what efforts the new government makes toward accepting international safeguards.

Furthermore, Argentina has signed the Latin American Treaty against nonproliferation, TLATELOCO, but has not yet ratified it. I do not think we ought to take action, at least at this point, which might jeopardize eventual ratification of that treaty. Prohibiting all nuclear exports without considering how that might adversely affect U.S. influence in securing adherence to an international safeguard could well be counterproductive. By maintaining our ability to export nonsensitive items, we maintain our leverage in influencing our nuclear partners.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LAGOMARSINO was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. We will hear the argument that the President does have under this amendment the right to waive its provisions. However, what country with whom we might be dealing is going to accept that kind of a situation, where they might deal with a company and with Departments of this Government for many months, not knowing in advance whether such a waiver would come forth or not.

I think what would happen is that we would see these countries going to foreign sources for these nonsensitive items, we would have lost whatever influence we had, and we would not have furthered the very vital issue and the ultimate worthy goal of nonproliferation.

I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman from Michigan for his proposal and for his salutary objectives. However, I think there are a number of very important considerations that I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues that I believe warrant our opposition to the amendment.

From a foreign policy standpoint, applying such punitive treatment to several nations with which we have close and amicable relationships would not only disrupt important bilateral U.S. relationships with those nations, but could also effect broader regional issues.

Moreover this far reaching new trade restraint would penalize U.S. companies, without corresponding nonproliferation gains, because foreign suppliers will readily provide equivalent items or services without requiring the types of conditions which the United States would apply to such transactions.

Achievement of the nonproliferation goals identified in the proposed amendment to the Export Administration Act can only be achieved through international cooperation and negotiation, not through the unilateral imposition of hastily conceived, indiscriminately applied, and retroactive export prohibitions.

Further, implementation of the policy contained in the amendment by agencies of the Federal Government would be extremely difficult and contentious in view of its failure to precisely set forth standards for determining which of the many items exported from the United States would be deemed to fall within its scope.

In addition, this proposal seems to retroactively revoke export approvals already granted by the U.S. Government after protracted consideration. Disputes over the application of this provision, especially over any attempt to revoke existing nuclear export approvals, could lead to protracted litigation or administrative proceedings which would further erode foreign confidence in the U.S. export process.

Finally, this amendment would complicate and confuse the institutional responsibilities of the U.S. Government agencies which are charged with implementation of nuclear export control laws and regulations. For example, subsection 1 of the amendment would appear to place in the Secretary of Commerce the responsibility for determining whether nuclear items are likely to be diverted for use in a nuclear production or utilization facility. This is not the kind of finding which the Department of Commerce possesses the expertise and institutional mandate to make. Other provisions of the amendment are ambiguous concerning which agency bears responsibility for the findings which must be made under the law to determine whether a proposed export is covered. These examples illustrate that a potentially far-reaching measure of this character must be carefully evaluated before enacted into law.

It is for these reasons that I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. RITTER).

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RITTER. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The argument that the gentleman made that other countries will supply this equipment if we do not is one that is frequently heard. As a matter of fact, when we were exercising leadership in nonproliferation, and after India exploded a device with heavy water supplied by Canada, we were successful in getting Germany to cancel arrangements it had with Argentina, and France's arrangements with Pakistan, because of their concern and because of our leadership. If we do not exercise that leadership I do not think we can expect the other countries to cooperate with us in our nonproliferation goals.

I again thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. RITTER. I thank the gentleman for his comments.

The fact is that under the Carter administration this country lost significant ground as an exporter of nuclear power technology.

The fact is that this is an American industry. And the fact is that we invented it here, and American taxpayers paid for its evolution and development. But over the recent decade, we have lost greater and greater ground to foreign competition because we, especially during the Carter administration, put a series of constraints on our sales that were not put on by the competition. Now this amendment expands those constraints considerably.

France, which is not responsible to the 1978 Nuclear Proliferation Act signed by the Congress, is the nation that sold the reactor to Iraq. Conceivably that kind of sale could be avoided if we are in the competition and we are not constrained by our own legislation. Conceivably, we could influence the use to which those technologies are put.

The 4 years of experience in the Carter administration indicates that we lost ground, and we are still losing ground. There have been no new domestic orders for nuclear power in this country but there have been foreign orders. And this means hundreds of thousands of jobs in this industry to the United States.

The bottom line is this: For those considering supporting this amendment, this amendment is generalized, it is nonspecific, it opens up 10 Pandora's boxes. This amendment will enhance the risk of nuclear weapons proliferation because it will take the United States out of the competition. No involvement means no influence. That is what is going to happen, if this amendment is made law.

So, I urge my colleagues to think about this American high technology industry; to think about the meaning of export and foreign sales to preserving a domestic market—like Ford Motor Co. during 2 miserable years sustained by its foreign sales—the same can be true of this industry and the hundreds of thousands of workers who are involved in this industry, from steel to electronics to brain power in hundreds of different fields.

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. RITTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ZSCHAU. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I just want to thank the gentleman also for his comments. We come here to Washington, D.C., from all over the country and find that one of the key topics of discussion is how can this country maintain its technological leadership. We hear a lot of complaints and we see the wringing of hands about how foreign competition is taking technology industries away from us. And yet, we here, right in this body, continue to erect barriers that prevent our technological concerns from advancing their sales overseas, from making progress vis-a-vis our foreign competitors.

□ 1300

I hope that my colleagues will understand that this is not just a vote about nuclear energy and nonproliferation but it is a vote about the policy of high technology in this country. Are we going to continue to shoot ourselves in the foot, and restrain our companies from being able to be the technological leaders we would want them to be through needless regulations or are we going to permit them to compete in the world markets as they should?

I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. RITTER. I think the gentleman has made an excellent point.

Mr. HUTTO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and, despite the good intent of this amendment, I rise in opposition to it.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the Wolpe amendment. Of course, we are all in favor of nonproliferation. We do not want to allow materials or technology to get into the hands of nations, particularly those that are irresponsible, that would allow them to produce nuclear weapons. But, it is my understanding that this amendment would preclude the shipment of safety equipment, components and minor parts for reactors.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. ROTH TO THE AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. WOLPE

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment to the amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. ROTH to the amendment offered by Mr. WOLPE: On page 3 of the amendment, line number 1, strike out the quotation marks and the last period and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"The restrictions contained in this subsection shall not apply in a particular case if foreign availability is determined to exist in accordance with the procedures and criteria established under subsection (f)(1) of this section (unless the President determines that not applying such restrictions would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States.")

POINT OF ORDER

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I make a point of order against the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from New York will please state this point of order.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Chairman, I believe the amendment is in the third degree. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE) offered an amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute and, for that reason, I think it is not in order.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair would advise the gentleman from New York (Mr. OTTINGER) that this is an amendment in the second degree. The original amendment in the nature of a substitute is considered as an original bill for purpose of consideration under the rule.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, It think it is important for us to remember that we are debating the Export Administration Act.

One of the key provisions of that act is the issue of foreign availability.

What my amendment does is this: Using the foreign availability test by applying the criteria which is found in section 5(F)(1) of the EAA Act of 1979 and the standard of the foreign availability states that if there is a determination of foreign availability, then we should not require validated licenses, unless, to quote from the amendment, "unless the President determines that not applying such restrictions would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States."

Mr. Chairman, a couple of weeks ago we had a very interesting hearing on the Nuclear Explosive Act where the gentleman from Michigan most eloquently testified before our committee. Other Members here on the floor also testified at that time and I was struck by the great similarity between the terminology the witnesses used regarding nuclear explosives and the existing Export Administration Act.

I believe in consistency. I believe in being rational. I know that my colleague believes the same. I think he will, as many of our other colleagues in the body, be arguing that we apply a foreign availability test, to specific criteria and standards, to the Export Administration Act. They are arguing that foreign availability should be the criteria on whether or not to restrict the sale of a good or technology of strategic importance.

But in this bill they are now proposing an amendment which does not take foreign availability into account, and that is a crucial factor.

The proponents argue, it seems to me, that nuclear exports are so important and have such a dramatic effect on world affairs and are so critical and strategic that foreign availability is not the issue and that is why it does not appear in this amendment.

But I would ask the following questions:

Is the sale of biological or chemical warfare elements less important?

Is the sale to the Soviet Union of an advanced computer, for their Soviet military establishment, less important to this House than the export of some incidental nuclear material?

Is the export of a radar system from the West to the Soviet Union, which now is the guiding hand for Russian defense, less important?

Yes; I think there is a difference, and I think that it has a real bearing on our U.S. security.

I think that is the issue we are trying to deal with in this particular legislation and that is why I feel we must be consistent.

I applaud the gentleman's intention and his concern that he has shown in his amendment. I feel that we must share the same concerns and have the same intentions about the entire Export Administration Act.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I rise to speak in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in the strongest possible opposition to this amendment which not only is in conflict with the intention and the thrust of the amendment that I have offered today, but is actually in direct conflict with the entire thrust of this country's nuclear nonproliferation policy.

It has always been understood that other countries may, in fact, also have things to sell that would be restricted from export from this country. That has always been understood.

But we have always insisted that there are certain kinds of technologies that we would not allow to be exported indiscriminately, notwithstanding the possibility that other countries would then be able to make a similar sale.

We do that right now with respect to nuclear reactors and fuel. The United States does not sell any nuclear reactors or fuel to any country that does not accept full scope safeguards, even though we knew there are other countries that have nuclear powerplants and fuel to sell.

We have done that because we understand that it is not in America's interests, it is not in the interests of the world to allow that kind of technology to flow to countries that refuse to apply safeguards necessary to insure that nuclear fuel and technology will not be diverted to weapons production.

All that we do in my amendment is to say that the same criteria should be applied to the components and to technology transfers as to the powerplants and the fuel itself.

What is at issue in the Roth amendment to my amendment is the potential application of foreign availability criteria to all nuclear component exports. This would mean that no export restrictions would apply if other countries had the same nuclear product for sale. That is outrageous on its face. Moreover, I would note there are many other products we refuse to export on an indiscriminate basis, notwithstanding their foreign availability.

For example, with respect to crime controls, or the control of terrorism we have some very clear limitations on what we are going to allow to be exported from this country, even though we understand in advance that other countries have the same material.

With respect to the nuclear nonproliferation policy, the reason we make that assertion is because we understand that the United States cannot possibly assume leadership in this critical area unless we are prepared to set the example and by the example and by our diplomacy secure the cooperation of other nuclear suppliers.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WOLPE. I would at this point be pleased to yield to my distinguished chairman.

Mr. BONKER. I thank the gentleman.

As he knows, I will be opposing his amendment on procedural grounds and, for the same reason, I must oppose the gentleman's amendment to the amendment.

I do not think you can reconcile a foreign availability provision with the present Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act. It simply is not included.

Not only that, but if this provision is to remain in the Export Administration Act, the Secretary of Commerce alone would have to make the determination of foreign availability. We know that that jurisdiction is not shared with the Department of Energy.

The gentleman from Michigan notes, rightly so, that we have made exceptions in the present Export Administration Act for situations where, in spite of foreign availability, we would not allow any commercial transactions to occur. The crime control equipment list is one example, and we also control sales of aircraft to certain terrorist countries. I think we have to apply that the same standard to nuclear technology or nuclear parts.

So I do not think that foreign availability is a concept that would apply itself well to this provision and for that reason I would have to oppose the gentleman's amendment.

□ 1310

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to the amendment, for perhaps unusual reasons. It seems to me, Mr. Chairman, that the major thrust of the legislation is that it encourages the exporting of technology, if it is available to controlled countries by Cocom countries anyway.

The bill goes on and says if critical technology that would inherently reduce the defense capabilities of this country is available in foreign countries, and we cannot persuade those countries not to export it to other countries, then we can join in the sale of that technology, even though it is military-critical and jeopardizes the defense capabilities of this country.

In other words, we are once again into the area of foreign availability. The main amendment says that there is an overall moral concern to nuclear energy because nuclear energy can be used for military nuclear proliferation but, regrettably, this amendment does not attach the same 6-month negotiating requirement on nuclear technology as it does to other technology.

It seems if there is a moral concern, an overriding moral position against the sale of nuclear technology, that same concern, in the same degree, should be available when we talk in terms of the sale of inertial guidance systems, when we talk in terms of the sale of laser lenses or chemical warfare capabilities.

It seems to me that if you have a 6-month criterion requiring the President to negotiate out the foreign availability in 6 months for one type of technology it should be applied likewise to the other type of technology.

It seems to me that if nations can be destroyed by nuclear technology, it requires the guidance system to deliver the nuclear warhead.

I think it is impossible to argue in favor of the amendment without further restrictions of the amendment by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Therefore, I urge Members to vote in favor of the restriction to make sure that there is equality in the two types of technology.

As I mentioned before or as I may not have mentioned before, I am not much in favor of the foreign availability aspect when it comes to the 6-month limitation. But if it is going to stay in the bill, it should stay in the bill for all types of technology, as well a nuclear technology.

Therefore, I rise to support the gentleman's amendment to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

This is the most confusing kind of a debate. Here we say that we want to be world leaders and now we take a reverse leadership role. We say that no matter what we believe, if anyone else in the world wants to do it, then we will adopt that policy.

That is going to be our new role under this policy. We say, "You are a heroin addict? And you can get if from some other place? Well, we will sell you the heroin because we do not want to lose the business."

We will adopt their standard of morality. Take the French, for example. Do you want to sell nuclear components to Iraq even though we know that they are building nuclear bombs with it because the French are selling them equipment? We will be selling the components and we do not want any official restrictions on it. Do you know what I think we ought to do? I think we ought to adopt a policy that we have with regard to the Pakistanis.

We have exerted our clout with our allies who are also nuclear suppliers, to place restrictions on the export of materials to the Pakistanis. It has worked. The other countries have come to follow our lead on this issue.

Rather than abdicate responsibilities we ought to set the example, to use the very substantial political and economic clout that we have by setting standards that others will follow instead of saying, "We will allow you to set the lowest common denominator and we will adjust ourselves downward in terms of what should be our standard on the export of nuclear materials."

There are 115 countries, 115 countries that have signed the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty. We are talking about five countries here that have not; five countries who we all believe have very, very real programs in process to construct nuclear weapons. We are trying to restrict their ability to gain access to some nuclear materials.

We have very real reason to believe that India and Argentina have had great difficulty in obtaining these materials from other countries.

What we are saying with this particular amendment is we do not care, we do not care at all; as long as those people can put up the dollars and they would go to another place in the world we will allow that to drive our policy with regard to whether or not we exert leadership.

I think it is a complete and total abdication of the long-term nonproliferation goals of this country. It totally ignores the real clout that we have in playing this leadership role and it will come back to haunt this country.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MARKEY. I yield to the gentleman from New Jersey.

Mr. COURTER. I am pleased the the gentleman would yield, thank you very much. I just have an inquiry.

I am going to, sometime later today, or if we do not get on with this debate, whenever this bill is brought up again, proffer an amendment to eliminate the 6-month situation with regard to foreign availability. My argument is going to be that there are some types of technology that if it is exported and if the President cannot dissuade other countries from exporting within that 6-month period, are so dangerous to the security of the United States, perhaps are so morally outrageous, we should, regardless of the rest of the world, not export it ourselves.

I am just hoping that, using the gentleman's logic, he would, therefore, feel compelled to support my future amendment and I would like to have his thoughts on it.

Mr. MARKEY. I will give very serious consideration to that amendment when the gentleman makes his case.

Mr. RITTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield to me?

Mr. MARKEY. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. RITTER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to ask him whether or not he believes that holding Pakistan responsible is a wise policy, the policy that we have followed in trying to hold Pakistan responsible on this issue?

Mr. MARKEY. I am sorry, I do not follow the point of the gentleman.

Mr. RITTER. The gentleman pointed out that we have held Pakistan responsible for fulfilling our own requirements for nuclear nonproliferation, that we have used the 1978 Act and our influence with Pakistan as a club. Does he agree with that? I assume that he does agree with that.

Mr. MARKEY. I do, yes.

Mr. RITTER. We are doing that now without this amendment. That is an important thing to recognize. What this amendment does is open up a whole new series of channels to do what? To cripple the ability of this country to do nuclear power sales with a series of other nations including, I might add, the nation of Israel, who may well be hindered in her own nuclear power development by this very amendment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Massachusetts has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. MARKEY was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MARKEY. I think we have already made it clear that there is a nominal effect, at most, on Israel. But in addition, remember, the President can still waive the provisions. We do not tie the hands of the President behind his back; rather, we only make a requirement that he put the request before Congress for 60 days for our consideration.

At that point he can waive any of the provisions in order to make any sale he believes to be in the security interests of the United States and that includes sales to Israel.

Mr. Chairman, I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I will not take the 5 minutes. But I want to make a very important point. That is this: The entire basis of the proponents' argument, the gentleman from Michigan, is that we have to set an example. I'm confident we do not want a double standard.

The flip side of the proponents argument must be kept in perspective. If it is true that the United States should exert leadership in this field and to set examples for our allies, then the exact same argument applies to West-West trade and setting an example for our Cocom partners, in strategic controls on high technology exports to the Soviet Union. And I hope we keep that in mind when we come to those titles in the legislation.

I thank the Chairman.

□ 1320

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. Chairman, section 108 of this bill states that negotiations must be conducted to eliminate the availability from foreign sources of items controlled for national security purposes: If the availability is not eliminated within 6 months, the item will no longer require an export license. I agree that fair enforcement of controls requires multilateral cooperation, and we must be committed to making every effort to eliminate foreign availability. Requiring negotiations to do this is entirely appropriate. However, mandating that national security controls on such items be lifted if foreign availability is not eliminated within 6 months could have very serious national security ramifications. We might, as a consequence, be required to unilaterally decontrol items on the Cocom control list which are available from other foreign sources.

Mr. Chairman, this would seriously damage our position in Cocom. In addition, although I appreciate the concern that U.S. business should not be precluded from selling their products overseas if foreign competitors are not similarly restricted, our discretion to maintain U.S. controls on such items under certain circumstances should not be eliminated.

This amendment is similar to the recommendations made by the House Armed Services Committee panel on technology transfer which extensively studied this issue. The Department of Defense and the Department of Commerce believe that this section of the bill, unless amended, will severely jeopardize the national security of the United States.

This amendment to the bill is aimed at strengthening the foreign availability section of the bill with respect to national security controls. My amendments have nothing to do with foreign policy controls, and those colleagues who have expressed support for the bill because of interests in agriculture or exports in the area of heavy equipment should be alerted that my amendments have no impact on these interests.

Section 108 of the bill requires that the availability of an item controlled for national security purposes be eliminated through negotiations within 6 months. If all foreign availability is not removed within the 6-month period, then the President is required to lift export controls on the items controlled for national security purposes.

The Department of Defense and the Department of Commerce believe that this unrealistic requirement will severely jeopardize the national security of the United States.

Section 108 of the bill contains two fatal flaws: The first one is the lack of a clear definition of foreign availability. This is a loophole which will end U.S. export controls over militarily critical goods and technology.

The second flaw is the 6-month time limitation placed on the President. Six months is not sufficient time to negotiate with our allies to end foreign availability on thousands of goods and items.

These two flaws in the bill may force the United States to remove export controls on items such as advanced electronic testing equipment, sensitive aircraft engine technologies, and intelligence-gathering instrumentation.

And listen to this: If the President was not successful in eliminating foreign availability on items used for the production of chemical and biological weapons production, in the 6-month time period, the United States would be required to eliminate export controls on such items. Does the U.S. Congress really want to make it easy to export items used for the production of chemical and biological weapons? Do we really want to export chemical weapons? Let me give you another illustration: The technological advantage possessed by the West and, most notably, the United States, was clearly demonstrated in the Israeli air victory over the Syrians a year ago. The Israelis using sophisticated electronic weaponry—received from the United States—overwhelmingly defeated the Syrians using inferior Soviet technology and equipment.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLOMON) has expired.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to proceed for 5 additional minutes.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New York?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I believe that the gentleman in the well is making comments on an amendment that is not necessarily before the House. I think he is making reference to the foreign availability provision in section 108 to which he was going to offer an amendment.

But the issue before the House is the gentleman's amendment to the amendment of the gentleman from Michigan concerning foreign availability of nuclear technology and nuclear parts.

So I think that his comments, with which I am quite familiar, are not relevant to the issue before the House.

Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. LUJAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentleman from New York (Mr. SOLOMON).

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, House passage of H.R. 3231 will erode the edge we hold in the area of critical military technologies. These areas include jet aircraft engines, essential parts for missile weaponry and smart weapons, and precision machinery which is used to produce weapons. And while we are on the subject of essential parts for missile weaponry, I would like to point out that the Atoll missile, used to murder the 269 innocent men, women, and children aboard the Korean Airliner, reflects a mirror imaging of deployed Western systems and their technologies. My amendments will strengthen this bill in order to delay and prevent future Soviet access to sophisticated Western technology—the sophisticated technology they duplicate to build weapons like the Atoll missile.

Some of my colleagues are always pointing out that there have been few denials and actual instances of diversion through the validated licensing process—and they are right. However, what they fail to point out that this is due in large part to the integrity of the validated licensing system.

Without the validated licensing system, more items than those already diverted would occur in West-West trade. It is the success of our validated licensing system that has prompted the Soviet bloc countries to seek other means of diversion of high technology items. Consideration of West-West trade licensing is taking less than 1 month and I cannot help but feel that this is a small price to pay for helping to maintain our national security.

I would also like to point out, and this is very important, that according to our intelligence community, more than 80 percent of the illegal diversions to the Warsaw Pact countries occur through West-West trade, not in West-East transactions. Section 108 of the bill would require the United States to share technologies which we do not now share with our closest allies, and this includes releasing technologies to neutral as well as Cocom countries. Once this is done, the technologies will then be transferred to the Soviet bloc. Remember what I just said—over 80 percent of the illegal diversion to the Warsaw Pact countries occur through West-West trade, not in West-East transactions. According to a recent survey, the Soviets have tried to infiltrate 105 of our 1,300 Swedish companies.

High-tech firms in neutral countries are of particular interest to the Soviet electronics company Elorg—which set up to buy sensitive electronics from Western European firms—and its KGB chief managed a few years ago to buy U.S. electronic components from a Swedish company, even though the firm had no official export license. The technology is now used in Soviet planes. This is just one of hundreds of examples of the Soviets obtaining Western technology which can be used for military purposes.

There is a strong relationship between the national security sections of this bill and the Korean airline massacre. Has the U.S. Congress already forgotten the atrocity which occurred a little over 3 weeks ago. An atrocity which cost the life of one of our colleagues and the lives of 269 innocent men, women, and children. Well, the American people have not forgotten.

Is this body really going to approve a bill which will make it easier for the Soviets to obtain U.S. missile technology? At the same time, we continue to search for the black box from the KAL destroyed by an Atoll missile. A Soviet missile which is an exact duplicate of the U.S. Sidewinder missile. The Soviet Atoll is a mirror image of U.S. technology and was built with Western methods, and Western know-how.

For all of these reasons, I urge the Members to support the amendments I will offer concerning foreign availability.

□ 1330

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. LUJAN) has expired.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the gentleman from New Mexico (Mr. LUJAN) be given 1 additional minute.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from California?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I object.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Objection is heard.

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I wanted to ask the gentleman from New York a couple of questions, if I could.

Since we are talking about the foreign availability section, I thought it was important to bring home to our colleagues exactly what this means, and I have been listening very closely to the gentleman.

In reading the foreign availability section, it appears to me that when they talk about determining foreign availability and the initial determination by the President that the absence of controls would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States, they are talking about technology, then, that could be used in a military way against the United States; is that right? They are talking about American technology that, if it were transferred, could be ultimately used to kill Americans in a conflict; is that right?

Mr. SOLOMON. In my opinion, that is right.

Mr. HUNTER. Then what they are saying is, if we have on our controlled list technology that could ultimately be used to kill Americans and, therefore, we will not sell it, but another country, one of our Cocom partners is selling and we cannot talk them out of that within 6 months, then we, the United States, would go ahead and we sell technology that could be used to kill Americans to our adversaries; is that accurate?

Mr. SOLOMON. That is exactly accurate. And all we are saying in the amendment of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH) is that unless the President determines that not applying such restrictions would prove detrimental to the national security of the United States. I do not see how any Member of this body could support this amendment.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HUNTER. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. WOLPE. I thank the gentleman for yielding to make a point of clarification.

I believe that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH) intends to offer another amendment subsequently with respect to foreign availability.

I believe the discussion that is taking place really goes to the core of that amendment rather than to the amendment that is now before us. There is an understandable confusion because the term "foreign availability" appears in both. I simply wanted to clarify that.

Mr. HUNTER. The gentleman is right, the amendment that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH) will be bringing up on the foreign availability section in general will be coming up soon.

Mr. WOLPE. That is right.

Mr. HUNTER. But I wanted to make that point, I think it is an important point that this House understands. The whole subject of foreign availablity.

Mr. WOLPE. I wanted to make sure that it is understood that the dialog that just took place bears no relationship to the amendment that is now before us.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH) to the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. ROTH) there were—ayes 26, noes 21.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he well vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

□ 1340

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

RECORDED VOTE

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE) for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 163, noes 220, not voting 50, as follows:

[Roll No. 372]

AYES—163

Andrews (NC)	Crane, Philip	Hansen (ID)
Archer	Daniel	Hansen (UT)
Badham	Dannemeyer	Hartnett
Barnard	Daub	Hightower
Bartlett	DeWine	Hiler
Bateman	Dickinson	Hopkins
Bereuter	Dreier	Horton
Bethune	Duncan	Hubbard
Bilirakis	Dyson	Hutto
Bliley	Edwards (AL)	Hyde
Breaux	Edwards (OK)	Kazen
Brown (CO)	Emerson	Kemp
Broyhill	Erlenborn	Kindness
Burton (IN)	Evans (IA)	Lagomarsino
Campbell	Fiedler	Leath
Carney	Fields	Lent
Chandler	Forsythe	Lewis (CA)
Chappell	Fuqua	Lewis (FL)
Chappie	Gaydos	Livingston
Clinger	Gekas	Lloyd
Coats	Gilman	Loeffler
Coleman (MO)	Gingrich	Lott
Conable	Green	Lowery (CA)
Conte	Gunderson	Lujan
Courter	Hall, Ralph	Mack
Craig	Hall, Sam	Madigan
Crane, Daniel	Hammerschmidt	Marlenee
Martin (IL)	Paul	Snowe
Martin (NC)	Petri	Snyder
Martin (NY)	Porter	Solomon
McCain	Price	Spence
McCandless	Ray	Stangeland
McCollum	Regula	Stenholm
McEwen	Ridge	Stratton
McGrath	Roberts	Stump
Michel	Robinson	Sundquist
Miller (OH)	Rogers	Taylor
Molinari	Roth	Valentine
Montgomery	Roukema	Vander Jagt
Moody	Sawyer	Vandergriff
Moore	Schaefer	Vucanovich
Moorhead	Schulze	Walker
Morrison (WA)	Sensenbrenner	Whitehurst
Murphy	Shaw	Whitley
Murtha	Shelby	Whittaker
Myers	Shumway	Williams (OH)
Nielson	Shuster	Wilson
O'Brien	Siljander	Winn
Olin	Sisisky	Wolf
Ortiz	Skeen	Wortley
Oxley	Slattery	Wylie
Packard	Smith (IA)	Young (AK)
Parris	Smith (NE)	Young (FL)
Pashayan	Smith, Denny
Patman	Smith, Robert

NOES—220

Ackerman	Fowler	Mazzoli
Addabbo	Frank	McCloskey
Akaka	Frenzel	McCurdy
Albosta	Frost	McHugh
Anderson	Garcia	McKernan
Andrews (TX)	Gejdenson	McKinney
Annunzio	Gephardt	McNulty
Anthony	Glickman	Mica
Applegate	Gonzalez	Mikulski
Barnes	Goodling	Mineta
Bates	Gore	Minish
Bedell	Gradison	Mitchell
Beilenson	Gray	Mollohan
Bennett	Guarini	Morrison (CT)
Berman	Hall (IN)	Mrazek
Biaggi	Hall (OH)	Natcher
Boggs	Hamilton	Neal
Boner	Harkin	Nowak
Bonker	Harrison	Oberstar
Borski	Hatcher	Obey
Bosco	Hawkins	Ottinger
Boucher	Hayes	Owens
Boxer	Hefner	Panetta
Brooks	Hertel	Patterson
Brown (CA)	Hillis	Pease
Bryant	Howard	Penny
Burton (CA)	Hoyer	Perkins
Carper	Huckaby	Pursell
Carr	Hughes	Rahall
Clarke	Hunter	Rangel
Coelho	Ireland	Ratchford
Coleman (TX)	Jeffords	Reid
Collins	Jenkins	Richardson
Conyers	Johnson	Rinaldo
Cooper	Jones (NC)	Ritter
Coughlin	Jones (OK)	Rodino
Coyne	Jones (TN)	Roe
Crockett	Kaptur	Roemer
D'Amours	Kasich	Rose
de la Garza	Kastenmeier	Rostenkowski
Dellums	Kennelly	Rowland
Derrick	Kildee	Roybal
Dicks	Kogovsek	Russo
Dixon	Kolter	Sabo
Donnelly	Kostmayer	Savage
Dorgan	LaFalce	Scheuer
Dowdy	Lantos	Schneider
Downey	Leach	Schroeder
Durbin	Lehman (CA)	Seiberling
Dwyer	Lehman (FL)	Shannon
Dymally	Leland	Sharp
Early	Levin	Sikorski
Eckart	Levine	Smith (FL)
Edgar	Levitas	Smith (NJ)
Edwards (CA)	Lipinski	Solarz
English	Long (LA)	Spratt
Erdreich	Long (MD)	Staggers
Evans (IL)	Lowry (WA)	Studds
Fascell	Luken	Swift
Fazio	Lundine	Synar
Feighan	MacKay	Tallon
Ferraro	Markey	Tauke
Flippo	Martinez	Tauzin
Florio	Matsui	Thomas (GA)
Foglietta	Mavroules	Torres

Torricelli	Weaver	Wright
Towns	Weber	Wyden
Traxler	Weiss	Yates
Udall	Wheat	Yatron
Vento	Whitten	Young (MO)
Volkmer	Williams (MT)	Zablocki
Walgren	Wirth	Zschau
Watkins	Wise
Waxman	Wolpe

NOT VOTING—50

Alexander	Foley	Moakley
Aspin	Ford (MI)	Nelson
AuCoin	Ford (TN)	Nichols
Bevill	Franklin	Oakar
Boehlert	Gibbons	Pepper
Boland	Gramm	Pickle
Bonior	Gregg	Pritchard
Britt	Hance	Quillen
Broomfield	Heftel	Rudd
Byron	Holt	Schumer
Cheney	Jacobs	Simon
Clay	Kramer	Skelton
Corcoran	Latta	St Germain
Daschle	Lungren	Stark
Davis	Marriott	Stokes
Dingell	McDade	Thomas (CA)
Fish	Miller (CA)

□ 1400

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Nelson for, with Mr. Bonior of Michigan against.

Mr. Nichols for, with Mr. Pepper against.

Mr. ROWLAND changed his vote from "aye" to "no."

So the amendment to the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, when this amendment was first presented to me, I indicated that it sounded like reasonable policy and that I probably would not oppose it, and might, in fact, vote for it.

I think the debate which we have witnessed over the past hour and a half, however, has proved that the offering of this amendment was premature.

What we have here is an amendment which is clearly germane, and yet it is an amendment which the subcommittee and the committee clearly did not debate or discuss. It is a brandnew area on which this House, in my judgment, is not sufficiently informed to take a reasonable judgment.

I am informed that the committee has scheduled a large number of hearings on this very complicated subject, and has, in fact, begun those hearings, which will take place over a period of several weeks. When the hearings are complete I think the committee could bring forth its recommendations and we could deal with them on a rational basis.

We have heard in the debate that a number of departments of the administration opposed this amendment or may be nervous about it.

We have heard that it casts some doubt over our ability to do business with one of our best allies, the State of Israel.

I think this is a matter that we should be very careful about.

I voted against the Roth amendment simply because I was not ready to make a decision either on the amendment to the pending amendment or the amendment itself.

I think we would do ourselves a great favor and the Export Administration Act a great favor if we did not burden the bill with the amendment that is now pending.

Therefore, with reluctance, because I think it is a highly motivated amendment, I suggest that the body should vote down the pending amendment.

Mr. ROTH. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. ROTH).

□ 1410

Mr. ROTH. This amendment has one other provision we must be cognizant of. This amendment requires a 60-day prior notice before shipment. The proposed 60-day report and wait period, Presidential Executive order, to permit such exports, could in certain cases prevent necesary timely response to conditions abroad.

Again, a timely response is a very important issue, especially in cases of health and safety, so I would hope that we would vote down the Wolpe amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Thank you.

Mr. Chairman, I am going to support the chairman of the subcommittee and the ranking Member and I am going to vote against the amendment.

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, just simply for the record, I think it should be indicated that the elements that are embraced within the amendment before the House right now were in fact, part of legislation that was considered by and acted upon and approved by the subcommittee and the full Foreign Affairs Committee in the last session. There has been a hearing on this same subject this session.

The fact is that if we do not act now, then we will be effectively acquiescing in anticipated exports of nuclear components to Argentina, to South Africa, to India, countries on which many Members of this body have already expressed themselves on earlier occasions.

The amendment before this body simply would make uniform the criteria of existing law. Right now we are not able to sell powerplants or fuel to countries that do not accept full scope safeguards. What we do in this amendment is to say that same criterion should apply to components and to the transfer of technology as well.

I want to say to those Members who are concerned that this amendment may unduly inhibit the flexibility necessary for executive action that we have carried over into the language of this amendment Presidential waiver authority. The President could avoid the restrictions in this legislation if he were to find that the applications of the restrictions in a specific instance would be inconsistent with the achievement of our own nonproliferation objectives, or if there was a national interest finding that would dictate that those exports should be made. The 60-day reporting requirement is simply to say that the Congress should be informed 60 days in advance of the exports being made.

I might point out under the recent Supreme Court decision oveturning the legislative veto that Presidential waiver is probably a very enhanced waiver. I submit the amendment before this body is terribly important. It is directd at a critical loophole. If we do not act now we will be contemplating exports that the vast majority of this body know are neither in the interest of the United States nor the world.

I would ask support for the amendment.

● Mr. WEISS. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the Wolpe amendment to H.R. 3231, the Export Administration Amendments of 1983. This amendment serves a necessary and critical purpose for all of us concerned about the uncontrolled proliferation of nuclear weaponry beyond the six countries now known to possess nuclear weapons.

The Wolpe amendment will close those loopholes in the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Act of 1978 that allow the export of nuclear reactor components, personnel assistance, and the transfer of nuclear components through third parties to those countries that have not accepted international inspection and safety guidelines for their nuclear facilities.

For many years the United States has tried to persuade the six principal nonsigners of the Nuclear Non-Proliferation Treaty at least to accept safeguards on all their nuclear activities, which are called full-scope safeguards. Recent decisions by the Reagan administration to open up nuclear exports with potential weaponsmaking application to three of those nonsignatories—Argentina, India, and South Africa—demonstrate the need for an amendment such as Mr. WOLPE's.

At present, two of those countries have at least the capability to produce nuclear devices. South Africa has the facilities to produce bombs, and while it has not acknowledged conducting any nuclear tests, in 1979 a U.S. spy satellite detected a flash in the South Atlantic resembling a nuclear test. In 1974, India tested a crude atomic bomb.

Providing these countries with the technology, personnel, and material essential to the production of nuclear devices will only undermine the long-standing efforts not only of the United States but the international community as well to force these countries to stop the production of nuclear weapons.

The current policy of the Reagan administration undermines as well all of its efforts to engage in successful arms reduction talks with the Soviets. And this policy seriously undermines the efforts of all of us who have worked on behalf of peace and nuclear disarmament.

The escalation of countries capable of producing nuclear weapons introduces a new and perhaps even more serious parameter to the nuclear question. To put it simply, the United States and the Soviet Union face enough difficulty negotiating arms reductions between themselves. Failure to control the spread of nuclear arms among so-called irresponsible countries will create an impossible situation not only for our current generation but for future generations as well.

And providing those irresponsible countries—that is, those countries that have currently refused to participate in the Nuclear Nonproliferation Treaty—with the technology and material capable of being used for the production of nuclear weapons will only further undermine our already tenuous hold on world survival.●

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. WOLPE).

The question was taken; and the Chairman pro tempore announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. WOLPE. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 196, noes 189, not voting 48, as follows:

[Roll No. 373]

AYES—196

Ackerman	Carr	Eckart
Addabbo	Clarke	Edgar
Albosta	Coleman (TX)	Edwards (CA)
Anderson	Collins	English
Andrews (TX)	Conyers	Evans (IL)
Applegate	Cooper	Fascell
Barnes	Coughlin	Fazio
Bates	Courter	Feighan
Bedell	Coyne	Ferraro
Beilenson	Crockett	Florio
Bennett	D'Amours	Foglietta
Berman	Dellums	Foley
Boggs	Derrick	Forsythe
Borski	Dicks	Fowler
Bosco	Dixon	Frank
Boucher	Donnelly	Frost
Boxer	Dorgan	Garcia
Brooks	Downey	Gejdenson
Brown (CA)	Durbin	Gephardt
Bryant	Dwyer	Glickman
Burton (CA)	Dymally	Gonzalez
Carper	Early	Gore
Gray	Mavroules	Sabo
Guarini	Mazzoli	Savage
Hall (IN)	McCloskey	Scheuer
Hall (OH)	McCurdy	Schneider
Hamilton	McHugh	Schroeder
Harkin	McKernan	Schumer
Harrison	McKinney	Seiberling
Hatcher	McNulty	Shannon
Hawkins	Mikulski	Sharp
Hayes	Mineta	Sikorski
Hertel	Minish	Slattery
Hillis	Mitchell	Smith (FL)
Howard	Mollohan	Smith (NJ)
Hoyer	Moody	Solarz
Huckaby	Morrison (CT)	Staggers
Hughes	Mrazek	Stark
Hunter	Neal	Synar
Jeffords	Nowak	Tallon
Jenkins	Oberstar	Tauke
Jones (NC)	Obey	Tauzin
Kaptur	Ortiz	Thomas (GA)
Kastenmeier	Ottinger	Torres
Kennelly	Owens	Torricelli
Kildee	Panetta	Towns
Kogovsek	Patterson	Traxler
Kostmayer	Pease	Udall
LaFalce	Penny	Vento
Lantos	Perkins	Volkmer
Leach	Porter	Walgren
Lehman (CA)	Price	Watkins
Lehman (FL)	Rahall	Waxman
Leland	Rangel	Weaver
Levin	Ratchford	Weber
Levine	Reid	Weiss
Lipinski	Richardson	Wheat
Long (LA)	Rinaldo	Williams (MT)
Long (MD)	Rodino	Wirth
Lowry (WA)	Roe	Wise
Luken	Roemer	Wolpe
Lundine	Rose	Wright
MacKay	Rostenkowski	Wyden
Markey	Rowland	Yates
Martinez	Roybal
Matsui	Russo

NOES—189

Akaka	Fiedler	Mack
Andrews (NC)	Fields	Madigan
Annunzio	Flippo	Marlenee
Anthony	Franklin	Martin (IL)
Archer	Frenzel	Martin (NC)
Badham	Fuqua	Martin (NY)
Barnard	Gaydos	McCain
Bartlett	Gekas	McCandless
Bateman	Gilman	McCollum
Bereuter	Gingrich	McDade
Bethune	Goodling	McEwen
Bilirakis	Gradison	McGrath
Bliley	Green	Mica
Boner	Gunderson	Michel
Bonker	Hall, Ralph	Miller (OH)
Breaux	Hall, Sam	Molinari
Brown (CO)	Hammerschmidt	Montgomery
Broyhill	Hansen (ID)	Moore
Burton (IN)	Hansen (UT)	Moorhead
Campbell	Hartnett	Morrison (WA)
Carney	Hefner	Murphy
Chandler	Hightower	Murtha
Chappell	Hiler	Myers
Chappie	Holt	Natcher
Clinger	Hopkins	Nielson
Coats	Hubbard	O'Brien
Coelho	Hutto	Olin
Coleman (MO)	Hyde	Oxley
Conable	Ireland	Packard
Conte	Johnson	Parris
Craig	Jones (OK)	Pashayan
Crane, Daniel	Jones (TN)	Patman
Crane, Philip	Kasich	Paul
Daniel	Kazen	Petri
Dannemeyer	Kemp	Pursell
Daub	Kindness	Ray
de la Garza	Kolter	Regula
DeWine	Lagomarsino	Ridge
Dickinson	Leath	Ritter
Dowdy	Lent	Roberts
Dreier	Levitas	Robinson
Duncan	Lewis (CA)	Rogers
Dyson	Lewis (FL)	Roth
Edwards (AL)	Livingston	Roukema
Edwards (OK)	Lloyd	Sawyer
Emerson	Loeffler	Schaefer
Erdreich	Lott	Schulze
Erlenborn	Lowery (CA)	Sensenbrenner
Evans (IA)	Lujan	Shaw
Shelby	Spratt	Whitley
Shumway	Stangeland	Whittaker
Shuster	Stenholm	Whitten
Siljander	Stratton	Williams (OH)
Sisisky	Stump	Wilson
Skeen	Sundquist	Winn
Smith (IA)	Swift	Wolf
Smith (NE)	Taylor	Wortley
Smith, Denny	Valentine	Wylie
Smith, Robert	Vander Jagt	Yatron
Snowe	Vandergriff	Young (AK)
Snyder	Vucanovich	Young (MO)
Solomon	Walker	Zablocki
Spence	Whitehurst	Zschau

NOT VOTING—48

Alexander	Dingell	Moakley
Aspin	Fish	Nelson
AuCoin	Ford (MI)	Nichols
Bevill	Ford (TN)	Oakar
Biaggi	Gibbons	Pepper
Boehlert	Gramm	Pickle
Boland	Gregg	Pritchard
Bonior	Hance	Quillen
Britt	Heftel	Rudd
Broomfield	Horton	Simon
Byron	Jacobs	Skelton
Cheney	Kramer	St Germain
Clay	Latta	Stokes
Corcoran	Lungren	Studds
Daschle	Marriott	Thomas (CA)
Davis	Miller (CA)	Young (FL)

□ 1430

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Bonior of Michigan for, with Mr. Nelson against.

So the amendment was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MICHEL

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MICHEL: On page 26, line 15, change "Sec. 112" to "Sec. 112 (a)", and after line 2 on p. 27 add the following:

"(b) Section (h) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(g)), as redesignated by Section 110(b)(1) of the Act, is amended—

(1) by designating the existing text of Section (h) as paragraph "(1)"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(2) The President shall evaluate the results of his actions under paragraph (1) of this subsection by the end of the first 6-month period of controls imposed under this section and shall report the results of that evaluation to Congress by the end of such 6-month period.

"(3) In the event that the President's efforts are not successful in eliminating foreign availability during the first 6-month period when controls imposed under this paragraph are in effect, the Secretary shall thereafter take into account the foreign availability of goods or technology subject to controls. If the Secretary affirmatively determines that a similar good or technology is available in sufficient quantity from sources outside the United States to countries subject to such controls so that denial of the license would be ineffective in achieving the purposes of the controls, then, the Secretary shall issue a license for the export of such goods or technology during the period of such foreign availability. The Secretary shall remove such goods or technology from the list established pursuant to subsection (1) if he determines such action is appropriate.

"(4) The Secretary shall make a determination of foreign availability on his own initiative or upon receipt of an allegation that such availability exists from an export license applicant. The Secretary shall accept the applicant's representations made in writing and supported by clear and convincing evidence, unless such representations are contradicted by reliable evidence, including scientific or physical examination, expert opinion based upon adequate factual information, or intelligence information.

"(5) Paragraph (3) of this subsection shall not apply in a case in which export controls are imposed under subsections (i), (j) or (k) of this section.

"(6) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations establishing procedures for carrying out this section."

Mr. MICHEL (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois?

There was no objection.

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, this is the so-called foreign availability amendment, and applies to the foreign policy section of the bill.

Basically, the amendment is similar to the language relating to foreign availability contained in the national security section of this bill, and to language contained in the foreign policy section of the Senate bill.

The amendment states that if the President imposes export controls, he must immediately undertake negotiations with those appropriate foreign countries that have similar goods are technology to export.

If the President is unsuccessful in these negotiations during the initial 6-month period when controls are in effect, the Secretary of Commerce must then, in the subsequent 6-month period, take into account the foreign availability of the goods or technology subject to controls.

If he finds that such goods are in fact available in sufficient quantity from other countries so that denial of the export license would be ineffective in achieving the purposes of the controls, then he must issue the license.

The amendment also contains language outlining the general basis for determining foreign availability.

It should be further noted that the amendment does not apply to controls issued in cases where such exports would make a significant contribution to the military potential of a terrorist country. Nor would the amendment apply in cases where crime control and detection instruments and equipment could be used by internal security agents to abuse their citizens. And finally, the amendment would not apply in cases where treaties or international agreements would dictate otherwise.

In those instances, the President may impose controls without any 6-month limit. That exception simply reflects current law.

Mr. Chairman, this amendment represents a compromise. It is a compromise between the view on the one hand that if there is foreign availability, there should be no controls imposed whatsoever, and the view on the other side that there should be no limits on the President's ability to implement controls in the name of foreign policy.

This amendment basically allows the President to impose export controls for whatever reason he may choose, or as may be defined under other parts of the bill. However, if foreign availability exists after 6 months, the controls must be lifted except in those three instances I cited earlier.

We offer this amendment because under the bill as reported, there is no language in the foreign policy section requiring the President to take into account foreign availability in the implementation of controls.

This is ironic, because in the national security section we do have limits on the President's authority in this regard, as I mentioned earlier. It would seem that the reverse should have been the case, because one could certainly justify controls more so in defending national security than in simply carrying out foreign policy.

Mr. Chairman, no one will argue that unrestrained transfer of sensitive high technology to the Soviet Union by ourselves or our allies is either in the interest of our national security or in the interest of business and labor.

But when we come to questions that go beyond matters of sensitive high-technology transfers, we get into an area of controversy.

What, for example, should be our policy on items manufactured in the United States that do not fall under this highly sensitive area but which American industry wants to sell to the Soviet Union? And suppose those items are also produced by other nations who also want to trade with the Soviet Union?

I have had some personal and rather unfortunate experiences in this field. Caterpillar Tractor Co., and to a similar degree Fiat-Allis, located in my district, have endured a roller-coaster series of policy changes, under administrations of both parties, concerning the sale of pipelaying equipment to the Soviet Union.

Without taking you through the torturous series of on-again, off-again switches in policy, suffice it to say that pipelayers have become symbolic of an entire category of export items.

I refer to those items that U.S. manufacturers sell—or hope to sell—to the Soviet Union, but which are also produced by manufacturers of other nations, just as eager to make the sales. Should such items be included on lists of sanctioned products?

One point should be made about pipelaying equipment. When President Reagan stopped the sale of this equipment in December of 1981 he did not do so because he saw them as items of national security.

He did so in order to put pressure on the Soviet Union after the imposition of martial law in Poland.

This is an important distinction. The value of that particular sanction had to be judged solely on the basis of how well it accomplished its aim of punishing the Soviet Union. An objective review of the situation shows that we did not punish the Soviet Union in this case, but we did punish ourselves.

Is it really being hard line to impose a sanction that does not and cannot work? I do not believe it does. It is only being hardheaded.

Let me quickly add that I do not believe it would be in the national interest for Congress to place an absolute prohibition on a President's power to impose sanctions. A President can not be shackled by such measures. He needs a relatively free hand to deal with fast-moving events.

But on the other hand, I think it is time we reached some sort of legislative agreement with the executive branch which takes the real world into account.

We must recognize the fact that the on-again, off-again imposition of sanctions on items which the Russians can purchase from others is bad foreign policy and bad domestic policy as well.

In the case of pipelayers, the Japanese—among others—make good products. They are not at all bashful about selling them to the Soviet Union.

Yes, a President can theoretically cajole or persuade or put pressure on our allies to stop such sales. But more often than not such diplomatic efforts simply do not work. The Russians get the items anyhow.

Before 1978, the Caterpillar Co. had 85 percent of the Soviet Union market for track-type tractors and pipelayers. But then in mid-1978 President Carter placed export controls on such items. Since then similar sanctions have been imposed.

This has led to a total reversal of sales—Komatsu of Japan now has 85 percent of such sales.

That must be one of the most dramatic and shocking reversals in the history of American exporting. It did not prevent the Soviet Union from buying one pipelayer. But it did cost us roughly 35,000 man-years of labor and half a billion dollars in lost sales.

So the time has come, I believe, to stop agreeing to this fiction that such sanctions are proof of being a hard liner.

Some of our colleagues say that we should not sell pipelayers because it shows we are tough with the Russians. All I can say is that when we do this the Soviet Union cries all the way to the Komatsu plant in Japan where they buy pipelayers we will not sell.

Being hard line does not mean making gestures—it means doing things that really hurt. Stopping America from selling items that other nations are willing to sell does not hurt anyone—except Americans.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment is, I believe a reasonable and commonsense approach that preserves basic Presidential prerogatives but at the same time would enable us to avoid a repetition of the pipeline experience.

It is a jobs amendment designed to protect American workers from ineffectual foreign policy actions.

I urge its adoption.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MICHEL. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. The gentleman in the well, the distinguished minority leader from Illinois, indicated that his is a compromise, his amendment. Indeed I have a much more aggressive amendment that does not provide for the 6-month period of Presidential negotiation nor for the discretionary authority of the President which the gentleman from Illinois has put into his amendment. I can understand why you thought my amendment is a little too strong.

Companies in my district are also purple-hearted victims of a licensing procedure that few of us understand, and which is admittedly poorly executed. I prefer my amendment. However, I am not going to offer it. I think the compromise of the gentleman from Illinois will be a big step forward even if it does not go forward. It may not be enough, but I am going to support it for now, and hope for better things in the future.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word and rise in support of the amendment.

The gentleman has made a valid point and in the Export Administration Act we provide procedures for consideration of foreign availability under national security controls but we have no comparable provision under foreign policy controls.

What he is saying is that in the future if the President is to apply export controls for foreign policy reasons that they will be lifted over a period of time if the Secretary determines that foreign availability exists.

I would like to ask the distinguished minority leader, the sponsor of the amendment, a question.

The gentleman makes it very clear that his amendment would not apply to controls imposed under the subsections on human rights and international terrorism. We presently have foreign policy controls on certain countries under those provisions.

Under the gentleman's amendment the President would not be exempted from applying controls in view of foreign availability if they are for reasons of human rights, international terrorism, and such?

Mr. MICHEL. If the gentleman will yield, we provide for three exemptions whereby the President can apply controls regardless of foreign availability. They are in cases of crime control instruments, terrorism, and international agreements.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I am pleased to support the gentleman's amendment.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I would like to ask the initiator of the amendment a question.

□ 1440

I would like to clarify, if I might, the status of component part manufacturers under the gentleman's amendment.

As the gentleman knows, suppliers of parts for an end product manufactured in another country face an especially difficult problem when we talk about the need for reliability

If a foreign manufacturer agrees to use a U.S.-made component that foreign manufacturer has to have assurance that the U.S. component will be available from the U.S. supplier without interruption, even though there may not be a contract in effect for that component at any specific time.

Would the gentleman be able to tell me if his amendment addresses that issue.

I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. Well, this amendment would in essence put a 6-month limit on any controls of component parts if such parts are available from a foreign source.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. In essence, component parts will be given the same safeguards as all other products subject to export controls.

Mr. MICHEL. The gentlewoman is correct, that would be the case under my amendment.

Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois. I thank the gentleman.

I support the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BERMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, it is my understanding that the language being proposed tracks the Senate language. Could the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. MICHEL) tell me if that is correct?

Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BERMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. MICHEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

That is correct.

Mr. BERMAN. And is it the gentleman's intention that it also tracks the language included in the Senate report which indicates as follows: That the committee recognizes that there may be cases in which the actions of a country against which controls have been instituted are of such an abhorrant nature that U.S. foreign policy controls would be appropriate despite the decision of our allies not to cooperate; controls against Libya, Kampuchea, and South Africa are illustrative of such cases.

Mr. MICHEL. That was our intention in allowing the three basic exemptions.

Mr. BERMAN. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask the initiator of the amendment a question.

On page 2, line 4, the language reads: The Secretary shall remove such goods or technology from the list established pursuant to subsection 1 if he determined such action is appropriate.

I would like to ask the gentleman if my understanding of that language is correct. I understand from that language that even after we have gone through this 6-month period and the subsequent 6-month period, if the Secretary would determine that the action would be appropriate, that the restriction would remain in effect; is that correct?

Mr. MICHEL. Well, it would have to be qualified by then what follows later in the text of the amendment, which reads that the Secretary shall make a determination of foreign availability on his own initiative et cetera, et cetera.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. But he would retain that discretion?

Mr. MICHEL. Yes; but he must of course adhere to the intent of the law.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Illinios (Mr. MICHEL).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. SMITH OF FLORIDA

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment. The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. SMITH of Florida: Page 13, line 2, strike out the quotation marks and second period.

Page 13, insert the following after line 2: "(o) Exports to the Soviet Union.—Any license to export to the Soviet Union any good or technology subject to export controls under this section shall be denied unless the President determines that such export is in the national interest of the United States. The preceding sentence shall apply until the President certifies to the Congress that the Government of the Soviet Union has officially apologized for the shooting down of a Korean Air Lines civilian airplane on September 1, 1983, and has, in accordance with relevant United States and international law, fully compensated the surviviors of the United States persons on board that airplane.".

(g) Subsection (o) of section 5 of the Export Administration Act of 1979, as added by subsection (f) of this section, shall not affect any contract to export entered into before the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. SMITH of Florida (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I do not want to object, but I would like to reserve a point of order because I do not understand and I do not have a copy of the gentleman's amendment.

If my point of order is reserved, I will withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, the amendment is rather short, so rather than go through this, I think the Clerk may just——

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I reserve a point of order.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The gentleman from Minnesota reserves a point of order on the amendment.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH)?

There was no objection.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, since the Korean Air Line flight 007 was shot down by the Soviet Union, the administration and many colleagues have proposed various sanctions against the Soviet Union. I believe that some form of sanction is, in fact, a valid and necessary response.

Yet, I believe the United States must enact those sanctions which fit the situation. We must reexamine each and every facet of our relationship with a government which values human life so cheaply.

In 1982, the export administration issued export licenses for $32 million worth of goods for shipment to the U.S.S.R. most of these goods involved high technology products and sophisticated equipment. Out of a total trade with the Soviets of $2.1 billion, these American exports help to improve the Soviet Economy and the Soviet military, enhancing their overall military capability. The Soviet ability to purchase U.S. equipment enables them to concentrate more of its resources on a military buildup. These export items may find their way directly into the military machines which causes us to respond by spending more money on our own defense.

The United States is now spending billions of dollars in defense to counter the Soviet military buildup. Why should this Congress allow any exports to the Soviet Union which in the end are contrary to U.S. interests? Agricultural sales such as grain may help the Soviet people directly, although we might want to reexamine such commercial arrangements to make sure that they are drawn with the best possible terms for the United States. But we sell the Soviets much more. In 1982, the export administration issued export licenses for such products as:

Laser equipment, electronic computing equipment, magnetic recording equipment, integrated circuits, and petroleum equipment.

The Soviet Union depends upon the United States for a sizable amount of such equipment. Some of these items are classified as high technology products by our Department of Commerce.

I am offering an amendment to prevent the issuing of the necessary validated licenses for exports to the Soviet Union for any goods or technology subject to export controls.

This amendment would be effective so long as the Soviets fail to apologize for the crime which they perpetrated against the Korean airliner and so long as they refuse to pay compensation to the victims.

This amendment will only prohibit new contracts in these sensitive areas for the 2 year authorization of this bill and will not affect existing contracts.

This amendment will not affect most of our trade with the Soviet Union. According to the export administration figures of 1982, the amendment would only block less than 2 percent of our trade with the U.S.S.R.—$32.0 million out of $2.6 billion—however, the Congress must respond to the actions of the Soviets in Afghanistan, the Middle East, Latin America, and certainly the Korean airliner incident. The U.S., therefore, should deny the Soviets the supply of some of the most sophisticated and best-quality technology in the world. This Nation must prohibit the export of any such technology which will help the Soviet economy. According to a Washington Post article, even our top East-West trade expert in the State Department resigned in protest to our Government's inaction in preventing high technology transfers to the Soviets.

My amendment will not have any negative impact upon the U.S. economy or exports, but it will have an impact upon the economy of the Soviet Union and upon their military use of our technology. Stopping exports to the Soviet Union in these important technological areas will be a strong and painful sanction.

I urge you to support my efforts to prevent the export of important U.S. high technology to the Soviet Union.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I realize that in this era after the Korean airliner this is probably a sexy-sounding amendment. I want to know what additional, either authority or mandatory requirements the gentleman is putting on the President of the United States that he does not already have the right to do. What makes this unique from what otherwise is in the bill or is under the law?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. There is no mandatory requirement here for the President other than so long as the Soviets have not apologized for the incident and taken responsibility. And so long as they refuse to pay compensation.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has expired.

(At the request of Mr. GLICKMAN and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. And so long as they refuse to pay compensation the President has no authority and it is mandatory in the statute.

Mr. GLICKMAN. He has no authority to do what?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. These items covered by this amendment are required to obtain an export license.

□ 1450

Therefore, no export license would be granted until such time as the preconditions would be met. In any event, the President could, assuming those conditions being met——

Mr. GLICKMAN. What are those preconditions under the gentleman's amendment, again? That they apologize?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. The Soviet Union must take responsibility and apologize, and they must pay compensation to the victims—a small price, I think, to pay, and, at the very least, something that, if they do not, will be of use in showing the world that we do not intend to continue to help their economy.

Mr. GLICKMAN. I would just make the following points: I do not think there is probably any President who would more prefer to enact strong measures against the Soviet Union than the current President, but I must tell the gentleman that I find it highly contradictory for us to be selling other products to the Soviet Union, like grain, which I favor, with no conditions, and then selectively pick out the products that the gentleman is talking about and put conditions on the sale of those particular products.

I think that once we have made the decision to sell nonmilitary items to the Soviet Union, it is highly contradictory to start picking and choosing, because as the gentleman said in his own statement, today microprocessors, tomorrow grain.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. If I may reclaim my time, I did not say that at all. While I said that grain may be of some benefit directly to the Soviet people, the items which I have chosen to specifically include as being denied an export license are those which may be used directly for military capability, and I read that list. We are being very selective. In fact, this is not contradictory at all. These are items which are specifically usable in their military.

And let me point out again that if we continue to fund these items, we will wind up having to pay more in our defense costs for the purpose of combatting our own technology being put back at us.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has expired.

(On request of Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman for this amendment, and I would like to associate myself with the statement that he just made.

I think it is time for this Congress—I think the American people are demanding it, in the letters and in the correspondence that I get—go on record to try to cut off some of the goods, wares and merchandise that we are selling to the Soviet Union.

The shooting down of that plane is still a red hot issue in my part of the country. I am getting letters daily asking that we do exactly what the gentleman's amendment does. I commend him for it, and I support it. I hope that the amendment passes.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his support.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge my colleagues to remember that this is not something that would hurt the U.S. economy but, rather, speak the message that the people of this country, including the Members of this Congress, want spoken, that we will not continue to help support their economy with items that can be turned against us. And, at the same time, we will have saved ourselves a great deal of money in the process by not having to combat our own technology in the future.

I would urge the Members to support my amendment.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida has again expired.

(On request of Mr. BEREUTER and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman from Florida for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am trying to understand how comprehensive the gentleman's amendment is. Is it the gentleman's intent to deal only with militarily critical technology or only to things controlled under Cocom, or in fact are we talking now about licensing of all goods and technology subject to export controls?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. It is the licensing of the goods and technology that are under subsection (o) of section (5) of the Export Administration Act. The list is: Bacteria, chemical material, communications equipment, electron tubes, electronic computing equipment, electronic test equipment, image process equipment, integrated circuits, laser equipment, magnetic recording equipment, petroleum equipment, and polymeric substances.

It is a selected group of items which I feel may ultimately be harmful to our interests if we sell it to them and at the same time hurtful to their military intentions and yet not the grain type of situation which would harm our own economy as well as deny the Soviet people.

Mr. BEREUTER. If the gentleman will yield further, so that I may make one other point, subsection (o) of section (5) of the Export Act—I do not happen to have it here in front of me—actually consists of the list that the gentleman just mentioned; is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. There are other items. Any validated license that is required for any goods or technology subject to export controls under section (o) of the Export Administration Act. Those items that I have read are contained in section (o).

Mr. BEREUTER. And are there other items, as well?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I am not aware of them.

Mr. BEREUTER. I thank the gentleman.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. ZSCHAU and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ZSCHAU. I just want to say that I share the gentleman's outrage and revulsion at the act that the Soviet Union perpetrated on innocent civilians in the 007 airliner.

I want to ask the gentleman a question: Has the gentleman had the opportunity to discuss this amendment with the State Department or with the administration?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I have not discussed it with them. I have discussed it with the committee and the chairman of the subcommittee relating to this bill, and they have found this amendment, after some discussion, to be appropriate as basically a substitute for what some of us originally wanted to do. And I feel that this is an appropriate sense of what Congress wants to do.

And let me reiterate, please, if I may, this is not only in response to the Korean airliner incident. This is more. This is not an isolated incident on the part of the Soviet Union. Afghanistan, the actions in the Middle East, the actions in the Far East, all of those things that we have watched over the years take place have shown a pattern of conduct which I believe needs to be responded to in some way that the United States has, without in effect tearing down the kinds of movements we have made toward obtaining any kind of—well, if you want to use a word that is no longer in fashion—détente. I do not believe that this will be a factor which will be ultimately totally degenerative in our relationship. But by the same token, it is something which will give us a basis for telling the Soviets and our allies that we will not stand idly by while these kinds of actions take place.

Mr. ZSCHAU. If the gentleman will yield further, I just want to make the point that under the current Export Administration Act, the President and the Secretary of Commerce have the authority to do exactly what the gentleman is proposing to do.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. FRENZEL and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. ZSCHAU. If the gentleman will yield further, I would just like to point out that since January, 1980, there has been a virtual embargo on high technology shipments to the Soviet Union.

I would like to also point out, as I just mentioned, that the administration already has the authority to do exactly what the gentleman is proposing that Congress mandate be done. And it would seem to me appropriate in these very sensitive times, where we are negotiating arms control agreements in Geneva with the Soviet Union, that we permit the administration to measure carefully exactly its response to the Korean airliner incident, to the invasion of Afghanistan, to the Polish situation, in order to make sure that we here in Congress do not undermine the arms control talks that are currently underway and are vital to the security of this country.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his comments, and I sympathize, to some degree, with what he is saying. But let me reiterate what I said previously: We have traded $32 million worth in 1982. The "virtual embargo" that the gentleman made reference to actually does not exist. Thirty-two million dollars may only be about 2 percent of our total trade with the Soviet Union, but those items that I reiterated, specific items, went to the Soviet Union to the tune of $32 million worth.

Secondarily, while the administration does in fact have the authority to invoke, if they wish, these kinds of sanctions or refusal to provide the export licenses, that does not mean that this Congress must be tied to everything that the adminstration might want to do.

We have the right to stand up and say that we feel certain items are appropriate to be done, in light of and in view of what has happened over the last few years.

The administration does not seem totally committed to doing what many of us feel is perhaps more form than substance in terms of total trade, but does express some of what we feel in terms of how we would like to treat with the Soviet Union.

□ 1500

That is what I am asking to be done. If they were to take responsibility and to pay compensation, the most minimal form of retribution for what they have done, these would no longer apply and the administration would again have the option, not mandatorily, optionally to do this. I think it is the most minimum that we can do.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, as I understand it, the gentleman is amending section 5 of the Export Administration Act, which says the President may, in accordance with the provisions of this section, prohibit and curtail the export of any goods or technology subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or exported by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

So the gentleman's amendment is going to put us back into the extraterritorial bag where we will be telling subsidiaries and individuals subject to the jurisdiction of the United States that they cannot ship to. Is that your intention?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has expired.

(On request of Mr. FRENZEL and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. SMITH of Florida. We have to amend that section to put down the mandatory portion to the administration of not being able to issue those licenses, but then reference is made to that section where those particular goods are concerned.

So we have not tied the hands of the administration with reference to all the other items that are exportable under the law; only to those contained in that section. Then section 5 is made reference to because we must put those mandatorily as being denied export licenses.

Mr. FRENZEL. If the gentleman will yield further, is it not true that the President, under this section, can deny the export of any goods or technology?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. That is absolutely correct, and what I am saying is that Congress, by this particular type of amendment, may want to make a statement with reference to certain types of technology where the administration has not, as the gentleman from California has indicated, shown a strong desire because while there is apparently right now an embargo on these items, $32 million worth was sent to the Soviets last year.

Mr. FRENZEL. If the gentleman will yield further, sure, but if we negotiated a grain agreement tomorrow, that would be denied an export license under the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. No, it would not, because that particular item is not contained in subsection (o).

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. SOLOMON and by unanimous consent, Mr. SMITH of Florida was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. HUNTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. HUNTER. I appreciate the gentleman yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I commend the gentleman for his amendment. I would like to ask the gentleman briefly: What effect would this have on present suppliers to the Soviet pipeline?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Anything which is already existing in contract would not be affected by this amendment. This only applies to new contracts or new applications for licenses.

Mr. HUNTER. I thank the gentleman and I commend him for his amendment. I intend to support the gentleman.

Mr. SOLOMON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. SOLOMON. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I walked back on the floor after the gentleman had offered his amendment and I was a little confused by some of the questions that were being asked of him.

As I read the amendment, all the Soviets have to do is to apologize and pay reasonable compensation to the survivors; is that right?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. SOLOMON. That is a great amendment. Everybody in this House ought to support it unanimously. I commend the gentleman.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for his support.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) insist on his point of order?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my point of order.

Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as I read the amendment, it amends section 5 of the Export Administration Act, and therein it is stated that the President may prohibit or curtail the export of "any goods" or technology subject to the jurisdiction of the United States or exported by any person subject to the jurisdiction of the United States.

If a company, whoever it may be, were to sell 10 pounds of corn or a nickle's worth of wheat to the U.S.S.R tomorrow, the President would be obliged to deny that country a license under the gentleman's amendment.

I find it very strange that this amendment, which applies to the national security controls section of the Export Administration Act, was not taken to the administration or to any of the departments which might have jurisdiction, whether they be State, Defense, Commerce, or the National Security Council, for consultation.

Apparently the intention is to move free form in this committee, without consulting the people who have to administer this law. In my judgment, there is not anybody here who wants to cheer the U.S.S.R. We are all outraged by the murder of airline passengers. On the other hand, we have some worthwhile, ongoing contacts, and contracts, and we would like, where we consider it safe from a security standpoint to do so, and where the President considers it safe to do so, to do some business so we can expand U.S. agriculture and to build U.S. jobs.

It seems to me that without the President requesting this authority, this proposal is a rather reckless kind of legislation. I believe that the President, in handling the Korean Air Line incident, did a masterful and a serious job. One of the things that he did not do was to rush willy-nilly into embargoes. This amendment, in my judgment, pushes us into a total embargo. This is a very dangerous foreign policy consideration which has not received adequate discussion by the people who are going to be involved in it.

I realize that a vote against it may be interpreted by the naive or uninformed as of an affirmation of an act of terrorism, but it is not. We ought to move only after serious consideration. We ought to be at least consulting with our executive departments. I urge that the gentleman's amendment be defeated.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am as outraged as anybody at the shooting down of the KAL airliner, but I am absolutely baffled as to why such a serious—and it is serious—and far-reaching amendment was not run past the State Department, or the Commerce Department, or the administration.

Is there some particular reason why we cannot get the input of the State Department on this? I would ask the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) if he would answer that.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, in response to the gentleman from Illinois, let me just say that I certainly understand his concern about consultation with the State Department. Let me tell the gentleman that the State Department never consults with me. They want my vote on issues, and they have yet ever to come to talk to me about anything.

I realize that there is a separation of power in this country, and they seem to treat that more importantly than we do. I also feel that this Congress, as a separate branch of Government, has the right to speak out on certain issues and that the administration has a policy which they must follow, but we also set some form of policy in this country. We do not stand alone, kind of shooting in the breeze. We are entitled to speak out, and I think this is one way of speaking out.

This does not bind the hands of the administration to any large degree, as I indicated. This is merely less than 2 percent of the total trade that we do with the Soviet Union. It is just in areas which I consider to be and others consider to be rather inappropriate to send over in light of the incidents over the last few years.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman and I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Well, much as I would like to join the bandwagon and condemn the Soviet Union for an atrocity, and it was nothing less, I do not feel comfortable adopting an amendment that is so far reaching without knowing what the nuances are.

I attribute to the gentleman from Florida almost omnipotence in terms of his power to do what he wants to do, and his wisdom, and his insight, but I suspect he could learn something by asking the people who have dedicated their lives to diplomacy and foreign relations what their opinion is.

□ 1510

Until that happens, I must regretfully vote against this amendment. I do not think it is reasonably proposed. It may be a good idea, but I just do not know, and jumping in the dark on something as delicate as this does not seem to me to be wise.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. FRENZEL was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. FRENZEL. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, I thank my friend for yielding, and I just have one more thing to say.

I have asked staff, to what goods and technologies does this subsection apply? Nobody can really say. I know the gentleman has said, "section (o)," but it is still awfully vague. That being so, I think we ought to legislate responsibly, and this does not seem to meet that criterion.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, I say to the gentleman that he is looking at all there is of section (o). There is no existing section (o). The gentleman from Illinois is looking at the amendment, and that is the only clue we have as to section (o).

Mr. Chairman, I believe that if the committee wants embargoes, here is a good chance to impose one. But this Congress has spoken out against embargoes.

On numerous occasions, we have tried to limit the power of the President to invoke them

Mr. Chairman, we don't need more self-inflicted embargoes. I hope we will not accept the gentleman's amendment.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in reluctant opposition to the amendment.

As the gentleman from Wisconsin has noted, our entire effort in this legislation has been aimed at lifting ineffective controls and trying to develop a process by which we can deny export licenses for national security and foreign policy reasons with some consistency. If we are going to provide some authority to the President in one section and then turn around and make impossible his discretion to use that authority in another, it seems to me we are not being very consistent.

The second reason I oppose the amendment is because it is basically a foreign policy control that is being placed in the national security section of the bill. National security is intended to control the flow of technology that would go into the hands of our adversaries and perhaps enhance their military capability. That is a very distinct purpose in the national security section of the act. We reserve the foreign policy section for the President to utilize in cases involving human rights or in cases of terrorism and other instances where he feels that foreign policy controls are necessary.

But this amendment attempts to integrate those two sections of the law by trying to actually apply a foreign policy control under the national security section of the bill.

Lastly, the amendment has a lot of appeal because it comes in the wake of the Korean airliner incident. There is a great deal of emotion, and rightly so, in this body about that dastardly act, and I think the President has exercised some restraint in his reaction to the Russians' attack on that airliner. But I think it would demean this body if we were to go in the opposite direction and actually force upon the President, not only in this particular instance but in future years, the inability to use any discretion in utilizing those controls in the future.

Mr. Chairman, while I appreciate that the gentleman has actually accommodated many of our concerns by attempting to link that control to an official apology and some compensation for the families involved, I still feel it is contrary to the act and ought to be opposed.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to engage the maker of the amendment in a colloquy, if I might.

Now, as I understand the gentleman's position and interpretation of his amendment, it is that the amendment would not cover grain; is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, this amendment technically covers every item which is required to obtain an export license covered under the commodity control list. Subsection (o) is the new section created which covers every commodity which is obligated to receive a license for export.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Well, is that grain? I am asking the gentleman that specific question.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I believe that grain is covered under it, but this does not include any existing contracts.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I am sorry, I did not hear the last word.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. This does not include any existing contracts.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. How about tomorrow's contracts?

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield, my interpretation is that the amendment would not cover grain. The amendment, as the gentleman notes, relates only to the commodity control list. That deals primarily with techology. That is why we attempt to control or license the sale or transfer.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I might say that on my side we have a different interpretation.

Let me ask the gentleman this question: If it should appear that in fact it does cover grain, is there an ambiguity there?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I do not think there is. The grain is under commodity control, but it is not on that list. It is under foreign policy.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. But the gentleman's intention is not to cover grain; is that correct?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. That is absolutely correct.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Well, a good question is: Why? Why is it not covered?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Because I do not believe with the existing agreement it is up to me at this moment to go ahead and vitiate what this administration has already indicated it wanted to do and in fact did do. That does not mean I do not have serious reservations about it.

In fact, in my statement, I specifically related that we ought to go back and look at the grain agreement because, frankly, while I am not sure whether we should be selling them grain or not, the contract under which we are selling them grain is an atrocious piece of work, and any normal businessman in America would never enter into a contract like that.

But that is far beyond the purview of what I intended to do with this amendment. My intent was to hurt them where it would hurt them the most, in the high technology area, while hurting the United States as minimally as possible. That was my intention, and I believe the amendment is drawn to accomplish that purpose.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. I agree with the gentleman on high technology, but I do not agree that we should be affecting grain, as the gentleman has said.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I agree with that as well.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. All right. Does the gentleman agree that it should affect future grain sales or not?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I make no such statement because there is nothing in here which affects the existing grain sales, and there is nothing in there that would affect any future grain sales.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, let me ask the gentleman this: If it should appear otherwise from whatever evidence we can gather during the pendency of this bill—and it is pretty obvious we are not going to finish it today—would the gentleman support or offer an amendment that would make that clarification?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. That the grain is not covered?

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Yes.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I do not intend grain to be covered, and I believe I would do whatever is necessary to clarify that point. And certainly in conference that could be clarified as well.

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman, and I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I had no intention of getting involved in this, other than just to express myself to the gentleman from Florida a moment ago, but I am appalled at the wishy-washy position that the Congress is taking with reference to this amendment and with reference to the Soviet Union.

This amendment to me is crystal clear in what it says. It says:

> Any license to export to the Soviet Union any good or technology subject to export controls under this section shall be denied unless the President determines that such export is in the national interest of the United States.

I do not believe any Member of this body desires to go back to his or her district and state that we have gone on record as being in favor of selling materials of a technical nature to the Soviet Union.

Frankly, I would like to not sell them a thing. But I know that grain is not covered by this amendment. Everybody has admitted that. That includes the present sale and future sales. And even if it was, as I view this amendment, the President would have the right to determine whether or not this export is in the national interest. If the President saw fit to give a grain contract, present or future, if it is in the national interest of this country, he would have the right to do it regardless of what we did.

Someone said, "Well, why don't we wait until the State Department acts?" I do not want to wait on the State Department. I want to go ahead and let the American people know that the Congress of the United States has a very dim view of what the Soviet Union has done in the last 30 days, and the only way we can go on record to support that position is to say, "We are not going to sell you anything that you can use on us."

Mr. Chairman, I think that is the gist and the guts of this amendment, and I urge my friends, the Members of this body, to support this amendment.

Mr. GLICKMAN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, make no mistake about it, the current law does exactly what the gentleman from Texas says, and that includes this bill. Anything that could be used against us under current law and under this bill can be prevented from being sold to the Soviet Union under either national security or foreign policy controls.

So what is the function of this amendment? Well, I think this amendment is kind of hand-wringing. All of us are upset at the KAL incident, and we have decided we need to do something with respect to the KAL incident. So what have we done?

□ 1520

In essence, what this amendment says, although the gentleman from Florida has carefully and cleverly tried to define what goods are going to be excluded, in essence the question is, Should we ban all trade with the Soviet Union? That is the fundamental question with this amendment.

Now, the gentleman from Florida says grain is not covered. Then the gentleman backtracks and says maybe future grain sales are not covered, but he says present grain sales are covered.

If you check with respect to the statute on those items on the Cocom list, theoretically anything could be covered if we want it to be covered; so the President tomorrow could decide that many items which are not on the list of the gentleman from Florida will be on that list.

Again we further find ourselves in the situation where we are involved with a selective embargo.

Make no mistake about it. This amendment is a vote on embargoes. As far as I am concerned, it is just as much a vote on a grain embargo as it is a vote on a processor's embargo, because it will affect dramatically the ability of existing and future sales of a broad variety of contracts that go to the Soviet Union.

I think it is unnecessary congressional meddling into the ability of the President to deal with this difficult situation right now.

While I have always argued against selective embargoes, I argued against the grain embargo because I said, "You haven't singled out everything else. What about everything else?"

What about everything else? I will argue against this kind of embargo unless we do it across the board.

If we are going to fight the Russians for what they did to us and what they did in that dastardly act in the Western Pacific, then you do it across the board.

For that reason, I oppose the amendment.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. Mr Chairman, I just want to make it clear, I do not want to wait until the State Department acts, but I would like to have their input. I would like to have them analyze this amendment, and we have had weeks to do it, to see what they have to say about just what this does.

I get the distinct impression the author really does not know how far reaching it is; but by God, it reads good and it sounds right. I do not think that is the way to legislate.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Kansas for yielding.

Let me say that I have not been as clever, at least knowingly, as the gentleman would ascribe in the drafting of this bill.

The Cocom list has traditionally been a list of high technology items. Grain has never appeared on that list. Any one of the countries participating could veto any of those items going on the Cocom list; so theoretically, while anything is possible, in present and past reality it would not cover grain, and I understand the gentleman's concern about that.

By the same token, I do want to make a response to what I feel is a continuing pattern of conduct. I believe it behooves this Congress to stand up and speak.

The State Department does not give us indications on whether or not we want to trade $32 million worth of over $2.6 billion worth of trade any more than we can understand. It is not a sizable or major portion.

If the gentleman from Illinois was dealing from that position when I had proposed an amendment to embargo a major portion of it, I could agree with the gentleman on his argument.

This is not, this is less than 2 percent of the total trade. The far-reaching impact is not there in terms of total foreign policy vis-a-vis the Soviet Union.

Mr. GLICKMAN. The point of the gentleman's amendment is that it makes it much easier and much more mandatory to engage in this kind of trade restraint. What we in Congress have been telling the President in the agricultural area particularly is that that kind of flexibility, which now the gentleman is making mandatory, has a dramatic negative effect on this country.

I want to tell the gentleman something about the grain embargo. I would never have thought we would have embargoed grain before. It was not on anybody's list. They decided to do it overnight after the Afghanistan thing.

If it had not been for the politics of the situation, as well as the fact there was intense pressure all over this country with respect to honoring these contracts, we would have had the same problem again.

The gentleman is opening a Pandora's box on a dramatic embargo on almost anything that we could sell overseas.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I, too, have made the same arguments as the gentleman from Kansas has concerning selective embargoes. I have opposed them because they are selective.

If we are serious about a foreign policy objective or a national security objective, then it ought to be across the board.

I would ask the question rhetorically, at least. If the gentleman really is only trying to affect—and I am talking to the gentleman from Florida—really only trying to affect this small percentage of goods that truly is important to the military capability of a potential enemy like the Soviet Union, then why is the gentleman not amending the coordinating committee section clause, section 107?

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. BEREUTER, and by unanimous consent, Mr. GLICKMAN was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield.

Mr. BEREUTER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Instead of section 106, which in fact is the national security control, which then is all comprehensive; we are talking about all future contracts for goods and products.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am glad to yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman again.

I want to clear up something that I think is important to clear up.

The amendment does not allow for a total control. The first sentence says, "shall be denied a license for export unless the President determines that such export is in the national interest of the United States."

It continues the same basic thrust that we have had previously.

In addition, the grain embargo was made under foreign policy, not national security. That is the difference. This does not do anything more than has been done already.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. President Carter's embargo was made under this section of the law, and quite obviously the amendment of the gentleman covers grain.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, I would point out that we just had a special order before this body about 2 days ago talking about this.

The CHAIRMAN pro tempore. The time of the gentleman from Kansas has again expired.

(At the request of Mr. ROBERTS, and by unanimous consent, Mr. GLICKMAN was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Kansas.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, we just had a special order here on the fruitlessness of a selective embargo. I do not think anybody in this body can go down this list, this so-called list, to find out what is going to be damaging to the Soviet Union; but more to the point, the two conditions that must be met are, No. 1, the Soviet Union will have to apologize; and No. 2, the Soviet Union will have to pay reparations to the families involved. Everybody, every American wants that, but we know it is not going to happen.

Consequently, we are just in fact going down this list and saying that we are not going to sell these goods to the Soviet Union.

Has anybody gone down this list in terms of the manufacturers concerned to see what kind of economic impact it is going to have on the United States?

May I remind the gentleman from Florida that when we talk about a selective embargo or a sanction or what we are going to sell or also what we are not going to sell, this is not a spectator sport. I recognize the gentleman's concern from an emotional standpoint, from a symbolic standpoint. I have farmers right now in the fields of Kansas wondering if they are paying attention to this and, more importantly, what the market is doing as a result of this entire discussion.

I wonder if the market is now starting to tail off. That is the kind of economic impact that we have when we introduce amendments like this that have not been properly researched, or where we have not asked the advice and counsel of the appropriate agency.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. GLICKMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Washington.

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to clarify, if I can, this troubling question as to whether or not grain would be included under the gentleman's amendment.

I am informed that in the wake of the Afghanistan invasion that President Carter utilized both foreign policy and national security controls to invoke that ban. He did so because under foreign policy controls at that time the provision was subject to a congressional veto; but that same veto privilege did not extend under national security controls; so I am led to believe that if he were to apply an embargo on wheat under the provisions of national security control, he would have had to place that commodity on the CCL list; so where grain is not presently on the list, there is nothing that would prevent the President in the future from placing that grain on the commodity control list, thereby imposing an economic control.

Mr. COURTER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I have been sitting here, as has everybody, listening to this debate. In the very beginning I thought perhaps the amendment had a great deal of merit. Unfortunately, I am not convinced any longer.

It seems to me there are a lot of people in this body who are arguing that this is an opportunity, No. 1, to express our outrage at Soviet behavior and, No. 2, to make sure that the Soviet know that we are irritated; that by voting this way we will really get their attention this time and we will be able to do something to make sure that they stand up and take notice.

□ 1530

I really do not think that this type of amendment makes sure that the Soviet Union stands up and takes notice. I think President Carter tried such things as canceling the Olympic Games, eliminating cultural exchanges between our two countries, terminating grain sales between this country and the Soviet Union.

But the Soviet Union does not respond to those types of items. The Soviet Union responds to a consistent and tough foreign policy. The way to get the attention of the Soviet Union is to deploy the MX missile, the way to get the attention of the people in the Soviet Politburo is to make sure that our allies in NATO go forward and deploy the cruise missiles and the Pershing II missiles. Those are the types of policies and those are the types of actions that we can take as a body to make sure that the Soviet Union knows where we stand and to make sure that the Soviet Union does not behave this way again in the future.

It seems to me that this type of amendment is an attempt by some of the people in this body to show their outrage, to show they are tough, but it is simply not going to do the job. To make sure that the Soviet Union responds, do something with regard to the defense capabilities of this country, the conventional defense capabilities of this country. In that area, the Soviet Union will recognize that we have resolve, and in that area I think we can moderate Soviet behavior in the future.

Mr. HYDE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. HYDE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

A more cynical mind than my own might suspect that this is an artfully drawn amendment to rehabilitate some whose anti-Communist credentials presumably were tarnished by voting against the Gramm amendment on the IMF bill. Now, I was one who voted against the Gramm amendment. I did not think it was a good amendment. I agreed with the President. But I suspect this is very artfully drawn to, as I say, rehabilitate in somebody's mind the anti-Communist credentials of those who have been embarrassed by that. Are you as cynical as I am on that issue?

Mr. COURTER. I do not know whether you have to be very cynical or not to accept that. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution.

Mr. HYDE. I hope you are not.

Mr. COURTER. Absolutely not. I think my main point is the Soviet Union is lacking in this type of expression. If the only thing this country is going to do when they shoot down a plane filled with 269 civilians is to change the law somewhat to make it more difficult to export what we are already not exporting, they have to be laughing in the Kremlin.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. They shoot down an airplane and we shoot down ourselves.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

First of all, if the gentleman would have listened to my statement, and I am sure he did, he would have found that I scrupulously avoided making an emotion or pitched play to any of those whose emotions only were dictating this type of what I consider to be appropriate method of dealing with the Soviet Union today in light of a number of incidents.

I do not consider this to be an emotional response.

As to the comment of the gentleman from Illinois about his cynicism, he can keep his cynicism. I can speak for myself. I do not have credentials that are tarnished or intarnished. I have the stands I have taken since the day I drew breath, and I will continue to take those stands on issues as they come based on their merits.

I will tell the gentleman in the well and the gentleman from Illinois and the gentleman and ladies in this body, this amendment is intentioned to be a foreign policy statement by this House, that it is in our interest as a country to allow the President latitude, which he has, because anything in the national interest would still override any ban in here if it is in our national interest to stop trading with the Soviet Union. Communism has nothing to do with it. It is the Government of the Soviet Union, no matter what the political state.

Mr. COURTER. Let me take back my time.

Would it be best to really show our outrage not to even talk to the Soviet Union? Maybe we should withdraw our diplomats from the Soviet Union and express our outrage that way.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Florida.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, my amendment speaks for itself. You can make all of the strawmen you wish—grain, and so forth. None of them exist. We are not going to stop talking to any country in the world. The reality of the amendment speaks for itself.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. COURTER) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. COURTER was allowed to proceed for 3 additional minutes.)

Mr. STENHOLM. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. STENHOLM. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to ask a question of the gentleman from Florida.

I was a little confused with your last statement. Is the purpose of your amendment to extract an apology from the Soviet Union, as is stated here, or is the purpose of your amendment to try to teach the Soviets a lesson or to have this in perpetuity?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. The purpose of this amendment is to cut off mandatorily, except where the President deems it to be in our national interest, any trade based on those items listed on the Cocom—and I expressed some of them—until such time as those two conditions precedent take place, at which point, then, the normal restrictions would still apply to the trading of those items with the Soviet Union. That is all this amendment does. That is all it was ever intentioned to do. And that is all I hope it ever does.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Minnesota.

Mr. FRENZEL. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There is no reference in the gentleman's amendment to the Cocom list. He refers to section 5. It refers to any product. When Jimmy Carter invoked this section to embargo grain, the grain was embargoed. It is not on any list. As a matter of fact, if you keep reading in this section you will find that the Secretary can add any item to the list that he wants to. But it does not have to be on the list to be embargoed. This amendment provides for across-the-board embargo on every product.

Mr. COURTER. I appreciate the gentleman's contribution. I would just like to add one final thing before I yield the balance of my time.

I reemphasize the fact if we think we are making a positive statement that the Soviet Union will respond to, that we can change and modify Soviet foreign policy and behavior by making sure we do not sell them a little grain, it is just as absolutely laughable statement as far as I am concerned.

Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. GOODLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

It seems to me there is one flaw with this amendment, and that is the same of course that we discovered in relationship to Afghanistan. Unless we have some agreement with our friends and our allies to do exactly the same, then of course we are punishing no one but ourselves and making a fool out of ourselves as a matter of fact.

The only person that will have the opportunity to make sure that our friends and allies would do exactly the same is probably the President of the United States, the Secretary of State, either, not the Congress of the United States. So, I think the flaw is strictly one we have no control over what our friends and allies do, and this can only be effective if they go along with us.

Mr. ZSCHAU. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. COURTER. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. ZSCHAU. I would just reinforce the remarks just made. Action unilaterally are not as effective as multilateral actions. It is for that reason that yesterday this body accepted the amendment offered by Mr. PICKLE which reads that we would agree for the imposition and enforcement of export sanctions by the governments participating in the committee—that is the Cocom group, our allies, NATO allies plus Japan—against the Soviet Union or any other country if the Soviet Union or other country commits violent acts against unarmed civilians of another country.

We have already taken this kind of action yesterday. It is in the bill. But it is done in a more effective way, because it is done in a multilateral way rather than a unilateral way. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment. Like other Members, I am as appalled as anyone at the Soviets ruthlessly shooting down an unarmed plane. I am equally appalled at other actions by the Soviets, dating back to Afghanistan and Poland.

I would also say in terms of technology transfer, I am not enthusiastic at all about transferring technology to the Soviet Union. I think we ought to be conservative on doing that.

But as other people have said, most notably the gentleman from Kansas (Mr. GLICKMAN) and the gentleman from Minnesota (Mr. FRENZEL) that is not the question. The question here is what the effect will be of this amendment if it is adopted.

This amendment in effect imposes an embargo unless the Soviets agree to apologize for shooting down the Korean airliner and unless they agree to provide compensation to the families of the victims. The Soviet Union will not do either one of those things. Everybody in this Chamber knows the Soviet Union will not do either one of these things.

So, the effect of this amendment is to impose an embargo on the Soviet Union—an embargo by any other name is still an embargo. The question of grain has been raised, whether or not this affects grain. I do not know whether technically it does or not. It seems to me that that is unclear from the discussion we have had today. But it does seem to me quite obvious what the Soviet reaction is likely to be to an embargo of a whole range of other products.

It seems to me, given what we know of the Soviet reaction to similar situations in the past, the Soviet Union is likely not to want to deal with us in grain or anything else if we impose an embargo such as surely would be imposed by this amendment.

□ 1540

If we want to impose an embargo on the Soviet Union, fine. But if we want to do that let us do it up front and say that is exactly what we are doing. Let us not adopt an amendment like this which indirectly would accomplish the same purpose.

For that reason I urge my colleagues to oppose this amendment.

Mr. EMERSON. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

I rise in opposition to this amendment because I believe there is an iota of a possibility that this amendment would permit the selective embargo of grain and agricultural commodities and as long as there is that iota of possibility the amendment ought to be soundly rejected.

We have a history, a decade of history in the imposition of selective agricultural embargoes, the net result of which, is it has been proven that the only people that have been damaged have been the American agricultural producers. We have shot ourselves in the foot on at least three occasions and we should not give rise to the opportunity to do so again.

I urge my colleagues to vote against this amendment and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH).

The question was taken; and the chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

□ 1600

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

Does the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SMITH) insist upon his request for a recorded vote?

Mr. SMITH of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my request for a recorded vote pending the voice vote.

The CHAIRMAN. The amendment is rejected.

Mr. SMITH. of Florida. Mr. Chairman, I request a division.

On a division (demanded by Mr. SMITH of Florida) there were—ayes 9, noes 26.

Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

So the amendment was rejected.

● Mr. COYNE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 3231, a bill to amend the Export Administration Act.

This measure would extend the Export Administration Act of 1979 and would provide $24.6 million for the next 2 fiscal years to carry out our export controls. In addition, the bill would provide $100.5 million for promotion of exports.

As a representative from Pennsylvania, it is my judgment that Congress should be devoting as much attention to the promotion of exports as we do to the restriction of imports. Import restrictions, where necessary in industries such as steel, are hollow remedies to our national and international economic deficiencies. We should be willing to build bridges as well as walls in our trade activities. The promotion of exports is an example of the bridge-building we need.

One provision of this measure which has my very strong support would ban all loans by U.S. banks to the South African Government, or to entities controlled by that government. Exceptions to this provision include loans for health projects, educational facilities, or for housing, provided such projects are available on a nondiscriminatory basis.

Fair employment standards are established for American firms in South Africa which employ 20 or more workers. In addition, the bill would halt the importation of South African krugerands or other gold coins minted in that nation.

Congress can go on record in opposition to the repressive policies of the South African Government by adopting these restrictions. I do not accept the argument that we are somehow singling out South Africa for special punishment. Congress has approved very punitive measures against countries as diverse as the central African empire, Uganda, Zaire, Cuba, Chile, Argentina, Vietnam, and Cambodia. These nations, however, have one thing in common—their lack of respect for human rights. Our actions against some nations, and inaction in the face of widespread abuse of rights in South Africa, would be intepreted as consent to the policies of that nation.

I also urge support of an amendment to this legislation to be offered by Mr. GRAY of Pennsylvania. The Gray amendment would prohibit new investment in South Africa not only by banks, but by American firms and individuals as well. The $2.6 billion investment in this nation of apartheid by more than 300 American subsidiaries most certainly helps to make legitimate a racist regime. By prohibiting such investment in the future, we will send a strong economic message to a government which denies full human rights to the 75 percent of its population which is nonwhite.

I urge support of the Gray amendment, and a yes vote on H.R. 3231.●

Mr. BONKER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. FOLEY) having assumed the chair, Mr. SEIBERLING, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 3231) to amend the authorities contained in the Export Administration Act of 1979, and for other purposes, had come to no resolution thereon.

ELECTION OF HON. JIM WRIGHT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE DURING THE ABSENCE OF THE SPEAKER

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I send to the desk a privileged resolution (H. Res. 325) and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 325

Resolved, That the Honorable Jim Wright, a Representative from the State of Texas, be, and he is hereby, elected Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

Resolved, That the President and the Senate be notified by the Clerk of the election of the Honorable Jim Wright as Speaker pro tempore during the absence of the Speaker.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

SWEARING IN OF HON. JIM WRIGHT AS SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE DURING THE ABSENCE OF THE SPEAKER

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Texas will take the chair and be sworn in by the Dean of the House, the distinguished gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

Mr. WRIGHT assumed the chair and took the oath of office administered to him by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House is requested bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 3813. An act to amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980; and

H.R. 3929. An act to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate insists upon its amendment to the bill (H.R. 3929) entitled "An Act to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes", requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. DOLE, Mr. ARMSTRONG, Mr. ROTH, Mr. CHAFEE, Mr. LONG, Mr. MOYNIHAN, and Mr. BOREN to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

CONFERENCE REPORT ON HOUSE JOINT RESOLUTION 368, CONTINUING APPROPRIATIONS, 1984

Mr. WHITTEN submitted the following conference report and statement on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 98-397)

The committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) "making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 1, 13, 15, 16, 17, 18, 19, 20, 21, 23, 25, and 26.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 2, 4, 8, and 12, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: : Provided further, That for the purposes of this joint resolution, when an Act listed in this subsection has been reported to the Senate but not passed by the Senate as of October 1, 1983, it shall be deemed as having been passed by the Senate; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 10:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 10, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the subsection designation in said amendment insert: (h); and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 11:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 11, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the subsection designation in said amendment insert: (i); and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 22:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 22, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the subsection designation "(i)" in said amendment insert: (g); and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 24:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 24, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the section designation in said amendment insert: 112; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 3, 6, 7, 9, and 14.

JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
EDWARD P. BOLAND,
WILLIAM H. NATCHER,
NEAL SMITH,
JOSEPH P. ADDABBO,
SIDNEY R. YATES,
EDWARD R. ROYBAL,
SILVIO O. CONTE,
JOSEPH M. MCDADE,
JACK EDWARDS,
JOHN T. MYERS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

MARK O. HATFIELD,
TED STEVENS,
LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,
JAMES A. MCCLURE,
PAUL LAXALT,
THAD COCHRAN,
JAMES ABDNOR,
R. W. KASTEN,
JOHN C. STENNIS,
DANIEL K. INOUYE,
THOMAS F. EAGLETON,
LAWTON CHILES,
DENNIS DECONCINI,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers of the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report.

Amendment No. 1: Technical restoration due to conference action on subsequent Senate amendments.

Amendment No. 2: Deletes House language for District of Columbia programs which are provided for in Amendment No. 10 at the rate of the recent conference agreement.

Amendment No. 3: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment insert: Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 (H. Rept. 98-357, S. Rept. 98-247) under the terms and conditions provided in such Act for fiscal year 1983; and

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement provides for projects and activities funded in the Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies Appropriation Act at the House or Senate amount, whichever is lower, and under the terms and conditions which existed in fiscal year 1983. In subsection 101(b), the House had provided for the Labor-HHS-Education Act as passed the House and the Senate had provided for the Act as reported to the Senate, under the terms and conditions which existed in fiscal 1983.

In agreeing to the lesser of the House or Senate rates, the managers note that final action is anticipated shortly on the regular Labor, Health and Human Services, Education and Related Agencies Appropriation Act for fiscal year 1984. Thus, the action of the conference on this continuing resolution should not prejudice the decisions to be made by Congress in consideration of the regular appropriations bill. The managers direct that the departments and agencies funded under this appropriation take no actions regarding staffing or program levels or procurement that would preempt congressional prerogatives on the regular appropriations bill.

With respect to national activities under the Job Training Partnership Act, the conferees direct the Department of Labor to maintain current funding levels for all recurring categories of projects during the period of this Continuing resolution, including specifically 70001 Ltd., the Human Resources Development Institute, and the National Displaced Homemaker's Network. In addition, the Department is drected to provide funds, at the rate provided in H.R. 3913 as passed by the House of Representatives, for rural concentrated employment programs serving service delivery areas under section 101(a)(4)(A)(ii) of the Job Training Partnership Act. These funds are in addition to amounts otherwise provided under sections 202 and 251(b) of such Act under this resolution. The purpose is to provide funds to each rural concentrated employement program to maintain as nearly as possible the fiscal year 1983 funding levels.

The conferees have deleted language proposed by the House and stricken by the Senate concerning the Military Construction Act. That Act is provided for in subsection 101(i) at the rate of the recent conference agreement.

Amendment No. 4: Inserts language, proposed by the Senate, which provides that projects or activities funded in the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 be provided for under section 101(a) of the continuing resolution at the House or Senate level, whichever is lower. The House had proposed that projects or activities funded in such Act be provided for under section 101(b) of the continuing resolution. The Senate amendment also includes language providing that authorities contained in Public Law 96-132, the "Department of Justice Appropriation Authorization Act, Fiscal Year 1980" shall remain in effect until the termination date of the continuing resolution or the effective date of a general Department of Justice Authorization Act, whichever is earlier.

Amendment No. 5: Provides that when an appropriation Act listed in subsection 101(a) has been reported to the Senate but not passed by the Senate as of October 1, 1983, it shall be deemed as having passed the Senate. The Senate amendment applied to Acts in both the House and the Senate. The House has no similar provision.

Amendment No. 6: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

(b) Such amounts as may be necessary for projects or activities not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution and for which appropriations, funds, or other authority would be available in the following appropriation Acts:

Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 at a rate for operations and to the extent and in the manner provided for in the Act as passed the House of Representatives as of October 1, 1983: Provided, That appropriations or loan authorization for the following agencies or activities are available at not to exceed the following annual rates and the totals are adjusted accordingly:

Agricultural Research Service:
Salaries and Expenses	$478,000,000
Buildings and Facilities	28,602,000
Cooperative State Research Service:
Special grants	25,234,000
Competitive grants	17,000,000
Animal health and disease grants	5,760,000
Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service: Salaries and Expenses	263,259,000
Federal Crop Insurance Corporation:
Administrative and operating expenses	200,000,000
FCIC Fund	110,000,000
Office of Rural Development Policy	2,000,000
Rural Housing Insurance Fund: Moderate income loans	0
Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund:
Insured soil and water loans	30,000,000
Economic emergency loans	0
Rural Development Insurance Fund: Water and waste disposal loans	270,000,000
Rural Water and Waste Disposal Grants	90,000,000
Rural Electrification Administration: Guaranteed loans, not less than	3,360,000,000
Commodity Futures Trading Commission:
Salaries and Expenses	26,400,000
ADP Limitation	3,626,000

Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provison of law or this joint resolution, section 184 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 785), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (b) the following: ", or for the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984": Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, the provisions of subsections (f) and (i) of section 3 and section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, concerning private, non-profit drug addiction or alcoholic treatment and rehabilitation programs, shall also be applicable to publicly operated community health centers: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, no part of any of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this or any other Act may be used to implement mandatory monthly reporting-retrospective budgeting for the food stamp program during the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984: Provided further, That, hereafter, in order to restore and maintain U.S. share of world markets and to restore capital of the Corporation for its operations, any restrictions or limitations on the authorities and obligations of the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell in world markets, as provided by its Charter, may be waived or suspended by the Secretary of Agriculture; and Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 (H.R. 3363), notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, except section 102, such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects, or activities provided for in such Act (H.R. 3363), to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report and joint explanatory statement of the Committee of Conference filed in the House of Representatives, as if such Act had been enacted into law.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement replaces House language which provided for programs or activities under four appropriation bills as they passed the House and Senate language which provided for programs or activities under three appropriation bills as they passed the Senate.

Under the conference agreement, the Agriculture bill is provided for as herein described.

The Interior bill is provided for in accordance with the conference agreement filed on the regular annual bill.

The Commerce, Justice, State, and the Judiciary bill is provided for in amendments numbered 4 and 9.

The Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education bill is provided for in amendment numbered 3.

AGRICULTURE, RURAL DEVELOPMENT, AND RELATED AGENCIES

The conference agreement for rates of operation for the Department of Agriculture and the related agencies uses the House passed bill as the base, with adjustments to reflect Senate action and the most current information regarding program needs. Where lower levels have been selected it is generally to reflect information provided to the conferees that such levels are all that can be effectively used during the period of this resolution or during the fiscal year. The conferees expect that funds made available by this resolution shall be made available immediately and in no cases shall personnel ceilings be used to limit program or funding levels provided by this resolution.

RELIEF NEEDED FOR AGRICULTURE

In order to restore the purchasing power of American agriculture, maintain the normal volume of domestic agricultural production, and protect our largest dollar earner in world trade, the conferees will expect the Secretary of Agriculture to immediately take the following necessary steps. First, as authorized by the Commodity Credit Corporation Charter, the Agriculture and Food Act of 1981 (Public Law 97-98), and other Acts, the Secretary of Agriculture should set target prices that accurately reflect increase in cost of production. The Secretary should also set production targets at levels that meet domestic needs, allow for adequate reserves, and provide a dependable market for world demand at competitive prices as authorized by the Charter of the Commodity Credit Corporation. Second, to prevent otherwise unavoidable shortages of food and fiber for the consumer, the Secretary should make disaster loans or payment and/or provide feed grains promptly from the Commodity Credit Corporation to farmer-producers and ranchers who have suffered from the recent disastrous drought in order to assist such farmer-producers and ranchers to remain in business. Delays in processing disaster applications are inexcusable in view of the severity of the drought. The conferees believe the Secretary must act expeditiously to prevent widespread bankruptcies of farmer-producers and ranchers and to assure adequate supplies of food and fiber for the Nation's consumers.

AGRICULTURAL RESEARCH SERVICE

BUILDINGS AND FACILITIES

The conference agreement provides for the following facilities:

Old West Vet. School in Nebraska	$12,050,000
Children's Nutrition Research Center at Houston	5,500,000
Virginia-Maryland Vet. School at VPI	4,500,000
Plant Stress and Soil Moisture Lab at Lubbock, Texas	500,000
Technology Transfer Center in southeast Oklahoma	375,000
Forage Seed Center at Corvallis, Oregon	4,000,000
Metabolism and Radiation Research Lab in North Dakota	850,000
National Soil Tilth Center at Ames, Iowa	827,000
Total	$28,602,000

COOPERATIVE STATE RESEARCH SERVICE

The conference agreement provides for special research grants at the following annual rates:

Dairy goats	$100,000
Integrated production system	200,000
Horticultural studies	50,000
Sunflower insects	150,000
Biomass energy	800,000
Biocontrol of grasshoppers	50,000
Wool research	150,000
Agricultural policy institute	450,000
All other studies	23,284,000
Total	$25,234,000

EXTENSION SERVICE

The conferees will expect the Extension Service to maintain the fiscal year 1983 program level for the renewable resources extension program out of total funds available to the Agency.

ANIMAL AND PLANT HEALTH INSPECTION SERVICE

The conference agreement includes funding for the screwworm program at an annual rate of $50,000,000 and funding for the brucellosis program at an annual rate of not less than $69,500,000. The conferees have received assurances that brucellosis state agreements and indemnity rates will not be reduced at this level of funding.

FEDERAL CROP INSURANCE CORPORATION

Funding requirements for the Federal Crop Insurance Corporation for fiscal year 1984 are based largely on participation in the program in fiscal year 1983. The conference agreement reflects reductions that are possible because assumptions regarding the rate of growth of the crop insurance program have not been realized. The conferees have been advised that the recommended funding level will allow the Corporation to maintain a favorable cash position, including ample funding to cover drought losses.

ECONOMIC EMERGENCY LOANS

The conference agreement defers funding for economic emergency loans, since these loans are not authorized by law. Once the program is authorized, supplemental funding will be considered.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION ADMINISTRATION

The conference agreement provides for guaranteed loans at the annual rate proposed in the Senate bill. The conferees have been advised that the higher levels proposed in the House bill are unnecessary, especially in light of the levels provided for direct loans.

DEPARTMENT OF DEFENSE

Amendment No. 7: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

(c) Pending enactment of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, such amounts as may be necessary for continuing activities, not otherwise specifically provided for elsewhere in this joint resolution, which were conducted in fiscal year 1983, for which provision was made in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1983, but such activities shall be funded at not to exceed an annual rate for new obligationnal authority of $247,000,000,000, which is an increase above the current rate, and this level shall be distributed on a pro rata basis to each appropriation account utilizing the fiscal year 1984 amended budget request as the base for such distribution and shall be available under the terms and conditions provided for in the applicable appropriation Acts for fiscal year 1983: Provided, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate multiyear procurements utilizing advance procurement funding for economic order quantity procurement unless specifically appropriated later: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available pursuant to this subsection shall be available for the conversion of any full time positions in support of the Army Reserve, Air Reserve, Army National Guard, and Air National Guard by Active or Reserve Military Personnel, from civilian positions designated "military technicians" to military positions: Provided further, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate or resume any project, activity, operation or organization which is defined as any project, subproject, activity, budget activity, program element, and subprogram within a program element, and for investment items is further defined as a P-1 line item in a budget activity within an appropriation account and an R-1 line item which includes a program element and subprogram element within an appropriation account, for which appropriations, funds, or other authority were not available during the fiscal year 1983: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, $5,000,000 is appropriated for the XXIII Olympiad as authorized by Section 304 of Public Law 98-94, and in addition the Department of Defense may provide support to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee on a reimbursable basis, with the proceeds to be credited to the current applicable appropriation accounts of the Department.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees agree that the Department of Defense may fund continuing activities at an annual rate for new obligational authority at not to exceed $247,000,000,000, and that such amount shall be distributed on a pro rata basis to each appropriation account utilizing the fiscal year 1984 amended budget request as the basis for such distribution. The rate provided does not include sums for a pay raise that may be appropriated at a later date. The House version had provided funding at the fiscal year 1983 level or the budget estimate whichever was lower. The Senate version of this joint resolution had recommended funding at a rate of $253,000,000,000, until the fiscal year 1984 Department of Defense Appropriation Act had been reported by either the House or Senate and then at the lower rate of either bill and under the more restrictive terms and conditions.

The conferees further agree to prohibit initiation of new multiyear procurements utilizing advance procurement funding for economic quantity procurement as proposed in the fiscal year 1984 Defense budget, and to prohibit conversion of any full time positions in support of the Guard and Reserves from civilian positions designated "military technicians" to military positions, as proposed by the House, during the period of time covered by this joint resolution.

The conferees also agree to accept the House prohibition against initiation and resumption of projects or activities as specifically defined in the House version of this joint resolution. The conferees agree to delete the House language relating to increases in production rates above those sustained with fiscal year 1983 funds. The purpose in deleting this more restrictive language was to protect planned increases in such programs as the C-5B aircraft firm fixed price production and increased funding planned for the Trident II missile full scale engineering development, the contracts for which early awards are scheduled. The Department of Defense is placed on notice that by deleting the language it was not the intention of the conferees that the Department has the authority to increase generally production rates on programs other than those mentioned, pending enactment of the regular Defense Appropriation Bill for fiscal year 1984. The conferees agree that the Appropriations Committees of the House and Senate should monitor the Department's use of this authority. Any abuse of that authority, particularly in programs which are clearly subject to congressional revision or disapproval, will result in appropriate additional restrictions and limitations of funding and authority in subsequent appropriations measures.

In lieu of general funding authority provided in the Senate amendment, the conferees agree to an appropriation of $5,000,000 as an initial portion of the $50,000,000 authorized for Department of Defense security support to the XXIII Olympic games in Los Angeles, California. The conferees further agree to provide authority for Department support on a reimbursable basis to the Olympic games when special resources are required. Such reimbursable support may be provided only in response to a direct written request from the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee. Since the conferees had agreed to delete the Senate language concerning the necessity for the Department to adhere to the levels in either the House or Senate bills as reported and then the lower of the two, the conferees found it necessary to include the provision on partial funding for support of the Olympics in order to avoid the Department embarking on unnecessary and wasteful bookkeeping exercises during the time period of this joint resolution.

Subsection 101(f) permits the Army National Guard and Army Reserve operation and maintenance and National Guard and Reserve equipment procurement to proceed at the fiscal year 1983 rate for those accounts instead of at the rate proposed in the fiscal year 1984 Defense budget which is lower. This provision in no way addresses other activities of the Department of Defense generally.

The conferees agree that the language of section 101(e) of the continuing resolution is sufficient to continue the spending and borrowing authority of the Export-Import Bank during the life of the continuing resolution.

The conferees have deferred consideration, without prejudice, of additional funding for the CRBR project. Until Congress acts, the Department should maintain all options and not undertake any new activities relating to CRBR including an initiation of any construction.

Amendment No. 8: Deletes language proposed by the House in section 101(f) relating to Rehabilitation and handicapped research activities. The conferees are agreed that these activities are covered by section 101(a) which would provide for a rate of operations not exceeding the current rate.

Amendmenmt No. 9: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate amended to read as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

(g) Such amounts as may be necessary for the following projects or activities, which were provided for in H.R. 3222, the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984, as reported to the House of Representatives on June 3, 1983, to the extent and in the manner provided for in such Act, and at a rate for operations, notwithstanding section 15(a) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 and section 701 of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, as follows:

Department of Commerce: General Administration, "Special Foreign Currency Program", $693,000;

Economic and Statistical Analysis, "Salaries and Expenses", $39,337,000;

Economic Development Administration: "Economic Development Assistance Programs", $250,000,000; "Salaries and Expenses", $30,141,000;

International Trade Administration, "Operations and Administration", $169,893,000;

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration: "Operations, Research, and Facilities", $942,871,000; "Fisheries Loan Fund", $5,000,000;

Federal Communications Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $86,383,000;

Federal Trade Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $63,500,000: Provided, That these funds are subject to the limitations and provisions of sections 10(a) and 10(c) (notwithstanding section 10(e)), 11(b), 18 and 20 of the Federal Trade Commission Improvements Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-252; 94 Stat. 374), notwithstanding the previous provisions of this subsection;

International Trade Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $20,737,000;

Securities and Exchange Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $92,500,000;

Small Business Administration, "Salaries and Expenses", $236,000,000;

Department of Justice: Immigration and Naturalization Service, "Salaries and Expenses", $527,257,000;

Notwithstanding the previous provisions of this subsection, Legal Services Corporation, "Payment to the Legal Services Corporation", $275,000,000:

Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in the Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be expended to provide legal assistance for or on behalf of any alien unless the alien is a resident of the United States and is—

(1) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence as an immigrant as defined by sections 101(a)(15) and 101(a)(20) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15), (20));

(2) an alien who is either married to a United States citizen or is a parent or an unmarried child under the age of twenty-one years of such a citizen and who has filed an application for adjustment of status to permanent resident under the Immigration and Nationality Act, and such application has not been rejected;

(3) an alien who is lawfully present in the United States pursuant to an admission under section 207 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1157, relating to refugee admissions) or who has been granted asylum by the Attorney General under such Act; or

(4) an alien who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of the Attorney General's withholding of deportation pursuant to section 243(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1253(h)).

An alien who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of being granted conditional entry pursuant to section 203(a)(7) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)(7)) before April 1, 1980, because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion, or political opinion or because of being uprooted by catastrophic natural calamity shall be deemed, for purposes of section 1007(b)(11) of the Legal Services Corporation Act, to be an alien described in subparagraph (C) of such section: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by the Corporation in making grants or entering into contracts for legal assistance unless the Corporation insures that the recipient is either (a) a private attorney or attorneys (for the sole purpose of furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients) or (b) a qualified nonprofit organization chartered under the laws of one of the States for the primary purpose of furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients, the majority of the board of directors or other governing body of which organization is comprised of attorneys who are admitted to practice in one of the States and who are appointed to terms of office on such board or body by the governing bodies of State, county, or municipal bar associations the membership of which represents a majority of the attorneys practicing law in the locality in which the organization is to provide legal assistance: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be expended by the Legal Services Corporation to participate in litigation unless the Corporation or a recipient of the Corporation is a party, or a recipient is representing an eligible client in litigation in which the interpretation of this title or a regulation promulgated under this title is an issue, and shall not participate on behalf of any client other than itself: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be available to any recipient to be used—

(A) to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone communication, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence any decision by a Federal, State, or local agency, except where legal assistance is provided by an employee of a recipient to an eligible client on a particular application, claim, or case, which directly involves the client's legal rights and responsibilities, or

(B) to influence any Member of Congress or any other Federal, State, or local elected official to favor or oppose any Acts, bills, resolutions, or similar legislation, or any referendum, initiative, constitutional amendment, or any similar procedure of the Congress, any State legislature, any local council, or any similar governing body, except that this subsection shall not preclude such funds from being used in connection with communications made in response to any Federal, State, or local official, upon the formal request of such official: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to bring a class action suit against the Federal government or any State or local government unless (1) the project director of a recipient has expressly approved the filing of such an action in accordance with policies established by the governing body of such recipient; (2) the class relief which is the subject of such an action is sought for the primary benefit of individuals who are eligible for legal assistance; and (3) that prior to filing such an action, the recipient project director has determined that the government entity is not likely to change the policy or practice in question, that the policy or practice will continue to adversely affect eligible clients, that the recipient has given notice of its intention to seek class relief and that responsible efforts to resolve without litigation the adverse effects of the policy or practice have not been successful or would be adverse to the interest of the clients: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be expended for any purpose prohibited or limited by or contrary to section 11 of H.R. 3480, as passed the House of Representatives on June 18, 1981: Provided further, That notwithstanding any regulation, guideline, or rule of the Corporation, the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by the Corporation in making grants or entering into contracts under section 1006(a) (1) and (3) so as to insure that funding for each such current grantee and contractor is maintained in 1984 at the annualized level at which each such grantee and contractor was funded in 1983, or in the same proportion which total appropriations to the Corporation in fiscal year 1984 bear to the total appropriations to the Corporation in fiscal year 1983, until action is taken by directors of the Corporation who have been confirmed in accordance with section 1004(a) of the Legal Services Corporation Act: Provided further, That no member of the Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation shall be compensated for his services to the Corporation except for the payment of an attendance fee at meetings of the Board at a rate not to exceed the highest daily rate for grade fifteen (15) of the General Schedule and necessary travel expenses to attend Board meetings in accordance with the Standard Government Travel Regulations: Provided further, That no officer or employee of the Legal Services Corporation or a recipient program shall be reimbursed for membership in a private club, or be paid severance pay in excess of what would be paid a Federal employee for comparable service;

Department of State: Administration of Foreign Affairs: "Salaries and Expenses", $1,120,000,000; "Reopening Consulates", $2,500,000; "Representation Allowances", $4,148,000; "Acquisition, Operation, and Maintenance of Buildings Abroad", $202,889,000; "Acquisition, Operation, and Maintenance of Buildings Abroad (Special Foreign Currency Program)", $10,012,000; "Payment to the American Institute in Taiwan", $9,380,000; "Payment to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund", $102,753,000;

International Organizations and Conferences: "Contributions to International Organizations", $520,515,000;

International Commissions: International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, "Construction", $672,000; "American Sections, International Commissions", $3,426,000; "International Fisheries Commissions", $8,876,000;

Other: "Asia Foundation", $9,900,000;

United States Information Agency: "Salaries and Expenses (Special Foreign Currency Program)", $10,450,000; "Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange Between East and West", $18,362,000; "Acquisition and Construction of Radio Facilities", $34,013,000.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 10: Provides continuing authority for programs under the District of Columbia Appropriation Act at the rate of the conference agreement as proposed by the Senate, amended to conform subsection designation.

Amendment No. 11: Provides continuing authority for programs under the Military Construction Appropriation Act at the rate of the conference agreement as proposed by the Senate, amended to conform subsection designation.

Amendment No. 12: Inserts November 10, 1983 as the termination date of the joint resolution as proposed by the Senate, instead of November 15, 1983 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 13: Provides that the subsidy to the Postal Service be sufficient to continue postal rates for preferred-rate mailers at the rates in effect on September 1, 1983 (step 14) as proposed by the House, instead of increased to step 15 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 14: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the Senate amendment with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 109. Funds shall be available for school assistance in federally affected areas authorized by title I of the Act of September 30, 1950, and the Act of September 23, 1950, at an annual rate of $585,000,000, under the terms and conditions provided in the applicable appropriation Act for fiscal year 1983; and funds shall be available for Departmental Management, "Salaries and Expenses" under the Department of Education at the current rate of operations.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conferees expect that no reductions-in-force will occur in the Department of Education as a result of the funding authority provided by this joint resolution.

Amendment No. 15: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 16: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have limited pay increases for certain prevailing rate employees in the wage area described in section 780 of Public Law 97-114. The House had no comparable provision.

Amendment No. 17: Restores subsection designation proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 18: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have limited pay increases Department of Defense overseas teachers to the overall average percentage adjustment in the General Schedule during fiscal year 1984.

Amendments No. 19, 20 and 21: Adjust subsection designations.

Amendment No. 22: Inserts language proposed by the Senate, amended to change subsection designation, which provides that limitations imposed on prevailing rate pay may not apply to wage adjustments for prevailing rate supervisors. The pay increase for the supervisors will be in accordance with the supervisory pay plan published in the Federal Register. The House had no comparable provision.

Amendment No. 23: Restores section number proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 24: Inserts validating clause carried in previous continuing resolutions as proposed by the Senate, amended to change section number.

Amendment No. 25: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have prevented the initiation or resumption of projects or activities which were not conducted during fiscal year 1983.

Amendment No. 26: Deletes language proposed by the Senate applicable to certain provisions in appropriations acts affecting more than one account.

JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
EDWARD P. BOLAND,
WILLIAM H. NATCHER,
NEAL SMITH,
JOSEPH P. ADDABBO,
SIDNEY R. YATES,
EDWARD R. ROYBAL,
SILVIO O. CONTE,
JOSEPH M. MCDADE,
JACK EDWARDS,
JOHN T. MYERS,
Managers on the Part of the House.

MARK O. HATFIELD,
TED STEVENS,
LOWELL P. WEICKER, Jr.,

JAMES A. MCCLURE,
PAUL LAXALT,
THAD COCHRAN,
JAMES ABDNOR,
ROBERT W. KASTEN,
JOHN C. STENNIS,
DANIEL K. INOUYE,
THOMAS F. EAGLETON,
LAWTON CHILES,
DENNIS DECONCINI,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, pursuant to the order of the House yesterday, I call up the conference report on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes.

The Clerk read the title of the joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of September 29, the conference report is considered as having been read.

The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the conference report on House Joint Resolution 368 and amendments thereto in disagreement, and that I may include extraneous and tabular matter.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, we bring you the continuing resolution, House Joint Resolution 368, to enable the Government to operate until November 10 or until regular appropriations bills are enacted into law—if that is done prior to November 10.

It has become necessary because we have been delayed in getting appropriations bills through the Congress and enacted into law primarily because authorizations have not been passed.

□ 1610

As I pointed out when we considered this matter earlier, there is no need at this time to discuss further why we are in this position except I can point out that, in most cases, the authorizations have been delayed in being approved by the Congress, and for that reason appropriations are not technically in order.

May I say to the Members that we have agreed with the Senate position to keep this bill clean and substantially go with the House bill. We have had certain changes in amounts with some of which I personally differ, for in the original resolution which I introduced, the amount was fixed at a lower figure than is in the conference report.

I introduced the House joint resolution with the intent of asking for a rule permitting me to offer this resolution as a substitute for House Joint Resolution 367—to which 19 amendments were approved by the Appropriations Committee most of which were legislation.

When the Speaker referred House Joint Resolution 367 as amended to the Legislative Committee on Foreign Affairs, it was decided to request a rule enabling us to bring up House Joint Resolution 368 without amendment—holding spending virtually in line with the existing rate for Government spending. The defense item, though 14 billion under the President budget, is substantially higher than House Joint Resolution 368 which I introduced. At this time four bills have been enacted into law, and nine are included in this resolution.

The House, as you recall, provided that this continuing resolution last through November 15. That has been changed here by the other body, and we went along in conference, based on the fact that the 10th of November would be more practical. We agreed with the Senate proposal to make the termination date, November 10. The reason for that, the tentative hope of adjournment is for November 18, and it was thought that the November 10 date would give adequate time to handle our problems before the tentative adjournment date of November 18.

I call attention to the fact that section 102 of the resolution provides temporary funding through November 10 or until the regualr bills are enacted into law. The resolution provides that when regular bills are signed into law, they automatically disengage from the provisions of the resolution.

The resolution also provides for the continuation of existing provisions of law regarding the prohibition of federally funded abortions and prohibition against preventing the implementation of programs of voluntary school prayer and meditation in the public schools.

May I say again that one of our problems was what to tie this continuing resolution to, in view of the different status of the various bills in the legislative process. For the information of my colleagues, the rates for the District of Columbia, Interior, and Military Construction are the conference agreement level. Those bills should be signed soon.

At the lower of House or Senate bill rate we recommend Commerce-Justice-State, with certain exceptions, and Labor-HHS-Education, with certain exceptions.

The House-passed bill rate is carried for Agriculture, with certain reductions.

Carried at the current rate is the Treasury-Postal Service Appropriations Act, and at the lower of the current rate or the budget estimate, is Foreign Operation.

May I say that in all of this, and as I described it the other day, we have made exceptions where there was some reason. The bill for Commerce, State, and Justice, if you recall, had many of the major items go out on technical points of order because no rule waiving points of order had been obtained. We have had to take care of that.

But in general, what we bring you is a continuation of essential Government services until November 10. Again all you have to do to come out from under this resolution is to agree on the regular bills and get them signed into law. So this is basically a holding action, operating pretty much as we have all throughout the year for most programs and activities. But, again, when we do pass the bills—and we hope we will get them through—they will take over and we will come out from under the provisions we have here.

I know of no further statements that I can make except, as I have pointed out here, there are a few exceptions. The Chicago problem that our friend from Chicago (Mr. YATES) has brought to our attention has been addressed. There are two or three other relatively minor provisions.

In the case of Agriculture, which has passed the House and Senate, we took the House-passed version and made a limited number of adjustments to reflect Senate action and the most current information regarding program needs. Some reductions were made in REA loans since the higher levels are not required. We were also able to adjust some other programs because of carryover funds from the jobs bill.

I think, so far as I can understand, that we bring you a resolution that we should not have any trouble getting signed by the President. Insofar as any commitments, we have none from the President, but we do give consideration to his recommendations to the budget, and we retain to the Congress the right to deal with individul items. But insofar as the totals are concerned, we are well within our section 302 allocations allocated to the Appropriations Committee under the budget resolution adopted by the Congress and the amounts recommended by the President.

So, again, it continues the operation of Government except military at approximately present levels until November 10, or until the departments' and agencies' regular bills become law.

Questions as to detail will be handled by the subcommittee chairmen of the various subcommittees.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT). The gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN) has consumed 7 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, although Thanksgiving is on your calendar as November 24, let me tell you that we can all give thanks today, and that no turkey will be served.

Your conferees have met and resolved the differences between the House and the Senate on the first continuing resolution for fiscal 1984.

This is an historic resolution.

It passed the House without amendment.

It passed the Senate floor with only one floor amendment in addition to the amendments reported from committee.

All of the differences were fully and fairly resolved. There are no amendments in true disagreement. There are no "killer" issues in the conference agreement.

I can recommend the adoption of this conference agreement without qualification.

And I can also tell you that many people share the credit.

Mr. Speaker, JAMIE WHITTEN, had the courage to bring a clean resolution to the floor, after the first resolution had been mangled by the committee.

The leadership, and the members of the Rules Committee, on both sides of the aisle, gave us a closed rule.

After the resolution had gone to the other body, I was asked by Chairman HATFIELD to work for House consideration of the 1984 supplemental. I talked with JAMIE WHITTEN; he wrote to the Committee on Rules, and that committee has scheduled a hearing on the supplemental for next Tuesday.

Finally, and most astonishing of all, the resolution passed the Senate floor with only one amendment. We should pay the highest possible tribute to the leadership of the Senate, and of the Senate Committee on Appropriations.

For the first time in a long time, we can pass a continuing resolution, and go home and be proud to face our constituents. I will review for my colleagues the principal recommendations of the conferees.

First, the conferees agreed with the Senate position that the resolution extend through November 10. The Senate argued, and we agreed, that we should leave some breathing room between the termination date of the continuing resolution, and the target date for sine die adjournment.

Second, we agreed on rates of spending for each bill covered by the continuing resolution.

Agriculture programs are continued at the rate and under the conditions of the House-passed bill. Specific dollar levels are provided for several activities.

Programs in the Commerce-Justice bill are continued at the lower of the House or the Senate rate, except for those activities which were stricken from the House floor on a point of order. Those activities are funded at specific dollar levels in the resolution.

The Defense rate is $247 billion, the amount provided in the House subcommittee markup concluded yesterday.

House restrictions on new starts during the life of the resolution remain in effect. No activity or project not funded in fiscal 1983 can be initiated under the terms of the resolution. For example, since binary gas was not produced using 1983 funds, none can be produced under the terms of the continuing resolution.

Five million dollars is made available for the start of defense security and other activities at the summer Olympics.

Activities in the Interior, Military Construction, and District of Columbia bills are continued at the rates and under the conditions provided in the conference reports on those bills.

Programs in Labor, Health and Human Services are continued at the lower of the House or Senate rate, and under the terms and conditions provided in the 1983 act.

This means we are extending current law on such issues as abortion, busing, and school prayer.

The rates for Treasury and foreign aid were not changed by the Senate, and were not in conference.

Those rates were, and remain, the current rate for Treasury, and for foreign aid the 1983 continuing resolution and the 1983 supplemental, or the budget estimate, whichever is lower, and the more restrictive authority.

COMMERCE, JUSTICE, STATE

The conference report provides funding for most programs and activities of the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the judiciary and related agencies at the House-passed levels in H.R. 3222, fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill, or the Senate-reported levels in S. 1721, fiscal year 1984 appropriations bill, whichever is lower for each account. The remaining programs and activities of these departments and agencies are provided for at specified levels in section 101(g) of the resolution.

Several issues in this section of the report are of particular interest to many of the Members, and I will briefly describe the actions of the conferees in regard to those items.

The conference report includes $275 million for the Legal Services Corporation. This is a reduction of $21 million below the House amount and an increase of $18 million over the Senate amount. Language included in the conference report places exactly the same restrictions on the Corporation that are now in place. Those restrictions include limitations on assistance to illegal aliens, on lobbying, on class action suits, and on excessive compensation or reimbursement for Corporation officers.

The conference report includes $63.5 million for the Federal Trade Commission. This is a reduction of $1.6 million below the House amount and an increase of $4 million over the Senate amount. Again, the conferees have agreed to impose the same restrictions on the FTC's operations as were in effect in fiscal 1983, including the prohibitions on activities affecting agricultural cooperatives and trademarks.

The conference report includes $250 million for economic development administration programs. This is $51 million more than the Senate amount and $65 million below the House amount.

In total, the conference report would provide $10.2 billion for the programs and activities of these departments and agencies. This is almost exactly the same amount as provided in fiscal 1983, and it is a reduction of $540 million below the House amount.

DISTRICT APPROPRIATIONS

In the section dealing with appropriations for the District of Columbia, the conferees agreed to a subsection which provides for appropriations to the District of Columbia in the manner provided for in the conference report for that bill which passed the House yesterday afternoon, September 29.

INTERIOR—RELATED AGENCIES

The conference agreement provides funding for the Department of the Interior and related agencies at levels provided for in last night's fiscal year 1984 Interior conference.

The conference agreement on H.R. 3363, the Interior appropriations bill, cuts $128.2 million out of the measure as passed by the House. House and Senate conferees have agreed to provide the Department of the Interior and related agencies $7.95 billion in new budget authority.

We have recommended an additional $19.8 million over the House-passed level for the Interior Department. This new level of funding provides $538.8 million for the Bureau of Land Management, $353.2 million for the Fish and Wildlife Service, $163.6 million for minerals management, $136.4 million for the Bureau of the Mines, $969.1 million for the Bureau of Indian Affairs, $191.4 million for territorial and international affairs, and $87.9 million for secretarial offices.

In title I, we have had to reduce from House-passed levels, funding for other Interior Department programs. The agreement provides $847.2 million for the National Park Service, $367.1 million for the Geological Survey, and $294.7 million for the Office of Surface Mining Reclamation and Enforcement.

For title II programs, we recommend a level of funding which is $147.9 million below the level as passed by the House. Funds have been added to the Forest Service to provide $1.354 billion, and to the Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation Commission to provide $18.8 million. New levels of funding provide $1.2 billion for the Department of Energy, $824 million for Indian Health, $166.8 million for the Smithsonian Institution, $162 million for the National Endowment for the Arts, and $140 million for the National Endowment for the Humanities.

LABOR, HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES, AND EDUCATION

The basic funding mechanism agreed to in conference for the programs in the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies is that programs will be funded at the lower of the House-passed or Senate-reported funding levels provided in H.R. 3913, under the terms and conditions applicable in fiscal year 1983. In addition, the statement of the managers directs the departments and agencies to take no actions regarding staffing or program levels or procurements that would pre-empt congressional prerogatives on the regular appropriations bill. This specifically prohibits any procurement action in the Social Security Administration, particularly relating to social security cards, that would not meet the terms of applicable provisos in H.R. 3913 as passed by the House.

Vocational rehabilitation programs are funded at the current rate.

Impact aid is funded at an annual rate of $585 million, under the terms and conditions applicable in fiscal year 1983.

Other programs on which action was deferred in H.R. 3913 are funded at the current rate.

Salaries and expenses for the Department of Education are provided for at the current rate.

TREASURY/POSTAL SERVICE

Under those sections pertaining to Treasury/Postal Service and general Government appropriations, the conferees have taken action on a few specific items.

In funding for revenue foregone for the Postal Service, the conferees have provided for a freezing of preferred class rates at the step 14 level for such users as nonprofit organizations, veterans' magazine publishers, charity groups, and so forth.

The revenue foregone appropriations make up for the revenue the Postal Service might otherwise realize if it were delivering certain types of mail at higher rates.

The conference agreement also provides for continued 6-day delivery and rural delivery, and for free mailing for overseas voting for the blind.

In another area, under a pay raise limitation provision for certain Federal workers, the conferees have eliminated the application of the cap for schoolteachers who teach overseas for the Department of Defense. Pursuant to the elimination of that provision, DOD teachers employed overseas will be eligible for pay raises along the lines of those granted to teachers in the United States.

The conferees also exempted Federal blue collar supervisors from pay raise limitations so as to bring that group more into line with their private sector counterparts.

The implementation of this provision began during fiscal year 1983, under section 107(f) of Public Law 97-377 which provided an exemption from the fiscal year 1983 pay limitation for this purpose. The administration contends that to include this provision in this continuing resolution will maintain the continuity of its 2-year phase-in plan for putting blue collar supervisors on a par with their private sector counterparts.

Mr. Speaker, at this point, I would like to express my strong concern over a matter I consider to be very important. That matter pertains to personnel levels at the Customs Service.

Twice this year, in two separate fiscal year 1984 markups, the Treasury/Postal Service Subcommittee has specifically taken action to restore some 2,000 positions to the Customs Service which were proposed for elimination by the Office of Management and Budget. The Senate has specifically stipulated that 1,600 of those 2,000 positions are to be retained.

It has been the position of both the House and Senate that the high level of drug smuggling and related crime in this country dictates the need for a strong law enforcement effort to stem the tide of illicit drugs coming into this country.

In addition to the crime problem, personnel reductions could slow down the processing of visitors into the United States, as well as reduce the efficiency of processing incoming and outgoing commerce.

Further, there is strong feeling that personnel reductions would be counterproductive to ongoing primary border inspection function consolidation efforts which the committee has strongly indicated it wants accomplished in the near future.

For all of these reasons, I strongly urge the Office of Management and Budget to refrain from any efforts to begin reducing personnel levels at the Customs Service as any such move would be premature, and counter to the expressed positions of both the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations.

The statement of managers contains language indicating that the conferees have deferred consideration, without prejudice, of additional funding for the Clinch River breeder reactor project. Until Congress acts further on this question, the Department of Energy is directed to maintain all options and not undertake any new activities relating to the reactor, especially including any initiation of construction.

My colleagues know that I have been a long-standing opponent of the Clinch River reactor project, and they have my assurance that his language will not permit any further work to be done on the project unless there is additional funding by the Congress. As my colleagues know, there was no money provided for Clinch River in the fiscal year 1984 energy and water development appropriations bill.

I believe that this neutral language is appropriate while Congress continues to consider whether any further funding should be provided for the project.

In order to insure continuity of operation for the important programs of the Export Import Bank, the conferees are agreed that the language of section 101(e) of the continuing resolution is, and shall be construed to be, sufficient to continue the spending and borrowing authority of the Bank during the period covered by the continuing resolution.

In the provision dealing with prevailing rate—blue collar—pay, the conferees agreed to delete Senate language which would have limited pay increases for certain prevailing rate employees in the wage area described in Public Law 97-114, and to delete Senate language which would have limited the pay increase for Department of Defense overseas teachers.

However, the conferees agreed to Senate language which provides that limitations imposed on prevailing rate pay would not apply to wage adjustments for prevailing rate supervisors.

Mr. Speaker, that concludes my summary of the specific recommendations of your conferees.

This is a good conference agreement, which I can recommend to Members of both parties. We have continued Federal activities at the minimum responsible levels which reflect the actions of the House and the Senate.

In the case of both Labor-HHS and Commerce-Justice, the conferees agreed on the lower of the House or Senate rate, which is the more traditional continuing resolution formula.

11-059 O-87-35 (Pt. 19)

Some of the levels in the Labor-HHS bill will be too low, in my opinion. However, the way to solve that problem is to pass the appropriation bill and send it to the President.

Ordinarily, at this point I would talk about the possibility that the Government will shut down, and that we will lose social security payments, the Department of Defense, food stamps, and other critical programs.

Today I am not going to do so. Both bodies have acted with exceptional restraint and responsibility, and I think we will continue to do so.

Mr. Speaker, I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman explain to me an issue that I understand did arise in the conference with regard to section 101(b)(1), which was beyond the scope of the conference, which delays for 3 months an antifraud requirement in the food stamp program?

Mr. CONTE. We accepted an amendment in conference for a cash program for food stamps for Puerto Rico.

Mr. WALKER. My understanding of the matter is that it was beyond the scope of the conference and that this refers to the monthly reporting retrospective budgeting, and that it would have an impact on the entire food stamp program and not just on Puerto Rico?

Mr. CONTE. That was not my understanding.

I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from California (Mr. PANETTA).

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, basically, what it does is, it allows Puerto Rico to continue to operate for 3 months on a cash program. It does not affect any other part of the food stamp program, that particular amendment.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman from Massachusetts will yield further, do I understand, then, that any concern with regard to the fact that this 3-month delay in the antifraud provisions that would extend beyond the Puerto Rico experience, it is not the intention of the committee to move forward, that the committee intends for this to apply only to the Puerto Rico situation and does not intend it to go beyond that into the total program?

□ 1620

Mr. CONTE. That is exactly right.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. PANETTA. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to my good friend, the gentleman from California.

Mr. PANETTA. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I believe the gentleman from Pennsylvania is confusing two different amendments. One is an amendment which extends the period for cash payments, a special program that Puerto Rico has for 3 months, instead of having to come back onto the regular food stamp program. That deals solely and specifically with Puerto Rico.

The second amendment, however, deals with postponing the monthly reporting requirements for 3 months, and in that instance that applies to the entire program because a number of States have indicated they need additional time in order to comply with that requirement.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, then, we are talking about the fact that there is a 3-month delay in the conference report on an antifraud provision that was first adopted as a part of the reconciliation in 1981 and that we are delaying, as a part of this conference report, that reporting requirement?

Mr. CONTE. It is my understanding that it only applies to retrospective reporting.

Mr. WALKER. That is my information, too. It refers to monthly reporting for restrospective budgeting, which was an antifraud provision.

Mr. PANETTA. If the gentleman will yield further to me, basically what has happened here is that all of the States are having a difficult time meeting this monthly reporting requirement which goes into effect supposedly on October 1. All of them have asked for waivers.

The Department, in fact, has indicated that for the month of October they will, in effect, waive this particular requirement. So what we are doing in this instance is extending it for a couple of additional months so that the States can adequately prepare for that requirement.

Mr. WALKER. If the gentleman will yield further, my question was: Is that issue not an issue that was beyond the scope of the conference to consider?

Mr. CONTE. I do not think so. No.

Mr. WALKER. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman from Mississippi yield to me?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I ask the gentleman to yield to give us an explanation of the language on page 19 of the statement of managers with respect to the Clinch River breeder reactor project, which says that the conferees have deferred consideration without prejudice of additional funding for the CRBR project. Until the Congress acts, the Department should maintain all options and not undertake any new activities relating to CRBR, including an initiation of construction.

What concerns me is that the Secretary had written to Chairman JOHN DINGELL in a letter dated September 16, 1983, which says that if action is not taken to provide added funding for the project on or before October 1, 1983, the project would effectively be in termination and contractors would have to be notified on October 1, 1983, that funds were not available and this would place the project in constructive termination. While there will be $45 million in uncosted obligations at the end of fiscal year 1983, most of these are for subcontracts and represent hard commitments. These subcontracts would have to be terminated. There are no funds appropriated to cover termination costs and such funds would need to be immediately requested unless provided by Congress.

My question is: Is the language of the managers of the conference intended to be totally neutral with respect to Clinch River and not intended in any way to overcome this statement and the letter?

Mr. WHITTEN. It is intended to be neutral. On the House side, as the gentleman may remember, we provided no money at all for the Clinch River project but agreed that in the event funds were provided for CRBR that we would bring it back and subject it to a House floor vote.

The Senate majority leader is from Tennessee, and I can see the problems he has. I can understand his situation in not wanting to let it go by without comment, so what this is is a comment to the effect that nothing is being done one way or the other, but the situation is being left just as it is.

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the chairman. Is that the understanding of the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE)?

Mr. CONTE. That is right.

Mr. OTTINGER. I thank the gentleman. That is all I need.

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. DYSON. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. Speaker, I would like to engage in a colloquy with the chairman of the Subcommittee on Commerce, State, Justice, and related agencies.

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from Iowa.

Mr. DYSON. Was it the intention of the conference committee conferees to remove language from the continuing resolution with respect to construction differential subsidy paybacks so the question could be resolved within the Congress when the Congress considers the Commerce, State, Justice appropriation?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. Yes; it is our intention that that question will be settled either in the conference on the regular bill or in the next continuing resolution and that this matter not be prejudiced one way or the other in this bill.

Mr. DYSON. Mr. Chairman, is it your intention and that of the House conferees that the Secretary of Transportation not take any action to promulgate or implement any proposed rule change with respect to the repayment of construction differential subsidies during the period covered by the continuing resolution?

Mr. SMITH of Iowa. It was our understanding and intention that what we are doing would not prejudice it one way or the other, and that the matter could be resolved at a later point.

Mr. DYSON. I thank the chairman.

● Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, the House managers of House Joint Resolution 368 are now telling us that this continuing resolution is free of adornment, will allow spending in the functions covered at rates substantially below our budget resolutions.

I commend the managers for their achievements. This is obviously a better resolution than we have seen for many years around here. On the other hand, just because it is better does not mean it is good.

It still has the $20 million for the Chicago school problem. It still funds unauthorized items. It still comes to us shrouded in mystery. We have no precise definition of how much money is in this bill. I have confidence in our managers, but I will not vote in the dark even for a 6-week period.

House Joint Resolution 368 is a great improvement, but it does not yet warrant an affirmative vote.●

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the conference report.

The previous question was ordered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the conference report.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present, and I make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken electronic device, and there were—yeas 232, nays 136, not voting 65, as follows:

[Roll No. 374]

YEAS—232

Ackerman	Gradison	Nowak
Akaka	Gray	O'Brien
Andrews (NC)	Green	Oberstar
Andrews (TX)	Guarini	Obey
Annunzio	Hall (IN)	Olin
Anthony	Hall, Sam	Ortiz
Barnard	Harrison	Ottinger
Barnes	Hatcher	Owens
Bateman	Hawkins	Oxley
Beilenson	Hefner	Panetta
Bennett	Hightower	Parris
Bereuter	Hillis	Patterson
Berman	Holt	Perkins
Bliley	Horton	Price
Boehlert	Howard	Rangel
Boggs	Hoyer	Ray
Boner	Huckaby	Regula
Bonker	Hutto	Ridge
Borski	Hyde	Rinaldo
Bosco	Ireland	Robinson
Boucher	Jeffords	Rodino
Breaux	Johnson	Roe
Brooks	Jones (NC)	Rogers
Brown (CA)	Jones (TN)	Rose
Burton (CA)	Kastenmeier	Rostenkowski
Byron	Kazen	Roukema
Campbell	Kemp	Rowland
Carney	Kennelly	Roybal
Chandler	Kindness	Sabo
Chappell	Kogovsek	Sawyer
Clarke	Kolter	Scheuer
Clinger	LaFalce	Schneider
Coelho	Lantos	Schumer
Coleman (TX)	Leath	Seiberling
Collins	Lehman (CA)	Shelby
Conte	Lehman (FL)	Sisisky
Cooper	Lent	Skeen
Coughlin	Levin	Smith (FL)
Courter	Levine	Smith (IA)
Coyne	Levitas	Smith (NE)
Crockett	Lewis (CA)	Smith (NJ)
D'Amours	Lipinski	Solarz
Daniel	Livingston	Spratt
de la Garza	Lloyd	Staggers
Dicks	Long (LA)	Stratton
Dixon	Long (MD)	Sundquist
Dowdy	Lott	Swift
Downey	Lujan	Synar
Duncan	Martinez	Tallon
Dwyer	Matsui	Taylor
Dymally	Mavroules	Thomas (GA)
Dyson	Mazzoli	Torres
Edwards (AL)	McCloskey	Torricelli
Edwards (CA)	McCollum	Udall
Erdreich	McDade	Valentine
Erlenborn	McGrath	Vander Jagt
Fascell	McHugh	Vandergriff
Fazio	McKernan	Vento
Ferraro	McKinney	Watkins
Fiedler	McNulty	Wheat
Fish	Mica	Whitehurst
Flippo	Michel	Whitley
Florio	Mikulski	Whitten
Foglietta	Mineta	Williams (MT)
Foley	Minish	Wilson
Ford (MI)	Mitchell	Winn
Forsythe	Molinari	Wise
Fowler	Mollohan	Wolf
Franklin	Montgomery	Wortley
Frost	Moody	Wright
Fuqua	Morrison (CT)	Yates
Garcia	Morrison (WA)	Yatron
Gaydos	Mrazek	Young (AK)
Gejdenson	Murphy	Young (FL)
Gephardt	Murtha	Young (MO)
Gilman	Myers	Zablocki
Gonzalez	Natcher
Gore	Neal

NAYS—136

Applegate	Carper	DeWine
Archer	Carr	Dickinson
Badham	Chappie	Donnelly
Bartlett	Coats	Dorgan
Bates	Coleman (MO)	Dreier
Bethune	Conyers	Durbin
Bilirakis	Craig	Early
Brown (CO)	Crane, Philip	Eckart
Broyhill	Dannemeyer	Edgar
Bryant	Daub	Edwards (OK)
Burton (IN)	Dellums	Emerson
English	Mack	Sensenbrenner
Evans (IA)	MacKay	Shannon
Evans (IL)	Madigan	Sharp
Feighan	Markey	Shaw
Fields	Marlenee	Shumway
Frank	Martin (IL)	Sikorski
Frenzel	Martin (NC)	Siljander
Gekas	McCain	Slattery
Glickman	McCurdy	Smith, Denny
Goodling	McEwen	Smith, Robert
Gunderson	Miller (OH)	Snowe
Hall (OH)	Moore	Snyder
Hall, Ralph	Moorhead	Solomon
Hansen (ID)	Nelson	Spence
Hansen (UT)	Nielson	Stangeland
Harkin	Oakar	Stark
Hayes	Packard	Stenholm
Hertel	Pashayan	Stump
Hiler	Patman	Tauke
Hopkins	Pease	Tauzin
Hubbard	Penny	Towns
Hughes	Petri	Volkmer
Hunter	Porter	Vucanovich
Kaptur	Rahall	Walgren
Kasich	Reid	Walker
Kildee	Richardson	Weaver
Kostmayer	Ritter	Weber
Lagomarsino	Roberts	Weiss
Leach	Roemer	Whittaker
Leland	Roth	Wirth
Lewis (FL)	Russo	Wolpe
Loeffler	Savage	Wyden
Lowery (CA)	Schaefer	Zschau
Lowry (WA)	Schroeder
Lundine	Schulze

NOT VOTING—65

Addabbo	Dingell	Moakley
Albosta	Ford (TN)	Nichols
Alexander	Gibbons	Paul
Anderson	Gingrich	Pepper
Aspin	Gramm	Pickle
AuCoin	Gregg	Pritchard
Bedell	Hamilton	Pursell
Bevill	Hammerschmidt	Quillen
Biaggi	Hance	Ratchford
Boland	Hartnett	Rudd
Bonior	Heftel	Shuster
Boxer	Jacobs	Simon
Britt	Jenkins	Skelton
Broomfield	Jones (OK)	St Germain
Cheney	Kramer	Stokes
Clay	Latta	Studds
Conable	Luken	Thomas (CA)
Corcoran	Lungren	Traxler
Crane, Daniel	Marriott	Waxman
Daschle	Martin (NY)	Williams (OH)
Davis	McCandless	Wylie
Derrick	Miller (CA)

□ 1640

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Addabbo for, with Mr. AuCoin against.

Mr. Derrick for, with Mr. Hance against.

Mr. Skelton for, with Mr. Daniel B. Crane against.

Mr. Bonior of Michigan for, with Mr. Hartnett against.

Mr. Nichols for, with Mr. McCandless against.

Mr. Pepper for, with Mr. Shuster against.

Mr. Wylie for, with Mr. Thomas of California against.

Mr. Broomfield for, with Mr. Paul against.

Mr. Conable for, with Mr. Pursell against.

Mr. Rudd for, with Mr. Latta against.

Mr. Williams of Ohio for, with Mr. Kramer against.

Mr. Pritchard for, with Mr. Cheney against.

Mr. Quillen for, with Mr. Corcoran against.

Messrs. HUNTER, HALL of Ohio, LELAND, WOLPE and HAYES changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. McCOLLUM changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the conference report was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

AMENDMENTS IN DISAGREEMENT

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the first amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 3: Page 2, strike out line 8.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 3 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment insert: "Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 (H. Rept. 98-357, S. Rept. 98-247) under the terms and conditions provided in such Act for fiscal year 1983; and".

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 6: Page 3, strike out all after line 10, over to and including line 11 on page 4, and insert:

(b)(1) Such amounts as may be necessary for projects or activities, not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution, at a rate for operations and to the extent and in the manner provided for in the following appropriations Acts as passed by the Senate as of October 1, 1983:

Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984: Provided, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, section 184 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 785), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (b) the following: ", or for the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984": Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, the provisions of subsections (f) and (i) of section 3 and section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, concerning private, nonprofit drug addiction or alcoholic treatment and rehabilitation programs, shall also be applicable to publicly operated community health centers;

Department of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984: Provided, That no funds provided in this or any other Act to agencies funded by the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1983 (Public Law 97-394) may be expended to take actions related to termination of programs or closure of facilities until enactment of the Interior and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984; and Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984, under the terms and conditions provided in such Act for fiscal year 1983.

(2) For the purposes of this joint resolution, when an Act listed in this subsection has been reported to the Senate but not passed by the Senate as of October 1, 1983, it shall be deemed as having been passed by the Senate.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 6 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

(b) Such amounts as may be necessary for projects or activities not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution and for which appropriations, funds, or other authority would be available in the following appropriation Acts:

Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984 at a rate for operations and to the extent and in the manner provided for in the Act as passed the House of Representatives as of October 1, 1983: Provided, That appropriations or loan authorization for the following agencies or activities are available at not to exceed the following annual rates and the totals are adjusted accordingly:

Agricultural Research Service:
Salaries and Expenses	$478,000,000
Buildings and Facilities	28,602,000
Cooperative State Research Service:
Special grants	25,234,000
Competitive grants	17,000,000
Animal health and disease grants	5,760,000
Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service: Salaries and Expenses	263,259,000
Federal Crop Insurance Corporation:
Administrative and operating expenses	200,000,000
FCIC Fund	110,000,000
Office of Rural Development Policy	2,000,000
Rural Housing Insurance Fund: Moderate income loans	0
Agricultural Credit Insurance Fund:
Insured soil and water loans	30,000,000
Economic emergency loans	0
Rural Development Insurance Fund: Water and waste disposal loans	270,000,000
Rural Water and Waste Disposal Grants	90,000,000
Rural Electrification Administration: Guaranteed loans, not less than	3,360,000,000
Commodity Futures Trading Commission:
Salaries and Expenses	26,400,000
ADP Limitation	3,626,000

Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, section 184 of the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 (96 Stat. 785), is amended by inserting before the period at the end of paragraph (b) the following, ", or for the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984": Provided further, that notwithstanding any other provision of law or this joint resolution, the provisions of subsections (f) and (i) of section 3 and section 10 of the Food Stamp Act of 1977, as amended, concerning private, nonprofit drug addiction or alcoholic treatment and rehabilitation programs, shall also be applicable to publicly operated community health centers, Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, no part of any of the funds appropriated or otherwise made available by this or any other Act may be used to implement mandantory monthly reporting-retrospective budget for the food stamp program during the first three months of the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984: Provided further, That, hereafter, in order to restore and maintain in U.S. share of world markets and to restore capital of the Corporation for its operations, any restrictions or limitations on the authorities and obligations of the Commodity Credit Corporation to sell in world markets, as provided by its Charter, may be waived or suspended by the Secretary of Agriculture; and

Department of Interior and Related Agencies Appropriations Act, 1984 (H.R. 3363), notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, except section 102, such sums as may be necessary for programs, projects, or activities provided for in such Act (H.R. 3363), to the extent and in the manner provided for in the conference report and joint explanatory statement of the Committee of Conference filed in the House of Representatives, as if such Act had been enacted into law.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Does the gentleman from Massachusetts seek time on the motion?

Mr. CONTE. Yes, I do, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE) is recognized for 30 minutes.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Pennsylvania (Mr. WALKER).

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, this is the amendment to which I referred in the course of the general debate on the bill. The language that has been included under this amendment would allow a 3-month delay in the antifraud requirement that was originally put into the 1981 reconciliation bill. The requirement is supposed to go into effect tomorrow.

The antifraud amendment is called the monthly reporting retrospective budgeting. It mandates that States have to require recipients to fill out forms telling what their previous month's income was. Under current law all they have to do is provide a periodic estimate. Under that, recipients have just had to provide us with a guesstimate. What we have found in the past audits is that they can actually lie.

This provision was supposed to be effective as of October 1, 1983. The attempt was to tighten up the food stamp program.

This language was put in during the conference. It was put into a provision that was to provide a 3-month delay for Puerto Rico only; however, this additional language is going to apply to all States of the Union. It is because some States have found it impossible to comply, but I remind the House that this was first put into law in 1981, so the States have had plenty of time to prepare for putting it into effect.

□ 1650

I am going to get a vote on this particular amendment if possible, because it seems to me what the House wants to do is go on record that we are for tough antifraud provisions in the food stamp program. That is what this particular amendment would delete. I hope that the House will vote not to recede and concur with the Senate on this amendment.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Very briefly, Mr. Speaker, and Members of the House, I hope that they will not upset this apple cart and ask for a rollcall vote on this issue. This does not delete that provision. It merely postpones that provision for 3 months. I imagine nearly everyone in this House has gotten a call from their States asking for this delay. And that is the reason that is in here. We have gotten this avalanche of calls from all over the country, the South, Midwest, Northeast, to delay this for 3 months so they can put their house in order. It is only a delay. I hope at this late hour we do not get a rollcall on this.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I would only want to point out regardless of the merits as to whether or not this is an effective proposal we also wrote into that law that the Senate has the discretion to provide waivers to States if it is not cost effective. So all of the States that have been calling you could also call the Secretary of Agriculture and have a waiver if it is meritorious instead of us changing the law here, because in some cases it can save money and can cut down on fraud. That is for the Secretary to determine.

I think the real reason this is in here is a foot in the door, a foot in the door to abolish the entire section of the law that we passed in reconciliation. It is not necessary to do that. The discretion is with the Secretary. He can provide waivers. I would suggest that where and if this is cost effective and can cut down on fraud, let it work. Where it cannot, the Secretary should grant those waivers. But we cannot decide which States can or cannot here on the floor. And that is why I think maybe the gentleman from Pennsylvania has an argument we ought to listen to, especially since we did not even vote on this thing in the House.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MYERS. I thank the ranking member for yielding.

What the gentleman from Missouri has been speaking about here is absolutely true. There have been 28 States plus the District of Columbia that have already requested waivers pursuant to this, most of them an extension of time. And that is all this is doing. There is no intention by the language here to strike the intention of Congress to have this reporting and to tighten up the food stamp program, no intention by your committee to do this. But if you vote no on this particular amendment, you are not just knocking the language out that the gentleman from Pennsylvania refers to.

You are knocking all the money out for the Department of Agriculture and all its related programs. You are knocking out the Department of Interior.

You just cannot take pieces of this. We are talking about the entire amendment here. As the gentleman, our ranking member from Massachusetts said, you are upsetting the apple cart.

Now, if it is that important, your committee this morning would have objected, too. But this is only a technical disagreement, not in disagreement about what the intent of Congress is. There was no intention by your appropriation conferees this morning in trying to circumvent the law, trying to do something that the House and the Congress has not already decided. Only a delay so that States could do a better job, to do a more thorough job.

If the gentleman will continue to yield, right now, there is a pilot project being conducted in Illinois to find out just how much this is going to cost, how effective the procedure is going to be. We are all hopeful that it will be cost effective. But at this point, we do not know. But in any event, the delay may give more chance for us to have a feedback.

Again, there is no intention of circumventing the law and try not to have this reporting.

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the gentleman from Indiana for his most valuable contribution. He is absolutely right. We are not doing away with the law. This is merely a postponement, give them a little elbow room to work this out. There are 28 States who have asked for waivers on this thing.

Mr. MYERS. Some have already been granted different types of waivers. But all the States I think are having trouble with this compliance. But they are not suggesting they do not want to comply, but they have difficulty in doing the right kind of job in the limited time they have had.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Missouri.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. The gentleman makes a very good point. I do not think we are disagreeing. But I want to make sure the gentleman would vigorously support the language of the present law if it is cost effective. In other words, this 3 months is a time period in which you suggest that more information will be gained through the studies, but at the same time he understands and supports the underlying intent of the original amendment.

Mr. MYERS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CONTE. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. MEYERS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There is no intention by your committee, as I said previously, to circumvent the law or try to escape any provision of the law. I might add your Committee on Agriculture has been one of the toughest on fraud and the wrong use of food stamps. We have tried to tighten it up through the years. We have been supporting this type of legislation. I must say that we probably are not going to wait for that study to be complete in Illinois. But nevertheless by the time we act next year, we should have that experience of the pilot in Illinois to fall back on. Nevertheless the law is the law. It does not waive the law, merely delays application.

Mr. CONTE. I might assure the gentleman further that I agree with what Mr. MYERS said. And if it does prove that it is cost effective in these 3 months, I will be with you fighting to retain it.

Mr. COLEMAN of Missouri. I appreciate that.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I think this has been adequately handled by my colleague from Indiana and by the ranking Member.

Our committee and subcommittee has worked hard trying to bring some order out of chaos. We welcome the help of the legislative committee and others. Certainly this reporting requirement is in order.

When the Department, however, has already given a 30-day waiver to a number of States, we thought that a total of 90-days delay, which had been requested by the States, would come nearer to giving them the time they need to put in place the new requirements. We have a long and tedious record of trying out best to get a grasp on this. I think this reporting is absolutely essential. I think it will be better to do as we suggest, let them set it up in a proper and orderly way so it will bring in the maximum results.

Mr. McHUGH. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WHITTEN. I yield to the gentleman from New York.

Mr. McHUGH. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I hope that the Members, if it comes to a record vote, will support the committee position. As others have said, this is a 90-day delay which is to reserve to the States the option either to participate or not during these 90 days in this monthly reporting and retrospective accounting procedure.

The reason this provision is in the conference report is that at least 30 States have come to us indicating that to mandate the implementation of this procedure now would pose a major problem of State administration and would not be cost effective. It would actually cost money to do so.

With respect to the Department of Agriculture granting waivers, many of the States have asked the Department for waivers based on the same argument that I have just given you, that is, it is not cost effective to implement the procedures at this time, and therefore they should have the option of doing or not doing it. The Department has not granted waivers. They are simply not acting on these waivers which have been requested. And that is the reason that the 90-day delay in implementation is included in the conference report.

One final point, Mr. Speaker.

The authorizing subcommittee of the Agriculture Committee, which is chaired by LEON PANETTA, has been holding hearings on this issue to gather information from the States and to flesh out some of these arguments pro and con. Those hearings have not been completed. The subcommittee has not reached its final conclusion. For that reason alone, in deference to the authorizing subcommittee and Mr. PANETTA, I would hope that we would go along with this provision which effects a delay only for 90 days. Congress can make a final determination on monthly reporting and retrospective accounting at a later date.

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I hope we will support the committee in this instance.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi. (Mr. WHITTEN).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—yeas 106, nays 14.

□ 1700

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. Two hundred twenty Members are present, a quorum.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment number 7: Page 4, strike out all after line 11, over to and including line 19 on page 5, and insert:

(c) Pending enactment of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, such amounts as may be necessary for continuing activities, not otherwise specifically provided for in this joint resolution, which were conducted in fiscal year 1983, for which provision was made in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1983, but such activities shall be funded at not to exceed an annual rate for new obligational authority of $253,000,000,000, which is an increase above the current rate, and this level shall be distributed on a pro rata basis to each appropriation account and shall be available under the terms and conditions provided for in the applicable appropriation Acts for fiscal year 1983: Provided, That at such time as a Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, is reported in the House of Representatives or in the Senate, the foregoing provision shall become inapplicable and the amounts and authority provided by this joint resolution shall be those that would be granted under the Act as reported, or, when such Act has been reported in both Houses, at the lower amount and more restrictive authority of each version: Provided further, That none of the funds provided by this joint resolution shall be obligated prior to November 17, 1983, to initiate production of a major weapons system, as defined in section 139a(a) of title 10, United States Code, if funds were not obligated in fiscal year 1983 or prior years for production of such weapons system.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 7 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows: In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

(c) Pending enactment of the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1984, such amounts as may be necessary for continuing activities, not otherwise specifically provided for elsewhere in this joint resolution, which were conducted in fiscal year 1983, for which provision was made in the Department of Defense Appropriation Act, 1983, but such activities shall be funded at not to exceed an annual rate for new obligational authority of $247,000,000,000, which is an increase above the current rate, and this level shall be distributed on a pro rata basis to each appropriation account utilizing the fiscal year 1984 amended budget request as the base for such distribution and shall be available under the terms and conditions provided for in the applicable appropriation Acts for fiscal year 1983: Provided, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate multiyear procurements utilizing advance procurement funding for economic order quantity procurement unless specifically appropriated later: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated or made available pursuant to this subsection shall be available for the conversion of any full time positions in support of the Army Reserve, Air Reserve, Army National Guard, and Air National Guard by Active or Reserve Military Personnel, from civilian positions designated "military technicians" to military positions: Provided further, That no appropriation or funds made available or authority granted pursuant to this subsection shall be used to initiate or resume any project, activity, operation or organization which is defined as any project, subproject, activity, budget activity, program element, and subprogram within a program element, and for investment items is further defined as a P-1 line item in a budget activity within an appropriation account and an R-1 line item which includes a program element and subprogram element within an appropriation account, for which appropriations, funds, or other authority were not available during the fiscal year 1983: Provided further, That notwithstanding any other provision of this joint resolution, $5,000,000 is appropriated for the XXIII Olympiad as authorized by Section 304 of Public Law 98-94, and in addition the Department of Defense may provide support to the Los Angeles Olympic Organizing Committee on a reimbursable basis, with the proceeds to be credited to the current applicable appropriation accounts of the Department.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Clerk will continue to read.

The Clerk concluded the reading of the motion.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—yeas 171, nay 4.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair will count. One hundred eighty-four Members are present, not a quorum.

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my request for a roll call.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has already announced that a quorum is not present, and the roll call is automatic.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 232, nays 65, not voting 136, as follows:

[Roll No. 375]

YEAS—232

Akaka	Guarini	Oakar
Andrews (NC)	Hall (IN)	Olin
Andrews (TX)	Hall, Ralph	Ortiz
Annunzio	Hansen (ID)	Oxley
Archer	Harkin	Packard
Badham	Harrison	Patman
Barnard	Hatcher	Patterson
Barnes	Hawkins	Pease
Bateman	Hightower	Perkins
Bennett	Hiler	Porter
Bereuter	Hillis	Price
Bilirakis	Holt	Ray
Bliley	Hopkins	Ridge
Boehlert	Horton	Rinaldo
Boggs	Howard	Robinson
Bonker	Hoyer	Rodino
Borski	Hubbard	Roemer
Bosco	Hughes	Rogers
Breaux	Hunter	Rose
Brooks	Hutto	Rostenkowski
Broyhill	Hyde	Roth
Bryant	Johnson	Roukema
Burton (CA)	Jones (TN)	Rowland
Burton (IN)	Kasich	Sawyer
Byron	Kazen	Schaefer
Campbell	Kemp	Scheuer
Carney	Kennelly	Sensenbrenner
Carper	Kindness	Sharp
Carr	Lagomarsino	Shelby
Chandler	Lantos	Shumway
Chappell	Lent	Siljander
Chappie	Levitas	Sisisky
Clarke	Lewis (CA)	Skeen
Clinger	Lewis (FL)	Smith (IA)
Coats	Livingston	Smith (NE)
Coleman (MO)	Lloyd	Smith (NJ)
Coleman (TX)	Loeffler	Smith, Denny
Collins	Lott	Smith, Robert
Conte	Lowery (CA)	Snowe
Courter	Lujan	Snyder
Coyne	Mack	Solarz
Craig	MacKay	Solomon
Crane, Philip	Marlenee	Spence
D'Amours	Martin (IL)	Stenholm
Daniel	Martin (NC)	Stratton
Dannemeyer	Martin (NY)	Stump
Daub	Martinez	Sundquist
DeWine	Matsui	Swift
Dickinson	Mavroules	Synar
Dicks	Mazzoli	Tauke
Dixon	McCain	Tauzin
Dowdy	McCollum	Taylor
Dreier	McDade	Thomas (GA)
Duncan	McEwen	Torricelli
Dyson	McGrath	Udall
Early	McHugh	Valentine
Eckart	McKernan	Vander Jagt
Edwards (AL)	McKinney	Vandergriff
Edwards (CA)	McNulty	Vento
Edwards (OK)	Mica	Volkmer
Emerson	Michel	Vucanovich
English	Mikulski	Walker
Erdreich	Miller (OH)	Watkins
Evans (IA)	Mineta	Wheat
Fascell	Mitchell	Whitten
Fields	Molinari	Wilson
Fish	Mollohan	Winn
Foley	Moody	Wise
Franklin	Moore	Wolf
Frenzel	Moorhead	Wortley
Frost	Morrison (WA)	Wright
Fuqua	Murphy	Yatron
Gephardt	Myers	Young (AK)
Glickman	Natcher	Young (FL)
Gonzalez	Neal	Zablocki
Gore	Nelson	Zschau
Gradison	Nielson
Gray	O'Brien

NAYS—65

Ackerman	Jeffords	Rangel
Bates	Kaptur	Ritter
Beilenson	Kastenmeier	Russo
Berman	Kildee	Sabo
Bethune	Kogovsek	Schneider
Brown (CO)	Kostmayer	Schroeder
Conyers	Leach	Schumer
Coughlin	Lehman (FL)	Shannon
Crockett	Leland	Sikorski
Donnelly	Levin	Slattery
Dorgan	Levine	Spratt
Durbin	Lowry (WA)	Staggers
Evans (IL)	Lundine	Stark
Feighan	Markey	Torres
Garcia	McCloskey	Towns
Gejdenson	Morrison (CT)	Walgren
Goodling	Mrazek	Weiss
Green	Oberstar	Williams (MT)
Gunderson	Obey	Wirth
Hall (OH)	Ottinger	Wolpe
Hayes	Penny	Wyden
Hertel	Petri

NOT VOTING—136

Addabbo	Forsythe	Owens
Albosta	Fowler	Panetta
Alexander	Frank	Parris
Anderson	Gaydos	Pashayan
Anthony	Gekas	Paul
Applegate	Gibbons	Pepper
Aspin	Gilman	Pickle
AuCoin	Gingrich	Pritchard
Bartlett	Gramm	Pursell
Bedell	Gregg	Quillen
Bevill	Hall, Sam	Rahall
Biaggi	Hamilton	Ratchford
Boland	Hammerschmidt	Regula
Boner	Hance	Reid
Bonior	Hansen (UT)	Richardson
Boucher	Hartnett	Roberts
Boxer	Hefner	Roe
Britt	Heftel	Roybal
Broomfield	Huckaby	Rudd
Brown (CA)	Ireland	Savage
Cheney	Jacobs	Schulze
Clay	Jenkins	Seiberling
Coelho	Jones (NC)	Shaw
Conable	Jones (OK)	Shuster
Cooper	Kolter	Simon
Corcoran	Kramer	Skelton
Crane, Daniel	LaFalce	Smith (FL)
Daschle	Latta	St Germain
Davis	Leath	Stangeland
de la Garza	Lehman (CA)	Stokes
Dellums	Lipinski	Studds
Derrick	Long (LA)	Tallon
Dingell	Long (MD)	Thomas (CA)
Downey	Luken	Traxler
Dwyer	Lungren	Waxman
Dymally	Madigan	Weaver
Edgar	Marriott	Weber
Erlenborn	McCandless	Whitehurst
Fazio	McCurdy	Whitley
Ferraro	Miller (CA)	Whittaker
Fiedler	Minish	Williams (OH)
Flippo	Moakley	Wylie
Florio	Montgomery	Yates
Foglietta	Murtha	Young (MO)
Ford (MI)	Nichols
Ford (TN)	Nowak

□ 1720

Messrs. LELAND, KOSTMAYER, LEACH of Iowa, OBEY, KOGOVSEK, OTTINGER, HAYES, COUGHLIN, SCHUMER, RITTER, BERMAN, MRAZEK, ACKERMAN, LEVIN of Michigan, PETRI, and LEHMAN of Florida and Mrs. SCHNEIDER changed their votes from "yea" to "nay."

Mr. MOORE changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

□ 1730

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the next amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 9: Page 8, strike out all after line 15 over to an including line 15 on page 9.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 9 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

(g) Such amounts as may be necessary for the following projects or activities, which were provided for in H.R. 3222, the Departments of Commerce, Justice, and State, the Judiciary, and Related Agencies Appropriation Act, 1984, as reported to the House of Representatives on June 3, 1983, to the extent and in the manner provided for in such Act, and at a rate for operations, notwithstanding section 15(a) of the State Department Basic Authorities Act of 1956 and section 701 of the United States Information and Educational Exchange Act of 1948, as follows:

Department of Commerce: General Administration, "Special Foreign Currency Program", $693,000;

Economic and Statistical Analysis, "Salaries and Expenses", $39,337,000;

Economic Development Administration: "Economic Development Assistance Programs", $250,000,000; "Salaries and Expenses", $30,141,000;

International Trade Administration, "Operations and Administration", $169,893,000;

National Oceanic and Atmospheric Administration: "Operations, Research, and Facilities", $942,871,000; "Fisheries Loan Fund", $5,000,000;

Federal Communications Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $86,383,000;

Federal Trade Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $63,500,000: Provided, That these funds are subject to the limitations and provisions of sections 10(a) and 10(c) (notwithstanding section 10(e)), 11(b), 18 and 20 of the Federal Trade Commission Improvements Act of 1980 (Public Law 96-252; 94 Stat. 374), notwithstanding the previous provisions of this subsection; International Trade Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $20,737,000;

Securities and Exchange Commission, "Salaries and Expenses", $92,500,000;

Small Business Administration, "Salaries and Expenses", $236,000,000;

Department of Justice: Immigration and Naturalization Service, "Salaries and Expenses", $527,257,000;

Notwithstanding the previous provisions of this subsection, Legal Services Corporation, "Payment to the Legal Services Corporation", $275,000,000:

Provided, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be expended to provide legal assistance for or on behalf of any alien unless the alien is a resident of the United States and is—

(1) an alien lawfully admitted for permanent residence as an immigrant as defined by sections 101(a)(15) and 101(a)(20) of the

Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1101(a)(15), (20));

(2) an alien who is either married to a United States citizen or is a parent or an unmarried child under the age of twenty-one years of such a citizen and who has filed an application for adjustment of status to permanent resident under the Immigration and Nationality Act, and such application has not been rejected;

(3) an alien who is lawfully present in the United States pursuant to an admission under section 207 of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1157, relating to refugee admissions) or who has been granted asylum by the Attorney General under such Act; or

(4) an alien who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of the Attorney General's withholding of deportation pursuant to section 243(h) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1253(h)).

An alien who is lawfully present in the United States as a result of being granted conditional entry pursuant to section 203(a)(7) of the Immigration and Nationality Act (8 U.S.C. 1153(a)(7)) before April 1, 1980, because of persecution or fear of persecution on account of race, religion, or political opinion or because of being uprooted by catastrophic natural calamity shall be deemed, for purposes of section 1007(b)(11) of the Legal Services Corporation Act, to be an alien described in subparagraph (C) of such section: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by the Corporation in making grants or entering into contracts for legal assistance unless the Corporation insures that the recipient is either (a) a private attorney or attorneys (for the sole purpose of furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients) or (b) a qualified nonprofit organization chartered under the laws of one of the States for the primary purpose of furnishing legal assistance to eligible clients, the majority of the board of directors or other governing body of which organization is comprised of attorneys who are admitted to practice in one of the States and who are appointed to terms of office on such board or body by the governing bodies of State, county, or municipal bar associations the membership of which represents a majority of the attorneys practicing law in the locality in which the organization is to provide legal assistance: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be expended by the Legal Services Corporation to participate in litigation unless the Corporation or a recipient of the Corporation is a party, or a recipient is representing an eligible client in litigation in which the interpretation of this title or a regulation promulgated under this title is an issue, and shall not participate on behalf of any client other than itself: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act shall be available to any recipient to be used—

(A) to pay for any personal service, advertisement, telegram, telephone communication, letter, printed or written matter, or other device, intended or designed to influence any decision by a Federal, State, or local agency, except where legal assistance is provided by an employee of a recipient to an eligible client on a particular application, claim, or case, which directly involves the client's legal rights and responsibilities, or

(B) to influence any Member of Congress or any other Federal, State, or local elected official to favor or oppose any Acts, bills, resolutions, or similar legislation, or any referendum, initiative, constitutional amendment, or any similar procedure of the Congress, any State legislature, any local council, or any similar governing body, except that this subsection shall not preclude such funds from being used in connection with communications made in response to any Federal, State, or local official, upon the formal request of such official: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used to bring a class action suit against the Federal government or any State or local government unless (1) the project director of a recipient has expressly approved the filing of such an action in accordance with policies established by the governing body of such recipient: (2) the class relief which is the subject of such an action is sought for the primary benefit of individuals who are eligible for legal assistance; and (3) that prior to filing such an action, the recipient project director has determined that the government entity is not likely to change the policy or practice in question, that the policy or practice will continue to adversely affect eligible clients, that the recipient has given notice of its intention to seek class relief and that responsible efforts to resolve without litigation the adverse effects of the policy or practice have not been successful or would be adverse to the interest of the clients: Provided further, That none of the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be expended for any purpose prohibited or limited by or contrary to section 11 of H.R. 3480, as passed the House of Representatives on June 18, 1981: Provided further, That notwithstanding any regulation, guideline, or rule of the Corporation, the funds appropriated in this Act for the Legal Services Corporation shall be used by the Corporation in making grants or entering into contracts under section 1006(a)(1) and (3) so as to insure that funding for each such current grantee and contractor is maintained in 1984 at the annualized level at which each such grantee and contractor was funded in 1983, or in the same proportion which total appropriations to the Corporation in fiscal year 1984 bear to the total appropriations to the Corporation in fiscal year 1983, until action is taken by directors of the Corporation who have been confirmed in accordance with section 1004(a) of the Legal Services Corporation Act: Provided further, That no member of the Board of Directors of the Legal Services Corporation shall be compensated for his services to the Corporation except for the payment of an attendance fee at meetings of the Board at a rate not to exceed the highest daily rate for grade fifteen (15) of the General Schedule and necessary travel expenses to attend Board meetings in accordance with the Standard Government Travel Regulations: Provided further, That no officer or employee of the Legal Services Corporation or a recipient program shall be reimbursed for membership in a private club, or be paid severance pay in excess of what would be paid a Federal employee for comparable service;

Department of State: Administration of Foreign Affairs: "Salaries and Expenses", $1,120,000,000; "Reopening Consulates", $2,500,000; "Representation Allowances", $4,148,000; "Acquisition, Operation, and Maintenance of Buildings Abroad", $202,889,000; "Acquisition, Operation, and Maintenance of Buildings Abroad (Special Foreign Currency Program)", $10,012,000; "Payment to the American Institute in Taiwan", $9,380,000; "Payment to the Foreign Service Retirement and Disability Fund", $102,753,000;

International Organizations and Conferences: "Contributions to International Organizations", $520,515,000;

International Commissions: International Boundary and Water Commission, United States and Mexico, "Construction", $672,000; "American Sections, International Commissions", $3,426,000; International Fisheries Commissions", $8,876,000;

Other: "Asia Foundation", $9,900,000;

United States Information Agency: "Salaries and Expenses (Special Foreign Currency Program)", $10,450,000; "Center for Cultural and Technical Interchange Between East and West", $18,362,000; "Acquisition and Construction of Radio Facilities", $34,013,000.

Mr. CONTE (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the motion be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Massachusetts?

There was no objection.

The motion was agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will designate the final amendment in disagreement.

The amendment reads as follows:

Senate amendment No. 14: Page 11, strike out all after line 20 over to and including line 2 on page 12.

MOTION OFFERED BY MR. WHITTEN

Mr. WHITTEN. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. WHITTEN moves that the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate Numbered 14 and concur therein with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 109. Funds shall be available for school assistance in federally affected areas authorized by title I of the Act of September 30, 1950, and the Act of September 23, 1950, at an annual rate of $585,000,000, under the terms and conditions provided in the applicable appropriation Act for fiscal year 1983; and funds shall be available for Departmental Management, "Salaries and Expenses" under the Department of Education at the current rate of operations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. WHITTEN).

The question was taken; and on division (demanded by Mr. WALKER) there were—nays 143, yeas 5.

So the motion was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

A motion to reconsider the votes by which action was taken on the conference report and the several motions was laid on the table.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a joint resolution of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 137. Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating the period from October 2, 1983, through October 8, 1983, as "National Schoolbus Safety Week of 1983".

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 216. An act to amend title 18, United States Code, to combat, deter, and punish individuals who tamper with household products with intent to cause personal injury, death, or other harm, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with amendments in which the concurrence of the House requested, bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1556. An act to authorize the conveyance of the Liberty ship John W. Brown; and H.R. 2077. An act to amend title 5, United States Code, to extend the Federal Physicians comparability Allowance Act of 1978, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 552. An act to designate the Federal Building in Fort Myers, Fla., as the "George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and U.S. Courthouse";

S. 1424. An act to amend Public Law 92-444 to reflect the change in the name of the Pacific Tuna Development Foundation to the Pacific Fisheries Development Foundation;

S. 1499. An act to settle certain claims of the Mashantucket Pequot Indians;

S. 1530. An act to make technical amendments to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act and other Acts;

S. 1852. An act to extend the expiration date of the Defense Production Act of 1950;

S. 1837. An act to designate the Federal Building in Seattle, Wash., as the "Henry M. Jackson Federal Building"; and

S. 1894. An act to designate the Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine as the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine," and for other purposes.

ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT ACT AMENDMENTS

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 461), an act to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Office of Government Ethics for 5 years, with a Senate amendment to the House amendments thereto, and to concur in the Senate amendment to the House amendments with amendments.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the proposed amendments.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment to House amendments and the House amendments to the Senate amendment to the House amendments, as follows:

Senate amendments to House amendments: In lieu of the matter proposed to be inserted by the House amendments to the text of the bill, insert:

AMENDMENTS TO ETHICS IN GOVERNMENT ACT OF 1978

SECTION 1. Except as otherwise expressly provided in this Act, whenever an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provisions, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978.

FIVE-YEAR TERM FOR AND REMOVAL OF THE DIRECTOR

SEC. 2. Section 401(b) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Effective with respect to any individual appointed or reappointed by the President as Director on or after October 1, 1983, the term of service of the Director shall be five years. Upon removal of the Director prior to the expiration of his term, the President shall communicate in writing the reasons for such removal to the committees of the Senate and House exercising jurisdiction over this Act.

AUTHORITY TO ISSUE REGULATIONS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 402(a) is amended by striking out ", under the general supervision of the Office of Personnel Management,".

(b) Section 402(b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "and recommending to the Office of Personnel Management"; and

(B) by striking out "President or the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "President or the Director";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking out "and recommending to the Office of Personnel Management"; and

(B) by striking out "President or the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "President or the Director";

(3) in paragraph (6) striking out "Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director";

(4) in paragraph (12) by striking out "Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director"; and

(5) in paragraph (15) by striking out "and recommending for promulgation by the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "and promulgating".

(c) Section 404 is amended by striking out "Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director".

(d)(1) Any rules or regulations issued under section 402 of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978 which are in effect immediately before the effective date of the amendments made by this Act shall remain in effect according to their terms until modified, superseded, set aside, or revoked on or after such effective date.

(2) The responsibilities of the Director of the Office of Government Ethics under paragraphs (6) and (12), respectively, of section 402(b) of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978, with respect to rules and regulations issued by the Office of Personnel Management before the effective date of the amendments made by this Act shall not be affected by this Act or any of the amendments made by this Act.

SEPARATE BUDGET LINE ITEM FOR OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT ETHICS

SEC. 4. Title IV is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"SUBMISSION OF BUDGET

"SEC. 407. (a) In the budget submitted to the Congress pursuant to section 1105(a) of title 31, United States Code, the President shall include estimated expenditures and proposed appropriations the President decides are necessary to support the Office of Government Ethics in the fiscal year for which the budget is submitted and the four fiscal years after that year.

"(b) In the statement of changes submitted to Congress with respect to the budget pursuant to section 1106(b) of title 31, United States Code, the President shall specify the effect of such changes on the information submitted pursuant to subsection (a) of this section.".

REQUEST ASSISTANCE FROM INSPECTORS GENERAL

SEC. 5. Section 403 is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following:

"The authority of the Director under this section includes the authority to request assistance from the inspector general of an agency in conducting investigations pursuant to subsections (b)(3) and (b)(4) of section 402.".

RECOMMENDED REDESIGNATION OF AGENCY ETHICS OFFICIAL

SEC. 6. Section 402(b) is amended by—

(1) striking out "and" at the end of clause (14);

(2) striking out the period at the end of clause (15) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) adding at the end thereof the following:

"(16) recommending the redesignation of an agency ethics official where such official fails to properly and effectively perform his or her duties.".

OFFICE OF GOVERNMENT ETHICS REVIEW OF FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REPORTS OF HIGH LEVEL WHITE HOUSE AIDES

SEC. 7. Section 203(c) is amended by adding after "designated agency officials," the following: "employees described in section 105(a)(2) (A) (B), 106(a)(1) (A) or (B), or 107(a)(1)(A) or (B)(1)(A)(i), of title 3, United States Code.".

LIMIT ON OUTSIDE EARNED INCOME FOR HIGH LEVEL WHITE HOUSE AIDES

SEC. 8. Section 210 is amended to read as follows:

"OUTSIDE EARNED INCOME

"SEC. 210. Except where the employee's agency or department shall have more restrictive limitations on outside earned income, all employees covered by this title—

"(1) who are compensated at a pay grade in the General Schedule of grade GS-16 or above and who occupy nonjudicial full-time positions, appointments to which are required to be made by the President by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, or

"(2) employees of the White House Office who are compensated at rates equivalent to level II of the Executive Schedule under section 5313 of title 5, United States Code, may not have in any calendar year outside earned income attributable to such calendar year which is in excess of fifteen percent of their salary.".

REPORTS BY PRESIDENTIAL NOMINEES

SEC. 9. Section 201(b) is amended—

(1) by inserting "(1)" immediately after "(b)";

(2) by inserting after the first sentence the following: "Such individual shall, not later than the date of the first hearing to consider the nomination of such individual, make current the report filed pursuant to this paragraph by filing the information required by section 202(a)(1)(A) with respect to income and honoraria received as of the date which occurs five days before the date of such hearing."; and

((3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) An individual whom the President or the President-elect has publicly announced he intends to nominate to a position may file the report required by paragraph (1) at any time after that public announcement but not later than is required under the first sentence of such paragraph.".

ETHICS AGREEMENTS

SEC. 10. Title II is amended—

(1) by redesignating section 211 as section 212; and

(2) by inserting after section 210 the following new section:

"NOTICE OF ACTIONS TAKEN TO COMPLY WITH ETHICS AGREEMENTS

"SEC. 211. (a) In any case in which an individual agrees with that individual's designated agency official, the Office of Government Ethics, or a Senate confirmation committee to take any action to comply with this Act or any other law or regulation governing conflicts of interest of, or establishing standards of conduct applicable with respect to, officers or employees of the Government, that individual shall notify in writing the designated agency official, the Office of Government Ethics, or the appropriate committee of the Senate, as the case may be, of any action taken by the individual pursuant to that agreement. Such notification shall be made not later than the date specified in the agreement by which action by the individual must be taken, or not later than three months after the date of the agreement, if not date for action is so specified.

"(b) If an agreement described in subsection (a) requires that the individual recuse himself or herself from particular categories of agency or other official action, the individual shall reduce to writing those subjects regarding which the recusal agreement will apply and the process by which it will be determined whether the individual must recuse himself or herself in a specific instance. An individual shall be considered to have complied with the requirements of subsection (a) with respect to such recusal agreement if such individual files a copy of the document setting forth the information described in the preceding sentence with such individual's designated agency official, the Office of Government Ethics, or the appropriate committee of the Senate, as the case may be, within the time prescribed in the last sentence of subsection (a)."

BLIND TRUST AMENDMENTS

SEC. 11. Sections 102(e)(7), 202(f)(7), and 302(f)(7) are each amended to read as follows:

"(7) Any trust may be considered to be a qualified blind trust if—

"(A) the trust instrument is amended to comply with the requirements of paragraph (3) or, in the case of a trust instrument which does not by its terms permit amendment, the trustee, the reporting individual, and any other interested party agree in writing that the trust shall be administered in accordance with the requirements of this subsection and the trustee of such trust meets the requirements of paragraph (3)(A); except that in the case of any interested party who is a dependent child, a parent or guardian of such child may execute the agreement referred to in this subparaph;

"(B) a copy of the trust instrument (except testamentary provisions) and a copy of the agreement referred to in subparagraph (A), and a list of the assets held by the trust at the time of approval by the supervising ethics office, including the category of value of each asset as determined under subsection (d) of this section, are filed with such office and made available to the public as provided under paragraph (5)(D) of this subsection; and

"(C) the supervising ethics office determines that approval of the trust arrangement as a qualified blind trust is in the particular case appropriate to assure compliance with applicable laws and regulations.".

(b) Sections 102(e)(5)(A), 202(f)(5)(A), and 302(f)(5)(A) are each amended by adding at the end thereof the following new sentence: "This subparagraph shall not apply with respect to a trust meeting the requirements for being considered a qualified blind trust under paragraph (7) of this subsection.".

APPLICATION OF FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE REQUIREMENTS TO STAFF OF FEDERAL ADVISORY COMMITTEES

SEC. 12. Section 201 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) Any individual who performs staff functions in support of an advisory committee which is composed, in whole or in part, of special Government employees shall be subject to the provisions of this title as if that individual were such a special Government employee.

"(2) For purposes of paragraph (1)—

"(A) the term 'advisory committee' means any committee, board, commission, council, conference, panel, task force, or other similar group which is established—

"(i) by statute or reorganization plan,

"(ii) by the President, or

"(iii) by one or more agencies, in the interest of obtaining advice or recommendations for the President or one or more agencies or officers of the Federal Government; such term includes any subcommittee or other subgroup of an advisory committee, but does not include the Advisory Commission on Intergovernmental Relations and the Commission on Government Procurement;

"(B) the term 'staff functions in support of an advisory committee' means such activities as the Director of the Office of Government Ethics by regulation prescribes which are carried out with respect to those functions for which the advisory committee was established as described in subparagraph (A) of this paragraph;

"(C) the term 'special Government employee' has the meaning given that term by section 202 of title 18, United States Code; and

"(D) the term 'agency' has the meaning given that term by section 551(1) of title 5, United States Code.

"(3) The Director of the Office of Government Ethics shall prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to carry out this subsection.".

EXTENSION OF AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 13. Section 405 is amended in paragraph (2) by striking out "four" and inserting in lieu thereof "nine".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 14. The amendments made by this Act shall take effect on October 1, 1983.

House amendments to the Senate amendment to the House amendments:

Page 1, on the next to last line, strike out "Upon" and all that follows thereafter through the first period on page 2, line 3.

Page 2, strike out line 4 and all that follows thereafter through page 3, line 7, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

AUTHORITY OF DIRECTOR

SEC. 2. (a) Section 402(a) is amended by striking out "under the general supervision of" and inserting in lieu thereof "in consultation with".

(b) Section 402(b) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (1)—

(A) by striking out "and recommending to the Office of Personnel Management";

(B) by inserting "and the Office of Personnel Management" immediately after "Attorney General"; and

(C) by striking out "President of the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "President or the Director";

(2) in paragraph (2)—

(A) by striking out "and recommending to the Office of Personnel Management";

(B) by inserting "and the Office of Personnel Management" immediately after "Attorney General"; and

(C) by striking out "President or the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "President or the Director";

(3) in paragraph (6) by striking out "Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director";

(4) in paragraph (12)—

(A) by inserting "and the Office of Personnel Management" immediately after "Attorney General"; and

(B) by striking out "Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof "Director"; and

(5) in paragraph (15) by striking out "and recommending for promulgation by the Office of Personnel Management" and inserting in lieu thereof ", in consultation with the Office of Personnel Management, and promulgating".

Page 5, strike out lines 1 through 10, and redesignate sections 7 through 14 as sections 6 through 13, respectively.

Page 5, line 17, strike out "(B)(1)(A)(i)" and insert in lieu thereof "(b)(1)(A)(i)".

Page 6, line 6, insert "who are" after "(2)" and insert "and" after "Office".

Mr. MAZZOLI (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so only for the purpose of entering into a colloquy with the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. MAZZOLI) with respect to the procedure that has occurred on S. 461, a bill passed by the House recently, with amendments, the Senate having concurred in the House amendments with a further amendment.

The procedure that is sought to be performed here is to concur in the Senate amendment with a further amendment, that representing, as I understand it, the compromise that has been worked out between the chairmen of the subcommittees involved and the ranking minority Members, in which I have concurred.

I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. MAZZOLI).

Mr. MAZZOLI. I thank my friend, the gentleman from Ohio, for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the gentleman has stated the case correctly. This is a somewhat complicated parliamentary situation, but the important thing for our membership to know is that the gentleman from Ohio, the ranking minority member of the subcommittee, the full committee chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR.) and the gentleman from Kentucky, who was more or less conscripted into this at the last hour, all agree that this procedure will solve the problem and get the bill, S. 461, in a position in which it would be approved.

Mr. KINDNESS. Further reserving the right to object, Mr. Speaker, I would simply point out that the authorization for the functioning of the Office of Government Ethics expires at midnight tonight. This reauthorization for a period of 5 years, with some refinements and improvements, is necessary in order to continue the functioning of the Office of Government Ethics.

I would certainly urge that there not be objection and that the Members would concur in the action which is suggested by the motion of the gentleman from Kentucky to concur in the Senate amendment with the further amendments that have been presented.

● Mr. SAM B. HALL, JR. Mr. Speaker, S. 461 is a bill which reauthorizes and strenghthens the Office of Government Ethics. This bill also clarifies and strengthens several provisions of the Ethics in Government Act of 1978.

S. 461 was originally passed by the Senate on March 24, 1983. The House passed an amended form of the bill on September 19, 1983. On September 28, 1983, the Senate again passed S. 461, but with several additional amendments.

The amendment I have at the desk reflects a compromise reached by the committees of the House who have worked on this legislation. It resolves the few provisions that differed in the House and Senate versions of the bill.

This amendment would make only three changes in S. 461 as it originally passed the House.

First, this amendment would give the Director of the Office of Government Ethics a 5-year term of office. The purpose of this provision is to strengthen the independence of the Office and to underline its importance. The President would retain the authority to remove the Director from office during his or her term, however we would encourage the President to explain the reasons for any such removal.

Second, this amendment would provide that the Office of Government Ethics will have the authority to request the assistance of the Inspectors General in conducting investigations authorized by the Ethics in Government Act. The Inspector General currently assists the Office in these investigations. This provision merely makes it clear that this cooperation is statutorily authorized.

Third, and finally, the amendment provides that White House aides who are compensated at rates equivalent to executive level II of the Executive Schedule will be subject to the 15-percent limit on outside earned income to which other executive branch employees are subject. The original House version of S. 461 extended this coverage to 69 White House employees; this amendment applies the provision to 25 White House employees.

The three provisions of this amendment have been agreed to by the House Committees on the Judiciary and Post Office and Civil Service.

The chairman of the Senate Governmental Affairs Subcommittee which has jurisdiction of S. 461 has stated that these provisions are acceptable to him.

The administration supports this compromise.

I urge adoption of the amendment.●

● Mr. ALBOSTA. Mr. Speaker, the bill before us today represents an excellent compromise between the House and Senate versions of legislation reauthorizing the Office of Government Ethics. I want to commend the members of the various committees involved for their efforts to reach this agreement prior to the October 1 deadline.

This bill before us is nearly identical to the House bill, H.R. 2717, just passed on September 19. The only major difference deals with the Senate provision providing a 5-year term for the Director of the Office.

The compromise bill before us provides a 5-year term for the Director of OGE. Unlike the original Senate version of this bill, the Director will continue to serve at the pleasure of the President. However, it is clear that in the event the Director is asked by the President to leave his or her post prior to the completion of the 5-year term, we would expect the President to notify the interested committees of Congress as to the reasons behind that action. The President's explanation of the Director's leaving should be directed to the House Judiciary Committee, the House Post Office and Civil Service Committee and the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee.

I am also pleased that the Senate has accepted the amendments that came out of hearings before the Subcommittee on Human Resources during our consideration of this reauthorization bill. Specifically, those amendments dealing with disclosure of income after the filing of a nominee's initial disclosure form, and the reporting of divestiture and recusal agreements, and a followup procedure of reporting when those agreements have been met, will, I believe, improve the implementation of the ethics in Government Act.

I urge my colleagues to support passage of this important bill.●

Mr. KINDNESS. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the legislation just considered.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. LOTT asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute.)

MR. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I have asked for this time for the purpose of receiving a schedule for the balance of the day and next week, and I would be pleased to yield to the distinguished majority whip.

Mr. FOLEY. I thank the distinguished Republican whip for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I would say that, of course, after we conclude the final action on the continuing resolution and are informed that the Senate's action of the House will be adjourning for the week, and it will be my intention to ask at the conclusion of these remarks for unanimous consent that the Speaker pro tempore may be authorized to declare recesses today, the schedule for next week is as follows:

The House will meet at noon on Monday and take up the Consent Calendar.

There are three bills on the Suspension Calendar, H.R. 3044, Connecticut River Atlantic Salmon Compact Act;

H.R. 3245, National Summit Conference on Education; and S. 1852, Defense Production Act Extension.

There will be no recorded votes on Monday. Any recorded votes ordered will be postponed until Tuesday, October 4.

In addition, on Monday the House will consider H.R. 2379, Park Protection Act, general debate only. The rule has already been adopted.

The House will meet at noon on Tuesday, October 4 and will consider the Private Calendar.

There are no additional bills on the Suspension Calendar scheduled at this time.

There will be recorded votes on suspension bills ordered on Monday, October 3.

Tuesday is also District Day, with two bills, H.R. 3655, to raise retirement age of judges, and H.R. 3932, Technical Amendments to Home Rule Act.

The House will complete consideration of H.R. 2379, Park Protection Act.

□ 1740

On Wednesday and the balance of the week, the House will meet at 10 a.m. At 10:30 a.m. on Wednesday there will be a joint meeting of the House and the Senate for the purpose of receiving His Excellency, the President of the Federal Republic of Germany, Dr. Carstens.

Also, the House will consider on that day and during the balance of the week:

H.R. 3959, supplemental appropriations for fiscal year 1984;

H.R. 3958, water resource development appropriations for fiscal year 1984;

H.R. 3648, Amtrak Improvement Act, open rule with 1 hour of debate;

H.R. 2867, Hazardous Waste Control and Enforcement Act; and H.R. 3231, Export Administration Act, complete consideration.

At the close of the week's business, the House will adjourn for the Columbus Day district work period and will reconvene on Monday, October 17.

Of course, this announcement is made conditioned with the usual stipulation that conference reports may be brought up at any time and any further program may be announced later.

Mr. LOTT. I would like to address a few questions to the gentleman.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Massachusetts.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, I would like to address an observation to the gentleman from Washington, Mr. FOLEY.

I wonder if I could have a favor. That Connecticut River Atlantic Salmon Compact Act is my bill and I am going to be in my district and I will not be back here until late afternoon, maybe 3:30. Is there any possibility of moving that to Tuesday, or after general debate on Monday?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, under the circumstances, since the gentleman is the sponsor of the bill, I can discuss the matter with the leader on our side and with the Speaker. I am not able on my own authority to move the consideration of the bill today. I think the likelihood is that that bill would be up probably before 2 o'clock or 2:30 if the present schedule were adhered to. If the gentleman wishes the chairman of the committee to request that it be delayed, I am sure that would be accommodated.

Mr. CONTE. I will try to get in touch with him.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. (Mr. WRIGHT). The Chair might state that as an accommodation to the gentleman from Massachusetts (Mr. CONTE), I am sure the Speaker would want to schedule that particular suspension on Tuesday rather than on Monday.

Mr. CONTE. I want to thank the Speaker. I really appreciate that.

Mr. LOTT. Mr. Speaker, I see the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means here in the Chamber. I wonder if he or the majority whip could advise us of the status or what we might expect to happen with respect to the supplemental unemployment compensation bill? Will it go to conference? Are we going to concur with the Senate?

I realize that while it expires October 1, there are some funds left, but are we going to have some more action?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman would yield, I think the distinguished chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means is present.

Mr. LOTT. I would be glad to yield to the gentleman from Illinois.

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. In a few moments I am going to request a conference. We have met informally and discussed our differences. I should imagine that we will go to conference at 6:30 this evening. Whether we can resolve that this evening early enough so that Members could participate, I doubt, but certainly the conference will meet today and possibly tomorrow and try to get some result by Monday.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the chairman.

I noticed on Wednesday we are coming in at 10 a.m. and then we are having a joint session at 10:30. Does the gentleman anticipate that we would come in at 10, recess until 10:30, and then come back in, and could we get some idea as to what time we would begin official business on legislation on Wednesday?

Mr. FOLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, the ceremony will require about 1 hour. The House will come into session at 10 o'clock and recess for the purpose of receiving the President of the Federal Republic of Germany, and at the conclusion of that ceremony, about 11 o'clock or in that neighborhood the House will reconvene with the usual notification to Members through the bell system of the reconvening of the House.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman. Also, on Wednesday and the balance of the week we have the supplemental appropriations and the water resources development appropriations bill, both of which I presume would go before the Rules Committee and would be subject to a rule being granted for them to come up on Wednesday or the balance of the week.

Mr. FOLEY. Yes. I think I neglected to say that that is subject to a rule being granted.

Mr. LOTT. One final question: I did not catch whether the gentleman said we could expect to be in on Friday, or would we adjourn on Thursday night?

Mr. FOLEY. I think the assumption is that we might well be able to conclude the week's business by Thursday night and at this time we are not necessarily anticipating a Friday session.

Mr. LOTT. I thank the gentleman.

Mr. WATKINS. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LOTT. I yield to the gentleman from Oklahoma.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I was wondering if the majority whip could tell us, by postponing the suspension votes until Tuesday, the gentleman from North Carolina and I would like to ask if it would be possible to put the votes off on any suspensions until after the consideration of the other bills on Tuesday?

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, as an accommodation to Members, we will take up the recorded votes on suspensions debated on Monday at the end of legislative business otherwise scheduled.

Mr. WATKINS. I thank the gentleman very much.

AUTHORIZING THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE TO DECLARE RECESSES AT ANY TIME TODAY

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that it may be in order for the Speaker pro tempore to declare recesses at any time today subject to the call of the Chair.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY OCTOBER 3, 1983

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at noon on Monday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. FOLEY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Washington?

There was no objection.

MYASTHENIA GRAVIS AWARENESS WEEK

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 140) to provide for the designation of the week of October 2 through October 8, 1983, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 140

Whereas the incidence and prevalence of myasthenia gravis present a significant health problem in the United States;

Whereas myasthenia gravis is a severe neuromuscular disorder, characterized by weakness of the voluntary muscles of the body;

Whereas an estimated one hundred thousand to two hundred thousand diagnosed, and over one hundred thousand undiagnosed, Americans of both sexes, and all races and ages, are afflicted with the disease;

Whereas the Nation faces a continuing need to support innovative research into the causes, treatment, and cure of myasthenia gravis; and

Whereas it is appropriate to focus the Nation's attention upon the problem of myasthenia gravis: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the week of October 2 through October 8, 1983, is designated as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week" and the President of the United States is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation calling upon all government agencies and the people of the United States to observe the week with appropriate programs, ceremonies, and activities.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, as you are aware, the incidence and prevalence of myasthenia gravis presents a significant health problem in the United States. This disease causes a severe neuromuscular disorder, characterized by weakness of the voluntary muscles of the body. Designation of this week will focus attention on the need to support innovative research into the causes, treatment, and cure of myasthenia gravis.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution which authorizes and request the President to proclaim the week of October 2 through 8, 1983 as Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, today, we are considering House Joint Resolution 278, to provide for the designation of the week of October 2-8, 1983 as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week."

"MG", as myasthenia gravis is known, can strike the body at any place and at any time. MG is a neuromuscular disease that affects over 300,000 Americans of all sexes, all ages, and races. It is a disease that disrupts the synapse—that is the gap between the nerve and the muscle which conducts the electrical current from the nerve to the muscle.

This is a tough disease to diagnose because it often manifests itself as chronic fatigue. Such a misdiagnosis can allow the disease to progress until the victim is in severe danger. Until recently MG has been fatal for 85 percent of its victims. But a lot of progress has been made in the last few years as a result of an increasing awareness of the symptoms of the disease. I would like to applaud the work done by Mr. Tony Randall, who is the campaign chairman of the Myasthenia Gravis Foundation. Tony and the personnel of the foundation should receive the lion's share of the progress that awareness has made against this disease. This is the second year that I have introduced this resolution and I am delighted to have this opportunity to have a hand in this campaign.

I hope that all of you will join in to show your unanimous support for this effort against this terrible disease.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1750

NATIONAL PRODUCTIVITY IMPROVEMENT WEEK

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service be discharged from further consideration of the Senate joint resolution (S.J. Res. 142) designating the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, as "National Productivity Improvement Week," and ask for its immediate consideration in the House.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate joint resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate joint resolution, as follows:

S.J. RES. 142

Whereas the economic stability and growth of this Nation relies largely on the collective industry and endeavor of its working citizens;

Whereas the time-honored tradition of American leadership in work-related ingenuity and know-how has brought about great strides in productivity;

Whereas growth in productivity in turn improves the standard of living of United States citizens;

Whereas public awareness of the economic importance of productivity will foster a better standard of living for all citizens and reduce the level of inflation: Now, thereofre, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of providing for a better understanding of the need for productivity growth and of encouraging the development of methods to improve individual and collective productivity in the public and private sectors, the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, is designated "National Productivity Improvement Week". The President is requested to issue a proclamation calling upon the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, the economic stability and growth of this Nation relies largely on the collective industry and endeavor of its working citizens. Designation of this week will focus public awareness on the economic importance of productivity and will promote individual and collective ideas and innovations for productivity improvements.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution which authorizes and request the President to proclaim the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, as "National Productivity Improvement Week."

Mr. LEVITAS. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 199, a resolution proclaiming October 3-9 as "National Productivity Improvement Week."

First, let me commend my colleagues on the Post Office and Civil Service Committee—full committee Chairman BILL FORD, and subcommittee Chairwoman KATIE HALL—for their assistance and cooperation in the prompt consideration of this resolution.

This resolution, which was introduced by myself and my good friend, SILVIO CONTE, will better help the public understand the crucial relationship between growth, employment, and productivity, and make a step toward a stronger economy, by focusing attention on productivity.

Productivity improvement is a weapon in our economic arsenal that has been too long overlooked. It is a weapon that can be picked up and used by individual citizens, business enterprises, labor organizations, and governments—local, State, and Federal.

Productivity is a comparison—comparing the values of what is produced with what is needed to produce it. In other words, productivity is input compared with output. Productivity encompasses the contributions of all resources of production: Technology, capital, energy, and the human effort and skills needed to manage them. A nation or an industry advances by using less of these resources to turn out more products and services.

This has been true throughout American history, our ability to produce more in less time and with fewer resources has helped raise our standards of living.

This natural yielding of more benefits from improved use of resources works well when allowed to function. The problem comes when increases in productive output or quality fail to cover increases in the cost of labor or other resources used. This creates inflationary prices because when productivity falters while a producer's costs go up—the producer must charge more for its goods or services in order to stay in business.

Thus at least one major remedy for inflationary ills is to increase American productivity, which for the past entire decade has lagged sadly behind increases of other industrial nations.

There are several things we can do to improve productivity over the long run—tax incentives and fewer governmental restrictions to encourage more research, development, and capital investment and better training of workers to give some examples—but there is one thing that we can do to get the ball rolling, and that is to stress the relationship of productivity to inflation by bringing it to the attention of the American people.

National Productivity Improvement Week is one effective way to inform the public about the role of productivity in the working place, and its role in the economy as a whole. This special week is promoted by the American Institute of Industrial Engineers, whose 35,000 members are closely aligned with productivity programs in the day-to-day performance of duty. The AIIE's more than 200 senior chapters will be holding workshops and seminars throughout the country and will be contacting the media—newspapers, radio, television, and others—to help explain the importance of productivity improvement and help turn this around for America.

I urge my colleagues to support House Joint Resolution 199.

The Senate joint resolution was ordered to be read a third time, was read the third time, and passed, and a motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks on the several joint resolutions just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

HONORING CARL YASTRZEMSKI

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent for the immediate consideration of the resolution (H. Res. 326) a resolution honoring Carl Yastrzemski.

The Clerk read the title of the resolution.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. TORRES). Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I reserve the right to object just to make the point that it is a good thing that "Yaz" did not have to have the Speaker pro tempore controlling his career, because if he had, he never would have hit above .220.

Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I want to thank him, I want to thank the gentlewoman from Indiana (Mrs. HALL) and all the Members of the majority and the minority, including the gentleman from California (Mr. DANNEMEYER). I say to them, "Your are really wonderful people. We appreciate it, and we'll tell 'Yaz' about this tomorrow."

Mr. WALKER. Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

● Mr. DONNELLY. Mr. Speaker, permit me to take this opportunity to honor an individual who for the past 23 years has provided excitement to the citizens of Boston, the State of Massachusetts and sports fans throughout the country. Carl Yastrzemski's retirement from baseball brings to an end an era of Boston's sports history which will never be duplicated.

Being the man expected to fill Ted Williams' shoes would have been enough to destroy many athletes, yet through sheer determination Carl never let us down. Yaz not only played in more games than any other major leaguer, won three batting titles; seven gold gloves and appeared in 18 All Star Games, his most outstanding achievement was leading the 100-to-1 shot Red Sox to the 1967 pennant. In that memorable year Carl led the "impossible dream" team both on the field and at the plate. He won baseball's coveted Triple Crown and virtually every other award which can be presented to a professional athlete.

Carl's contribution to New England was not only on the field. He quietly participated in many charitable causes, including a major role in Boston's Jimmy Fund.

As one of two Members of Congress who reside in Boston, I am very appreciative that the House has taken time to consider this most special resolution. I believe that it is most fitting that this Chamber join the Senate in saluting this most special individual.●

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 326

Whereas Carl Yastrzemski will soon complete his twenty-third and final season with the Boston Red Sox:

Whereas Carl has played in more major league baseball games than any other player in the history of baseball;

Whereas Carl is the only American League player to collect over 3,000 base hits and 400 home runs;

Whereas Carl has won baseball's coveted triple crown, earned seven gold gloves, played in eighteen all star games, and is undoubtedly a future hall of famer;

Whereas "Yaz" will not only be remembered as one of baseball's greatest stars, but also as a man of compassion and leadership both on and off the field: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That the House of Representatives join with the citizens of Boston and sports fans throughout the United States in honoring Carl Yastrzemski for his outstanding career, his outstanding sportsmanship, and his outstanding contribution to baseball and the Nation.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mrs. HALL of Indiana. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the resolution just agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentlewoman from Indiana?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON H.R. 3929, FEDERAL SUPPLEMENTAL COMPENSATION ACT OF 1982 EXTENSION

Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3929) to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes, with Senate amendments thereto, disagree to the Senate amendments, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Illinois? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs. ROSTENKOWSKI, STARK, PEASE, and MATSUI, Mrs. KENNELLY, and Messrs. CAMPBELL, MOORE, and FRENZEL.

There was no objection.

INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT ACT OF 1980 AMENDMENTS

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the bill (H.R. 3813) to amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980, with a Senate amendment thereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

NEGOTIATING AUTHORITY INVOLVING THE INTERNATIONAL COFFEE AGREEMENT, 1983

SECTION 1. The International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980 (19 U.S.C. 1356k, et seq.) is amended—

(1) by striking out "1976" in sections 2, 3, and 5 and inserting in lieu thereof ", 1983", and

(2) by striking out "for such period prior to October 1, 1983 as the agreement remains in effect" in section 2, and inserting in lieu thereof "before October 1, 1986".

REAUTHORIZATION OF PROGRAMS FOR WORKERS AND FIRMS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 245 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2317) is amended by striking out "each of fiscal years 1982 and 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "each of the fiscal years 1982 through 1985".

(b) Section 285 of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1983" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1985".

"CONTRIBUTED IMPORTANTLY" TEST FOR GROUP ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 3. (a) Section 222 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2272) is amended—

(1) in paragraph (3), by striking out "were a substantial cause of such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and of such decline" and inserting in lieu thereof "contributed importantly to such total or partial separation, or threat thereof, and to such decline"; and

(2) by amending the last sentence to read as follows: "For purposes of paragraph (3), the term 'contributed importantly' means a cause which is important, but not necessarily more important than any other cause.".

(b) The amendments made by subsection (a) shall apply with respect to petitions for certification filed under section 221 of the Trade Act of 1974 on or after October 1, 1983.

PREFERENCE FOR FIRMS HAVING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

SEC. 4. (a) Section 255 of the Trade Act of 1974 (19 U.S.C. 2345) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"PREFERENCE FOR FIRMS HAVING EMPLOYEE STOCK OWNERSHIP PLANS

"(i)(1) When considering whether to grant a direct loan or to guarantee a loan to a corporation which is otherwise certified under section 251, the Secretary shall give preference to a corporation which agrees with respect to such loan to fulfill the following requirements—

"(A) 25 percent of the principal amount of the loan is paid by the lender to a qualified trust established under an employee stock ownership plan established and maintained by the recipient corporation, by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation, or by several corporations including the recipient corporation.

"(B) the employee stock ownership plan meets the requirements of this subsection, and

"(C) the agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust relating to the loan meets the requirements of this section.

"(2) an employee stock ownership plan does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless the governing instrument of the plan provides that—

"(A) the amount of the loan paid under paragraph (1)(A) to the qualified trust will be used to purchase qualified employer securities,

"(B) the qualified trust will repay to the lender the amount of such loan, together with the interest thereon, out of amounts contributed to the trust by the recipient corporation, and

"(C) from time to time, as the qualified trust repays such amount, the trust will allocate qualified employer securities among the individuals accounts of participants and their beneficiaries in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (4).

"(3) The agreement among the recipient corporation, the lender, and the qualified trust does not meet the requirements of this subsection unless—

"(A) it is unconditionally enforceable by any party against the others, jointly and severally,

"(B) it provides that the liability of the qualified trust to repay loan amounts paid to the qualified trust may not, at any time, exceed an amount equal to the amount of contributions required under paragraph (2)(B) which are actually received by such trust,

"(C) it provides that amounts received by the recipient corporation from the qualified trust for qualified employer securities purchased for the purpose of this subsection will be used exclusively by the recipient corporation for those purpose for which it may use that portion of the loan paid directly to it by the lender,

"(D) it provides that the recipient corporation may not reduce the amount of its equity capital during the one year period beginning on the date on which the qualified trust purchases qualified employer securities for purposes of this subsection, and

"(E) it provides that the recipient corporation will make contributions to the qualified trust of not less than such amounts as are necessary for such trust to meet its obligation to make repayments of principal and interest on the amount of the loan received by the trust without regard to whether such contributions are deductible by the corporation under section 404 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 and without regard to any other amounts the recipient corporation is obligated under law to contribute to or under the employee stock ownership plan.

"(4) At the close of each plan year, an employee stock ownership plan shall allocate to the accounts of participating employees that portion of the qualified employer securities the cost of which bears substantially the same ratio to the cost of all the qualified employer securities purchased under paragraph (2)(A) of this subsection as the amount of the loan principal and interest repaid by the qualified trust during that year bears to the total amount of the loan principal and interest payable by such trust during the term of such loan. Qualified employer securities allocated to the individual account of a participant during one plan year must bear substantially the same proportion to the amount of all such securities allocated to all participants in the plan as the amount of compensation paid to such participant bears to the total amount of compensation paid to all such participants during that year.

"(5) For purposes of this subsection, the term—

"(A) 'employee stock ownership plan' means a plan described in section 4975(e)(7) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(B) 'qualified trust' means a trust established under an employee stock ownership plan and meeting the requirements of title I of the Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 and section 401 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954,

"(C) 'Qualified employer securitles' means common stock issued by the recipient corporation or by a parent or subsidiary of such corporation with voting power and dividend rights no less favorable than the voting power and dividend rights on other common stock issued by the issuing corporation and with voting power being exercised by the participants in the employee stock ownership plan after it is allocated to their plan accounts, and

"(D) 'equity capital' means, with respect to the recipient corporation, the sum of its money and other property (in an amount equal to the adjusted basis of such property but disregarding adjustments made on account of depreciation or amorization made during the period described in paragraph (3)(D)), less the amount of its indebtedness.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. FRENZEL (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Minnesota?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I make this reservation in order to allow the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. PEASE) to explain what the committee has done, and I yield to the gentleman from Ohio for that purpose.

Mr. PEASE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, the Senate amended H.R. 3813 to reauthorize the trade adjustment assistance programs for workers and firms for a 2-year period until September 30, 1985. The Senate made no changes in the provisions of either program, except to give preference to firms which establish employee stockownership plans. On September 15, the House passed H.R. 3391, which reauthorizes the TAA programs for 2 years. That bill also made significant changes in the program for workers to expand coverage to essential parts and service suppliers and to require approval of training if certain conditions are met. However, while the Committee on Ways and Means approved these changes and others in H.R. 3391 as very worthwhile, they generated considerable controversy on the House floor as exceeding funding levels approved in the first concurrent budget resolution. OMB has made clear during Senate consideration this week that it would recommend a veto if reauthorization of the TAA programs includes expanded coverage or otherwise increases program costs significantly. Under these circumstances and because the programs expire today, I recommend the House concur in the Senate amendment to H.R. 3813 reauthorizing the TAA programs for 2 years.

The Senate amendment would also extend the President's implementing authority under the International Coffee Agreement Act for 3 years rather than the 2 years provided in the House bill. This is substantially less than the 6-year extension contained in the original Senate bill as reported by the Finance Committee. A 3-year extension would be acceptable to the committee, because it would provide for a timely review of the effects of this legislation on U.S. consumers.

Mr. FRENZEL. Mr. Speaker, further reserving the right to object, I agree with the description of the gentleman from Ohio.

The coffee agreement is the House form except that it is for 3 years, 1 year more than House and 3 years less than the Senate.

The Trade Adjustment Assistance Act extends the present law using the test that imports "contributed importantly" to unemployment. CBO says the cash will be about $95 million for fiscal year 1984 and for 1985 for the whole program, of which about $17 million will be used for adjustment to firms.

The Labor Department estimates costs of about $125 million for 1984 and 1985. Both the CBO and Labor estimates are within the congressional budget resolution figures of about $132 million.

I objected vigorously to the House-passed TAA bill which would have cost more than $500 million and would have created new entitlement programs. I must, however, support this bill because it is within the budget and because I believe the country should have some kind of TAA program in operation.

The final difference is that the Senate gave preference to firms seeking adjustment assistance which have approved employee stock ownership programs. I am a strong supporter of ESOP's, and believe this is a fine amendment.

I urge passage of H.R. 3813 as amended.

Mr. Speaker, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the initial request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

□ 1800

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may be permitted to extend their remarks and to include extraneous material on the subject of the special order speech today by the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR).

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia?

There was no objection.

REPAIR OF THE STATUE OF LIBERTY

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from South Carolina (Mr. HARTNETT) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. HARTNETT. Mr. Speaker, the Statue of Liberty, as you know, has fallen victim to the ravages of time. Extensive repair is required immediately. One man in my district is dedicated to seeing that she gets that much needed renovation. He is H. Quincy Alexander of Charleston, S.C.

Mr. Alexander is Americanism committee chairman for Charleston Elks Lodge No. 242. In that capacity and on his own initiative he has begun a drive to raise funds from Charleston Elks to help repair the Statue of Liberty. All funds collected will go to the Statue of Liberty Ellis Island fund for that purpose.

In the patriotic tradition of the Benevolent and Protective Order of the Elks, Mr. Alexander becomes a model, not only for Elks, but for all Americans. The Statue of Liberty belongs not only to the Federal Government, but to all Americans. She deserves our help.●

INTOLERABLE DELAYS IN BLACK LUNG CASES

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from West Virginia (Mr. MOLLOHAN) is recognized for 15 minutes.

Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, yesterday I introduced legislation that I believe will remedy a serious problem that has continued for too long without proper recognition. The problem is the intolerable delay in decisionmaking at the Federal Government's Benefits Review Board, which has jurisdiction over black lung appeals from the Department of Labor.

The backlog is due primarily to the fact that there are currently only the three Benefits Review Board members and they are faced with over 9,000 pending cases. Their backlog is currently estimated to be over 4 years long. Four years, Mr. Speaker, can simply be too long for miners suffering from black lung.

For one of my constituents and a good, personal friend, Leroy Tucker, 4 years for a final decision is simply an intolerable delay, particularly when added to the 9 years he has already been waiting, without collecting benefits, to have a final determination in his case. In the last appeal before the Board in this case, it took the Board 2 months simply to log in the case. Meanwhile, Leroy Tucker waits. He is 60 years old and disabled from black lung disease due to his 42 years in the mines. He places phone calls to complain. He writes letters. But most of all he waits and hopes he will live to receive the benefits he earned.

Ironically, the Benefits Review Board was established in 1972 to provide prompt judicial review of black lung cases, among others. With the passage of the Black Lung Benefits Act of 1977, there was a threefold increase in the caseload of the Board. Unfortunately, the Board's membership has never been increased to absorb the flood of appeals it must now decide.

In addition to this serious problem, the current administration made the situation even more intolerable by removing two of the three members of the Board and replacing them with two temporary members of its own.

This disruption to the routine of the Board and the clear message conveyed by such capricious removal must necessarily have a negative, if unquantified, impact. Even under the most optimistic circumstances, this readjustment period has caused and will continue to cause needless additional delay at a time when greater, not less, efficiency is required.

Unfortuantely, the current statute is silent as to tenure and terms of removal for BRB members. Thus the old permanent members could be—and were—removed for reasons unrelated to the quality of their performance on the Board. The Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia, in its decision affirming the Secretary of Labor's authority to remove Board members without cause, pointed to the present statute's silence on this point as the basis for their decision. The court also cited a landmark Supreme Court case concerning the need for agencies to be independent:

> For it is quite evident that one who holds his office only during the pleasure of another, cannot be depended upon to maintain an attitude of independence against the latter's will.

Consistent with the Supreme Court's decision in this case is the view that whether or not a worker is entitled to receive compensation for work-related disabilities should not be a political decision but a legal one based on a thorough understanding and principled interpretation of the law. Benefits Review Board members who can be removed at the whim of the Secretary of Labor cannot long maintain their independence.

Likewise, justice cannot be served while 3 BRB members carry the burden of 9,000 cases and try to control the surging 4-year backlog of cases. The failure of the administration to take any steps to reduce this pressure—they have instead increased it—leaves Congress no resource but to insist on permanent expansion of the Board and removal of members only for cause.

The bill I introduced this week, H.R. 4014, addresses these problems by increasing membership on the Board from three to five, establishing staggered terms of office of 6 years, and authorizing removal for cause only. In a body that is so clearly desgined to play a judicial role where independent decisionmaking is critical, such provisions are essential if claimants are to have their cases resolved in a neutral and timely fashion.

I hope my colleagues will join me in supporting this legislation, which can offer hope to so many of our constituents who have, until now, had to bear the brunt of this problem. No longer should claimants have to run a race with time to receive their benefits while they can still use them.

OPPOSITION OF THE UNITED STATES TO THE PARTITION OF LEBANON

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, Today I am introducing a resolution expressing the opposition of the United States to any partition of Lebanon. As the distinguished chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee, Mr. ZABLOCKI, pointed out yesterday, the parliamentary process required the House to pass the Senate version of the Lebanon powers resolution which does not include the expression of our country's opposition to the partition of Lebanon.

The House and Senate have had extensive debate over the participation of our Armed Forces in the multinational peacekeeping force in Lebanon. It is important that the commitment of our forces to Lebanon include a statement of purpose for their deployment as well as consideration of the duration of their deployment. By expressing the opposition of the United States to the partition of Lebanon, we send a firm signal to all the parties involved in the current conflict—to the internal factions and to the occupiers—that we believe that Lebanon can survive with its national sovereignty and territorial integrity intact and that that principle is a guiding one for our diplomatic efforts in the region.

I thank the chairman of the Foreign Affairs Committee and the distinguished chairman of the Europe and Middle East Subcommittee, Mr. HAMILTON for joining me in cosponsoring this joint resolution which expresses our country's continued commitment to Lebanon's existence as a sovereign and independent country. With that commitment, it is my firm belief that the leaders of Lebanon will find the wisdom and courage to reconcile their differences and return their country to prosperity and happiness.●

● Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, one of the regrettable results of the parliamentary situation yesterday which required the House to pass the Senate version of the Lebanon war powers legislation was the loss of important language in the House resolution offered by the gentlelady from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR). I deeply regret that unfortunate and unavoidable loss.

I am, therefore, particularly pleased to join now tith the gentlelady as a cosponsor in a separate joint resolution which embodies the language in question. With this effort comes my pledge to have the Committee on Foreign Affairs act promptly on the measure and bring it to the floor in the very near future.

The language in question warrants this added effort on all our parts because it expresses a fundamental imperative of U.S. policy toward Lebanon. It was especially appropriate that it be included in the Lebanon war powers legislation on which we took final action yesterday. As you know, that legislation authorized the continued presence of U.S. Armed Forces in Lebanon for 18 months or less.

An abiding principle behind this U.S. support for Lebanon is that the United States is working to advance and protect the independence and territorial integrity of Lebanon.

In effect, therefore, what the Congress was saying yesterday in approving the Lebanon bill was the very language of Ms. OAKAR'S amendment, that is, that the Congress is opposed to any partition of Lebanon and the annexation of its territory by any foreign country.

That message—that absolute and fundamental fact—is central to why the U.S. marines are in Lebanon in the first place. We are working to save Lebanon for Lebanon, not for any other country.

I am, therefore, especially pleased to support the gentlelady from Ohio in this effort at the same time that I once again express my regret that the Senate's action regrettably failed to do so.●

FARMERS HOME ADMINISTRATION

(Mr. JONES of Tennessee asked and was given permission to extend his remarks at this point in the RECORD and to include extraneous matter.)

● Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, recently I saw an advertisement in a Michigan farm magazine which perfectly illustrates how much the ideals of our National Government have changed under the current administration.

This ad was placed by the Farmers Home Administration, an agency with a long tradition of helping farmers, of helping bring the Nation out of the Great Depression, of being a lender of last resort when farmers are in a desperate situation.

Now that progressive and idealistic tradition has been turned on its head, Farmers Home Administration is placing ads in order to hire auctioneers to sell farms on which the agency has foreclosed. This action illustrates outrageous insensitivity to what is happening in the farm economy. My colleagues in the House know farmers are broke because the administration refused to deal with growing surpluses in 1981 and 1982, they are broke because we have had sky-high interest rates and rockbottom commodity prices. They are broke because our Government has frightened and challenged our international trading partners. Farmers are broke because a record number of unemployed Americans cannot afford to adequately feed their families.

For 3 years I have tried to get Farmers Home Administration to focus on saving farmers, not foreclosing on them. Obviously my efforts have not succeeded.

Instead of saving farmers, the administration hires more auctioneers. I truly wonder how we have come to this state of affairs.

[From the Michigan Farmers, Sept. 3, 1983]

SOLICITATION FOR AUCTIONEER SERVICES

The Farmers Home Administration, an agency of the U.S. Department of Agriculture, wishes to obtain proposals to sell Government acquired farm properties from auctioneers who have a real estate broker's license. These properties are located throughout the State of Michigan and vary in size and type of enterprise.

The Farmers Home Administration will select an undetermined number of auctioneers from those who submit proposals to assist in selling these properties. Those auctioneers interested in applying should contact the following office for selection criteria and necesary solicitation forms. Solicitation packages may be obtained thru September 16, 1983.

Farmers Home Administration, Calvin C. Lutz, State Director, Room 209, 1405 South Harrison Road, East Lansing, Michigan 48823.●

CONFERENCE REPORT ON H.R. 3363, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR AND RELATED AGENCIES, 1984

Mr. YATES submitted the following conference report and statement on the bill (H.R. 3363) making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes:

CONFERENCE REPORT (H. REPT. No. 98-399)

The Committee of Conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3363) "making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes," having met, after full and free conference, have agreed to recommend and do recommend to their respective Houses as follows:

That the Senate recede from its amendments numbered 2, 4, 11, 15, 18, 20, 24, 27, 28, 29, 32, 34, 37, 38, 39, 40, 56, 77, 82, 89, 92, 93, 100, 105, 117, 118, 119, 129, 144, 149, 150, 151, 153, 161, and 164.

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 7, 8, 9, 14, 21, 22, 23, 35, 50, 53, 65, 66, 67, 68, 69, 70, 71, 72, 73, 81, 87, 88, 108, 113, 123, 124, 128, 133, 136, 137, 138, 154, and 155, and agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 5:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 5, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert $1,391,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 13:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 13, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: of which $2,000,000, to carry out the purposes of 16 U.S.C. 1535, shall remain available until expended; and; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 19:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 19, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert $42,297,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 31:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 31, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to appropriate: $10,377,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 33:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 33, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

Restore the matter striken by said amendment, amended to appropriate: $6,700,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 42:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 42, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment insert: Provided, That for payment of obligations incurred for engineering services, roadway and bridge access, and pilot tunnel bore work for the Cumberland Gap Tunnel, as authorized by section 160 of Public Law 93-87, $14,000,000 to be derived from the Highway Trust Fund and to remain available until expended to liquidate contract authority provided under section 104(a)(8) of Public Law 95-599; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 46:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 46, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $367,080,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 47:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 47, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $49,113,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 48:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 48, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $163,561,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 49:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 49, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $34,869,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 52:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 52, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $81,265,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 54:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 54, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $65,450,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 55:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 55, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $229,228,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 75:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 75, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $79,262,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 76:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 76, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $77,192,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 84:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 84, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $19,463,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 98:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 98, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $108,555,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 99:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 99, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $60,579,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 101:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 101, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $888,506,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 102:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 102, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $251,724,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 103:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 103, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $23,867,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 104:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 104, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $227,857,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 111:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 111, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $259,214,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 114:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 114, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $431,131,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 121:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 121, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $55,870,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 122:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 122, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $770,408,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 125:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 125, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $53,595,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 131:

That the House recede from the disagreement to the amendments of the Senate numbered 131, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $15,000,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 132:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 132, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $68,780,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 134:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 134, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $155,263,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 140:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 140, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $34,389,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 142:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 142, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $132,000,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 143:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 143, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $118,900,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 145:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 145, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $30,000,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 146:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 146, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $21,000,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 147:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 147, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $110,500,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 148:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 148, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $97,750,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 152:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 152, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $20,150,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

Amendment numbered 156:

That the House recede from its disagreement to the amendment of the Senate numbered 156, and agree to the same with an amendment, as follows:

In lieu of the sum proposed by said amendment insert: $1,853,000; and the Senate agree to the same.

The committee of conference report in disagreement amendments numbered 1, 10, 12, 16, 17, 25, 26, 30, 36, 41, 43, 44, 45, 51, 57, 58, 59, 60, 61, 62, 63, 64, 74, 78, 79, 80, 83, 85, 86, 90, 91, 94, 95, 96, 97, 106, 107, 109, 110, 112, 115, 116, 120, 126, 127, 130, 135, 139, 141, 157, 158, 159, 160, 162, and 163.

SIDNEY R. YATES,
JOHN P. MURTHA,
NORMAN D. DICKS,
WILLIAM R. RATCHFORD,
EDWARD P. BOLAND,
LES AUCOIN,
JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
JOSEPH M. MCDADE,
RALPH REGULA,
SILVIO O. CONTE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES A. MCCLURE,
TED STEVENS,
PAUL LAXALT,
JAKE GARN,
THAD COCHRAN,
MARK ANDREWS,
WARREN RUDMAN,
LOWELL P. WEICKER, JR.,
MARK O. HATFIELD,
ROBERT C. BYRD,
J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
WALTER D. HUDDLESTON,
PATRICK LEAHY,
DENNIS DECONCINI,
QUENTIN BURDICK,
DALE BUMPERS,
JOHN C. STENNIS,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

JOINT EXPLANATORY STATEMENT OF THE COMMITTEE OF CONFERENCE

The managers on the part of the House and the Senate at the conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3363), making appropriations for the Department of the Interior and Related Agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes, submit the following joint statement to the House and the Senate in explanation of the effect of the action agreed upon by the managers and recommended in the accompanying conference report:

TITLE I—DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

BUREAU OF LAND MANAGEMENT

Amendment No. 1: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $359,601,000 for management of lands and resources instead of $348,852,000 as proposed by the House and $359,014,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the amount provided by the House includes increases of $350,000 for environmental impact statement work associated with the preference right coal leasing program;

$2,500,000 for energy realty for energy-related rights of way activities; $1,786,000 for the non-energy realty program for the land sales program (for a total asset management program level of $3,000,000); $1,000,000 for the non-energy rights of way program, of which up to $500,000 may be used to facilitate the Alaska lands conveyance program; $3,700,000 for the grazing management program; $2,000,000 for the wildlife habitat program, for the development and implementation of additional habitat management plans; $2,000,000 for cadastral survey operations needed to support increased levels of title issue resolution in Alaska; $813,000 for additional transportation maintenance activities; and decreases of $300,000 related to asset management in cultural resources management, maintaining the fiscal year 1984 base level, and $3,100,000 for planning, maintaining the fiscal year 1984 base level.

The managers agree that $110,000 is available to increase the rate of wild horse and burro removals to the Court approved agreement level in the Challis unit. The managers also agree that the BLM and FS outfitters and guides fee schedule has been adequately researched and publicly debated and do not object to its implementation. BLM is to submit, as a special exhibit with its FY 1985 Budget, a complete life cycle cost analysis for its ALMRS project, including a list of planned site and project guidelines that ensure that planned hardware acquisitions over the life of the project will be compatible and the benefit-cost decision material.

The managers agree that no funds are provided for the asset management program in cultural resources management or planning. The managers have no objection to the slow and careful development of the permanent oil shale leasing program, with all appropriate environmental safeguards. The increase in coal leasing is not to be used for processing additional preference rights leases, but only for environmental impact statement work. Of the total increase of $3,000,000 in wildlife habitat, $1,000,000 is to accelerate existing recovery plans for threatened and endangered species, as well as to prepare and implement additional plans. Existing plans include black-footed ferret; Mohave chub; bald eagle; peregrine falcon; and Eureka Dune botanical. The seven new species would be San Joaquin kit fox; desert slender salamander; Owens River pupfish; Lahontan cutthroat trout; Coachella Valley fringe-toed lizard; bald eagle (Pacific); and McDonald's rockcress.

The managers encourage BLM to continue land exchanges with the Forest Service and others, and disposals under the Recreation and Public Purposes Act.

Amendment No. 2: Appropriates $1,200,000 for construction and access as proposed by the House instead of $2,200,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 3: Appropriates $105,000,000 for payments in lieu of taxes as proposed by the Senate instead of $96,320,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 4: Deletes language proposed by the Senate pertaining to the utilization of PILT funds to correct underpayments in the previous fiscal year. This language was included in Public Law 98-63 as permanent legislation.

Amendment No. 5: Appropriates $1,391,000 for land acquisition instead of $2,189,000 as proposed by the House and $765,000 as proposed by the Senate. The following table shows the allocation agreed to by the managers:

Acquisitions Management	$130,000
Acquisitions:
Perins Peak Wildlife Habitat Area, Colo	426,000
Pacific Crest Trail, Calif	100,000
Suan River Trail, Calif	100,000
Rogue National Wild and Scenic River, Oreg	335,000
Rio Grande Wild and Scenic River, N. Mex	300,000
Total	1,391,000

The managers agree with regard to the Oregon and California grant lands account, that all costs related to management of the O&C lands should be funded from this account, whether expended by BLM or the Forest Service. BLM and the Forest Service should work together to ensure total scope, costs and justifications are reflected in this account's justification for fiscal year 1985.

Amendment No. 6: Provides no less than $10,000,000 for range improvements as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 7: Deletes language proposed by the House that would have prevented the expenditure of range improvement funds until a new grazing fee schedule had been implemented.

Amendment No. 8: Deletes language proposed by the House that would have changed cost recovery procedures and the use of funds collected under section 305(a) of FLPMA for rehabilitation of damaged lands.

Amendment No. 9: Deletes language proposed by the House regarding livestock reduction procedures.

Amendment No. 10: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which prohibits processing or issuing prospecting permits on certain lands in the Mark Twain National Forest.

UNITED STATES FISH AND WILDLIFE SERVICE

Amendment No. 11: Restores House language earmarking not less than $3,400,000 for high priority projects within the scope of the approved budget to be carried out by the Youth Conservation Corps.

Amendment No. 12: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $270,803,000 for Resource Managment instead of $269,530,000 as proposed by the House and $262,338,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the amount proposed by the House includes: increases of $1,460,000 for additional support (salaries, per diem, travel, etc.) and equipment for law enforcement personnel; $297,000 for continued operation of animal damage research facilities by the Service for one additional year at Bend, Oregon and Olympia, Washington; $400,000 for continued operation of the Jones Hole NFH; $2,700,000 for Lower Snake River fishery mitigation programs for a total of $3,729,000; $100,000 for fishery law enforcement to aid in deterring illegal commercial operations involving Atlantic and Pacific anadromous fish; $100,000 for Southern Selkirk Mountain Caribou recovery, and $250,000 to initiate a comprehensive study by the Service to develop solutions to the significant nutrient and sediment problems affecting Bear Lake while ensureing that Wildlife values at the Bear Lake NWR are not adversely affected; decreases of $175,000 for taste aversion research; transfer of the Alchesay NFH and the Quinault NFH to the Bureau of Indian Affairs ($359,000); $1,000,000 for fishery research; $500,000 for endangered species listing activity; and $2,000,000 for endangered species grants to States.

The managers agree that a minimum of 202 law enforcement specialists along with an adequate trainee program are funded. Funds have been provided to continue operation of several hatcheries for one more year as follows:

Frankfort, Ky., Berkshire, Mass., Neoshoi, Mo., Senecaville, Ohio, Tishomingo, Okla., Inks Dam, Tex., Uvalde, Tex., and Cheraw, S.C.

These hatcheries are expected to produce the 1983-1984 crop and to cease operation by September 30, 1984. If additional funds are needed for closure, they will be provided in a supplemental appropriation bill. The State of North Carolina has agreed to assume operation of Pisgah NFH. Funds included ($237,000) will be adequate to maintain one service employee to remain for fiscal year 1984 to assist in the transition and for rehabilitation of the facility. Funds for Lamar ($220,000) are for operation and transition to a research station for investigation of Federal problems. The $1,000,000 for fishery research includes $450,000 for the Wellsboro development center. The Service is expected to use the total increase to accelerated research on fish tumor activity. The total account includes funds to continue several programs for which neither dollars for full-time equivalents were budgeted. The Secretary is expected to get additional FTE ceiling to staff these programs in addition to the original 1984 ceilings so other ongoing programs will not be affected. The Service is requested to provide a study on the role the Service can fill in making students at all levels aware of the values provided by wildlife conservation. This study should be done in consultation with national and local educational organizations so that the interpretative programs of the Service can be used to supplement classroom activity. The managers have no objection to the proposed user fees for port inspection activities as long as the funds are used to supplement available funds rather than as a substitute for appropriations.

Amendment No. 13: Earmarks $2,000,000 for Endangered Species grants instead of $4,000,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 14: Earmarks $3,729,000 for Lower Snake River fish mitigations instead of $1,029,000 provided by the House.

Amendment No. 15: Deletes Senate earmark of $292,000 for the Warm Springs National Fish Hatchery. Funds are provided in the Fish and Wildlife Service to continue operation of this hatchery.

Amendment No. 16: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows: ; $4,000,000, to remain available until expended, for expenses necessary to carry out the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act (16 U.S.C. 757a-757f), of which $500,000 shall be made available to the State of Idaho without regard to the limitation as stated in 16 U.S.C. 757e and without regard to the Federal cost sharing provisions in 16 U.S.C. 757a-757f: Provided, That 16 U.S.C. 757e is amended by adding the following new sentence: "The State of Idaho shall be eligible on an equal standing with other states for Federal funding for purposes authorized by sections 757a to 757f of this title.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree to provide $4,000,000 for the Anadromous Fish Conservation Act, including $500,000 for the State of Idaho for anadromous fish programs and have further agreed to waive the Federal cost-sharing requirements for Idaho for this year. The managers have also agreed to amend 16 U.S.C. 757e to permit Idaho to compete on equal standing with other states in future years.

Amendment No. 17: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the number stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: and an additional $23,301,000

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This appropriates $23,301,000 for construction instead of $21,816,000 for construction and anadromous fish as proposed by the House and $19,785,000 for construction as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase over the amount proposed by the House includes a decrease of $750,000 of the amount provided by the House to begin reducing the maintenance and rehabilitation needs at hatcheries proposed for closure in fiscal years 1983 and 1984 but which were left open, and a decrease of $3,500,000 for anadromous fish grants, and increases of $200,000 for equipment at Reelfoot NWR; $1,500,000 for residential housing at Galena, Alaska; $2,925,000 for a headquarters complex at Bethel, Alaska; $1,010,000 for residential housing at Tok, Alaska; and $100,000 to determine the most effective means of providing a vessel to meet the needs of the Alaska Maritime NWR.

Amendment No. 18: Appropriates $7,000,000 for the Migratory Bird Conservation Account as proposed by the House instead of $2,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 19: Appropriates $42,297,000 for land acquisition instead of $42,316,000 as proposed by the House and $30,100,000 as proposed by the Senate. The following table shows the allocation agreed to by the managers:

Acquisitions Management..	$1,500,000
Acquisitions:
Bon Secour NWR, Alaska	2,500,000
California Condor, California	5,000,000
Crocodile Lake NWR, Florida	5,000,000
Lower Suwanee NWR, Florida	2,000,000
Bogue Chitto NWR, Louisiana, Mississippi	1,000,000
Kirtlands Warbler Habitat, Michigan	1,000,000
Mississippi Sandhill Crane, Mississippi	2,000,000
Leetown, West Virginia	350,000
Harbor Island, Michigan.	197,000
Key Deer, Florida	2,000,000
Minnesota Valley NWR, Minnesota	1,000,000
Sandy Point (Leatherback Turtle), Virgin Islands	2,500,000
Kofa NWR, Arizona	350,000
Kealia Pond, Hawaii	4,500,000
Masked Bobwhite, Arizona	5,000,000
Great Dismal Swamp, N.C. and Virginia	2,500,000
Bear Valley NWR, Oregon	400,000
Rio Grande NWR, Texas	1,500,000
Protection Island NWR, Washington	2,000,000
Total	$42,297,000

The managers urge the Forest Service, the Fish and Wildlife Service, the Nature Conservancy and the State of Georgia to investigate the possibility of developing a cooperative agreement for management of lands at Banks Lake, Georgia as a wildlife refuge. The managers are concerned that the 3,559 acre parcel held by the Nature Conservancy at Banks Lake, Georgia is not of sufficient size to be managed as a National Wildlife refuge. The managers understand that the Forest Service has land adjacent to Banks Lake that could be added to the land currently owned by the Nature Conservancy and more properly managed as a viable refuge. The managers will reconsider acquisition at the next available opportunity.

Amendment No. 20: Deletes language proposed by the Senate which would have earmarked $1,500,000 for land acquisition in the Rio Grande Valley NWR, Texas. These funds are included within the overall funds provided.

Amendment Nos. 21, 22, 23: Authority is provided for the acquisition of 41 additional vehicles resulting in the total for the United States Fish and Wildlife Service proposed by the Senate instead of that proposed by the House, to be used only for replacement vehicles solely for police-type operations.

NATIONAL PARK SERVICE

Amendment No. 24: Restores House language earmarking not less than $3,300,000 for high priority projects within the scope of the approved budget for the National Park Service to be carried out by the Youth Conservation Corps.

Amendment No. 25: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: $601,095,000 without regard to the Act of August 24, 1912, as amended (16 U.S.C. 451)

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This appropriates $601,095,000 for Operation of the National Park system instead of $602,065,000 as proposed by the House and $608,302,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net reduction below the amount proposed by the House includes decreases of: $586,000 for technical maintenance assistance, $1,377,000 for the service-wide maintenance program, $25,000 for an ecological information base at Delaware Water Gap NRA, $40,000 for the Milford bicycle trail study and plans, and increases of: $323,000 for Jean Lafitte NHP, $500,000 for concessions management, $100,000 to be available to the Martin Luther King, Jr. Center for Nonviolent Social Change, Inc. when a cooperative agreement with the Center is entered into, and $135,000 for the assistant director for Legislative and Congressional Affairs.

The managers agree that no funds are available for operation of a visitor center located in the Great Hall of the Department of Commerce Building in the District of Columbia. The additional funds for concessions management will support 15 additional FTE's to monitor concessions operation in the field. The amount provided to the Service includes $100,000 for additional exhibits at Martin Luther King, Jr. NHS, and $85,000 to assist the town of Harpers Ferry, W. Va. for police force use. The managers agree that when the South Shore RR cars are restored and in use no operations and maintenance funds will be provided by the Service. The managers agree that $500,000 in management plans are available to study and identify claims, problems, and values of mineral interests in units of the Park Service where mining is not specifically authorized by law.

The conference agreement includes $100,000 for the National Park Service to assist Massachusetts and Rhode Island in the development of an implementation strategy for the future conservation, management, and use of the Blackstone River corridor and to study the corridor to determine if its historical significance is such that it should be included in the National Park System. A portion of the assistance should focus on, but not be limited to, the following tasks: (1) an interpretive management plan, (2) preservation guidelines, and (3) canal restoration assistance. The managers expect the North Atlantic Regional Office to conduct this effort with the assistance of the Denver Service Center and the Mid-Atlantic Regional Office.

The managers do not agree with the proposal of the Service to close visitor transportation systems in 16 park areas. The Service has already transferred operation of the system in Yosemite without prior notification to the Congress that the interest expressed in the fiscal year 1983 bill was being ignored. The managers agree that reprogramming proposals to close or transfer control on a case-by-case basis will be considered. Even greater consideration must be given by the Service to recognize the special security and geographical circumstances that exist at LBJ NHP. The Service is expected to maintain the fiscal year 1982 cyclic maintenance funding level at the Natchez Trace Parkway in fiscal year 1984. The managers were distrubed to read that the Service planned to proceed with a Mall structure proposed in 1966 without examining whether circumstances had altered since then. Until the Service answers the following questions, the Service is to permit no land disturbing activities in connection with that project. The questions are:

First. What is the current level of demand and the current supply of food services and comfort facilities on the Mall, and including adjacent facilities such as the Pavilion in the Old Post Office Building, compared to the 1966 levels?

Second. What will be the nature of the concession's arrangement between GSI and the Park Service?

Third. What are the potential other uses for this space and how do those potential uses compare to the current need for food and comfort facilities on the Mall? and Fourth. What is the overall need to update the 1966 master plan governing Mall development?

The managers agree that no funds are available for the coordinator of management plans and studies under ANILCA.

Amendment No. 26: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides $85,000 for the Harper's Ferry, West Virginia police force.

Amendment No. 27: Deletes language proposed by the Senate earmarking funds for the National Symphony Orchestra.

Amendment No. 28: Deletes language proposed by the Senate earmarking funds for the Washington Opera Society.

Amendment No. 29: Deletes language proposed by the Senate earmarking funds for the Mary McLeod Bethune National Historic Site.

The managers agree that this work will be accomplished within available funds.

Amendment No. 30: Reported in technical diagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides $100,000 for a study to determine the suitability of a site in East St. Louis, Illinois, for a museum of America culture and anthropology.

Amendment No. 31: Appropriates $10,377,000 for National Recreation and Preservation instead of $11,325,000 as proposed by the House and $8,978,000 as proposed by the Senate in the Operation of the National Park System account.

The change to the amount included by the House is as follows: decreases of $750,000 for recreation programs and $333,000 for grant administration and an increase of $135,000 for the International Council of Monument and Sites rather than from within available funds.

The amount provided for technical help for river conservation is for consultation, technical assistance, training, demonstration projects, and program development.

Amendment No. 32: Deletes Senate language providing for the merger of unexpended balances of funds appropriated under the National Recreation and Preservation with the "Operation of the National Park System" appropriation.

URBAN PARKS

Amendment No. 33: Appropriates $6,700,000 for the Urban Park and Recreation Fund instead of $10,000,000 as proposed by the House. The amount provided is for the priority list of projects identified from the response to the Jobs Bill. Within this amount, there is $150,000 for the Fleetwood/Gourdaine Community Center Phase II rehabilitation project and $209,000 for the reconstruction of facilities at Crosier Field.

Amendment No. 34: Appropriates $26,500,000 for Historic Preservation as proposed by the House instead of $26,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers have agreed to an increase in the amount of funds to be provided to the National Trust for Historic Preservation for the critical issues funds. The managers understand that by agreeing to this increase of $500,000, the National Trust will administer a critical issues fund program of $1,000,000 during the period of availability of the funds. Further, the managers understand that these funds will be further matched when distributed by the Trust.

The managers agree that better information concerning the administration of the historic preservation program and its impact on the country, states and local communities would assist Congressional decisions as to program emphasis and the level of federal financial investment. Accordingly, the managers expect the Secretary of the Interior, and the Director of the National Park Service, to work with the state historic preservation officers and others to initiate a coordinated information collection system to include appropriate measures of the level of program activity, administrative support, the uses to which federal matching assistance is put, and the level of state and local financial support. The managers desire to receive all information available on the social and economic impacts of preservation matching grants-in-aid and tax incentive projects, and, in particular, detailed information on the use and impact of the preservation development grants appropriated in the supplemental jobs appropriations act of 1983.

Amendment No. 35: Appropriates $5,800,000 to the visitors facilities fund, as proposed by the Senate.

The managers reaffirm the Senate report language adding this account as proposed in the budget amendment outlining discrete projects on which to spend concession receipts to repair and rehabilitate visitor facilities through the National Park Foundation.

The managers agree that these funds are subject to the normal reprogramming guidelines.

Amendment No. 36: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $44,037,000 for construction instead of $42,637,000 as proposed by the House and $28,555,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the House level consists of increases of $950,000 for planning for the FDR Memorial; $250,000 for planning of the NPS conservation labs at Harpers Ferry, W.VA.; $1,000,000 for a Corps of Engineers study of river bank problems at Natchez, Miss.; $50,000 for the Ninety-Six NHS; $2,100,000 for the Kenai Fjords NP bridge; $2,700,000 for the Voyageurs NP visitor center; $1,000,000 for the C&O Canal-Harpers Ferry road repair; $1,000,000 for the Harpers Ferry NHP-Pedestrian access to C&O Canal; $1,046,000 for the Jean Lafitte NHP facility construction; $1,500,000 for the Glen-Canyon NRA-Halls Crossing, Bull Frog Ferry; $2,500,000 for the Gateway NRA Sandy Hook Feeder beach and dunes only; $200,000 for the New River Gorge facilities; and decreases of $2,804,000 for Grate Kills Seawall, Phase I and $5,862,000 for Great Kills Seawall, Phase II; $930,000 for asbestos removal at Golden Gate NRA; $3,000,000 for the Gulf Islands NS-Naval Live Oaks Visitor facility; and $300,000 for the Martin Luther King, Jr. NHS.

The managers direct the Service to investigate the benefits of providing a new access point off the Natchez Trace Parkway to the Bay Springs County Road east of the Tennessee-Tombigbee Waterway and south of State Highway No. 4 in Tishomingo County, Miss. As part of the study a determination of consistency with Park Service policy and a summary of local governmental positions should be included.

The managers agree that the Service should make funds available to stabilize and correct health and safety problems at Kettle Falls Hotel in Voyageurs NP.

Funds, authorized to be appropriated from the Highway Trust Fund for the Cumberland Gap tunnel project, will finance engineering, roadway and bridge access, and pilot tunnel boring. The tunnel will permit relocation of Route 25E from the heart of Cumberland Gap to a mountain ridge tunnel south of the national park. This will eliminate through traffic from the historic gap and divert it to a safer route.

The managers have agreed to reevaluate the need for construction/rehabilitation funding for the Martin Luther King, Jr. NHS as soon as an adequate base of actual cost data is available for review.

Amendment No. 37: Restores language specifying that not less than $936,000 shall be available to carry out the provisions of Sections 303 and 304 of Public Law 95-290 as proposed by the House instead of deleting this language as proposed by the Senate. This provides additional loan and grant authority to the Lowell Historic Commission.

Amendment No. 38: Restores language specifying that not less then $1,076,000 shall be available for the Paul H. Douglas Environmental Center at Indiana Dunes Lakeshore as proposed by the House instead of deleting language as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment Nos. 39 & 40: Restore language specifying that not less than $300,000 shall be available for removal of the sewage treatment plant located in the Cuyahoga Valley National Recreation Area which shall be a result of the Secretary of the Interior (acting through the National Park Service) entering into a cooperative agreement with Summit County for the undertaking of such a project.

The managers agree that the Federal share of the total project expenses shall not exceed 40 per centum.

Amendment No. 41: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: , of which not to exceed $1,500,000 for engineering and construction of the Halls Crossing-Bullfrog Ferry access roads and ramps in Glen Canyon National Recreation Area, such funds to be transferred to the State of Utah for accomplishment of these activities in accordance with provisions of a cooperative agreement between the National Park Service and the State of Utah

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to proceed with the construction of access roads and ramps in the Glen Canyon NRA and have agreed to provide funds for that project to the State of Utah, subject to a cooperative agreement between the Service and the State.

Amendment No. 42: Provides $14,000,000 for liquidation of contract authority to be derived from the Highway Trust Fund for engineering services, roadway and bridge access, and pilot tunnel bore work for the Cumberland Gap Tunnel instead of providing no funding as proposed by the House and $19,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 43: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following: : Provided further, That up to $1,000,000 of the funds provided under this head, to be derived from the Historic Preservation Fund, established by the Historic Preservation Act of 1966 (80 Stat. 915), as amended (16 U.S.C. 470), shall be available until expended for the preparation of a feasibility report recommending measures necessary to provide protection from the severe sloughing of bluffs in Natchez, Mississippi, between the north limits of the National Cemetery and the United States Highway 84 bridge, where potential bluff sloughing is found imminent and historic properties, roads, streets, utilities and other improvements are threatened, such funds to be transferred to the Secretary of the Army for utilization by the United States Army Corps of Engineers.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have provided that $1,000,000 of the total funding provided in the National Park Service construction appropriation account is to be derived from the Historic Preservation Fund and that it be provided to the Corps of Engineers for a study of bank erosion that is threatening historic districts in Natchez, Mississippi. The managers have provided these funds in addition to other funds provided under the Historic Preservation account.

Amendment No. 44: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $148,150,000 for land acquisition instead of $161,471,000 as proposed by the House and $149,450,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on he part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The allowance provides funds for the following:

Acquisition Management	7,800,000
Appalachian Trail	8,500,000
Big Cypress NP	2,000,000
Buffalo NR	1,000,000
Chaco Culture NP	500,000
Chattahoochee River NRA	1,000,000
Coronado NM	1,000,000
Cuyahoga River NRA	2,500,000
Franklin Delano Roosevelt NHS	400,000

Golden Gate NRA (Zinardi Property)	2,200,000
Indiana Dunes NL	1,500,000
Jean Lafitte NHP	3,000,000
Lower St. Croix WSR	1,500,000
Manassas NBP	3,000,000
Monocacy NBP	3,000,000
New River Gorge	1,000,000
Obed WSR	1,000,000
Olympia NP	2,000,000
Point Reyes NS	1,000,000
San Antonio Missions NHS	1,000,000
Santa Monica Mountains NRA	15,000,000
Upper Delaware NSR	600,000
Upper St. Croix WSR	500,000
Voyageurs NP	4,000,000
Woman's Rights NHP	500,000
Deficiencies	1,500,000
Total	67,000,000

No funds have been provided at this time for acquisition at Valley Forge NHP, Pa, on the basis that there is currently available over $2,000,000 in unobligated funds.

The managers have agreed that the properties in the Saratoga NHP, N.Y. threatened by development are to be acquired by a reprogramming proposal, and that the Department should not await the completion of the land protection plan if that further threatens those properties.

The managers have provided $15,000,000 for the Santa Monica Mountains NRA, California. The managers have agreed that the funds have been provided for the acquisition of parcels that (1) are threatened, (2) are located for the most part within Significant Ecological Areas, and (3) are within local jurisdictions that have concretely demonstrated their commitment toward protecting the Santa Monica Mountains NRA. The following areas are included in the allowance: Upper Zuma Canyon, Lower Zuma Canyon, Quaker Corporation Property, Trancas Canyon, Mansdorf Property, Deer Canyon, Oren Realty.

Amendment No. 45: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that the National Park Service may use helicopters and motorized equipment at Death Valley National Monument for removal of feral burros and horses.

GEOLOGICAL SURVEY

Amendment No. 46: Appropriates $367,080,000 for surveys, investigations, and research, Geological Survey instead of $374,951,000 as proposed by the House and $356,074,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase of $11,006,000 over the amount proposed by the Senate is composed of increases of $2,000,000 for digital mapping; $1,500,000 for synthetic aperture radar; $3,000,000 for earthquake hazard reduction; $240,000 for geomagnetism; $492,000 for climate change; $1,000,000 for the geothermal investigations program under energy geologic surveys; $1,000,000 for the core program of hydrological research, $1,000,000 for water resource assessment, $1,500,000 for ground water contamination studies, and $900,000 for the water resource scientific information center, all under Federal water resources investigations; $500,000 for data collection, analysis and appraisal; and $1,000,000 for water use and reuse study and analysis, both under the Federal-State water resource cooperative program.

Decreases from the amounts proposed by the Senate include $3,000,000 for map revision and orthophotoquads, $75,000 for general administration costs associated with the special assistant to the director of the U.S. Geological Survey for Congressional and Legislative Affairs, and $51,000 for administrative costs associated with program changes.

The managers are aware of what may be a severe disparity in what are considered acceptable administrative or "overhead" costs for each of the Survey's programs and the amount of overhead that is, in fact, being charged to the program. Accordingly, the Survey is expected to report to the House and Senate Committees on Appropriations by January 1, 1984, on the method by which overhead costs are charged to each program and the precise dollar amount of such overhead associated with each program, activity or subactivity performed by the Survey.

For synthetic aperture radar, the managers expect the Department to take the necessary steps to both promote and market the real and synthetic aperture radar data which has been developed by the Survey so as to recover as much of the costs of this program as possible.

Amendment No. 47: Earmarks $48,113,000 for Federal-State water resource investigations instead of $49,613,000 as proposed by the House and $47,613,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The increase over the amount proposed by the Senate is composed of increases of $500,000 for data collection, analysis and appraisal and $1,000,000 for water use and reuse study and analysis.

MINERALS MANAGEMENT SERVICE

Amendment No. 48: Appropriates $163,561,000 for leasing and royalty management instead of $155,103,000 as proposed by the House and $163,803,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase of $8,458,000 above the amount proposed by the House represents a budget amendment formally submitted to Congress on September 15, 1983 for the royalty management and systems development and maintenance activities.

Amendment No. 49: Earmarks $34,869,000 for royalty management activities instead of $26,411,000 as proposed by the House and $35,111,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers have increased royalty management and systems development and maintenance activities by $8,458,000 over the amount proposed by the House; including an additional $3,144,000 for onshore royalty management (royalty collection), $300,000 for offshore royalty management (royalty compliance), and $5,014,000 for systems development and maintenance.

Amendment No. 50: Transfers no funds to the general fund of the Treasury as proposed by the Senate instead of $126,550,000 as proposed by the House.

The managers agree that no funds shall be deducted from Federal onshore mineral leasing receipts prior to their division and distribution pursuant to 30 U.S.C. 191, to offset the costs associated with the Minerals Management Service's royalty management program or with the Bureau of Land Management's payment-in-lieu-of-tax program.

BUREAU OF MINES

Amendment No. 51: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $136,425,000 for mines and minerals under the Bureau of Mines instead of $127,865,000 as proposed by the House and $129,925,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net changes from the amounts proposed by the House include increases of $1,360,000 for phases two and three of a controlled burnout demonstration project, $9,350,000 for minerals institutes, and $50,000 for general administration (Congressional Affairs); and decreases of $1,700,000 for respirable dust research under health and safety technology and $1,500,000 for mining technology. Within the $9,350,000 for minerals institutes, $4,650,000 is to be distributed equally among the 31 minerals institutes throughout the nation, $1,500,000 is for respirable dust research to be conducted at the generic research center at West Virginia University and Pennsylvania State University, and $3,200,000 is to be distributed equally to the remaining four generic research centers for new and ongoing research efforts.

Amendment No. 52: Earmarks $81,265,000 to remain available until expended instead of $84,605,000 as proposed by the House and $73,765,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 53: Derives $2,564,000 from the amount appropriated in Public Law 97-257 to carry out the purposes of section 2(b) of Public Law 96-543 to offset fiscal year 1984 Bureau of Mines costs as proposed by the Senate instead of $5,064,000 as proposed by the House.

OFFICE OF SURFACE MINING RECLAMATION AND ENFORCEMENT

Amendment No. 54: Appropriates $65,450,000 for regulation and technology instead of $65,900,000 as proposed by the House and $65,050,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net change from the amount proposed by the House includes an increase of $50,000 for Congressional Affairs and a reduction of $500,000 for technical support. The managers expect OSM to pursue the notice of violations identified in Judge Gash's order within available funds. The managers also agree that OSM should discontinue the policy of reducing the Federal program grant by an amount equal to the civil penalty fines collected by a state.

Amendment No. 55: Appropriates $229,228,000 for the abandoned mine reclamation fund instead of $251,028,000 as proposed by the House and $218,779,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net change from the amount proposed by the Senate includes increases of $250,000 for reclamation fund management, $2,000,000 for emergency projects, $7,500,000 for Rural Abandoned Mine projects, and $700,000 for Federal projects. There is a decrease of $1,000 in the amount provided for standard level user charges.

The $700,000 increase for Federal projects is to complete the Hyde Park Subsidence Control project in the City of Scranton. The managers expect the Office of Surface Mining to complete the Keystone Park Program within available funds. The managers further expect the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania to complete the Hampten-Stauffer Park project with funds from the state's future share of AML funds.

The RAMP amount is provided to restore this program to the way it had been administered prior to fiscal year 1983 as authorized in section 406 of Public Law 95-87.

The managers are aware of an OSM proposal for a 10 year allocation of the Secretary's share of the abandoned mine reclamation fund. The managers agree that it is premature at this time to make this allocation based on the current National Abandoned Land inventory. Not only the Department's Inspector General but also the states have identified significant problems with the inventory which may distort the final allocation. Accordingly, no 10 year allocation should be made until the inventory has been updated and more accurately reflects the extent of each state's abandoned mine land problems. OSM should work actively with the states to update the inventory.

Amendment No. 56: Deletes Senate earmark of $1,000,000 of the funds made available to the State of Montana for state reclamation grants. The managers agree that within available funds $1,000,000 of the Montana funds under section 402(g)(2) of Public Law 95-87 shall be used for reclamation of the Colorado Tailings site in Montana. Federal involvement in this project shall not be construed to relieve Anaconda of responsibility.

BUREAU OF INDIAN AFFAIRS

Amendment No. 57: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following: in field offices, $822,302,000 of which not to exceed $54,135,000 for higher education scholarships and assistance to public schools under the Act of April 16, 1934 (48 Stat. 596), as amended (25 U.S.C. 452 et seq.), shall remain available for obligation until September 30, 1985, and the funds made available to tribes and tribal organizations through contracts authorized by the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act of 1975 (88 Stat. 2203; 25 U.S.C. 450 et seq.) shall remain available until September 30, 1985: Provided, That this carryover authority does not extend to programs directly operated by the Bureau of Indian Affairs; and includes expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of section 19(a) of Public Law 93-531 (25 U.S.C. 640(d)-18(a)), $3,951,000, to remain available until expended: Provided further, That none of these funds shall be expended as matching funds for programs funded under section 103(a)(1)(B)(iii) of the Vocational Education Act of 1963, as amended (20 U.S.C. 2303(a)(1)(B)(iii)): Provided further, That in addition, moneys received by grant to the Bureau of Indian Affairs from other Federal agencies to carry out various programs for elementary and secondary education, handicapped programs, bilingual education, and other specific programs shall be deposited into this account and remain available as otherwise provided by law

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the amount proposed by the Senate consists of the following: increases of $500,000 for school board training, $400,000 for special higher education grants, $240,000 for Southwestern Indian Polytechnic Institute; $266,000 for Oglala Sioux continuing education, $1,000,000 for Indian Child Welfare Act grants, $500,000 for water resources, $1,523,000 for wildlife and parks, $525,000 for minerals and mining, $1,375,000 for irrigation and power, $1,500,000 for litigation support and unresolved Indian rights issues, $450,000 for program management, and $521,000 for facilities management; and decreases of $610,000 for education MIS, $400,000 for Navajo Community College, $1,500,000 for small tribes initiative, $450,000 for attorneys' fees for non-Indians, $188,000 for Oglala Sioux real estate and financial trust services, and $3,160,000 for management and administation.

The managers agree that the $500,000 provided for school board training should be used for centralized or regionalized training, and should not be allocated on the basis of a set amount per school board. The Indian Child Welfare Act grant funds should not be allocated on a formula basis, but based on the merit and need of the proposals. The managers agree that this is an important program, and direct the Bureau to ensure the needs of all Indian children needing this type of assistance are met.

While no additional funds have been provided for the Solo Parent program, the managers agree that the child care equipment remaining at the Intermountain Boarding School should be immediately transferred to the Sherman and Flandreau Boarding Schools, and additional equipment procured if required. The total increase provided for fisheries of $2,500,000 includes $100,000 for the Lander, Wyoming fishery assistance station. The balance should be used to meet high priority needs among the programs named in both the House and Senate reports. The increase is offset by a reduction of $554,000 reflecting the agreement of the managers that the Warm Springs and Makah hatcheries should continue to be funded by the Fish and Wildlife Service. The $525,000 net increase in minerals and mining consists of an increase of $600,000 for subsurface resource assessments for the Choctaw, Penobscot, Passamaquoddy, and Osage tribes; and a decrease of $75,000 to correct the Oglala Sioux adjustment.

The managers agree that assessments for Category I irrigation projects should reflect the full capacity to pay and direct the Bureau to make such rate adjustments. The managers agree with the direction in the House report regarding the need for more detailed and complete justifications for the irrigation O&M account in the future.

The managers agree that total increases of $1,000,000 for litigation support and $1,000,000 for unresolved Indian rights issues are provided, with $500,000 of the costs to come from rights protection Central Office funds.

The managers agree that no funds are provided for the lease or purchase of additional ADP equipment; or the acquisition or development of additional hardware or software systems, including education MIS. In addition, leases for all unused ADP equipment should be cancelled, and the equipment returned to the supplier. Of the $8,243,000 identified in the House Report to be used to offset the general overhead reduction, up to $3,000,000 may be used by existing ADP systems which are currently being used to support essential program administration functions. During the first quarter of fiscal year 1984, the Bureau should develop and submit to the Appropriations Committees a budget for these funds, showing amount, source, and use of all such funds. If any additional funds are required for this purpose, the Bureau should submit a reprogramming, detailing the amount required, and for what purposes. The balance of the $8,243,000 should be used as directed by the House, to offset the general overhead reduction. The $1,364,000 that was to be used for procuring field equipment should be used to carry out the purposes of the programs where budgeted. The Bureau should also prepare and submit to the House and Senate Appropriations Committees and the House Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs a plan incorporating the directives contained in House Report 98-253, including a timeframe for implementation, how the directives will be accomplished, and estimated costs.

The increase of $450,000 in program management is to restore facilities management FTE's to 88.

The managers agree funds are provided to allow operation of 20 Alaska day schools in fiscal year 1984. The existing prekindergarten projects may be funded from Johnson-O'Malley funds. The Bureau should cooperate with the Department of Education in conducting its evaluation of the Indian contract schools.

Within the funds provided for forestry, the Bureau is instructed to continue funding the Quinault Indian Tribe's Special Foresty Management and Restoration program at $475,000.

Of the total amount provided for minerals and mining, the managers understand that $471,000 for Phase III mineral assessment projects will be made available to the Colville Tribe in Washington.

Within the request for management and administration is $412,000 and nine FTE for the Congressional and Legislative Affairs Office.

Amendment No. 58: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that the cost of providing lunches for non-needy students in public schools shall be paid only from Johnson-O'Malley funds allocated for such schools.

Amendment No. 59: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that $200,000 shall be transferred to the city of Brigham City, Utah.

Amendment No. 60: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides for investment of operation and maintenance collections from Indian irrigation projects.

Amendment No. 61: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which inserts language regarding architectural and engineering services by contract.

Amendment No. 62: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which deletes House language regarding architectural and engineering services by contract, and inserts language providing for the construction, repair, and improvement of Indian housing.

Amendment No. 63: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $78,920,000 for construction instead of $56,320,000 as proposed by the House and $75,425,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The net increase above the amount proposed by the Senate consists of an increase of $4,000,000 for facilities improvement and repair; and a decrease of $505,000 for hatcheries improvements.

The managers agree that the Bureau shall provide $400,000 for planning and design, from unexpended balances available in this account.

Although no funds have been provided for hatcheries improvements, the managers agree that attention should be paid to the condition of Indian fish hatcheries, whether owned by tribes or Fish and Wildlife Service.

The managers have agreed to the transfer of the housing program from the Operation to the Construction account. The Bureau should adhere to the distribution based on the tribal priority-setting process in fiscal year 1984. Beginning in fiscal year 1985, the Bureau should develop a program which is more cost-effective and better meets identified housing needs. The criteria for such a program might include establishing priorities for tribes which have not received funding in prior fiscal years; where appropriate, a determination of the administrative, management, and accounting capabilities of the tribe to implement a housing program; the percentage of housing units of the tribe in substandard condition; and the housing needs of the tribe as shown in the biennial housing inventory of the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

The Bureau should immediately begin the process of consultation and planning for the closure of the Magdalena and Phoenix boarding schools, upon completion of the Alamo Navajo and Hopi schools.

Amendment No. 64: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which appropriates $900,000 for the Eastern Indian land claims fund.

Amendment No. 65: Inserts the word "and" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 66: Deletes language citing the Act of May 27, 1930, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 67: Adds citation to the Indian Financing Act of 1974, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 68: Adds citation to the Indian Financing Act of 1974, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 69: Adds citation referring to the Indian loan guarantee and insurance fund, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 70: Adds legislative citation, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 71: Adds the words "et seq." as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 72: Adds legislative citation, as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 73: Adds the words "et seq." as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 74: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which prohibits the expenditure of funds for academic and residential programs at the Intermountain Boarding School.

The Bureau should ensure that all appropriate actions are taken regarding the placement of Intermountain students, faculty and staff.

Territorial and International Affairs

Amendment No. 75: Appropriates $79,262,000 for administration of territories instead of $75,262,000 as proposed by the House and $86,564,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The decrease from the amount proposed by the Senate consists of reductions of $2,000,000 for repair and rehabilitation of the Guam Memorial Hospital, $2,502,000 for an American Samoa operations inflation grant, $500,000 for the American Samoa economic development fund, $2,000,000 for the repair of water distribution systems on the Virgin Islands, and $300,000 for technical assistance.

The managers agree that the Department should use up to $200,000 of funds appropriated for technical assistance to allow a demonstration of the third-party leasing concept discussed in House Report 97-942. Review of this concept has indicated it may be a very cost-effective and timely way to meet the power and water needs of the Territories and the Trust Territory.

Amendment No. 76: Provides that $77,192,000 remain available until expended instead of $73,192,000 as proposed by the House and $84,494,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The decrease from the amount proposed by the Senate consists of decreases of $2,000,000 for repair and rehabilitation of the Guam Memorial Hospital, $2,502,000 for the American Samoa inflation grant, $500,000 for American Samoa's economic development fund, $2,000,000 for repair of the Virgin Islands water distribution system, and $300,000 for technical assistance.

Amendment No. 77: Provides $11,350,000 for construction grants to Guam as proposed by the House instead of $13,350,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The decrease from the amount proposed by the Senate is $2,000,000 for repair and renovation of the Guam Memorial Hospital.

Amendment No. 78: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $112,109,000 for the Trust Territory of the Pacific Islands instead of $104,973,000 as proposed by the House and $111,767,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The increase from the amount proposed by the House consists of increases of $2,000,000 for enhanced operations and maintenance; $800,000, $235,000 and $353,000 for inflation costs for the Federated States of Micronesia, the Marshall Islands and the Republic of Palau, respectively; $1,500,000 for airfield construction on Kosrae; $1,000,000 for new generating equipment on Ponape; $968,000 for electric generation facilities on Truk; $3,700,000 for water system construction on Palau; and $4,500,000 for power generation facilities on Palau.

Decreases from the House proposal include $1,520,000 for unspecified capital improvements on Palau, $2,400,000 for construction of four air terminals throughout the Trust Territory, and $4,000,000 for the four atoll health care program.

The managers note that despite the reduction of $2,400,000 for fiscal year 1984 for the four air terminals, there nevertheless remains strong support for construction of these necessary facilities in the future. The managers further note that funding was deleted for the four atoll health care program only because the managers believe this program is the responsibility of the Department of Energy and should thus be funded from monies appropriated for nuclear research and development within that Department. The managers expect the Secretary of the Interior to work with the Secretary of Energy to develop and implement this program as quickly as possible.

Amendment No. 79: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment providing $78,521,000 for Trust Territory operations instead of $79,133,000 as proposed by the House and $80,249,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 80: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment providing $33,588,000 for Trust Territory construction grants instead of $25,840,000 as proposed by the House and $31,518,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 81: Deletes House language regarding the four atoll health care program.

Amendment No. 82: Provides that the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory must approve a cholera eradication expenditure plan as proposed by the House.

The managers agree that the proximity of the High Commissioner of the Trust Territory to Truk makes it logical and, in fact, necessary that the High Commissioner play an integral role in the approval of an expenditure plan for cholera eradication efforts on Truk prior to the release of funds for such activities.

DEPARTMENTAL OFFICES

Amendment No. 83: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $44,068,000 for the Office of the Secretary instead of $41,,882,000 as proposed by the House and $43,806,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to an increase above the amount proposed by the Senate consisting of increases of $200,000 for environmental project review and $605,000 for the Office of Policy Analysis; and decreases of $75,000 for public affairs, $100,000 for program direction and coordination, $77,000 for the Office of Administration Services, $149,000 for information resource management, and $142,000 for central services.

For the Office of Policy Analysis, the managers have provided $750,000 for policy analysis relating to water issues which affect action, taken or planned to be taken by the Department of the Interior, and $100,000 to restore funds that were used in 1983 to absorb a portion of the pay supplemental. The managers have provided no additional funds to provide a base adjustment factor above 8 percent.

Amendment No. 84: Appropriates $19,463,000 for the Office of the Solicitor instead of $19,263,000 as proposed by the House and $19,663,000 as proposed by the Senate. The increase above the amount provided by the House consists of $150,000 for legal services and $50,000 for general administration.

The managers agree that the Solicitor shall refrain from billing other bureaus for legal services.

Amendment No. 85: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $16,814,000 for Office of the Inspector General instead of $17,100,000 as proposed by the House and $16,899,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The change from the amount proposed by the House is an increase of $286,000 for standard level user charges and a decrease of $85,000 in administrative expenses.

Amendment No. 86: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

Office of Water Policy

For grants to State water resource research institutes as described in title I (except section 105), Public Law 95-467, $6,350,000, hereby transferred to "Surveys, Investigations, and Research", Geological Survey.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This appropriates $6,350,000 for the Office of Water Policy instead of $7,882,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers have agreed to transfer $6,350,000 from the Office of Water Policy to surveys, investigations, and research, Geological Survey for grants to State water resource research institutes as described in title I (except section 105) of Public Law 95-467. The managers believe that the expertise of the Geological Survey in a variety of water research areas makes that agency the best qualified to administer and, where appropriate, to provide scientific support for this cooperative resource research institute program. The Department is expected to administer the program in a manner consistent with its present administration.

The managers believe that the recently created Office of Water Policy, which serves as a secretarial policy office and functions as a focal point for Interior related water issues, proceeding from the premise that the States have primary rights in water allocation, planning and coordination, is unnecessary as a separate office in light of the operations of the Secretary's Office of Policy Analysis, which is responsible for all other policy issues. The managers expect that such policy development will continue in the already-established Office of Policy Analysis and have provided an additional $750,000 for this purpose.

Amendment No. 87: Appropriates $800,000 for construction management as proposed by the Senate instead of $1,275,000 as proposed by the House.

GENERAL PROVISIONS, DEPARTMENT OF THE INTERIOR

Amendment No. 88: Provides an updated United States Code citation as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 89: Provides that no funds may be expended for OCS lease activities in the Central and Northern California planning area north of a line between the row of blocks numbered N816 and N817 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 90: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken by said amendment, insert the following:

Sec. 108. No funds provided in this title may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the preparation for, or conduct of, pre-leasing and leasing activities (including but not limited to: calls for information, tract selection, notices of sale, receipt of bids and award of leases) of lands within:

(a) An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331(a)), located in the Atlantic Ocean, bounded by the following line: from the intersection of the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea and the 71 degree west longitude line south along that longitude line to its intersection with the line which passes between blocks 598 and 642 on Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; then along that line in an easterly direction to its intersection with the line between blocks 600 and 601 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then in a northerly direction along that line to the intersection with the 60 meter isobath between blocks 204 and 205 of protraction diagram NK 19-11; then along the 60 meter isobath, starting in a roughly southeasterly direction; then turning roughly northeast, north, and west until such isobath intersects with the northern boundary of block 974 of protraction diagram NK 19-6; then along the line that lies between blocks 930 and 974 of protraction diagram NK 19-6 in a westerly direction to the first point of intersection with the seaward limit of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts territorial sea; then southwesterly along the seaward limit of the territorial sea to the point of beginning at the intersection of the seaward limit of the territorial sea and the 71 degrees west longitude line.

(b) The following blocks are excluded from the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-10, blocks numbered 474 through 478, 516 through 524, 560 through 568, and 604 through 612; in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 969 through 971; in protraction diagram NK 19-5, blocks numbered 1005 through 1008; and in protraction diagram NK 19-8, blocks numbered 37 through 40, 80 through 84, 124 through 127, and 168 through 169.

(c) The following blocks are included in the described area: In protraction diagram NK 19-11, blocks numbered 633 through 644, 677 through 686, 721 through 724, 765 through 767, 809 through 810, and 853; in protraction diagram NK 19-9, blocks numbered 106, 150, 194, 238, 239, and 283; and in protraction diagram NK 19-6, blocks numbered 854, 899, 929, 943, 944, and 987.

(d) Blocks in and at the head of submarine canyons: An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (45 U.S.C. 1331(a)), located in the Atlantic Ocean off the coastline of the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, lying at the head of, or within the submarine canyons known as Atlantis Canyon, Veatch Canyon, Hydrographer Canyon, Welker Canyon, Oceanographer Canyon, Gilbert Canyon, Lydonia Canyon, Alvin Canyon, Powell Canyon, Munson Canyon, and Corsair Canyon, and consisting of the following blocks, respectively:

(1) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NJ 19-1; blocks 36, 37, 38, 42-44, 80-82, 86-88, 124, 125, 130-132, 168, 169, 174-176, 212, 213.

(2) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NJ 19-2; blocks, 8, 9, 17-19, 51-52, 53, 54, 61-63, 95-98, 139, 140.

(3) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-10; blocks 916, 917, 921, 922, 960, 961, 965, 966, 1003-1005, 1009-1011.

(4) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-11; blocks 521, 522, 565, 566, 609, 610, 653-655, 697-700, 734, 735, 741-744, 769, 778-781, 785-788, 813, 814, 822-826, 829-831, 857, 858, 866-869, 873-875, 901, 902, 910-913, 917, 945-947, 955, 956, 979, 980, 989-991, 999.

(5) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-12; blocks 155, 156, 198, 199, 280-282, 324-326, 369-371, 401, 413-416, 442-446, 450, 451, 489-490, 494, 495, 530, 531, 533-540, 574, 575, 577-583, 618, 619, 621-623, 626, 627, 662, 663, 665-667, 671, 672, 706, 707, 710, 711, 750, 751, 754, 755, 794, 795, 798, 799.

(6) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 19-9; blocks 559-561, 603-607, 647-651, 693-695, 737-739.

(7) On Outer Continental Shelf protraction diagram NK 20-7; blocks 706, 750, 662, 618, 574.

(e) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the lease of that portion of any block described in subsection (d) above which lies outside the geographical boundaries of the submarine canyons and submarine canyon heads described in subection (d) above: Provided, That for purposes of this subsection, the geographical boundaries of the submarine canyons and submarine canyon heads shall be those recognized by the National Oceanographic and Atmospheric Adminstration, Department of Commerce on the date of enactment of this Act.

(f) Nothing in this section shall prohibit the Secretary of the Interior from granting contracts for scientific study, the results of which could be used in making future leasing decisions in the planning area and in preparing environmental impact studies as required by the National Environmental Policy Act.

(g) References made to blocks, protraction diagrams and isobaths are to such blocks, protracting diagrams, and isobaths as they appear on the map entitled Outer Continental Shelf of the North Atlantic from 39° to 45° North Latitude, (Map No. MMS-10), prepared by the United States Department of the Interior, Minerals Management Service, Atlantic OCS Region.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have agreed to impose a one year moratorium on oil and gas leasing within portions of OCS lease sale 82. Specifically, the managers have agreed to prohibit leasing in specific blocks which are contained in the areas generally known as the "buffer zone" within 50 miles of the Massachusetts coastline, the 60 meter isobath, the Great South Channel, and the traffic separation and precautionary areas. The managers have also included a one-year leasing prohibition on submarine canyons and submarine canyon heads located within the area known as the shelf break zone so as to ensure that no leasing will take place in these environmentally sensitive areas. The managers believe that this action will permit continued oil and gas leasing in the North Atlantic while at the same time provide time for interested states and inviduals and the Department of the Interior to resolve concerns associated with this sale.

Amendment No. 91: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

SEC. 109. No funds provided in this title may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the leasing of the following blocks located in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico Outer Continental Shelf:

(a) Blocks in an area commonly known as the seagrass beds included in Official Protraction Diagram NH 16-9, Apalachicola: 35, 36, 79-81, 122-125, 165,169, 209-213; Official Protraction Diagram NH 17-7, Gainesville: 1, 2, 45-47, 89-93, 133-138, 177-183, 225-227, 270-272, 315-317, 360-362, 404-406, 449-450, 493-495, 539, 583-585, 628-630, 672-675, 716-719, 760-764, 804-808, 850-853, 894-897, 938-941, 984-987; and Official Protraction Diagram 17-10, Tarpon Springs: 17-23, 61-67, 106-111, 150-155, 194-199, 239-244, 283-288, 328-332, 372-377, 416-421, 460-464, 505-508, 549-552, 593-596, 637-640, and 682;

(b) Blocks in an area commonly known as the Florida Middle Ground included in Official Protraction Diagram NH 16-12, Florida Middle Ground: 251, 295, 339-340, 342, 383-386, 427-430, 471-474, 515-518, and 560-561;

(c) Blocks in an area within the 20-meter isobath south of 26° N. latitude included in Official Protraction Diagram NG 17-7, Pulley Ridge: 37-43, 82-87, 126-131, 171-175, 215-219, 259-263, 303-307, 347-351, 392-395, 436-439, 480-483, 524-527, 568-571, 612-615, 656-659, 700-703, 744-747, 788-791, 833-835, 877-879, 921-923, 965-976, 1009-1011; and

(d) For those tracts offered for lease in Sale #79 which are located south of 26° N. latitude, the following lease stipulations shall apply:

(1) Nor exploratory drilling activities will be approved by the Department of the Interior until the Department of the Interior has accumulated 3 years worth of physical oceanographic and biological resource data; and

(2) Lessees will be required to perform biological surveys prior to approval and initiation of exploration or drilling operations and to work in cooperation with the Department of the Interior on the monitoring of any subsequent drilling activities.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The amendment prohibits leasing during fiscal year 1984 in the "seagrass bed" area, the "Florida Middle Ground" area and a portion of the area south of 26° N. latitude in the Eastern Gulf of Mexico.

Amendment No. 92: Restores House language deleted by the Senate prohibiting the renaming of Mr. McKinley.

Amendment No. 93: Restores section number 111 designated by the House instead of section number 107 designated by the Senate.

Amendment No. 94: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

SEC. 112. None of the funds in this Act shall be expended for the sale or lease of coal on public lands, except for emergency leasing as defined in 43 CFR 3425.1-4, lease modifications as defined in 43 CFR 3432, and lease exchanges as defined in 43 CFR 3435 or as specified in Public Law 96-401 until the Commission on Fair Market Value Policy for Federal Coal Leasing has submitted its report to the Congress and ninety days have subsequently elapsed.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Provisions in the bill restricting coal lease sales in FY 1984 have been rewritten in order to avoid confusion over the responsibilities of the Commission on Fair Market Value Policy for Federal Coal Leasing. The language adopted by the Senate directed a commission to review the Department's coal leasing and valuation procedures to ensure both receipt of fair market value and the development of coal leases in an environmentally compatible manner. The managers do not expect the Commission on Fair Market Value Policy for Federal Coal Leasing to study the environmental issues associated with the leasing program. Instead, the managers will direct the Office of Technology Assessment to provide the Congress with an assessment of the program's ability to ensure "the development of coal leases in an environmentally compatible manner". The OTA report would be completed by the time the Commission completes its review of fair market value policy.

The conferees are confident that the Commission on Fair Market Value Policy will review all aspects of the Federal coal leasing program related to determining the value of Federal coal tracts, including the following issues, before reporting to the Congress:

the methodology for estimating fair market value, including economic valuation methods, pre-sale versus post-sale analysis, and the value of independent and review appraisals; the impact on competition and achieving fair market value of leasing large amounts of coal, particularly under depressed market conditions, versus a more moderated leasing schedule;

whether the leaseholder should share more in the risk of holding the lease by increasing rental rates, on a regionally adjusted basis;

whether the public should share in the appreciation of the value of its resources by imposing a tax on transfers of surface or lease rights;

the methodology for assigning value to maintenance tracts, based on the value of the coal in the ground to the adjoining mine owner rather than as a "competitive" lease tract, when no competitive interest can be expected; possible methods of increasing competition, such as changing tract delineation methods, requiring meaningful fees to accompany expressions of interest, adopting intertract bidding procedures, or requiring a minimum number of bids in order to have a competitive sale;

methods of evaluating tracts to reflect regional differences in coal, and establishing cents-per-ton minimums on a regional basis;

whether pre-sale planning procedures are adequate, particularly with regard to land-use planning, public participation, and the role of the Regional Coal Teams in determining the timing and amount of leasing; and methods of carrying out authorized exchanges so as to minimize adverse effects on sales competition.

Amendment No. 95: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

Restore the matter stricken by said amendment, amended to read as follows:

(a) No funds in this or any other act may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the lease or sale of lands within the Department of the Interior Southern California Planning area described in (1) through (4) below. No funds may be expended for lease or sale of lands within the area described in (1) through (4) so long as adjacent State Tidelands continue to be designated as State Oil and Gas Leasing Sanctuary pursuant to Sec. 6871.1 et seq. of the California Public Resources Code, or the State Lands Commission does not enter into any lease for the extraction of oil and gas on State-owned tide and submerged lands within the areas described:

(1) An area of the Department of the Interior Southern California Planning Area off the coastline of the State of California Oil and Gas Leasing Sanctuary as described by Sec. 6871.1 et seq. of the California Public Resources Code in effect September 29, 1983, and extending from the seaward extension of the northerly city limits of the City of Newport Beach south to the southerly boundary of the State of California and from the base line (defined as the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands) and which is described by a line, every point of which is at least three miles seaward of the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands;

(2) An area of the Outer Continental Shelf, as defined in Section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 (a)), located in the Pacific Ocean off the coastline of Santa Monica Bay defined in subparagraph (A) or (B), whichever lies further from the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands:

(A) an area located off the coastline of the State of California Oil and Gas Leasing Sanctuary as described by Sec. 6871.2(a) California Public Resources Code in effect September 29, 1983, and extending from the base line (defined as the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands) and which is described by a line, every point of which is three miles seaward of the nearest point of the base line and which is located between the lines extended due south from the eastern and western boundaries of the sanctuary; or

(B) an area located off the coastline of the State of California Oil and Gas Leasing Sanctuary as described by Sec. 6871.2(a) California Public Resources Code in effect September 29, 1983, and which lies shoreward of a straight line between the northeast corner of block 42N, 50W, and the midway point between the northwest corner of block 36N, 42W, and the southeast corner of block 37N, 43W on the California (Lambert) Plane Coordinate System.

(3) An area within the boundaries of the Channel-Island National Marine Sanctuary, as defined by Title 15, part 935.3 of the Code of Federal Regulations; and

(4) An area within the boundaries of the Santa Barbara Channel Ecological Preserve and Buffer Zone, as defined by Department of the Interior, Bureau of Land Management Public Land Order 4587 (Vol. 34, page 5655 Federal Register March 26, 1969).

(b) Until January 1, 1985, no funds may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the lease or sale of lands in OCS Lease Sale #80 which lie within an area located off the coastline of the State of California Oil and Gas Leasing Sanctuary as defined by Sec. 6871.1 et seq. California Public Resources Code in effect September 29, 1983, from the City of Newport Beach south to the southerly boundary of the State of California and extending from the base line (defined as the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands) and which is described by a line, every point of which is 9 miles seaward of the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands.

(c) Until January 1, 1985, no funds provided in this title may be expended by the Department of the Interior for the lease or sale of lands within the Department of the Interior Southern California Planning area, as defined in section 2(a) of the Outer Continental Shelf Lands Act (43 U.S.C. 1331 (a)), located in the Pacific Ocean off the coastline of Santa Monica Bay, State of California, which lies within a line on the California (Lambert) Plane Coordinate System beginning at the point of intersection of a seaward extension of the boundary line between Los Angeles County and Ventura County with the seaward limit of the California State Tidelands: thence south to the midpoint of block 40 north, 52 west; thence diagonally southeast to the southeast corner of block 35 north, 44 west; thence due east to the first point of intersection with a line extended due south from Point Fermin along the eastern boundary of the State of California oil and gas sanctuary in effect on June 1, 1982: thence north along that line to the first point of intersection with the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands; thence northwesterly to the point of beginning along the seaward boundary of the California State Tidelands.

(d) This section shall not affect the authority of the Secretary of the Interior to approve any plan, or to grant any license or permit which is restricted to scientific exploration or other scientific activities, or pre-leasing activities necessary up to the point of sale.

(e) Leasing within the Department of the Interior's Southern California Planning Area under funding provided in this title shall be conducted according to the stipulations similar to those agreed upon in the Lease Sale 73 memorandum of agreement between the State of California and the Department of the Interior, unless the Governor of California and the Secretary of the Interior agree that other provisions are more appropriate.

(f) In OCS Lease Sale 80, lease or sale of lands affecting the responsibilities of the Department of Defense shall be with the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The conference agreement establishes a permanent ban on leasing in a 3 mile area adjacent to state oil and gas drilling sanctuaries from the area south of Newport Beach to the US-Mexico border, the Santa Monica Bay area, the Santa Barbara channel ecological preserve, and the Channel Islands National Marine Sanctuary. In addition no sale may be held in the Newport Beach/San Diego area within a 12 mile zone before Janaury 1985. A moratorium until January 1985 is also in effect in the Santa Monica Bay area out to the outer boundary of the shipping lanes. The Secretary of Interior must also have the concurrence of the Secretary of Defense regarding leasing or operation in any area affecting the responsibilities of the Department of Defense. Environmental stipulations similar to those agreed to by the State and the Department on lease sale #73 are also required.

Amendment No. 96: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the section number named, insert: 114

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The Senate language prohibits the Department from recovering certain grant moneys paid to municipalities following failure of the Teton Dam in 1976.

Amendment No. 97: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter proposed by said amendment, insert the following:

Sec. 115. Notwithstanding section 507(b)(14) of the Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act of 1977 (Public Law 95-87), cross-sections, maps or plans of land to be affected by an application for a surface mining and reclamation permit shall be prepared by or under the direction of a qualified registered professional engineer or geologist, or qualified registered professional land surveyor in any State which authorizes land surveyors to prepare and certify such maps or plans.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment on the House to the amendment of the Senate.

TITLE II—RELATED AGENCIES

Forest Service

Amendment No. 98: Appropriates $108,555,000 for forest research instead of $110,316,000 as proposed by the House and $105,108,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The increase above the amount proposed by the Senate consists of the following: increases of $307,000 for fire and atmospheric sciences, $1,305,000 for insects and disease, $676,000 for renewable resource evaluation, $240,000 for renewable resource economics, $259,000 for surface environment and mining, $560,000 for wildlife, range and fish, and $100,000 for recreation research.

The managers agree that the insect and disease increase includes increases of $75,000 for Texas live oak mortality, $170,000 for Southern pine beetle, and $61,000 for mountain pine beetle. Also included is $2,800,000 for the integrated gypsy moth research program, which has been developed over the past year. The Forest Service should implement this program immediately.

The increase for renewable resource evaluation includes an increase of $84,000 for Anchorage, Alaska. Within trees and timber management, the following increases are included: $120,000 for Forestry Intensified Research (for a Forest Service program level of $1,000,000), $300,000 for Sewanee, Tenn., lab, $137,000 for Boise, Idaho, lab, $309,000 for Durham, N.H., genetics research, $41,000 for Bend, Oregon, $90,000 for Moscow, Idaho, $144,000 for Fairbanks, Alaska, and a total increase for genetic engineering research of $700,000.

Within wildlife, range and fish, increases are included for range evaluation ($353,000), and old growth habitat ($600,000). The increase of $100,000 in recreation is for urban forestry research.

The managers agree that an increase of $149,000 is included for Reno, Nevada.

Amendment No. 99: Appropriates $60,579,000 for state and private forestry instead of $64,169,000 as proposed by the House and $51,730,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of decreases of $2,230,000 for forest pest management, $425,000 for fire protection, $1,000,000 for management improvement; and an increase of $65,000 for forest level information processing system.

The managers agree that the forest pest management funds should be used to meet high priority needs, and note that the mountain pine beetle infestation in Colorado is one such need.

The managers agree that the $3,340,000 included to help control erosion in the Lake Tahoe Basin should be directed toward solving existing erosion problems.

Amendment No. 100: Restores House language earmarking not less than $3,300,000 for high priority projects within the scope of the approved budget of the Forest Service to be carried out by the Youth Conservation Corps.

Amendment No. 101: Appropriates $888,506,000 for national forest system instead of $869,873,000 as proposed by the House and $894,041,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease from the amount proposed by the Senate consists of the following: increases of $2,000,000 for land management, $600,000 for land line location, $1,000,000 for trail maintenance, $5,500,000 for recreation management, $1,000,000 for wildlife and fish, and $1,200,000 for soil, water and air; and decreases of $3,335,000 for minerals, and $13,500,000 for timber sales and harvest administration.

The managers agree that funds have been restored for the forest level information processing system. The Forest Service should include a special schedule in the fiscal year 1985 budget justification, showing the costs for the system, and the source of funds, as well as a complete discussion of the status of installation, updated estimates of costs, and other information as requested by the House.

Funds have been provided to allow for a new timber sales preparation and offer program of 11.7 billion board feet, and an assumed harvest level up to 10.0 billion board feet.

The net increase in land line location consists of a decrease of $600,000 in timber sales support, and an increase of $1,200,000 for recreation and trespass resolution activities. The decrease in timber sales includes a decrease of $1,100,000 for Helistat and $1,400,000 for wood residue utilization. The managers will re-evaluate the need for an increase for Helistat, when more information from the testing becomes available. The managers agree wood residue utilization activities may be carried out within available funds.

The total increase of $6,000,000 in recreation management is for recreation use activities. The funds budgeted for the Gifford Pinchot Institute in this program ($270,000) may be used for timber sales support, to the extend needed.

The net increase for wildlife and fish includes an increase of $1,300,000 for threatened and endangered species, and a decrease of $300,000 in timber sales support. The increase is for the following: grizzly bear ($800,000); peregrine falcon ($120,000); Lahoutan Payute trout ($140,000); mountain caribou ($150,000); blackfoot ferret ($20,000); bald eagle ($30,000); Arizona trout ($20,000); endangered plants ($20,000). An additional $100,000 of wildlife funds are available for the woodland caribou recovery program.

The net increase for soil, water and air consists of a decrease of $300,000 for timber sales support, and increases of $500,000 for soil and water improvements and $1,000,000 for soil and water inventories.

Within the increase for range improvements is $50,000, to continue the pilot grazing project on the Tonto National Forest.

The managers agree that $6,375,000 of NFS funds may be spent on Oregon and California grant lands. However, all funds to be expended on O&C grant lands in fiscal year 1985 must be budgeted and fully justified under the O&C grant lands account in the Bureau of Land Management, whether to be expended by BLM or the Forest Service.

The managers note that the Forest Service has a transaction evidence analysis (TEA) test underway in Region 1 and Region 10. The Forest Service plans to expand that test in the spring of 1984 if the current test results are deemed satisfactory. While the managers support the Forest Service in these efforts to test TEA and hope that further expansions will be warranted, they also want the opportunity to review the early test results before an expansion occurs. Therefore, the managers direct the Forest Service to submit these results to the Committees for review and approval before proceeding to an expanded test. The test results should address the impact of TEA on small operators and deficit sales.

Amendment No. 102: Appropriates $251,724,000 for construction instead of $241,604,000 as proposed by the House and $257,619,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The decrease from the amount proposed by the Senate consists of decreases of $495,000 for facilities (Lake Kincaid Recreation Area) and $5,400,000 for road construction.

The managers agree that the Forest Service may proceed with construction of the Red Bird ranger station in Kentucky.

Amendment No. 103: Provides $23,867,000 for facility construction instead of $15,137,000 as proposed by the House and $24,362,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 104: Provides $227,857,000 for construction of forest roads and trails instead of $226,467,000 as proposed by the House and $233,257,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 105: Provides that $240,000,000 will remain available without fiscal year limitation for construction of roads by timber purchasers as proposed by the House instead of $291,300,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 106: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment appropriating $38,552,000 for land acquisition instead of $36,352,000 as proposed by the House and $32,400,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The allowance provides funds for the following:

Acquisition Management	$4,000,000
Boundary Waters Canoe Area, Minn	3,000,000
Cascade Head SRA	800,000
Eleven Point WSR	600,000
Flathead WSR	600,000
Kirtland Warbler, Mich	800,000
Lake Tahoe (Burton-Santini), Nev., Calif	10,000,000
Lake Tahoe (L&WCPF), Nev., Calif	9,500,000
Rogue WSR	1,000,000
Sawtooth NRA, Idaho	2,500,000
Spruce Knob-Seneca Rocks, W. Va	800,000
Walkinshaw Wetlands, Mich	352,000
High-priority recreation composites	2,000,000
Endangered species habitat (California condor)	800,000
Daniel Boone NF, Ky. (Red River Gorge)	600,000
Monongehela NF (McClung tract), W. Va	1,200,000
Total	38,552,000

Amendment No. 107: Reported in technical disagreement. the managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides for limitations on adjustments of recreational residence fees.

Energy security reserve

The managers understand that representatives of the Great Plains Gasification Associates coal gasification project now under construction in North Dakota have discussed the possibility of financial assistance under the Energy Security Act with officials of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation to supplement the existing $2,020,000,000 loan guarantee issued by the Department of Energy under the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act and other applicable appropriations acts.

The Synthetic Fuels Corporation has issued three general solicitations for projects. The managers believe that the statutory requirements for competitive bids have thus been met, consistent with the congressional intent of the Energy Security Act, and the Synthetic Fuels Corporation may, therefore, proceed to direct negotiations for financial assistance where appropriate under section 131(b)(4) of the act. While other statutory authority for assistance to the Great Plains project exists, such as that under section 127(c) of the Energy Security Act, the managers believe that this project qualifies for consideration for direct negotiation.

This statement by the managers should not be considered either support for, or opposition to, any award of financial assistance at this time to the Great Plains project by the Synthetic Fuels Corporation. Obviously, the Synthetic Fuels Corporation must fully protect the interests of the United States and must apply its usual standards in considering the type and level of support to be accorded Great Plains. There can be no suggestion of special or extraordinary support for Great Plains. A fair and consistent application of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's established guidelines and policies should not, however, be precluded because Great Plain's financial assistance package was formulated by the Department of Energy under the Federal Nonnuclear Energy Research and Development Act prior to the development of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation's present programs and policies.

Further, it is the managers purpose to reassert the intent and commitment of the Congress to the goals and objectives of the Synthetic Fuels Corporation as expressed in the Energy Security Act of 1980.

The vital security interests of the United States depend on a full effort to move diligently to implement programs to develop tar sands and other resources in order to get these projects off the drawing boards and into commercial production. The managers are encouraged by the recent accelerated pace of awards of financial assistance to synthetic fuels projects and support current plans of the Corporation to substantially increase the number of awards in FY 1984.

DEPARTMENT OF ENERGY

Amendment No. 108: Inserts account title "Alternative Fuels Production" as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 109: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In Lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

The Secretary of Energy shall, utilizing the funds remaining for project feasibility development studies appropriated under this head in Public Law 96-126 (93 Stat. 970 (1979)), use up to $200,000 to conduct a feasibility study of an alternative fuels wood pellet gasifier facility located near Sandpoint, Idaho

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 110: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which allows reimbursement to consultants who provided services reviewing grant applications to the Office of Alcohol Fuels within the Department of Energy in 1980.

Fossil energy research and development

Amendment No. 111: Appropriates $259,214,000 for fossil energy research and development instead of $265,914,000 as proposed by the House and $248,714,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net change from the House is as follows: decreases of $250,000 for a review of acid rain and $300,000 for clean-up base technology: decreases in advanced research and technology development of $1,650,000 for liquefaction, $350,000 for gasification, $200,000 for coal combustion and $7,000,000 for environmental monitoring of Synthetic Fuels Corporation projects. The managers agree that the Synthetic Fuels Corporation is to use its own funds to contract with the Department of Energy so that the Department can carry out its responsibilities under section 131(f) of the Energy Security Act. There is an increase of $2,000,000 to the House level for generic research on fuel cell technology to continue the program begun in fiscal year 1983.

Decreases from the House position in coal liquefaction are $600,000 for the Wilsonville pilot plant and $1,500,000 for the coal liquefaction data base. The amount for Wilsonville is to continue the pilot plant and not to be used for termination costs.

Changes from the House position in combustion systems include an increase of $400,000 for atmospheric fluidized beds and a decrease of $500,000 in the amount provided for pressurized fluidized beds to permit follow-up testing at the IEA Grimethorpe facility. The managers expect the Department to work actively with Great Britain and West Germany to pursue appropriate testing to improve pressurized fluidized bed technology.

The only change to the fuel cell program proposed by the House is a decrease of $3,600,000 for the 7.5 MW air-cooled phosphoric acid system. The molten carbonate program includes $1,700,000 for the direct fuel cell. For heat engines there is an increase of $500,000 for use of a coal fuel directly in diesels and gas turbines over that provided by the House. The House amount of $6,000,000 is provided for underground coal gasification.

For surface coal gasification there are three changes from the Senate level: increases of $1,000,000 for the technology data base and an increase of $2,500,000 for the Waltz Mill agglomerating fluidized bed gasifier and a decrease of $1,000,000 for component development of a liquid-sealed lockhopper system for feeding coal into high pressure gasification systems.

Changes from the House position in the petroleum area include increases of $2,000,000 for development of the cascading bed retort process and $1,350,000 for the Geokinetics horizontal modified in-situ project. The managers agree that the oil shale program needs to be redesigned. To further this effort, the managers have agreed to provide $2,000,000 to be applied to a comprehensive oil shale program.

The geopressurized methane program is included at the House level of $2,000,000.

The managers agree that $5,000,000 from prior year obligations are to continue testing at the Homer City bi-gas facility. The money comes from the following projects: $1,000,000 from liquefaction demonstration plants; $300,000 from heat engines, $700,000 from gasification demonstration plants and $3,000,000 from headquarters program direction.

Amendment No. 112: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides $15,000,000 in each of fiscal years 1985 and 1986 for a demonstration facility near Paducah, Kentucky, for the generation of electricity from coal using an atmospheric fluidized bed combustion process as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 113: Appropriates $256,600,000 for the Naval Petroleum and Oil Shale Reserves as proposed by the Senate instead of $256,100,000 as proposed by the House.

Energy conservation

Amendment No. 114: Appropriates $431,131,000 instead of $528,045,000 as proposed by the House and $360,681,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net decrease from the amount proposed by the House consists of the following: increases of $1,500,000 for wall and roof support systems for buildings, $500,000 for windows and daylighting, $1,000,000 for thermal performance, $650,000 for community systems cogeneration, $273,000 buildings and community systems program direction, $7,000,000 for industrial process efficiency, $29,000 for program direction of industrial conservation programs, $1,400,000 for alternative transportation fuels, $2,200,000 for hybrid vehicle alternative propulsion systems, $81,000 for transportation program direction, $1,166,000 state and local grants program direction, $27,000 multi-sector program direction, $60,000 for program direction for policy and management, and $750,000 for policy and analysis on conservation programs in general; and decreases of $300,000 for indoor air quality, $5,000,000 for building controls and controls systems, $500,000 building performance prediction research, $500,000 for building performance monitoring, $5,000,000 for studies of institutional factors in building efficiency, $1,000,000 for building performance standards, $500,000 for urban waste, $1,000,000 for the residential conservation service, $250,000 specifically allocated for buildings and community systems policy analysis, $250,000 specifically allocated for industrial programs policy analysis, $4,000,000 for advanced gas turbine engines, $250,000 for transportation programs policy analysis, $50,000,000 for grants to schools and hospitals, $53,500,000 for weatherization grants, and $500,000 for the National Appropriate Technology Assistance Service.

The managers recommend that research on individual building components and systems be conducted in a manner that considers the effect of that single item on the building as a whole. Disregard for integration of research efforts can lead to conflicting and inefficient expenditures of funds as well as failure to maximize conservation opportunities.

The conference agreement provides $500,000 in new budget authority for the Residential Conservation Service. The managers direct that $2,500,000 in unobligated balances previously appropriated for this program, and subsequently deferred, be made available for immediate use in the RCS program together with the new budget authority for a fiscal year 1984 program operating level of $3,000,000.

While $800,000 of the funds in this bill are to be provided to Georgetown University for certain unanticipated problems which have occurred during the initial operating period of the National Exemplar Atmospheric fluidized bed boiler, the managers agree that no further Federal funding will be appropriated for this project.

The managers note that the Department's practice of budgeting for advanced battery and fuel systems in a separate appropriation bill obfuscates coherent consideration of the funding requirements for the electric and hydrid vehicle program. The managers expect that not less than $1,800,000 from funds appropriated in Public Law 98-50 shall be made available for advanced battery and fuel systems research in support of the electric and hybrid vehicle program.

A total of $33,100,000 is appropriated for transfer to NASA for management of certain transportation research programs specified in the bill. The managers remain concerned however, by the high rate of overhead charged by NASA for administration of these programs.

The agreement provides $1,500,000 for the inventors program. This funding, together with $550,000 in deferred funding should be made available immediately for a $2,050,000 level of program operations balanced between new grant awards and evaluation and assistance.

The managers are disappointed by the lack of conservation initiatives proposed by the Department in recent years. Clearly there are many conservation ideas, including some developed at the Carmel conference and others related to heavy duty trucks, for example, which merit further consideration. Consequently, $750,000 in policy analysis contact funds have been provided to identify conservation targets with the greatest potential energy savings. The managers will expect the Department to formulate fresh conservation concepts for inclusion in subsequent budget requests for Congressional consideration.

Amendment No. 115: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment earmarking $33,100,000 for transfer to NASA instead of $37,000,000 as proposed by the House and $38,100,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

This adjustment to the amount to be transferred conforms to the change made to the House level for the automotive gas turbine program.

Amendment No. 116: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which earmarks $7,000,000 for research, development, and demonstration of a process to produce steel by direct strip casting and makes provision for repayment to the U.S. Treasury.

The managers are encouraged by the potential energy savings of direct strip casting technology for certain types of steel production. In addition this technology offers the possibility of significant equipment cost reduction, environmental improvement, as well as the repatriation of thousands of jobs which were previously lost to foreign steel competitors. The managers, therefore, direct the Department of Energy to request proposals in January 1984 for a pilot plant demonstration of direct strip casting technology. This contract award is to be completed no later than May 15, 1984. The managers anticipate that the fiscal year 1984 requirement will be $7,000,000 for the design and long-lead procurement for such a pilot plant and that the total estimated cost for this pilot plant will be approximately $30,000,000 over a three period. Senate bill language requiring repayment of Federal funding is retained.

The Department is directed to use another $1,000,000 from the industrial process efficiency amount to continue a more modest research program in direct strip casting with at least one of the four participants in the phase I study which is now underway or with some other interested participants that might apply phase II funding.

Economic regulation

Amendment No. 117: Restores the House language stricken by the Senate and deletes the language inserted by the Senate.

Amendment No. 118: Restores the House language which provides for emergency preparedness activities.

Amendment No. 119: Appropriates $30,330,000 as proposed by the House instead of $25,125,000 as proposed by the Senate. This continues the practice of funding the emergency preparedness function in the Economic Regulation account.

Strategic petroleum reserve

Amendment No. 120: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter stricken and inserted by said amendment insert the following:

Strategic petroleum reserve

For expenses necessary to carry out the provisions of sections 151 through 166 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1975 (Public Law 94-163), $158,770,000, to remain available until expended.

SPR petroleum account

The aggregate amount that may be obligated under section 167 of the Energy Policy and Conservation Act of 1975 (Public Law 94-163), as amended by the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1981 (Public Law 97-35), for the acquisition and transportation of petroleum, and for other necessary expenses, is $650,000,000, in addition to authority provided in fiscal years 1982 and 1983, to remain available until expended: Provided, That the minimum required fill rate during fiscal year 1984 shall be not less than 186,000 barrels per day.

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers have reluctantly agreed to eliminate $370,000 for Phase III development of facilities including the Big Hill, Texas site. This action was taken based on the commitment of the Administration to include at least this amount for Phase III facilities in the fiscal year 1985 budget request. Because of the progress made to date at Big Hill, completion of the project will be delayed only nine months.

For oil acquisition, $650,000,000 is made available with the stipulation that the average daily fill rate shall be no less than 186,000 barrels per day. At this rate, the existing permanent storage capacity will be nearly filled at the end of fiscal year 1984 with the expectation that a similar fill rate will be followed in fiscal year 1985.

Energy information administration

Amendment No. 121: Appropriates $55,870,000 for the Energy Information Administration instead of $56,870,000 as proposed by the House and $54,350,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease in the amount provided by the House reduces the amount for quality maintenance by $1,000,000. It is the managers expectation that future budgets will include requests for quality maintenance. The fiscal year 1985 budget request is to include cost-benefit analysis which compares performing quality maintenance activities on an annual basis versus on a 2-or-3-year cycle.

DEPARTMENT OF HEALTH AND HUMAN SERVICES

Health Services Administration

Amendment No. 122: Appropriates $770,408,000 for Indian health services instead of $801,798,000 as proposed by the House and $734,651,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The increase above the amount proposed by the Senate consists of the following: for hospitals and clinics $1,000,000 for supplies, $1,300,000 for staffing of new facilities, $1,608,000 for tribal contractual support, $1,000,000 for staff training, and $5,900,000 for staff at existing facilities; for dental health $750,000 for staffing; for mental health $1,500,000 for staffing; for contract care $7,927,000; for preventive health $202,000 for staffing of new facilities, $4,570,000 for staffing of existing facilities, and $1,000,000 for community health representatives; and for urban health $9,000,000.

The managers agree that within the funds for tribal contractual support $400,000 for indirect costs for the Tanana Chiefs Conference if that organization enters into a contract for operation of the Fairbanks service unit. Within available funds, the Indian Health Service shall operate the nurse practitioner clinics at Plummer and Lapwai, ID if National Health Service Corps support is withdrawn. The managers agree that the allowance for Indian health manpower includes $250,000 for the Indians Into Medicine program. The managers further agree that there should be no redevelopment of staff to meet the requirements of newly opened facilities unless such positions are in excess of the requirements of the existing facility. Within the allowance for alcoholism, the Indian Health Service shall continue the fetal alcohol syndrome research program initiated in fiscal year 1983.

Amendment No. 123: Deletes House language offsetting Indian Health Service appropriation by $5,000,000 in collections as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 124: Deletes House language regarding the use of collections as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 125: Appropriates $53,595,000 for Indian health facilities instead of $69,015,000 as proposed by the House and $31,389,000 as proposed by the Senate. The net decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of: increases of $200,000 for construction of the Browning, MT hospital, $2,470,000 for construction of personnel quarters for the Browning, MT hospital and $2,000,000 for planning of the Anchorage, Alaska hospital; and decrease of $11,090,000 for construction of the Rosebud, SD hospital, and $9,000,000 for sanitation facilities.

The managers agree that of the unobligated balances remaining in the facilities account $974,000 shall be used to construct nine units of quarters at Ft. Duchesne, UT and $867,000 shall be used to construct nine units of quarters at Huerfano, New Mexico.

The managers are extremely concerned with the failure of the Department to release funds for the planning of the Rosebud hospital, which were appropriated in fiscal year 1982. As a result of the Department's failure to proceed with the planning, the managers have had to delete the funds for initial construction, with great reluctance, since the funds could not be used until fiscal year 1985. In order to correct this situation, the Department is directed to release the planning funds no later than 45 days from enactment of this bill into law. If the funds are not released and planning initiated for a 35-bed hospital, as agreed to by the Congress, as of that date, the Administration is expected to submit a rescission message to the Congress for the planning funds.

Amendment No. 126: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate providing that non-Indian patients may be extended care at all Indian Health facilities.

The managers agree that such care shall be extended only if approved by the affected tribe(s) and that such care shall be subject to reasonable charges to be established by the Secretary.

Amendment No. 127: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides that service units which currently have in effect a policy to bill Indians may continue such practice.

Amendment No. 128: Adds the word "further" to House language regarding billing policies as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 129: Deletes language proposed by the Senate to establish the Medicare reimbursement rate as the reimbursement rate for the Indian Health Service.

The managers direct that the Indian Health Service act to establish reasonable rates for contract care payments in place of the current system which generally pays 100 percent of billed charges

DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

Office of Elementary and Secondary Education

Amendment No. 130: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment providing $50,900,000 for Part A instead of $51,000,000 as proposed by the House and $56,500,000 as proposed by the Senate. The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree that $46,400,000 shall be for payments to local education agencies and that $4,500,000 shall be for payments to Indian controlled schools.

Amendment No. 131: Provides $15,000,000 for Parts B and C of the Indian Education Act instead of $18,000,000 as proposed by the House and $8,178,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decreases below the House allowance for Part B are: $1,200,000 for planning and pilot demonstration projects, $700,000 for educational services, and $100,000 for fellowships. The decreases below the House allowance for Part C are $600,000 for planning and pilot demonstration projects and $400,000 for educational services.

The managers are concerned that the historical distribution of awards under Parts B and C shows little correlation to the distribution of the Indian population. The Department is requested to review its application and award procedures in an effort to ensure that the goals of the legislation are being met.

Amendment No. 132: Appropriates $68,780,000 for Indian education instead of $71,243,000 as proposed by the House and $67,248,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree that of the $2,880,000 provided for administration, $180,000 is for the National Advisory Council on Indian Education and $500,000 is to conduct an evaluation of the Indian controlled schools program in cooperation with the Bureau of Indian Affairs.

Navajo and Hopi Indian Relocation Commission

Amendment No. 133: Appropriates $18,783,000 for salaries and expenses as proposed by the Senate instead of $13,783,000 as proposed by the House.

The managers agree that the Commission should defer the relocation of families living in areas under consideration for exchange. The managers further agree that $5,000,000 is available for the payment of benefits to those who were full-time residents of the joint use area and who have moved but have not yet received relocation assistance payments.

SMITHSONIAN INSTITUTION

Amendment No. 134: Appropriates $155,263,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $156,533,000 as proposed by the House and $153,108,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of: decreases of $100,000 for equipment for the National Museum of Natural History, $585,000 for equipment for the Smithsonian Astrophysical Observatory, $514,000 for the Division of Performing Arts, $135,000 for cataloguing of rare books, $150,000 for museum conservation programs, $500,000 for hiring lapses for the Museum Support Center, $250,000 for collection management, $50,000 for a computer training laboratory, and $300,000 for electronic security equipment; and increases of $479,000 for the National Museum of American History, $150,000 for the National Symphony Orchestra, $150,000 for the Washington Opera Society, $35,000 for the Office of Plant Services, and $500,000 for utility costs.

The managers agree that the funds provided for equipment purchases for the Smithsonian Astrophysical Laboratory shall be used for laboratory and general equipment. Prior to the purchase of computer equipment, long range plans should be developed and submitted for review.

Within the allowance for the Museum Support Center, staff may be hired for the conservation training program.

Amendment No. 135: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows: Restore the matter stricken by said amendment amended to read as follows: including not less than $786,000 to carry out the provisions of the National Museum Act and $500,000 to be made available to the trustees of the John F. Kennedy Center for the Performing Arts for payment to the National Symphony Orchestra and $500,000 for payment to the Washington Opera Society for activities related to their responsibilities as resident entities of the Center

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 136: Appropriates $7,040,000 for museum programs and related research as proposed by the Senate instead of $5,040,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 137: Appropriates $9,000,000 for restoration and renovation of buildings as proposed by the Senate instead of $9,100,000 as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 138: Deletes the earmarking of $100,000 proposed by the House for a museum feasibility study.

Amendment No. 139: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate rescinding $8,000,000 of the funds previously appropriated for construction of the South Quadrangle.

In agreeing to this rescission, the managers remain committed to equally sharing the construction costs of this project.

The managers recognize the uncertainties and problems that can be associated with major construction projects. The managers intend to provide funds in response to future properly justified requests if necessary to bring this project to fulfillment.

NATIONAL GALLERY OF ART

Amendment No. 140: Appropriates $34,389,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $34,209,000 as proposed by the House and $34,790,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net increase over the amount proposed by the House consists of: increases of $300,000 for utility costs, $150,000 for furnishings for the West Building galleries, and $57,000 for the protection of buildings and grounds; and decreases of $250,000 for positions, $44,000 for summer evening hours, $20,000 for book purchases, and $13,000 for general administration.

The managers agree that within the $250,000 provided for additional conservation positions, $51,000 shall be used to support four positions currently funded by a private grant when such grant expires.

Amendment No. 141: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: and of which not to exceed $1,360,000 for the special exhibition program shall remain available until expended

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

NATIONAL FOUNDATION ON THE ARTS AND THE HUMANITIES

National Endowment for the Arts

Amendment No. 142: Appropriates $132,000,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $134,400,000 as proposed by the House and $115,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 143: Provides $118,900,000 for program funds instead of $121,300,000 as proposed by the House and $102,400,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree on the following distribution of funds:

Artists-in-schools	$5,200,000
Dance	8,750,000
Design arts	4,500,000
Expansion arts	7,000,000
Folk arts	3,000,000
Inter arts	3,950,000
Literature	4,500,000
Media arts	8,800,000
Museums	11,900,000
Music	12,600,000
Opera/musical theatre	4,600,000
State programs	24,300,000
Locals test	2,000,000
Theatre	9,000,000
Visual arts	6,400,000
Policy planning and research	1,000,000
Regional representation	700,000
Advancement	700,000

Amendment No. 144: Provides $13,100,000 for administrative expenses as proposed by the House instead of $12,600,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree that funds are available to support both the President's Committee on the Arts and the Humanities and the Deputy Chairman for Private Partnership.

Amendment No. 145: Appropriates $30,000,000 for matching grants instead of $30,600,000 as proposed by the House and $28,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 146: Provides $21,000,000 for Challenge grants instead of $21,500,000 as proposed by the House and $20,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

National Endowment for the Humanities

Amendment No. 147: Appropriates $110,500,000 for salaries and expenses instead of $120,500,000 as proposed by the House and $101,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 148: Provides $97,750,000 for program funds instead of $107,750,000 as proposed by the House and $88,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The managers agree that the funds shall be distributed as follows:

State programs	$21,850,000
Public programs:
Media grants	9,100,000
Museums and historical organizations	9,000,000
Public libraries	3,000,000
Education programs	19,000,000
Fellowships	14,500,000
Research grants	18,400,000
Special projects	2,200,000
Planning and assessment	700,000
Total, program funds	97,750,000

The managers agree that no funds are provided for National Humanities fellowships.

Amendment No. 149: Provides $12,750,000 for administrative expenses as proposed by the House instead of $12,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 150: Appropriates $29,500,000 for matching grants as proposed by the House instead of $29,000,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Amendment No. 151: Provides $18,000,000 for Challenge grants as proposed by the House instead of $17,500,000 as proposed by the Senate.

Institute of Museum Services

Amendment No. 152: Appropriates $20,150,000 for the Institute of Museum Services instead of $21,500,000 as proposed by the House and $14,150,000 as proposed by the Senate.

The net decrease below the amount proposed by the House consists of a decrease of $2,070,000 for general operating support grants and an increase of $720,000 for special projects.

The managers agree that within the $3,000,000 provided for conservation grants, $150,000 shall be used to develop a program for the conservation of cultural objects and property in cooperation with the National Institute for Conservation of Cultural Property and the American Institute of Conservation.

Amendment No. 153: Restores language relating to the application process and eligibility for grants as proposed by the House.

Amendment No. 154: Appropriates $2,447,000 for the National Captial Planning Commission as proposed by the Senate instead of $2,452,000 as proposed by the House.

The managers agree that this reduction will be derived solely from funding to pay for standard level user charges.

FEDERAL INSPECTOR FOR THE ALASKA GAS PIPELINE

Amendment No. 155: Appropriates $2,963,000 for permitting and enforcement as proposed by the Senate instead of $6,500,000 as proposed by the House.

HOLOCAUST MEMORIAL COUNCIL

Amendment No. 156: Appropriates $1,853,000 for the Holocaust Memorial Council instead of $1,953,000 as proposed by the House and $1,683,000 as proposed by the Senate. The decrease under the amount proposed by the House shall come from the Educational Foundation and its related staff salaries.

The managers agree that funding for the Archives should not go towards archival training but be used solely for retrieval, documentation, and preservation of archival materials.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

Amendment No. 157: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides for the processing of permits for tar sands in BLM wilderness study areas.

Amendment No. 158: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following: , or any lands designated by Congress as wilderness study areas

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

Amendment No. 159: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment insert the following:

The Congress finds that the Forest Service's proposal of March 15, 1983, to consider six million acres of the national forest for possible sale has met with considerable opposition; and the national forests are an important part of the national heritage of the United States; and the national forests provide and protect important resources; and the national forests provide unique opportunities for recreation; and it is inconsistent with past management practices to dispose of large portions of our national forests. It is, therefore, the sense of the Congress that it is not in the national interest to grant the authority to sell significant acreage of the national forest until such time as the Forest Service specifically identifies the tracts which are no longer needed by the Federal Government; inventories the tracts as to their public benefit value; provides opportunities for public review and discussion of the tracts; and completes all necessary environmental assessments of such sales.

The managers on the part of the Seante will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The managers agree that this provision confers no additional authority to the Forest Service with respect to the disposition of Federal lands.

Amendment No. 160: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which provides a surplus property mechanism to be used to acquire lands in the Kaloko-Honokohau NHP.

Amendment No. 161: Deletes language proposed by the Senate to change the name of the Institute of Museum Services.

Amendment No. 162: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate which authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to convey twenty acres of land to the Mitchell School District in Scotts Bluff County, Nebraska.

Amendment No. 163: Reported in technical disagreement. The managers on the part of the House will offer a motion to recede and concur in the amendment of the Senate with an amendment as follows:

In lieu of the matter inserted by said amendment, insert the following:

Public Law 96-315 is hereby amended by adding the following new section:

"3(f) Up to 15 additional permits shall be granted to those persons meeting any one of the following conditions:

(1) A resident as of July 1, 1982, who held a valid Fish and Wildlife Service access permit for improved property owners at any time during the period from July 29, 1976, through December 31, 1979.

(2) Anyone in continuous residency since 1976 residing in the area bounded on the north by the refuge boundary and on the south by a straight line passing through a point on the east-west prolongation of the centerline of Albacore Street, Whaleshead Club Subdivision, Currituck County, North Carolina.

(3) Any permanent full-time resident as of April 1, 1983, not otherwise eligible who can substantiate to the Secretary of the Interior that access is essential to their maintaining a livelihood."

The managers on the part of the Senate will move to concur in the amendment of the House to the amendment of the Senate.

The language permits the Secretary to grant up to 15 additional access permits to Back Bay NWR.

Amendment No. 164: Deletes language proposed by the Senate relating to the type of Federal Aviation Administration certification that contract aircraft would need. The managers will review the situation and reconsider at the next available opportunity.

CONFERENCE TOTAL—WITH COMPARISONS

The total new budget (obligational) authority for the fiscal year 1984 recommended by the Committee of Conference, with comparisons to the fiscal year 1983 amount, the 1984 budget estimates, and the House and Senate bills for 1984 follow:

New budget (obligational) authority, fiscal year 1983	$8,624,459,000
Budget estimates of new (obligational) authority, fiscal year 1984	[1]6,709,628,000
House bill, fiscal year 1984	8,081,974,000
Senate bill, fiscal year 1984	8,054,373,000
Conference agreement, fiscal year 1984	7,953,783,000
Conference agreement compared with:
New budget (obligational) authority, fiscal year 1983	−670,676,000
Budget estimates of new (obligational) authority, fiscal year 1984	+1,244,155,000
House bill, fiscal year 1984	−128,191,000
Senate bill, fiscal year 1984	−100,590,000

[1]Includes $8,700,000 of budget estimates not considered by the House.

SIDNEY R. YATES,
JOHN P. MURTHA,
NORMAN D. DICKS,
WILLIAM R. RATCHFORD,
EDWARD P. BOLAND,
LES AUCOIN,
JAMIE L. WHITTEN,
JOSEPH M. MCDADE,
RALPH REGULA,
SILVIO O. CONTE,
Managers on the Part of the House.

JAMES A. MCCLURE,
TED STEVENS,
PAUL LAXALT,
JAKE GARN,
THAD COCHRAN,
MARK ANDREWS,
WARREN RUDMAN,
LOWELL P. WEICKER, JR.,
MARK O. HATFIELD,
ROBERT C. BYRD,
J. BENNETT JOHNSTON,
WALTER D. HUDDLESTON,
PATRICK LEAHY,
DENNIS DECONCINI,
QUENTIN BURDICK,
DALE BUMPERS,
JOHN C. STENNIS,
Managers on the Part of the Senate.

SENATE BILLS REFERRED

Bills of the Senate of the following titles were taken from the Speaker's table and, under the rule, referred as follows:

S. 552. An act to designate the Federal Building in Fort Myers, Florida, as the 'George W. Whitehurst Federal Building and United States Courthouse'; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

S. 1424. An act to amend Public Law 92-444 to reflect the change in the name of the Pacific Tuna Development Foundation to the Pacific Fisheries Development Foundation; to the Committee on Merchant Marine Fisheries.

S. 1530. An act to make technical amendments to the Indian Self-Determination and Education Assistance Act and other Acts; to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs.

S. 1894. An act to designate the foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine as the "Henry M. Jackson Foundation for the Advancement of Military Medicine", and for other purposes; to the Committee on Armed Services.

SENATE ENROLLED BILL SIGNED

The SPEAKER pro tempore announced his signature to an enrolled bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 602. An act to provide for the broadcasting of accurate information to the people of Cuba, and for other purposes.

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Mr. HAWKINS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee had examined and found truly enrolled a bill and joint resolutions of the House of the the following titles, which were thereupon signed by the Speaker pro tempore:

H.R. 3415. An act making appropriations for the Government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

H.J. Res. 284. Joint resolution commemorating the 25th anniversary of the National Aeronautics and Space Administration.

H.J. Res. 366. Joint resolution to provide for the temporary extension of certain insurance programs relating to housing and community development, and for other purposes.

BILLS PRESENTED TO THE PRESIDENT

Mr. HAWKINS, from the Committee on House Administration, reported that that committee did on the following date present to the President, for his approval, bills of the House of the following title:

On September 28, 1983:

H.R. 3871. To amend the Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act of 1982 to provide that the figure used in determining hourly rates of pay for Federal employees not be changed before the comparability adjustment in the rates of pay for such employees has been made for fiscal year 1984.

H.R. 2972. To authorize certain construction at military installations for fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes.

On September 29, 1983:

H.R. 3263. An act making appropriations for military construction for the Department of Defense for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984, and for other purposes.

SPECIAL ORDERS GRANTED

By unanimous consent, permission to address the House, following the legislative program and any special orders heretofore entered, was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. FRANKLIN) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. BARTLETT, for 60 minutes, October 5th.

Mr. HARTNETT, for 5 minutes, today.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MOLLOHAN) to revise and extend their remarks and include extraneous material:)

Mr. ANNUNZIO, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. GONZALEZ, for 30 minutes, today.

Mr. MOLLOHAN, for 15 minutes, today.

Ms. OAKAR, for 5 minutes, today.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 3.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 4.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 5.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 6.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 7.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 17.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 18.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 19.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 20.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 21.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 24.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 25.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 26.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 27.

Mr. ALEXANDER, for 60 minutes, on October 28.

Mr. GAYDOS, for 60 minutes, on October 4.

EXTENSION OF REMARKS

By unanimous consent, permission to revise and extend remarks was granted to:

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. FRANKLIN) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. BILIRAKIS in two instances.

Mr. WHITEHURST.

Mr. FIELDS in two instances.

Mrs. HOLT.

Mr. LEWIS of California.

Mr. DAUB.

Mr. MICHEL.

Mr. TAYLOR.

Mr. YOUNG of Florida in two instances.

Mr. SNYDER.

Mr. KEMP in two instances.

(The following Members (at the request of Mr. MOLLOHAN) and to include extraneous matter:)

Mr. MARTINEZ in two instances.

Mr. UDALL.

Mr. HAWKINS.

Mr. STARK.

Mr. EDGAR.

Mr. HARRISON in three instances.

Mr. HAMILTON.

Mr. RODINO.

Mr. OBEY.

Mrs. SCHROEDER.

Mr. MARKEY.

Mr. HUBBARD.

Mr. HOYER in two instances.

Mr. SOLARZ in two instances.

Mr. MAZZOLI.

Mr. DORGAN.

Mr. BRITT.

Mr. PENNY.

Mr. LEVINE of California.

Mr. COYNE.

Mr. GARCIA.

Mr. SMITH of Florida.

Mr. FUQUA.

Mr. DE LUGO.

Ms. OAKAR.

Mr. MINETA.

□ 1810

RECESS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the order of the House of September 30, 1983, the Chair declares the House in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

The bells will be rung 15 minutes before the House convenes.

Accordingly (at 6 o'clock and 10 minutes p.m.), the House stood in recess subject to the call of the Chair.

□ 1920

AFTER RECESS

The recess having expired, the House was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI) at 7 o'clock and 29 minutes p.m.

FURTHER MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A further message from the Senate by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 3962. An act to extend the authorities under the Export Administration Act of 1979 until October 14, 1983.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 368) entitled "Joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes.".

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to the amendments of the Senate numbered 3, 6, 7, 9, and 14 to the above-entitled joint resolution.

ADJOURNMENT

Mr. KILDEE. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House do now adjourn.

The motion was agreed to; accordingly (at 7 o'clock and 30 minutes p.m.), under its previous order, the House adjourned until Monday, October 3, 1983, at 12 o'clock noon.

EXECUTIVE COMMUNICATIONS, ETC.

Under clause 2 of rule XXIV, executive communications were taken from the Speaker's table and referred as follows:

1926. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of Defense (Comptroller), transmitting a list of contract award dates for the period November 1, 1983, to December 31, 1983, pursuant to 10 U.S.C. 139(b); to the Committee on Armed Services.

1927. A letter from the Secretary of Education, transmitting notice of final regulations for the student assistance general provisions and the Pell grant program (satisfactory progress, alternate disbursement system), pursuant to section 431(d) of the General Education Provisions Act, as amended; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

1928. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a report on the evaluation of health manpower shortage area criteria, pursuant to section 2702(c) of Public Law 97-35; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1929. A letter from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting notice of a proposed 60-day extension of the statutory time limit for the completion of the evidentiary stage of the consolidated proceeding in No. 39038, The Aluminum Association, Inc., et al. v. Alton & Southern Railway Company, et al., and No. 39085, Reynolds Metal Company v. The Atchison, Topeka and Santa Fe Railway Co., et al., pursuant to 49 U.S.C. 10327(k)(2); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1930. A letter from the Secretary of the Interstate Commerce Commission, transmitting notice that in Docket No. 39538 the Commission granted an extension of time within which the Pittsburgh & Lake Erie Railroad Co. must incorporate within its switching tariff ICC PLE 8020-J, the general rate increases in Railroad Cost Recovery Tariff X003, ICC RCCR X003, pursuant to 49 U.S.C. 10762(d)(2); to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

1931. A letter from the Acting Assistant Secretary of State, Legislative and Intergovernmental Affairs, transmitting notice of the President's intention to exercise his authority under section 614 of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961 to authorize economic support fund assistance for the Dominican Republic and Sudan without regard to statutory limitations earmarking such assistance for Nicaragua, pursuant to section 614(a)(1) of the Foreign Assistance Act of 1961, as amended; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

1932. A letter from the Deputy Administrator of General Services Administration, transmitting a draft of proposed legislation to amend section 203 of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949, as amended, to require the submission to the appropriate committees of Congress of an explanatory statement of the circumstances of each negotiated disposal of real property having a fair market value in excess of $500,000; to the Committee on Government Operations.

1933. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the use of Government vehicles for home-to-work transportation (GAO/NSIAD-83-3; September 28, 1983); to the Committee on Government Operations.

1934. A letter from the Veterans of Foreign Wars of the United States, transmitting a report and financial audit for the year ending August 31, 1983, pursuant to 36 U.S.C. 1103; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1935. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a report on substantial disruption waivers for foreign medical graduates, pursuant to section 212(j)(2)(C) of the Immigration and Nationality Act as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1936. A letter from the Secretary of Health and Human Services, transmitting a special report on the feasibility and advisability of Special Refugee Reception Centers, pursuant to section 314(c)(2) of the Immigration and National Act, as amended; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

1937. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Army (Civil Works), transmiting a report from the Chief of Engineers on La-Moine River Basin, Ill., together with other pertinent reports; to the Committee on Public Works and Transportation.

1938. A letter from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting a report on the Food and Drug Administration's efforts to regulate the medical device industry under the 1976 Medical Device Amendments to the Federal Food, Drug, and Cosmetic Act (GAO/HRD-83-53; September 30, 1983); jointly, to the Committees on Government Operations and Energy and Commerce.

1939. A letter from the Assistant Secretary of the Interior for Fish and Wildlife and Parks, National Park Service, transmiting the final environmental statement on undeveloped coastal barriers of the Coastal Barriers Steering Committee, purusant to section 10(a) of Public Law 97-348; jointly, to the Committees on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs; Merchant Marine and Fisheries; and Public Works and Transportation.

REPORTS OF COMMITTEES ON PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 2 of rule XIII, reports of committees were delivered to the Clerk for printing and reference to the proper calendar, as follows:

Mr. PERKINS: Committee on Education and Labor. H.R. 3245. A bill to provide for the establishment of a National Summit Conference on Education; with an amendment (Rept. No. 98-396). Referred to the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union.

Mr. WHITTEN: Committee of conference. Conference report on H.J. Res. 368 (Rept. No. 98-397). Ordered to be printed.

Mr. UDALL: Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs. House Joint Resolution 334. Joint resolution to establish a Commission on the Eleanor Roosevelt Centennial; with an amendment (Rept. No. 98-398, Pt. I). Ordered to be printed.

Mr. YATES: Committee of conference. Conference report on H.R. 3363 (Rept. No. 98-399). Ordered to be printed.

SUBSEQUENT ACTION ON A REPORTED BILL SEQUENTIALLY REFERRED

Under clause 5 of rule X, the following action was taken by the Speaker:

H.R. 2848. Referral to the Committee on Foreign Affairs extended for a period ending not later than October 7, 1983.

PUBLIC BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 5 of rule X and clause 4 of rule XXII, public bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BARNES:

H.R. 4042. A bill to continue in effect the current certification requirements with respect to El Salvador until the Congress enacts new legislation providing conditions for U.S military assistance to El Salvador or until the end of fiscal year 1984, whichever occurs first: to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. FUQUA (for himself, Mr. SYNAR, Mr. GEPHARDT, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. ZSCHAU, Mr. SENSENBRENNER, Mrs. LLOYD, Mr. WALGREN, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. LUNDINE, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, and Mr. YOUNG of Missouri):

H.R. 4043. A bill to modify the operation of Federal and State antitrust laws with respect to certain joint research and development activities, and for other purposes; jointly, to the Committees on the Judiciary and Science and Technology.

By Mr. BILIRAKIS:

H.R. 4044. A bill to amend the National Flood Insurance Act of 1968 to permit limited continuation and renewal of flood insurance coverage for properties located in areas whose eligibility for participation in the national flood insurance program is suspended; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. FUQUA:

H.R. 4045. A bill to impose a moratorium for 1 year on the deregulation of railroad boxcar traffic by the Interstate Commerce Commission; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. FUQUA (for himself, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. GORE, Mr. MACKAY, and Mr. BOEHLERT):

H.R. 4046. A bill to advance the national prosperity and welfare, to foster the leasing of robots and automated manufacturing systems, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

H.R. 4047. A bill to advance national prosperity and welfare, to foster the development and use of robots and automated manufacturing systems, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Science and Technology.

H.R. 4048. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to allow an additional 10 percent investment credit for section 38 property which is a robot or part of an automated system; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. GLICKMAN (for himself, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. BETHUNE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. RITTER, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. THOMAS of California, and Mr. ROBERTS):

H.R. 4049. A bill to amend title 44, United States Code, to reduce the gratuitous distribution of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. GLICKMAN (for himself, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. OTTINGER, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. BETHUNE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. RITTER, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. THOMAS of California, and Mr. ROBERTS):

H.R. 4050. A bill to amend title 44, United States Code, to eliminate certain binding for Members of Congress; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. GLICKMAN (for himself, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. BETHUNE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. RITTER, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. THOMAS of California, and Mr. ROBERTS):

H.R. 4051. A bill to amend title 44, United States Code, to eliminate certain printing and binding; to the Committee on House Administration.

By Mr. JONES of Tennessee (for himself, Mr. DE LA GARZA, Mr. LOEFFLER, Mr. VOLKMER, Mr. ALEXANDER, Mr. GLICKMAN, and Mr. HARKIN):

H.R. 4052. A bill to provide disaster assistance to agricultural producers and ranchers; to the Committee on Agriculture.

By Mr. LEACH of Iowa:

H.R. 4053. A bill to require the deposits of all commercial banks to be insured by the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation; to the Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs.

By Mr. MINETA (for himself, Mr. HOWARD, Mr. SNYDER, Mr. HAMMER-SCHMIDT, Mr. GLICKMAN, and Mr. CARNEY):

H.R. 4054. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to provide a 2-year reduction in the rates of certain aviation-related taxes; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

H.R. 4055. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to reduce the rates of certain aviation-related taxes for 1984 and to continue the reduced rates for subsequent calendar years if the unobligated balance in the airport airway trust fund is at least $2,300,000,000; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. PERKINS (for himself and Mr. GOODLING):

H.R. 4056. A bill to amend the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 to improve the operation of programs authorized under such acts, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Education and Labor.

By Mr. QUILLEN:

H.R. 4057. A bill to amend certain provisions of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 relating to the reporting of tips in the case of certain food and beverage establishments; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. SCHULZE:

H.R. 4058. A bill to provide that the crediting of a overpayment of income tax to estimated tax liability shall be determined without regard to Revenue Ruling 83-111; to the Committee on Ways and Means.

By Mr. WAXMAN (for himself, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. SCHEUER, Mr. WIRTH, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. LELAND, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. SIKORSKI, Mr. MILLER of California, and Mrs. SCHROEDER):

H.R. 4059. A bill to amend title XIX of the Social Security Act to increase the Federal medical assistance matching percentage for services provided to certain pregnant women and young children under State medicaid plans; to the Committee on Energy and Commerce.

By Mr. WISE:

H.R. 4060. A bill to amend the U.S. Synthetic Fuels Corporation Act to support synthetic fuel research and development; jointly to the Committees on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and Science and Technology.

By Mr. DOWNEY of New York:

H.J. Res. 379. Joint resolution designating the week beginning November 6, 1983, as "A Week of Education: The New Arms Race of New Ways of Thinking?"; to the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

By Ms. OAKAR (for herself, Mr. ZABLOCKI, Mr. HAMILTON, and Mr. RAHALL):

H.J. Res. 380. Joint resolution expressing the opposition of the United States to any partition of Lebanon; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. D'AMOURS:

H. Con. Res. 181. Concurrent resolution requesting the President of the United States to convene a National Conference on Small Business in 1984; to the Committee on Small Business.

By Mr. STARK:

H. Con. Res. 182. Concurrent resolution expressing the sense of the Congress that the United States should not provide security and economic assistance to the Philippines if President Ferdinand Marcos of the Philippines reimposes martial law and does not make significant progress toward restoring democracy and insuring human rights in the Philippines; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

By Mr. CONTE (for himself, Mr. O'NEILL, Mr. DONNELLY, Mr. BOLAND, Mr. MOAKLEY, Mr. EARLY, Mr. FRANK, Mr. SHANNON, Mr. MARKEY, Mr. MAVROULES, and Mr. STUDDS):

H. Res. 326. Resolution honoring Carl Yastrzemski; considered and agreed to.

By Mr. GLICKMAN (for himself, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. DURBIN, Mr. LUNGREN, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. BEILENSON, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. JACOBS, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. WHITTAKER, Mr. PANETTA, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. HEFTEL of Hawaii, Mr. EDGAR, Mr. TAUKE, Mr. FASCELL, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. BETHUNE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. RITTER, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. THOMAS of California, and Mr. ROBERTS):

H. Res. 327. Resolution to amend the Rules of the House of Representatives regarding the printing of remarks in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD; to the Committee on Rules.

MEMORIALS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII,

281. The SPEAKER presented a memorial of the Legislature of the State of California, relative to the Baha'is of Iran; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs.

PRIVATE BILLS AND RESOLUTIONS

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, private bills and resolutions were introduced and severally referred as follows:

By Mr. BEREUTER:

H.R. 4061. A bill for the relief of Consuela Matallana; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mrs. BURTON of California:

H.R. 4062. A bill for the relief of Antonio Callejo Carsola; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

ADDITIONAL SPONSORS

Under clause 4 of rule XXII, sponsors were added to public bills and resolutions as follows:

H.R. 1013: Mr. DREIER of California.

H.R. 1016: Mr. LAFALCE.

H.R. 1155: Mr. BRYANT.

H.R. 1159: Mr. WHITLEY.

H.R. 1249: Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, and Mr. AUCOIN.

H.R. 1415: Mr. SHUSTER, Mr. JONES of Tennessee, Mr. MCEWEN, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. MOORHEAD, Mr. HATCHER, and Mr. SIKORSKI.

H.R. 1540: Mr. DANIEL.

H.R. 2012: Mr. TOWNS.

H.R. 2154: Mrs. KENNELLY, Mr. SOLARZ, and Mr. HAYES.

H.R. 2374: Mr. CARPER.

H.R. 2468: Mr. BILIRAKIS.

H.R. 2508: Mr. HAMILTON.

H.R. 3050: Mr. IRELAND, Mr. TOWNS, and Mr. WHITTAKER.

H.R. 3240: Mr. ANNUNZIO, Mr. BONIOR of Michigan, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. GRADISON, Mr. HARRISON, Mr. HUTTO, Mr. OBERSTAR, Mr. PRITCHARD, Mr. RICHARDSON, Mr. SAWYER, Mr. TORRICELLI, Mr. GARCIA, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. WIRTH, Mr. STENHOLM, Mr. BORSKI, and Mr. HAYES.

H.R. 3245: Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, Mr. HANCE, Mr. PEASE, Mr. DINGELL, Mr. WEAVER, Mr. GRAY, Mr. SHARP, Mr. DORGAN, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. FISH, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. UDALL, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. COYNE, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. HARKIN, Mr. HOWARD, and Mr. FORSYTHE.

H.R. 3266: Mrs. BOXER, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. HARTNETT, Mr. HILER, Mr. HYDE, Mr. KEMP, Mr. KINDNESS, Mr. MORRISON of Washington, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. SOLOMON, Mr. SUNIA, and Mr. WOLF.

H.R. 3277: Mrs. BOXER.

H.R. 3282: Mr. DELLUMS.

H.R. 3433: Mr. GEKAS.

H.R. 3457: Mr. MATSUI.

H.R. 3579: Mr. TOWNS, Mr. DYMALLY, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. CROCKETT, and Mr. WEISS.

H.R. 3635: Mr. BEDELL, Mr. PACKARD, Mr. MURPHY, Mr. MCEWEN, Mr. CARR, and Mr. MCCURDY.

H.R. 3790: Mr. SPENCE and Mr. WHITEHURST.

H.R. 3858: Mr. TAUZIN, Mr. MARLENEE, Mr. IRELAND, Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT, Mr. ROSE, Mr. ANTHONY, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. REID, Mrs. BOGGS, Mr. BETHUNE, and Mr. JONES of North Carolina.

H.R. 3870: Ms. OAKAR and Mr. WILSON.

H.R. 4022: Mr. LUJAN and Mr. RICHARDSON.

H.J. Res. 3: Mr. MARTINEZ, Mr. DICKS, and Mr. LEVIN of Michigan.

H.J. Res. 93: Mr. FISH, Mr. ANDREWS of Texas, and Mr. UDALL.

H.J. Res. 103: Mr. DWYER of New Jersey.

H.J. Res. 199: Mr. HALL of Ohio.

H.J. Res. 279: Mr. FEIGHAN, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. MCKINNEY, Mr. WOLF, Mr. RITTER, Mr. RINALDO, Mr. GEKAS, Mr. DYSON, Mr. MRAZEK, Mr. BORSKI, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. JEFFORDS, Mrs. MARTIN of Illinois, Mr. CARPER, Mr. LEVINE of California, Mr. BADHAM, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. BARNES, Mr. WEBER, Mr. WYDEN, Mr. FROST, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mr. FLORIO, and Mr. MURTHA.

H.J. Res. 342: Mr. RATCHFORD, Mr. KEMP, Mr. ANDREWS of Texas, Mr. BERMAN, Mr. ROE, Mrs. SCHNEIDER, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. WILSON, Mr. DWYER of New Jersey, Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. TRAXLER, Mr. YOUNG of Alaska, Mr. STUDDS, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. HATCHER, Mr. GONZALEZ, Mr. TOWNS, Mr. ANDREWS of North Carolina, Mr. HUBBARD, Mr. O'BRIEN, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. PATTERSON, Mr. CONYERS, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. JENKINS, Mr. STOKES, Mr. BEVILL, Mr. FAUNTROY, Mr. HUTTO, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. LEWIS of Florida, Mr. WAXMAN, Mr. SUNIA, Mr. OWENS, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. DIXON, Mr. CHAPPELL, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. CARPER, Mr. EMERSON, Mr. ACKERMAN, Mr. LONG of Louisiana, Mr. VANDERGRIFF, Mr. BETHUNE, Mr. QUILLEN, Mr. DANIEL, Mr. DAVIS, Mr. MCNULTY, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mr. SHUMWAY, Mr. HERTEL of Michigan, Mr. GREEN, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. DYSON, and Mr. TALLON.

H.J. Res. 375: Mr. VALENTINE, Mr. ANDREWS of Texas, Mr. MOLLOHAN, Mr. MURTHA, Mr. MORRISON of Washington, Mr. PURSELL, Mr. PORTER, Mr. BARNES, Mr. WHITEHURST, Mr. PEASE, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. DYSON, Mr. ORTIZ, Mr. MURPHY, and Mr. BEILENSON.

H. Con. Res. 152: Mr. HYDE.

H. Con. Res. 163: Mr. BIAGGI, Mr. BILIRAKIS, Mrs. BOXER, Mr. BROWN of California, Mr. CONTE, Mr. DREIER of California, Mr. FAZIO, Mr. FORSYTHE, Mr. FRANK, Mr. FROST, Mr. GILMAN, Mr. GREEN, Mr. GREGG, Mr. HAWKINS, Mr. LANTOS, Mr. LELAND, Mr. LEVIN of Michigan, Mr. LEVINE of California, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MITCHELL, Mr. OBEY, Mr. ROE, Mr. VANDERGRIFF, and Mr. WILSON.

H. Con. Res. 174: Mr. EVANS of Iowa, Mr. FRENZEL, Mr. LIPINSKI, and Mr. WEBER.

H. Con. Res. 178: Mr. MURTHA, Mr. REGULA, Mr. O'BRIEN, Mr. GAYDOS, Mr. HUNTER, Mr. YOUNG of Missouri, Mr. KILDEE, Mr. BURTON of Indiana, Mr. VOLKMER, Mr. BROWN of California, and Mr. TAYLOR.

H. Res. 147: Mr. FEIGHAN, Mr. ARCHER, Mr. LAGOMARSINO, Mr. VANDERGRIFF, Mr. BARNES, Mr. HUGHES, Mr. DEWINE, Mr. CORRADA, Mr. WORTLEY, Mr. PORTER, Mr. BLILEY, Mr. MINETA, Mr. MCCOLLUM, Mr. WOLF, Mr. WON PAT, Mr. DAUB, Mr. CORCORAN, Mr. SMITH of Florida, Mr. MCKINNEY, Ms. MIKULSKI, Ms. KAPTUR, Mr. HYDE, Mr. MADIGAN, Mr. MARTINEZ, and Mr. WALGREN.

PETITIONS, ETC.

Under clause 1 of rule XXII, petitions and papers were laid on the Clerk's desk and referred as follows:

243. By the SPEAKER: Petition of the City Council, Oakland, Calif., relative to the destruction of a civilian airliner by the U.S.S.R.; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. September 30, 1983.

244. Also, petition of the Senior Men, Opportunity Group, Hendersonville, N.C., relative to Communist aggression; the United Nations; to the Committee on Foreign Affairs. September 30, 1983.

AMENDMENTS

Under clause 6 of rule XXIII, proposed amendments were submitted as follows:

H.R. 3231

By Mr. BEREUTER:

(Amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute (text of H.R. 3646).)

—Page 26, strike out line 15 and all that follows through page 27, line 2, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

SEC. 112. Section 6(g) of the Act (50 U.S.C. App. 2405(g)), as redesignated by section 110(a)(1) of this Act, is amended to read as follows:

"(g) Exclusion for Food, Medicine, or Medical Supplies.—This section does not authorize export controls on food, medicine, or medical supplies. This section also does not authorize export controls on donations of goods intended to meet basic human needs. It is the intent of the Congress that the President not impose export controls under this section on any goods or technology if he determines that the principal effect of the export of such goods or technology would be to help meet basic human needs. This subsection shall not be construed to prohibit the President from imposing restrictions on the export of medicine, medical supplies, food, or donations of goods under the International Emergency Economic Powers Act. This subsection shall not apply to any export control on medicine, medical supplies, or food, other than donations, which is in effect on the effective date of the Export Administration Amendments Act of 1983. Notwithstanding the preceding provisions of this subsection, the President may impose export controls under this section on medicine, medical supplies, food, or donations of goods in order to carry out the policy set forth in paragraph (13) of section 3 of this Act.".

By Mr. COLEMAN Of Texas:

(Amendment to the amendment in the nature of a substitute (text of H.R. 3646).)

—Page 43, line 17, add the following after the period: "The Secretary of Commerce shall conduct a study to determine the feasibility of using computer terminals located at ports and other points of exit from and entry into the United States in order to facilitate relevant agency interaction and to reduce delays in the issuance of export licenses under the Export Administration Act of 1979.".

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

JOSEPH McCAFFREY HAS EXCELLED IN CAPITOL HILL REPORTING FOR MORE THAN FOUR DECADES

HON. JENNINGS RANDOLPH

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE SENATE OF THE UNITED STATES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. RANDOLPH. Mr. President, on Friday, September 23, radio commentator Joseph McCaffrey made his final broadcast at radio station WMAL. He now will concentrate his reportorial talents on his beloved weekly newspaper, the Culpeper News in Virginia.

McCaffrey will be missed on Capitol Hill. He has the tremendous ability to tackle complex subject matter and to educate his listeners in an entertaining manner. His "Capitol Comments" reflected quality journalism that, hopefully, will be emulated by those who follow.

For almost a half century, Joe has been one of the most respected and popular radio personalities in the Washington area. In a city known for its short-term media stars, that is a truly remarkable record.

The key to his reportorial success has been his lusty enthusiasm and his consistent standard of fairness in reporting issues and commenting on personalities.

Last week Joe told a reporter:

Probably the thing I'm proudest of over the years is that people haven't been able to figure out a label for me. They don't know if I'm a liberal or conservative, Democrat or Republican. Sometimes I have appeared to be on one side of an issue and another time the other. But that's the way I wanted it. I vote no straight party lines. And former President Jerry Ford once said of me that I was the fairest reporter he ever dealt with—and I still cherish that remark.

McCaffrey started his career in journalism as a 10-cents-an-inch stringer for a newspaper in Poughkeepsie, N.Y. He came to the Washington area after military service to join CBS radio in 1944. That was the year he started covering the Congress.

His insightful observations on the changes in Congress over the years would provide a valuable textbook for aspiring political writers.

Mr. President, there is both sadness and gladness with the news that Joe is no longer in the Press Gallery. We will miss him. But there is joy in the knowledge that, at age 67, he can indulge in the lesser labors of a weekly publisher.

Many of us have had the privilege of personal and longstanding friendship with this remarkable individual. With his affable manner and inquiring mind, he has been a dependable source of fine reporting. His departure will leave a large hole in Capitol Hill coverage. His friends wish Joe well in the years ahead.●

SCIENTISTS SUPPORT CLINCH RIVER

HON. MARILYN LLOYD

OF TENNESSEE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mrs. LLOYD. Mr. Speaker, there has been much debate on the technical merits of the Clinch River breeder reactor project. Opponents have argued that the technology is obsolete and that this demonstration plant is not needed. To support these erroneous contentions, they often suggest that the scientific community, including some individuals with supposed nuclear credentials, is against the project. To satisfy myself that this is not the case, I asked Dr. Frederick Seitz, the esteemed chairman of the Scientists & Engineers for Secure Energy, to present the views of that organization as to the advisability of continuing and completing the Clinch River breeder reactor project.

I submit his response for inclusion in the RECORD, and hope that each Member will carefully read this letter. Special attention should be given to Dr. Seitz's statement that:

• • • virtually all members of our organization and almost 90 percent of all knowledgeable professionals in our country consider the Clinch River Breeder Reactor to be an important technological step if we are to ensure the availability of energy for generations to come.

His response follows:

THE ROCKEFELLER UNIVERSITY,
New York, N.Y., September 12, 1983.

Mrs. MARILYN LLOYD,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Energy Research and Production, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MRS. LLOYD: Scientists and Engineers for Secure Energy greatly appreciates the invitation to share with your Committee the views of our members on the Clinch River Breeder Reactor.

Rather than reiterate the many cogent arguments advanced in support of this worthy project, let me state at this time just two broad propositions:

(1) There is general agreement that the demand for electricity in the United States and the world will continue to grow in the years to come. In the long run such continuous growing demand can be reliably assured only by significant contributions from breeder-generated power.

(2) It is inconceivable that during this period of gradual depletion of traditional nonrenewable power sources, the United States would not act resolutely to tap, with the use of breeder technology, the readily available, already mined, and stored fuel whose energy equivalent is larger than all the known U.S. coal reserves and many times greater than the power stored in earth's proven oil fields.

Our members and the scientific community at large are keenly aware of the foregoing situation and suggest that progress on the breeder front be vigorously pursued. This concern is further accentuated by comprehension of the need for a secure energy base in order to sustain the cultural and economic well-being of our nation and of the people of the world.

As in other areas of social and economic endeavors, one finds individuals critical of the Breeder pathway, some of whom are professionally trained in the nuclear field. In a democracy all views should be given an opportunity to be heard, particularly when a project or proposal is under serious scrutiny. However, the making of rational and effective decisions must also take into consideration the weight of the professional opinion behind a particular view and act accordingly. In this context, I wish to assure the Committee that virtually all members of our organization and almost 90 percent of all knowledgeable professionals in our country consider the Clinch River Breeder Reactor to be an important technological step if we are to ensure the availability of energy for generations to come. We believe that we should not gamble our national future purely on luck or untested hopes. It is the responsibility of the experts to counsel, in the national interest, those entrusted with the power of decision. We hope such counsel will be appropriately weighed and that the Congress will continue to support the CRBR.

In conclusion, let me point out that breeder reactors have considerable similarities to hydroelectric plants, namely a high start-up cost which is later compensated many times over by low fuel and operating expenditures. Throughout the world major hydroelectric plants have been viewed as national assets worthy of governmental support. We strongly feel that the same applies to breeder reactor programs and therefore urge the Congress to continue the material support needed for the Clinch River Breeder—one of the cornerstones for American energy sufficiency and independence in the future.

Sincerely,

FREDERICK SEITZ,
Chairman, Scientists & Engineers for Secure Energy.●

● This "bullet" symbol identifies statements or insertions which are not spoken by the Member on the floor.

THE 50TH ANNIVERSARY OF UKRAINIAN HOLOCAUST

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Wednesday, September 28, 1983

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker, a tragedy of mammoth proportions was begun in 1932 and ended in 1933. An estimated 7 million people lost their lives in this 2-year period. Let us not forget the cause of this tragedy, and let us bring to the attention of all peoples, that those responsible for this heinous crime have never admitted their crime.

Of course, we are talking about the manmade famine in the Soviet Ukraine from 1932 through 1933. There can be no denial that this extermination plot was organized and carried out by Joseph Stalin, in an attempt to force collectivization on the independent-minded people of this region. All grain was nationalized with those dissenting either executed or deported to forced labor camps. Roadblocks and checkpoints were used in order to insure the success of the forced liquidation.

In the calculated, ruthless manner which reminds one of Auschwitz, Buchenwald, and Dachau, millions of Ukrainians were left to starve. Those of free-mind who saw the dangers of this new Soviet system were singled out and labeled as dangerous to Stalin's plans for a unified Soviet State. Unity through liquidation; danger in freedom.

We must not forget the Soviets have never, and given the true nature and intentions of the current Soviet leaders, will never admit or renounce their crime. It is up to freedom-loving people everywhere to insure this factural liquidation and extermination of approximately 7 million Ukrainians is not forgotten, and that the intense desire for freedom in the hearts of these people will be assimilated into our own hearts and minds. The truth cannot be ignored, and will not be forgotten.●

A DEFICIT SOLUTION

HON. CARROLL A. CAMPBELL, JR.

OF SOUTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. CAMPBELL. Mr. Speaker, it is obvious that everyone realizes the projected deficits must be reduced. The question has been and remains: Why is it that we cannot reduce the deficits when an overwhelming consensus exists to take such action?

Clearly, the Government cannot—as a matter of arithmetic, and commonsense—come close to balancing the budget with more defense cuts or with nickel-and-dime cuts of domestic, discretionary programs. As a matter of fact, these programs have not caused the current deficit problem. We have a structural deficit problem created by entitlement programs that are indexed to the Consumer Price Index, which has overstated inflation and pushed benefit increases higher than the increase in wages. Moreover, the American taxpayer does not want the budget balanced or the deficits reduced on his or her back, which would also reduce available capital for investment and retard consumer spending.

What options does this leave us? Demagoguery and placing the blame on individuals or political parties will only exacerbate the problem. We need to start immediately with serious consideration of viable alternatives and options to reduce these intolerable deficits. Representative JIM JONES and I have been working in a bipartisan spirit, which led to the introduction of H.R. 3790—the "2-percent solution." I have stood here before my colleagues several times to explain this bill and ask for you consideration and support.

This proposal is a compromise. It does not contain everything that I or others of like mind want, nor does it contain everything that JIM JONES and his colleagues want. However, this proposal would reduce the deficits by $180 billion over 6 years—a significant amount, to say the least. The savings would be accomplished by requiring that annual adjustments in both nonmeans-tested entitlement programs and tax indexing be tied to a 2-percent trigger and only that amount over a 2-percent increase in the Consumer Price Index be awarded. I believe this is a fair and balanced approach to economic sanity, in that it would have a minimal impact on most Americans. This bill would at last make a real dent in the deficits and begin the process of regaining control over the management of the budget.

The $180 billion is a number that I hope my colleagues will seriously consider. We can reduce the deficits by $180 billion with a relatively painless change that would be shared by virtually every citizen in this country. Mr. Speaker, it is time for us to bite the bullet and take bold action to regain control over these burdensome deficits. I invite my colleagues to join our bipartisan effort and forego any attempts to place the blame on anyone or anything else other than the structural problem confronting us.●

A SALUTE TO DR. TERESA CROSS

HON. MERVYN M. DYMALLY

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. DYMALLY. Mr. Speaker, next week, the 11th class of congressional science fellows, whose work is overseen by the American Association for the Advancement of Science (AAAS), will begin a year of service on Capitol Hill. These 42 men and women, the largest group of AAAS fellows to date, follow in the footsteps of predecessors who have established a tradition of excellence to which the program and the new fellows may look with pride. The only thing that can dampen our enthusiasm about the entering fellows is the sense of sadness we feel as we say goodbye to those who have now completed their year of fellowship.

Since October 1982, I have been fortunate indeed to have on my staff Dr. Teresa Cross, a social psychologist sponsored by the Duke University Round Table on Science and Public Affairs. Dr. Cross brought with her to my office all the finest qualities of a scientist and a scholar. On each issue, she insisted on acquiring a depth of understanding that would qualify her as an expert. We here sometimes jest that we are expected to be instant experts on any topic. Teresa took the charge seriously. I asked her, for example, to develop a Science, Research and Technology Subcommittee hearing on the impact of technology on employment. She developed the most extensive and thorough set of hearings held by the subcommittee during this session. She investigated the topic so completely in the process of choosing witnesses that I fully believe she could have been a witness herself.

Dr. Cross was also assigned to negotiate with officials at the Department of Education in order to secure a fair and objective hearing on the approval of an official accrediting agency for private, nontraditional schools and colleges. Her professionalism during the months of hard work on this issue earned her not only my respect but that of the many college administrators whose institutions would be aided by accreditation. One of her briefing letters to the accrediting applicant was held in such high regard that it was sent to several thousand professors and administrators to serve as a model of clear and effective writing.

The highest compliment I think one can pay a member of one's staff is to say that she brought honor and distinction to the office. Dr. Cross, in her year with us, did bring such honor and distinction to our office.

For providing us with fellows of the caliber exemplified by Dr. Cross, I wish to publicly express my thanks to those who administer the congressional science fellows program. I am sure those of my colleagues who have had the good fortune to obtain the services of one of these fellows join me in wishing Teresa and the other departing fellows, as well as the program that brought them to us, a lifetime of success and prosperity.●

ADDITIONS TO RECOGNITION OF AMERICAN FIREFIGHTERS LIST

HON. WILLIAM F. GOODLING

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. GOODLING. Mr. Speaker, on Wednesday, April 13, 1983, I submitted for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD an extension of remarks that brings recognition to 125 brave American firefighters who gave their lives in 1981 protecting all of us from the devastation of fires. The following two names were omitted from that list and I would like to add them at this time:

Robert Reed, East Meadow Fire Department, East Meadow, New York.

John P. McGuire, Battalion 13, Fire Department, New York, New York.

With these additions, the list is now complete.●

DR. HARVEY BLANK

HON. CLAUDE PEPPER

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. PEPPER. Mr. Speaker, I ask permission to insert within the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD news of a commemorative event of great medical and historic importance.

Twenty-five years ago today, Dr. Harvey Blank, chairman of the Department of Dermatology at the University of Miami/Jackson Memorial Medical Center, discovered the most effective treatment against fungus infections of the skin, scalp and nails, Griseofulvin. An antifungal drug of great importance in serious fungus infections, Griseofulvin, has been effective in its application in World War II and in Vietnam.

Dr. Harvey Blank treated a patient in 1958 at the Jackson Memorial Hospital who was suffering from an unusual athlete's foot-type fungus infection that invaded his body, causing several abscesses. When Dr. Blank tried Griseofulvin, an orally administered antifungal medication that had been used in Europe in agricultural projects, the condition improved. Following the ingestion of the medication in pill form, the 28-year-old improved immediately and experienced no side effects.

Further tests followed this dramatic recovery. Dr. Blank and the U.S. military, as well, conducted tests on Griseofulvin in December 1958. They were then able to evaluate its importance to human life, prescribing proper dosage and resulting effects. Today, Griseofulvin has been credited with treating more than 5 million cases of serious fungus infections, successfully.

The Department of Dermatology celebrates its pioneering use of Griseofulvin today and commemorates a plaque in Alamo Park honoring this event. As the plaque is unveiled at noon this day, Dr. Harvey Blank will be hailed as the first physician in the world to treat humans with this curative drug, recognized by dermatologists as the most effective treatment against fungus infections of the skin, scalp and nails.

Dr. Harvey Blank and The Jackson Memorial Medical Center, which is in my Congressional District, are to be highly commended for the great contribution they have made to the field of aging.●

REFLECTIONS ON FIRST VISIT TO ISRAEL

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, during the Memorial Day district work period, both Representatives HARKIN and I traveled to the Middle East. Although I had been to Israel many times before, this was TOM HARKIN'S first visit. On June 15, TOM gave a speech at Northmoor Country Club in Highland Park for the Country Club Day of the Jewish United Fund of Metropolitan Chicago. I found his speech to be very informative and perceptive. I particularly direct my colleagues' attention to TOM'S descriptions of the achievements of Israeli scientists and his reflections on his visit to Yad Va'shem, the Holocaust Memorial. I insert his entire speech in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

ISRAEL: THE CHALLENGE AND THE HOPE

(Speech given by Represenative Tom Harkin)

I am delighted to be here at Northmoor for the Country Club Day for JUF. I am sure you had more fun today than I did. You were able to play golf and tennis while I worked in vain to pare back the President's somewhat excessive military budget.

I know that the work of the Jewish United Fund of Metropolitan Chicago is more urgent than ever. Your own studies reveal that 15 percent of Chicago's Jewish Community are now living at or below the poverty level. And I have been told that two of the Illinois Public Aid offices have found a 30-percent increase in the number of Jewish applicants over the last 10 months. And this estimate is conservative because many of the new Jewish poor are too proud to ask for welfare.

Therefore, what JUF is doing is more important than ever. Your efforts cannot make up for all the programs which this Administration has cut. However, what you give to the more than 30 social welfare, health, and Jewish education agencies and services will do much to make the lives of these people much more tolerable. I congratulate you for this work.

I also am aware of the work which the United Jewish Appeal does in over 30 countries, including Israel. As you just heard, I returned from my first trip to Israel only 11 days ago, and I would like to share some of my impressions with you.

In Israel, I met with the Prime Minister, the President, and the leader of the opposition. Israel is a democracy, and a vibrant one. But it was not through the politicians that I made my real encounter with Israel.

Rather, it was through my meetings with Israelis working on energy projects. I serve on the House Science and Technology Committee. I wanted to learn about different scientific projects in Israel and in doing this I encountered the spirit of the Israeli people.

Let me tell you about three of them.

On my third day I met Dr Uri Marchaim who was born on a kibbutz. Uri did cancer research in the United States, but he left the United States and returned to Israel to work full time on a fascinating research project. He is working on a system to convert agricultural waste into usable products.

Uri's system provides all of the energy to heat the water at his kibbutz. However, as he took enormous patience to point out, his is not primarily an energy project. Methane fuel is only one byproduct. What Uri and his associates have developed is not something new—a digester which recycles wastes—but by producing more products, they have created a system which farms will want to purchase. The primary products are fertilizer and feed. The first is used to fertilize soil and the second is used to feed livestock as well as fish in commercial fish ponds.

Uri's dream is such wide use of his system that it can produce a second "green revolution"—8, 10 times over. But Uri is also a kibbutznik. He believes in the way of life they have fashioned for themselves at Kfar Giladi. He takes pride in the fact that 50 percent of all Israeli agricultural exports comes from the kibbutzim. And he has his dream to create a better and more productive Israel and a better and more productive world.

The second individual who left a strong impression on me was Abiel Ravin; Abi. He is in charge of building the solar ponds located at the northern end of the Dead Sea. The solar ponds are a fascinating and innovative idea which is based on some very simple concepts.

In an ordinary pond, the Sun's rays heat the bottom and raise the temperature of the lower layer of water. Hot water is lighter so the warmer bottom layer rises to the surface, and the heat is dispersed.

In this solar pond, the bottom level is water from the Dead Sea, much heavier than ordinary water. The heat is contained in the bottom layer. The day we were there the temperature of the bottom layer was 210 degrees Fahrenheit.

The hot water is then pumped into a boiler to heat freon to drive the turbines which generates electricity for the people of Israel.

Abi, just like Uri, also has a dream. Someday he would like to turn half of the Dead Sea into a huge solar lake, each section divided with a curtain. And this solar lake, he believes, could produce enough electricity to supply all of Israel's needs.

The third individual I met on my last day in Israel was Prof. Renata Reisfeld at the Hebrew University in Jerusalem. This remarkable woman who in 1981 was awarded the world's first "Solar Energy Chair" spent her childhood in war time Poland fleeing the Nazis. She had no time for school and it was not until the early fifties after coming to Israel, she began her education.

After learning eight languages and becoming a professor of inorganic chemistry, she decided at the time of the Yom Kippur war to turn her attention to solar energy.

She explained that her work could have not been accomplished without her natural curiosity, but that "Israel's desperate need for cheaper fuel was the moving force" for her research.

What she has accomplished with fluorescent solar concentrators is fascinating and hopeful. First, the specially treated glass can absorb diffuse, not just direct sunlight. One of the major expenses in present systems is the tracking device needed to receive direct sunlight.

Second, the treated pieces of glass or plastic have different colors and the different colors absorb the energy of different parts of the spectrum. How the whole system works is this way. Sunlight, direct or indirect, is absorbed by the plate and the plate acts as a concentrator directing the power of the light to the edges of the plate where photovoltaic cells are attached. The cell, in turn, converts the Sun's energy into electricity.

Her system, when commercially developed, could be 30 times cheaper than present technology.

I might just add that two of those projects received partial funding from the U.S. Department of Energy. Uri's project support was cut off in 1981, despite a contract. Fortunately, he has managed to make his work commercially viable.

Professor Reisfeld's funding will end in September this year. The Energy Department is ending funding well before the research has reached commercial viability. That makes no sense at all. There may be an oil glut at the moment, but it will not last. We need, and Israel especially needs, viable alternatives to oil.

Unfortunately this administration has a very limited vision in developing technologies for energy at the basic research state. Only nuclear energy is to be supported by the Government. This narrow ideological vision, unless something is done, will bring an end of U.S. support for many promising projects, including Professor Reisfeld's.

These three individuals exemplify the aspirations, the spirit, and the vision of Israel. They are fashioning for themselves and their country new technologies and a new way of life. They taught me not only about their work but also their country. Literally, I had the feeling being with them, that there is nothing they cannot accomplish with their intellect, hard work, and determination.

When visiting them, I also traveled to the Golan Heights and the Good Fence, the border between Israel and Lebanon. Through my own eyes I came to understand why the Golan Heights must remain Israeli territory.

Let me now turn to Israeli politics.

Israeli politics are incredibly lively and volatile. The Israeli people have strong opinions and do not hesitate to voice them. The major political coalitions—Likud and Labor—take widely different views on the two major topics of the day—Lebanon and the West Bank.

My assistant tells of arriving at the home of a friend he had not seen in 13 years. However, he arrived at 9 o'clock (news time). Therefore the reunion had to wait 20 minutes until the news was over.

Listening and watching the news is a passion with the Israeli people. After five wars in 25 years, the obsession with news is not surprising. Think of it. That is incredible. People should not have to live in such insecurity.

And it is even more understandable when one reviews the different ideas Likud and Labor each have concerning Lebanon or the West Bank. Although there is heated debate within the Likud coalition on the Lebanese war, the Likud basically supports the goals and accomplishments of the war, especially the agreement with the Lebanese Government.

The Likud position, the Government position, is that Israel will not withdraw unless Syria and the PLO agree to leave Lebanon.

The Labor coalition, on the other hand, opposed all of the Lebanon operation beyond the 40-kilometer limit. When we were in Israel, Labor called for an immediate unilateral withdrawal from central and eastern Lebanon.

But if you look at each position, each is fraught with peril. If Syria does not agree to withdraw, Israeli soldiers patrolling the east and central areas will continue to be picked off by small raiding parties. Five soldiers were killed last week bringing the total killed to 500 since the invasion began. And as opposition leader Peres pointed out, there are over 700,000 guns in private hands, one for every three people in Lebanon.

On the other hand, if Israel does engage in unilateral withdrawal, it opens that area for a return by either the Syrians or the PLO or both. A premature withdrawal may also endanger the fragile state of the Lebanese Government's efforts to rebuild a strong army capable of controlling the country itself.

Or look at the West Bank. Likud's position is automony with free right of Jewish immigration. Labor's position is essentially the Jordan option: return the territory to Jordan with strong Israeli defense outposts.

In the present context, the Likud position is close to annexation since there is no one to negotiate with on autonomy, and elections on the West Bank have produced pro-PLO mayors. But if it is annexation, what is to be done with the West Bank Arabs? If they are denied Israeli citizenship, the democratic ideals of the state are destroyed. Conversely, if they are granted full citizenship, in the near future Israel will no longer be a Jewish state.

The Labor position also has its troubles. Does King Hussein want to negotiate? On April 10, he firmly rejected the Reagan plan to participate in negotiations. Then it was the fault of the PLO. But does Hussein truly want to recover the West Bank? He is already a minority ruler within Transjordan which is 60 percent Palestinian and only 40 percent Bedouin. And would the Jordanian option satisfy the nationalistic aspirations of the Palestinians?

One thing is clear: there are no quick, easy solutions. No solution is obvious. For this reason, it is wrong that every U.S. Administration believes at some time that it has the solution and therefore it must pressure Israel into accepting it.

The Reagan administration tried once again over the past year. The President apparently hoped that Hussein would conclude that if the United States were willing to exert pressure on Israel before peace talks began, the United States would ultimately exert even more pressure once the negotiating process became more formal. And, therefore, Hussein would join the peace talks.

Toward this end, the administration considered selling F-5's and Stinger missiles to Jordan (congressional opposition stopped the sale), suspended the sale of 75 F-16's to Israel, tried to get Congress to reduce grant military aid by $200 million and refused to supply data necessary for the building of the Israeli fighter jet called the "Lavi."

And none of it worked. King Hussein could not or would not join the peace process.

Why?

Well as I grow older, I come to believe that the world is divided between those who want to reach solutions through talking and compromise and those who do not. I went to Israel fervently hoping to find in my talks with Palestinians a willingness to accept the existence of Israel as a Jewish state in the Middle East.

Such people do exist, but they are few and they are not in leadership positions. My assistant had a discussion with one Palestinian that went like this: "I want Israel out. No. No. You misunderstand. I don't want to kill them. They can stay here, but they must live according to our laws, Islamic laws. (You won't consider an Israeli state and a Palestinian state living side by side in peace?) No, it is all or nothing."

How do you explain such intransigence?

I have been told by some Mideast experts that while the Arab national character can accept the existence of minorities within their presence, they cannot accept one of those minorities being a majority and ruling within their own state. It fundamentally violates the principles of Arab Islam.

In time, they also tell me that may change as more and more people are educated and westernized. They say it is no surprise that Egypt, the most western of Arab states, was the first and Lebanon the second to conclude a treaty with Israel.

So we must be patient and steady in our course. The administration has now wisely withdrawn all the earlier pressures it applied to Israel. It apparently now realizes that Israel is our best ally in the Middle East and there is no quick and easy solution.

With patience, a change may occur in the next 5 years, 10 or 15 years. We should watch for it. We should encourage any Arab state or leader who is willing to live in peace with Israel. We should also be cautious.

Israel is one of the great achievements in the 20th century. With serious problems and under severe threats, it has remained a democracy and maintained its ideals.

On one of my first days in Israel I visited Yad Ve'shem, the memorial for the 6 million Jews killed in the holocaust. Like most gentiles, I am aware of what the Nazis and their allies did to the Jewish people. But only at Yad Ve'shem did I feel the enormity of the crime and the enormity of the loss.

In the semidarkness of the interior hall, the names of the Nazi death camps, carved in stones, are dimly lit by a single torch. In another hall, there are pillars for each country and the number of Jews killed by the Nazis.

At Yad Ve'shem I experienced two simple truths. First, the world is still beset by anti-Semitism. The forces which unleased the murder of a people simply because they were Jews still exists. In Russia, for example, strong anti-Semitism is contained just below the surface, and everyday official policy not only makes life harder for people simply because they are Jewish, but also refuses to let them emigrate. In our own hemisphere in Argentina, the armed forces have been taught to fear and hate Jews, and to see Jewish people as part of an international conspiracy.

In such a world, Jews must have a secure refuge, a home, an Israel.

That is a much stated truth, but there is another truth that I perceived at Yad Ve'shem. Israel must exist and must be accepted in the community of nations as a Jewish state if one day we are to destroy anti-Semitism.

Anti-Semitism in the 20th century is the legacy of two conquering religions: Christianity and Islam. Periodically, each has become more tolerant of Jews and of each other. Each has erupted in cataclysms of killing Jews—the worst, the holocaust—by Christian Europe. And always there was no force, except moral force, to oppose the persecution.

Now a physical force exists—Israel. Jews throughout the world have a security they never enjoyed before.

At Yad Ve'shem I reaffirmed my belief, my hope that the world community will never again accept that kind of anti-Semetic nightmare. But I also believe that it is Israel—a Jewish state—which guarantees our promises as Christians that it will never happen again.

I have visited Israel, and I feel very close to the people and their aspirations. I assure you that I, as one Member of Congress, will continue to support it and work to maintain the special relationship that exists between the United States and Israel.●

IN HONOR OF L. P. (BUB) GREER, JR. ON HIS RETIREMENT FROM COATS & CLARK

HON. ED JENKINS

OF GEORGIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. JENKINS. Mr. Speaker, it is my privilege to pay tribute today to a man who devoted 35 years of his life to the textile industry and yet integrated his family and community into that life.

Coats & Clark, Inc. noted L. P. (Bub) Greer's loyalty and service by breaking tradition and naming its facility on Rose Lane in Toccoa, Ga., the L. P. Greer, Jr., Plant.

His career with Coats & Clark took him from chief engineer to vice president of the Finishing Division, and finally, to vice president and head of the Manufacturing Division, covering all of the 10 Georgia manufacturing and research facilities, employing 4,000 people.

Bub Greer's dedication extended to his community in his service as a public official and a civic and youth activity leader.

His leadership stretched from the Capital City Club, director of the Rotary Club, director of the Executive Council, Boy Scouts of America, vice president of the Northeast Georgia Council Boy Scouts, member of the Stephens County Hospital Authority, chairman of the Toccoa-Stephens County Planning Commission, Toccoa city commissioner, mayor of Toccoa, steward of the Toccoa First United Methodist Church, president of Georgia Textile Manufacturers Association, board of trustees for the Alumni Association of Georgia Tech and chairman of the Georgia Ports Authority.

In the words of the Hon. Phil Landrum, former Congressman of the Ninth District of Georgia, and I quote:

In the most fiercely competitive of technical industries, Bub Greer is able to move from the board room meeting of executives to the loom room of the weaver and onto the playgrounds of the weaver's children with equal skill, leadership and grace, so rare in the industrial world of today.●

WEEK OF THE NURSE

HON. STAN PARRIS

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. PARRIS. Mr. Speaker, I would today like to recognize the week of October 2, 1983, as "Week of the Nurse", and with great pride, salute the nursing staff of my district's Alexandria Hospital. This week is sponsored by the Virginia Nurses Association, in cooperation with the Virginia Licensed Practical Nurse Association and the Student Nurses Association of Virginia, and has been officially proclaimed by the Governor with a certificate of recognition.

I was informed by Laura Tartaro, chairperson of the Alexandria Hospital's Organizational Committee, that this week will be observed with a "Walk for Health" which will start at the hospital at 11:30. The march will continue for 4 miles, and will include custom-designed buttons, balloons, and T-shirts for its participants.

Mr. Speaker, the nursing staff of the Alexandra Hospital, and others which similarly serve their communities around the State, deserve our praise and commendation for the unsung work they provide year around. I believe designation of this week as "Week of the Nurse" is a fitting tribute in recognition of all their contributions.●

IT'S TIME TO ADDRESS NONPOINT SOURCES OF WATER POLLUTION

HON. JAMES L. OBERSTAR

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. OBERSTAR. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing legislation to control nonpoint sources of water pollution. I hope the Nonpoint Source Control Act of 1983 will be incorporated in amendments to the Clean Water Act to be reported out by the Committee on Public Works and Transportation later this year.

This bill is intended to establish a workable, achievable approach to the control of nonpoint sources of pollution. I have worked with many organizations involved in and affected by this legislation; however, I look forward to full exploration of this complex issue by individuals and organizations during upcoming hearings before the Water Resources Subcommittee of the House Public Works and Transportation Committee.

The bill recognizes that, unlike point sources of pollution, nonpoint sources do not lend themselves to a national control program with national regulations and standards. Rather, controls must be developed at the State and local levels to address local conditions.

The Federal role, therefore, is to provide encouragement, both financial and other; to provide leadership in elevating nonpoint sources to a national priority; to assure that the Federal investment is wisely spent, and that implementation is moving forward expeditiously.

Mr. Speaker, much work has been done in this area, in planning under section 208 of the Clean Water Act, and in implementation by the States, even without Federal assistance. The National Association of Conservation Districts conducted a survey which indicates that 44 States are taking some action to control agricultural nonpoint sources. A survey by the National Council of the Paper Industry for Air and Stream Improvement indicates that 40 States are moving to implement programs for silviculture nonpoint source controls. There is considerable interest in doing much more, if funds and other encouragement from the Federal Government were available.

Further, many of the techniques, known as best management practices (BMP), to control a number of nonpoint sources of pollution, have been developed over the years, although there is still much work to be done. Again, we need encouragement to put these practices into place.

This bill would provide that Federal leadership and encouragement, building on past planning; supplementing ongoing State implementation programs; providing incentives to States, substate agencies and individuals, to put those BMP's and other measures already tested into effect on an expanded basis, as well as to continue to work out new approaches to one of the most serious forms of water pollution.

The bill establishes an implementation program at the State and local level, as a necessary and logical follow-through to the planning and data gathering already done under section 208 and other sections of the Clean Water Act. States would be required to develop 4-year implementation plans, specifying stream segments to be addressed, categories and subcategories of sources to be controlled, BMP's and other measures to be used, and to propose expeditious timetables for achieving these controls. Enforcement, technical assistance, education, training, and other methods would be part of the plan.

The bill emphasizes the need to begin the control process at the local and State levels, by those who will be involved in implementing the plans. It requires the States, in developing their implementation plans, to work closely with local agencies, such as conservation districts, 208 agencies, watershed districts and others which have experience in controlling nonpoint sources.

The bill sets no time deadlines by which BMP's must be implemented. I believe a fixed deadline for installation of control measures would be counterproductive, encouraging States to come forth with only those plans they know they can achieve. It does, however, require the States, working with substate agencies and organizations, and individuals, to propose their own timetables for expeditious achievement of this goal. I underline the word expeditious; we want the States to be bold as well as realistic in setting their goals and we want the Administrator to insist on ambitious plans, as long as there is a realistic chance of success.

Once the State submits its report and plan to the Administrator of EPA, the Administrator has 6 months to review it. Unless the Administrator specifically disapproves all or parts of that report, it is automatically approved. The Administrator may disapprove all or portions of a plan if the State does not have adequate authority to implement it; if it is not sufficiently expeditious; or if it is otherwise inadequate.

If a State fails to submit a plan, or if its plan is not approved, a local agency may, with the permission of the State, assume implementation for its area. Such an organization must have a history of experience in nonpoint source controls, and have authority to implement a control program.

Also, a State may request EPA to provide technical assistance in developing a portion of its overall plan.

In developing the implementation plan, and in collecting whatever additional data are necessary, States are encouraged to use funds under sections 106, 205(g), and 205(j).

States are encouraged to use programs under other laws to complement this bill wherever possible.

There is some evidence that other Federal programs may work at odds with nonpoint source control, placing farmers in catch-22 positions, or encouraging practices which would counteract nonpoint source control measures. To better coordinate the nonpoint source control effort, the bill requires the States to identify other Federal programs which run counter to their nonpoint source control plans, and to recommend changes in these programs. The Administrator of EPA would forward these recommendations to the appropriate Federal agencies, which would be required to consider the States' comments and, to the extent practicable, administer their own programs in a way that helps States implement their plans.

I hope that the cumulative comments from the States, together with their recommendations for change, would be helpful to other Federal agencies in solving a problem which reaches across agency mandates, and affects the wealth of this Nation: our lands, and our waters.

The bill also extends section 304(k), which authorizes EPA to enter into agreements with other Federal agencies, and provides supplemental funds for programs under these agencies which could assist in controlling nonpoint sources of pollution.

The bill contains a provision whereby a downstream State with an approved implementation plan may, if its waters are being affected by upstream pollution, request the Administrator to call a management conference of States along the water body, and to resolve the problem between the States. I believe such an approach is fair to those States willing to do a good job. We cannot ask a State to spend its financial resources for water cleanup if its own citizens cannot enjoy the benefits, or if they are in fact damaged by pollution from another State. The management conference concept goes back to the earliest days of water pollution control and the Federal Water Pollution Control Act of 1956. Under this approach, Lake Erie, a "dead" lake, began its return to health. I believe the negotiated approach can prove a useful means to resolve nonpoint source issues among States, and assure that those States which are willing to control nonpoint sources will not suffer from another State's indifference.

In developing the implementation plan, and in collecting whatever additional data are necessary, States are encouraged to use funds under sections 106, 205(g) and 205(j) of the Clean Water Act.

For implementing the plan, the bill provides $150 million per year on a 50/50 matching basis. The tools available would include education, training, technical assistance, cost sharing, and other services. I want to emphasize, however, that the States are to be judicious in their use of cost sharing for projects. There is simply not enough money in this modest authorization to fund many projects. Instead, the purpose of this bill is to encourage implementation plans at the State level. Cost sharing is but one of many tools, and no one should suspend action in the anticipation of funds becoming available in the future. Accordingly, I will be interested to gather testimony on whether a cap should be placed on cost-sharing, and what that cap should be.

As a further incentive, the bill contains no distribution formula; rather, States are encouraged to come in for as much money as they can match—although there is a cap of 15 percent of the appropriation per State.

Congress will keep close watch over what is going on across the land, and provide stronger measures if such are necessary. The Administrator is required to report annually to Congress on how the program is going; and to report, by January 1988, on whether this incentive program is working, or whether stronger measures are necessary.

Mr. Speaker, I cannot overstate the need to vigorously control nonpoint sources of pollution. Preliminary information gathered by the Conservation Foundation indicates that the total economic costs of sediment and pollutants associated with erosion may amount to as much as $2.5 to $3 billion per year, for water treatment, dredging, for loss of reservoir capacity, for flooding, channel maintenance, and damage to many other resources. Nonpoint sources carry not only sediment but nutrients, pesticides, and other toxic substances. It is a serious problem in urban and suburban areas as well as in rural areas.

The nonpoint problem can no longer be neglected. There is broad agreement that action should be taken. While no overall consensus has been reached on all aspects, many groups have been working together to develop areas of agreement.

I have worked with these groups, and sincerely thank them for sharing their ideas with me. I believe this bill is a good starting point; and an approach which will work and will yield the best results. I look forward to continued and expanded dialog with all those involved in the effort to control nonpoint sources of pollution, because I know that their support is critical to the success of this program.

Following is a section-by-section analysis of the Nonpoint Source Control Act of 1983:

THE NONPOINT SOURCE CONTROL ACT OF 1983

SECTION-BY-SECTION SUMMARY

The bill adds a new Section 319, "Nonpoint Source Control Implementation Plans."

Sec. 319. (a) Report (data): States are to provide EPA with certain information, based on data previously gathered under Sec. 208 and other sections of the Clean Water Act, on stream segments with nonpoint source problems; sources of these problems; and description of the State's current control efforts. This information is to be updated annually.

(b) and (c) Plan: States are also required to provide EPA with a 4-year implementation plan, developed in cooperation with local agencies and organizations, listing stream segments to be addressed, describing proposed Best Management Practices (BMP's) to be undertaken, and an expeditious implementation schedule with estimated dates for implementation. The States are to report annually to EPA on the progress of the implementation efforts.

Coordination: States are also to report to EPA on other Federal programs adversely impacting their efforts to control nonpoint sources, and recommend modifications which would make these programs more consistent with nonpoint source control. The Administrator is to forward these recommendations to the appropriate Federal agencies, which are to consider the recommendations and to the extent possible carry out their programs consistent with nonpoint source controls.

(d) Local Agencies: States are required to the maximum extent practicable to utilize local agencies and organizations with experience in nonpoint source controls.

(e), (f), and (g) Approval/disapproval; partial approval: A State's plan is automatically approved unless EPA disapproves all or parts of it within 6 months of submission. EPA may disapprove the plan if the State does not have adequate authority to implement it, if the schedule is not sufficiently expeditious, or if it is otherwise inadequate to meet the goals of the bill. If a State refuses to submit or resubmit a plan, a local agency may, with the approval of the State, receive technical assistance and funding to implement a plan for its area. A State may request technical assistance from EPA in developing portions of its plan. The State then must implement the plan.

(h) Interstate waters: Where nonpoint sources from one State are polluting the waters of another State, the downstream State may, if it has an approved plan, petition EPA to call an interstate conference of all States along the water body. States are to work out with EPA and implement an acceptable solution to the problem.

(i) Funding: The bill authorizes $150 million per year, through 1988, in 50/50 matching grants to States to carry out their plans. There is no formula, but there is a 15-percent maximum cap per State. States are required to maintain their current effort while using funds under this bill for new efforts.

(j) Reports: The Administrator of EPA is required to report annually to Congress on the progress of the program; and to provide a comprehensive report, on January 1, 1988, on the success of the incentives program, and whether further measures are warranted in future legislation.●

CAPT. PAUL ROY

HON. JOHN R. McKERNAN, JR.

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. McKERNAN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to honor one of the American marines serving with the multinational forces in Beirut, Lebanon, Capt. Paul Roy of Winslow, Maine. Captain Roy is the marine who is pictured on the September 26 issue of Newsweek magazine.

Captain Roy should be honored, as should all the American marines in Lebanon, because he is courageously serving the United States in a dangerous situation. As commander of Alpha Company, 1st Battalion, 8th U.S. Marines, Captain Roy has experienced firsthand much of the tragedy resulting from the civil war in Lebanon. In particular, two marines in his company, 2d Lt. Donald Losey and S. Sgt. Alexander M. Ortega, were killed in the line of duty. Despite the difficult circumstances under which Captain Roy must command, he has kept the composure and professionalism that is typical of a marine.

Throughout the 4 months he has been in Beirut, Captain Roy has expressed his dedication to his mission in that country. In a recent interview, he stated that "the Marines do not want to leave. If we left now, we would feel that the cause for which we came was for naught." His outlook, in light of what he has certainly experienced, is admirable.

We can all be proud of the job that Captain Roy and his compatriots are doing. I am sure that his parents, Mr. and Mrs. Harold Roy of Winslow, are especially proud. I sincerely hope that the marines' mission in Lebanon will be completed early and successfully so Captain Roy and the other men will return home soon.●

AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2867, BANNING FEDERAL LANDS FOR HAZARDOUS WASTE DISPOSAL

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I have printed an amendment in today's CONGRESSIONAL RECORD which would ban the use of Federal lands for treatment, storage, or disposal of hazardous waste generated by private industry not pursuant to a Federal project or program. This amendment is offered in response to an idea proposed by some members of the President's Cabinet Council that we use Federal lands as a dumping ground for privately generated hazardous wastes. I strongly believe that we should not use our Federal lands for privately generated hazardous wastes and I offer this amendment to make it clear that our Federal lands will not become the dump of last resort.

No one can deny that private industry has had a tough time finding wastes sites. I feel this situation is true because the public is skeptical about enforcement of our hazardous waste regulations. Many firms have invited public skepticism by opposing hazardous waste regulations and by displaying a strong unwillingness to take remedial action on their own. Consequently today, industry faces some obstacles in finding acceptable hazardous wastes sites. The solution, however, is not to turn to the Federal Government for relief. The solution is not to turn our Federal lands into the dump of last resort. Rather, a better solution would be to work with Federal and State agencies to implement procedures which give the public confidence in waste disposal. A more sensible solution would be if industry would follow the spirit of RCRA and would recover some wastes and conserve, so less wastes would be generated.

This amendment allows two noteworthy exceptions to the ban on Federal lands for hazardous wastes. The amendment allows the Administrator of the Environmental Protection Agency to use Federal lands for storage and limited disposal methods in the course of cleaning up a Superfund site. In addition, the amendment allows the storage, disposal, or treatment of Federal lands for the purpose of carrying out research related to hazardous waste treatment. The Administrator would only be allowed to use Federal lands for these two purposes if the Administrator determined that there is no other reasonably available facility.

These two exceptions are consistent with current practices at the EPA and recognize the necessary role EPA plays in dealing with the hazardous waste problem. These exceptions in no way compromise current EPA procedures, procedures I should add which are used in rare circumstances. Instead, the intent of the ban is to prevent our Federal lands from becoming a general dump site for an industry which has trouble finding a site. This amendment would prevent Federal lands from becoming the dump site of last resort and instead force industry to deal with the problem in an honest and forthright manner.

I believe it is necessary to comment on what the amendment does not say. The amendment does not prohibit the use of Federal lands for wastes generated by Federal programs. To do so, would be in my opinion, hypocritical. The amendment only deals with hazardous wastes as defined by the Resource Conservation and Recovery Act. And the amendment only addresses Federal lands owned or leased by the United States and specifically exempts lands on the Outer Continental Shelf and Indian or Indian tribal lands. In addition, the amendment only allows the Administrator to use Federal lands in the course of removal action taken in accordance with the Superfund program. Removal action is only taken in the most extreme circumstances, and consequently the universe of affected wastes would be relatively small.

I encourage my colleagues to study this amendment and consider it carefully. I have worked closely with the EPA in drafting this amendment so as not to restrict their actions any more than necessary. I feel this amendment is an important statement on what our Federal lands should be used for and what should be the role of the Federal Government in the area of hazardous waste disposal.●

TRIBUTE TO LARRY GUILLEMETTE, SR.

HON. CHRISTOPHER H. SMITH

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. SMITH of New Jersey. Mr. Speaker, I rise today to pay tribute to an outstanding American, and distinguished member of his community. I rise to pay tribute to Larry Guillemette, Sr.

For 28 years, Larry has been a member of the Knights of Columbus, and on Saturday, October 8, 1983, his family, friends, and fellow Knights will be honoring him for his service to the K of C and more importantly for his recent tenure as Grand Knight of Saint Thomas the Apostle Council No. 4815 in Old Bridge, N.J.

Ever since Larry joined the Knights of Columbus, Woodhaven Council in Queens, N.Y. in 1955, he has willing to give his all for the K of C. He was involved in the Woodhaven Council, and it was at a fourth degree K of C function that he met Pat, his wife of 25 years. When Larry left the Woodhaven Council, and New York for the suburbs in New Jersey, his involvement in the Knights went with him. He joined Immaculate Conception Council No. 4907 in Spotswood, N.J. where his father-in-law celebrated his 40th year of membership.

In 1976, Larry transferred his membership to his present council. St. Thomas Council No. 4815, which was chartered in the early 1960's and is one of the largest councils in the State of New Jersey. New Jersey also has one of the largest K of C jurisdictions in the United States, numbering in excess of 65,000 men. Since joining St. Thomas Council No. 4815 in 1976, Larry has been a man devoted to the council. He has served the council in almost every capacity, and on July 11, 1982, he had the honor of being installed as Grand Knight. I know that Larry was honored on becoming Grand Knight, but I am sure the occasion was made all the more important since it was during the centennial year of the Knights of Columbus.

The example seen in Larry's dedication to what I believe is one of our Nation's finest service organizations just gives witness to the fact that during these times when man's humanity toward his fellow man has been severely tested, the Knights of Columbus have stood firm.

I offer Larry my heartiest congratulations and that of my colleagues in this House for his service as Grand Knight and my best wishes for a successful year as Faithful Navigator.●

DENNIS A. JOYNER, DAV NATIONAL COMMANDER

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, this past August, Dennis A. Joyner, a combat disabled Vietnam veteran, was elected National Commander of the Disabled American Veterans at their national convention in Los Angeles, Calif. Mr. Joyner had held positions as an elected national vice commander in the DAV since 1979.

The Disabled American Veterans have established an outstanding record in promoting the interest of all veterans, but particularly those of the Vietnam veteran. Those of us who serve on the House Veterans Affairs Committee are well aware of the tenacious efforts of the DAV national organization here in Washington and throughout the country in safeguarding the rights of the 2.3 million American men and women disabled in service to their country. A considerable percentage of those service-connected disabled veterans served during the Vietnam war where statistics prove that combat personnel sustained and survived far more catastrophic disabilities than those who served in prior wars.

Over 96 percent of the DAV's outstanding corps of service officers, who provide direct assistance to thousands of veterans across the country, served in the Armed Forces during the Vietnam war. For this perspective as well, Dennis Joyner became the fourth Vietnam veteran to be elected national commander of the three-quarter million member veterans' service organization.

Mr. Joyner represented the DAV's Department of Pennsylvania as both 2d and 3d junior vice commander. He served as commander and chapter service officer of the DAV Chapter No. 36 in Vandergrift, Pa. He is presently only one of two who have served in the DAV's highest national office to have been awarded that organization's Outstanding Disabled Veteran of the Year Award.

Commander Joyner served in the U.S. Army, 9th Infantry Division in Vietnam. While on patrol in June 1969 in the Mekong Delta he became a triple amputee due to a booby trap explosion and received the bronze star as well as the Purple Heart.

Commander Joyner is very active in civic and church activities and is a member of the Veterans of Foreign Wars, the American Legion, AMVETS and the Court Administrators Association. He received a BA degree in accounting in 1975 from Robert Morris College, Pittsburgh after having earned an A.A. degree from the Community College of Allegheny County in 1974. He served for 4 years as accountant for the Westmoreland County Juvenile Service Center and fiscal manager for the Westmoreland County courts, Greensburg, Pa. He was appointed Westmoreland County court administrator in 1979 and is responsible for administration of the eight-judge-court-system and all court-related offices. Commander Joyner lives in Apollo, Pa. with his wife Donna. He is the father of two sons, Dennis Jr. and Paul.

Mr. Speaker, it is a tribute to the Disabled American Veterans and to the veteran community as a whole that Commander Joyner, a Vietnam veteran, has overcome what many would have considered insurmountable disabilities to become a recognized leader in the State of Pennsylvania and within his national organization. As chairman of the House Veterans Affairs Subcommittee on Hospitals and Health Care, I would like to congratulate him on his election and wish him well during the coming year.●

A TRIBUTE TO THE O'CONNOR HOSPITAL '89ERS AND THE YU-AI KAI ORGANIZATION

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, I rise to honor those who work for the O'Connor Hospital '89ers and the Yu-Ai Kai organization. These two organizations will be cosponsoring a luncheon this week in order to honor individuals of Japanese ancestry who pioneered our region of California.

The pioneers honored by the '89ers and the Yu-Ai Kai will include people who have lived in Santa Clara Valley since the turn of the century. These pioneers played an important role in developing the Santa Clara Valley into one of the most productive and pleasant areas of our Nation, and they could not be honored by organizations finer than the O'Connor Hospital '89ers and the Yu-Ai Kai.

In 1899, with the noble efforts of the Daughters of Charity, Amanda and Myles O'Connor succeeded in establishing a health care facility for the elderly and the impoverished. And the O'Connor Hospital '89ers have successfully perpetuated the work begun by the O'Connors last century by developing the O'Connor Hospital from a rural health facility into one of our area's most sophisticated medical centers. And through that medical center, the O'Connors' dream of serving the aged has been realized again and again.

It is also appropriate that the Yu-Ai Kai, a community organization dedicated to providing essential human services to the aged, is cosponsoring this wonderful event. Recognizing the contributions and of pioneers of Japanese ancestry is, of course, very important to me. When my father and mother settled in the city of San Jose more than 70 years ago, they shared a vision that their children would have the opportunity for meaningful and productive lives, and I owe my well-being to the success of that dream.

Mr. Speaker, I ask you and all other Members of the House of Representatives to join me, the O'Connor 89ers, and the Yu-Ai Kai in honoring all of those pioneers who came to the Santa Clara Valley with little more than their determination and their willingness to work.●

DICKINSON HIGH SCHOOL CLASS OF 1934 CELEBRATES GOLDEN ANNIVERSARY

HON. FRANK J. GUARINI

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. GUARINI. Mr. Speaker, on October 2, 1983, Dickinson High School, a most illustrious institution of learning in Jersey City, will be spotlighted on a very important occasion. On this date, the class of 1934 will have a dinner dance at the West End Manor in Long Branch, N.J., where many of Dickinson's most august graduates will be joined by contemporary personnel.

The school, located at Palisade and Newark Avenues, Jersey City, is a magnificent structure, sitting on a hilltop, which overlooks a good portion of Jersey City and nearby Hoboken. This location was deliberately planned because the city fathers wanted to impress the public traveling on the transportation systems below, at that time, with the importance of Jersey City and their municipal pride in Jersey City.

It was built by the last Republican mayor Jersey City ever had, Mark Fagan.

Built as the first comprehensive high school in America, visitors came from all over the world, from the Far East, Europe, South America, and other parts of the world to see it, because it was the first high school that offered academic, technical, vocational, and business training all in one building.

The site was an Army trading post in the War of 1812, the Civil War, and the First World War, and was used as a munitions plant in the Second World War.

Before the high school was here, Gens. Washington and Lafayette used to survey the troops here during the Revolutionary War. It was a lookout for the British troops in the harbor.

Dickinson High School, the oldest public high school in Jersey City, is a national historic landmark.

It is a magnificant example of John T. Rolend's work, who also designed the Jersey City Medical Center. The structure is beaux arts design. The first half of the school was built in 1906 as an academic high school, which would serve as a college preparatory school; the second half was opened in 1912, and was designed for vocational education.

The finest materials were used in the construction of this building, as we can see by the marble and handpainted murals in the entranceway and classical friezes which decorate the stage. It has its own powerplant with generators used in the early days to supply heat and light which still can be used in emergencies.

Its auditorium has 2,000 seats and was for a long time the largest public hall in New Jersey. Everyone of importance visiting the area, including Presidents of the United States, came here. In 1912, Theordore Roosevelt, William Howard Taft, and Woodrow Wilson all spoke on successive nights, campaigning against each other for President of the United States.

However, the true beauty of Dickinson High School is the hundreds of thousands of students who have been educated under the guidance of interested, competent, and dynamic teachers. This facility in the pre-World War II era had more than 5,000 students in attendance during some of the school years, working on a split schedule from early morning to the evening. The administrators effectively provided for the needs despite the grueling schedule.

One of the great principals of Dickinson High School, Dr. Frank McMackin, now age 95, will be in attendance at the 50th anniversary dinner Saturday evening. Also in attendance will be Theresa Mahoney, the 1934 graduating class' favorite English teacher.

The graduates will be coming from more than a dozen States, including California, Louisiana, Delaware, and Virginia. From South Carolina comes Martin J. Higgins, who is a survivor of World War II's Battle of the Bulge.

Many of Dickinson High School's finest young men served our Nation, including Al Blozis, who was killed in action during World War II.

Many of the 1934 class showed their prowess on the athletic fields. Ed Franco became a legend in his time as an all-American lineman with Fordham University as one of the "Seven Blocks of Granite." He has been elected to the prestigious College Hall of Fame.

Some of the athletes of that class who will be there include George Bizelewicz, Peter McGovern, Sal Pisano, Ed Toohey, Ed Bresnick, and Dick O'Reilly.

A special honored guest will be their football coach, Charles Witkowski, an attorney who was elected a city commissioner and a mayor of Jersey City.

The class of 1934 joins the list of outstanding Dickinson High School alumni members such as Maj. Gen. Leland S. Hobbs, of the U.S. Army, movie actor Richard Conte, and outstanding men in the various professions, including Dr. Earl Halligan, Dr. Alfonse Cinotti, Dr. Marcus Carpenter, and a host of men who excel in the legal profession, such as Judge Peter Artaserse, Judge Frank A. Verga, Judge Joseph S. E. Verga, Judge Morris Barison, Judge J. Arnold Bressler, and Judge Edward F. Zampella. An outstanding graduate now in the field of journalism is Milt Kerzner, city editor of the Jersey Journal.

Dickinson High School has given the world Mary Philbrook, the first woman lawyer in New Jersey; also New Jersey legislator Bayard Faulkner, whose famous Faulkner Act gives New Jersey communities opportunities to choose administrations best suited to their needs.

Also high on the list of outstanding sons and daughters of Dickinson High School is Sgt. Joseph Anthony, who has a park named in his honor as one of the hundreds of local young men who had given their lives in World War I, World War II, Korea, and Vietnam.

The first public college in New Jersey, Douglas College, which is part of Rutgers University, was started by a Dickinson High School graduate, Mabel Smith Douglas.

Another great student was Albert Whiting, from the 1934 class, who went on to be a college president and now an educational consultant in Washington.

We can agree that the Dickinson High School students of 1934 have continued the quality work of centuries, building bridges of understanding and brotherhood between people from the educational base they received at "The Hilltop."

They learned early on that the sea and air and, indeed, the Earth are the concerns of every nation. The graduates of the class of 1934 have joined others in working to show that science, technology, and education can and must be the ally of all men in every nation of the world.

Indeed, they have accepted the fact that no problem of human understanding is beyond human beings; that our problems are manmade, and therefore, can and must be solved by man.

I am sure that they are spotlighting their 50th anniversary—celebrating the past—to awaken the future.

The class of 1934 witnessed some of the most critical years in world history: The beginning of The Great Depression, the rise and fall of Adolph Hitler, the discoveries of neutrons by Italian physicist Enrico Fermi, the famous radio talks by Father Charles Coughlin; the creation of the National Labor Relations Board; creating our Nation's first general strike. During 1934, the graduates lived through the S.S. Mauro Castle destroyed off Asbury Park, where 125 lives were lost, and the FCC was created to supervise U.S. telephone and telegraph and radio industries.

It also was the year of the adventures of Terry and the Pirates, Li'l Abner, Jungle Jim, and Flash Gordon. Shirley Temple made her first full length film at age 6, in the picture wherein she sang "On the Good Ship Lollipop." Others were singing "The Beer Barrel Polka," "The Very Thought of You," "Winter Wonderland" and were glued to the radio when prize fighter Max Baer knocked out Primo Carnera to win the world heavyweight championship.

And 1934 also saw the opening of the first laundromat. The infamous John Dillinger met his death at the hands of the FBI, while Bruno Hauptman was arrested in connection with the Charles A. Lindbergh, Jr., kidnaping case.

It also was the year Pepsi-Cola challenged Coca-Cola and Carvel's first custard stand was opened. The Dione quintuplets were introduced to an excited world on May 28.

I salute each and every member of the Dickinson High School class of 1934 and their teachers—those here present and those of fond memory. Each and every one never sank under the burden of their days. They have lived through difficult times, through the Depression and involvement in three major military conflicts. This class lived on hope—the hope which urged them on, believing that tomorrow will be better.

I urge each and every one of you to never forget the reading of the Psalm by your beloved principal, Dr. McMackin, at each auditorium exercise:

"Get wisdom—get understanding and in getting it
Forget it not."

Please continue your life's work to assure that every individual, regardless of race or class or economic status, receives an opportunity and the necessary tools for the development of their individual powers of mind and spirit to the best of their ability.●

NATIONAL HORSE SHOW ASSOCIATION OF AMERICA

HON. HAMILTON FISH, JR.

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Thursday, September 29, 1983

● Mr. FISH. Mr. Speaker, this year during the first week of November, the National Horse Show celebrates its centennial at Madison Square Garden.

I wish to express my appreciation to the National Horse Show Association of America for enriching and inspiring equestrian competition in this Nation and throughout the world for the past 100 years.

Through the influence of this remarkable institution, equestrian sport has become increasingly popular among our youth. This year, the National Horse Show, for the first time, held regional finals for junior riders in the ASPCA sponsored Maclay class. These finals were held in California, Georgia, Missouri, and in Westchester County, N.Y. On September 18, 1983, I was honored to present finalist ribbons to 66 young men and women who competed in my congressional district. The competition and the talent displayed were extraordinary. The National Horse Show has taken an important role in expanding the base and popularity of equestrian sports.

In this centennial year, the National Horse Show will continue to be a showcase for the best riders and horses in competition anywhere. It will be a time of excitement for New York and wherever equestrian sport is enjoyed.

Again, as in years past, the National Horse Show and its foundation will also be major financing vehicles for the U.S. equestrian team which will represent our Nation at the 1984 Olympic Games.

I salute the National Horse Show. The directors of the association, the competitors and all those responsible for the show should be proud of the place it holds in the heritage of New York City, New York State, the United States, and the world.●

THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED NATIONS: TIME FOR REAPPRAISAL

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, the Heritage Foundation is celebrating its 10th anniversary. Ed Feulner and company deserve much praise and credit for the service they render in providing intelligent discourse and comment of the affairs of state. Because of their persistence, more and more of us are seeing a whole parade of emperors without clothes.

One of the most notorious of these pretenders to fashion is the United Nations. Heritage's United Nations Assessment Project Study has produced another provocative background paper calling for a much needed reappraisal of the United Nations and America's role therein.

Among other things, the paper points out the U.N. politicizing of the merest technical matters. The key to understanding why this is done is the certain and self-evident truth that the modern U.N. goal is the establishment of a world socialistic regime, as Mrs. Kirkpatrick has often reminded us. It is the nature of socialistic states to politicize everything. Thus Western classical music is forbidden for a decade because of China's cultural revolution. Any type of word processing equipment is strictly controlled in the Soviet block to prevent the circulation of essays and poetry deemed counter-revolutionary.

Everything the United Nations does these days puts the torch to the disturbed dreams of the old "world federalists" and assorted internationalists. The United Nations is a true force for world peace only in the context of the U.N. Orwellian definition of the word: the snuffing out of pluralism, individuality, liberty, and human self-consciousness. Only after accepting this definition of "peace" does one begin to understand why the United Nations has become an instrument for extending minor regional disputes into world conflict, and resolvable misunderstandings into deep hatreds. It is also instructive to note that conflict and hatred are the mortar and stone for building Marxist states, not true democratic republics.

Mr. Speaker, early critics viewed the slogan, "Get the United States out of the United Nations and the United Nations out of the United States" as ignorant tripe. However, the Heritage papers suggest that the slogan was, after all, a terribly prophetic warning.

The introduction to the backgrounder follow:

THE UNITED STATES AND THE UNITED NATIONS: TIME FOR REAPPRAISAL

INTRODUCTION

After two centuries of disdain for international organizations, the United States in the post-World War II era has become one of history's great joiners. In a short time, the U.S. signed on with scores of groups, ranging from the International Monetary Fund (1945) and NATO (1949) to the Inter-American Tropical Tuna Commission (1949), the North Pacific Fur Seal Commission (1957) and the International Agreement Regarding the Maintenance of Certain Lights in the Red Sea (1966). So vast grew this nation's memberships in international groups, that the State Department had to create in 1954 an entire section to deal with international organizations. By early 1983, the Assistant Secretary of State for International Organizations had a staff of 172 to monitor U.S. relations with 98 international groups. In addition to those, the U.S. has ties to at least 50 other international agencies or commissions. The exact number of international bodies to which the U.S. belongs, in fact, no one in the government seems to know.

To some, America's readiness to join international bodies seemed like a betrayal of George Washington's Farewell Address warning that "in regard to foreign Nations . . . have with them as little Political connection as possible." To others, U.S. postwar internationalization was welcomed as a tardy but sensible affirmation of the Wilsonian vision. It was, in truth, neither. U.S. participation in international organizations simply was recognition that the civilized world faced extraordinary threats which could be countered only by active U.S. involvement—indeed, by U.S. leadership. In the years following the German and Japanese surrenders, the globe's industrial economies were shattered and in need of repair. Europe's democracies were weary and confronting menacing Soviet troops further westward than Lenin ever could have imagined. And the world's financial institutions were reeling from the two decades of turmoil caused by depression and war.

It clearly was in American interests to offer the security crutch to Westen Europe provided by the North Atlantic Treaty Organization and the machinery to encourage world trade provided by the International Monetary Fund and the General Agreement on Tariffs and Trade. Yet what was appropriate in the years following World War II now may be an anachronism. With the contemporary world so different from that of 1946 or even 1955, are there still valid reasons for the U.S. to remain deeply involved in international organizations? It is undeniable, for instance, that the Wilsonian dreams once again seem as hollow as they did a half-century ago. George Washington's admonition, meantime, appears increasingly profound. Yet the United States, as it approaches the 21st century, will find guidance on the question of international involvement neither in Wilson nor Washington. The answers rather are in the lessons learned in the past four decades. Among them:

Universal organizations such as the United Nations and those agencies associated with the U.N., like UNESCO, accomplish so little that the value to the U.S. of membership becomes very doubtful.

On the other hand, organizations of like-minded states with fairly specific purposes, such as NATO, or until recently, the International Monetary Fund, fulfill a number of their most important aims.

The democratic dictum of one man, one vote may work within communities or nations, but apparently cannot be applied to organizations containing large numbers of nations which differ dramatically from each other. Within international organizations, the power to influence decisions should closely resemble the responsibility for carrying out the decisions. At the United Nations General Assembly or in UNESCO, for example, a majority comprised of developing nations which contribute almost nothing to the U.N. budget and bear almost no burden for effecting U.N. programs consistently dictate what those programs should be and even what they cost. It is quite a different matter at the IMF. There the weight of a nation's vote is determined by the extent of the nation's financial participation.

Technical organizations must limit their activities and rhetoric to technical matters. This means that the World Health Organization should deal with fighting disease; the International Telecommunications Union should keep global communications orderly; the International Atomic Energy Agency should monitor the peaceful uses of the atom. When their agendas and rhetoric become politicized, an organization's value wanes. The matter of South Africa's policy of apartheid or the Israeli occupation of the west bank of the Jordan River are serious political matters but are not appropriate for the WHO, ITU, IAEA or any other technical agency.

It is time for the U.S. to apply these lessons and reevaluate American membership in international organizations. In the case of basically sound bodies—such as NATO, IMF, Organization of American States and World Bank—this reevaluation probably would lead to minor revisions of the organization's structure and the nature of U.S. paticipation. When it comes to the United Nations and its many affiliated agencies, however, a reevaluation is certain to prompt a fundamental reconsideration of U.S. membership. For more than a decade and one-half, the U.N. increasingly has demonstrated that it is not merely costly and harmless. Increasingly, the United Nations is becoming, as Senator Daniel Patrick Moynihan entitled his 1980 description of his tour as U.S. permanent Representative at the U.N., "a dangerous place." The United Nations, indeed, is becoming a threat to U.S. national interests.

A list of the U.N.'s failures and shortcomings should puncture the resolve of all but the organization's most blind boosters. The U.N. has failed as a peacekeeper and peacemaker and as a protector of human rights. Its record of caring for refugees is suspiciously mixed, ignoring the legions attempting to flee communist-ruled Viet Nam while allowing the Palestine Liberation Organization to turn refugee camps into armed garrisons. Inefficiency, cronyism, high pay, lavish expense accounts and even corruption and illiteracy have become the all too common characteristics of the Secretariat and other U.N. bureaucracies. Meantime, U.N. agencies in New York, Geneva, and Vienna serve as a valuable cover for Soviet, East European, Cuban and other espionage services hostile to the West.

But even this troubling litany omits what now is the gravest danger posed by the United Nations—its role in affecting the way in which nations and their citizens view critical global issues. Like a House of Mirrors at an amusement park, the U.N. distorts reality—exaggerating some things, diminishing others and obscuring most. Unlike a House of Mirrors, however, the U.N.'s distortions, particularly in the General Assembly and its Secretariat, form a predictable pattern. One characteristic of this pattern is the U.N.'s politicization of issues that merely are technical. Certainly the behavior of Israel, Chile and South Africa are not really the most urgent issues confronting the General Asssembly, to say nothing of the World Health Organization, UNESCO, the International Labor Organization and a host of other agencies. Yet these ostensibly technical bodies squander an enormous amount of their time and energy dealing repeatedly with a handful of political matters forced onto the agendas by a block of nations strongly influenced by the Palestine Liberation Organization and radical leftist states and groups.

Another aspect of the pattern is the U.N.'s globalization of problems. Bringing a local or even regional matter or dispute to the General Assembly forces every nation to take a stand. Issues which could remain local suddenly gain global importance and almost always, therefore, become more difficult to resolve. Nearly 15 years ago, The Netherlands' chief U.N. delegate Carl W. A. Schurmann complained that the U.N. system "forces governments to take a stand (if not by making a speech, then at least by voting) on a great many questions and conflicts that either do not really concern them or on which they would much have preferred to keep their opinions to themselves." This was echoed in 1982 by U.S. Permanent Representative to the United Nations Jeane Jordan Kirkpatrick in an address to the Anti-Defamation League. "Instead of being an effective instrument for conflict resolution," she said, "[the U.N.] serves all too often as an arena in which conflict is polarized, extended and exacerbated, in which differences are made deeper and more difficult to resolve than they would otherwise be."

Politicizing and globalizing issues are two of the dangers created by the U.N.'s distorted pattern of behavior. Dangerous too is the legitimacy conferred on the undeserving, while discrediting those entitled to respect as members of the community of nations. Within the U.N. system, for example, the PLO and South West African People's Organization (SWAPO) enjoy near official status and are treated not as the terrorists that they are but as members in good standing of the international community. Israel, South Africa, Chile, and the Shah's Iran, meanwhile are or have been reviled as pariah states.

Most dangerous, however, is the U.N.'s de facto (and some times de jure) crusade against the free enterprise system. In many respects, the U.N. has become the headquarters, command post and strategic planning center of an anti-free enterprise campaign. In almost every U.N. body and almost always in the General Assembly, seldom is an opportunity lost to attack the free enterprise system. These assaults come as direct attacks on the Western industrial democracies which are the main capitalist nations. They come as attacks on individual industries through increasing attempts to impose international codes of economic regulation. They come too as attacks on the most successful of the capitalistic enterprises, the corporation which has grown beyond the boundaries of the country in which it was founded and in which it is headquartered—the multinational corporation. and the U.N. crusade attacks the very essence and philosophical base of the free enterprise system. It is an assault which condemns, almost always, without supporting evidence, the notion that the dynamo of growth and economic expansion is individual initiative, creativity and the incentive provided by the opportunity of making a profit. This kind of attack even repudiates the notion of economic growth, substituting for it the naive and economically self-defeating concepts of wealth redistribution and central planning.

In repudiating free enterprise and by ignoring capitalism's record of success, the United Nations and its agencies have raised to the level of gospel the tenets of what is called the New International Economic Order or, as it is widely known, NIEO. The tenacity with which the United Nations fights for NIEO at every forum, from every rostrum and in every possible publication and statement is awesome. The United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization (UNESCO), for instance, now deals with educational and cultural matters mainly as a means for promoting the NIEO agenda. A U.N. conference ostensibly called to combat discrimination against women, meanwhile, was transformed into a NIEO pep rally. This obsession with NIEO has converted the United Nations from an organization that might merely have been costly and annoying into a body which threatens those nations committed to democracy, liberty and economic development.

Early critics of the United Nations recognized and predicted the organization's shortcomings. While their warnings then might have been debatable, they now seem only too real. As a result, American public support for the U.N has plummetted sharply from that heady July 28, 1945, when the U.N. Charter went to the Senate floor for ratification and was approved by a lopsided 89 to 2. This reflected the broad popular backing for the U.N. Support remained high through the U.N.'s first decade and a half. A 1959 Gallup Poll revealed that 87 percent of those surveyed felt that the U.N. was doing a good job. By 1971, however, Americans were having second thoughts and Gallup found that only 35 percent gave the U.N. passing grades. This dropped to 30 percent in 1980, while 53 percent thought that the organization was doing a "poor job." And in March 1981, a Roper Poll discovered that only a slim 10 percent of Americans viewed the U.N. as "highly effective" in carrying out its functions.

Though now disillusioned with the U.N., Americans cannot be faulted for trying to make the international body succeed. Since the U.N.'s birth, the U.S. has been the U.N.'s most enthusiastic and generous booster. Until 1964, for instance, American taxpayers provided nearly 40 percent of the U.N. assessed budget. Even now with its share reduced, as other nations have industrialized and grown wealthier, the U.S. pays about one-quarter of the U.N.'s bills; in 1983, this probably will cost the taxpayer more than $1 billion, bringing to about $12 billion the U.S. contribution to the U.N. since 1945. By contrast, the Soviet Union pays only 13 percent of the U.N. budget (and is $169 million in arrears) and gets much more benefit from the U.N. than does the U.S. Even more striking is the paltry material support from those who control the U.N. The approximately 120 developing nations who command a permanent U.N. majority together contribute less than 9 percent of the organization's costs. Some of those 120 nations, of course, are very poor; yet others are quite rich. In fiscal 1980-81, for instance, Saudi Arabia paid only 0.58 percent of the U.N. budget and Kuwait only 0.20 percent, while relatively poor Britain and Spain paid 4.40 percent and 1.70 percent respectively.

For nearly its first two decades, the United Nations mainly reflected the concerns of the world's industrial democracies. As new nations were formed and admitted to the U.N., in the wake of the dissolution of the world's empires (except that of the Soviet Union), the balance of power within the U.N. inexorably shifted. From 51 members in 1945, the U.N. grew to 82 by 1958, to 115 in 1964 and now stands at 157 member nations. While there is some merit to the argument that a global organization ought to have a universal membership, this has been translated simplistically into a policy within the U.N. (except for the Security Council) of one nation, one vote. As a result, policymaking is divorced from policy responsibility. A majority of today's U.N. members are ill-prepared to address the issues that come before the U.N. for these nations stand only on the threshold of political and economic development. They have no experience in international matters and can boast little knowledge of any history but that of their own transition from colonialism to independence. In almost every case, moreover, the majority of U.N. members have no respect for or faith in democracy. Yet they determine the policies that the U.N. adopts and which the United States and other democracies are obliged to execute and underwrite. To make matters worse, these policies are becoming increasingly opposed to U.S. principles and national interests.

SUPPORTING TERRORISTS

Through its resolutions and, what is more alarming, its agencies and funds, the United Nations has been supporting terrorists groups. The Palestine Liberation Organization, the South West Africa People's Organization, the African National Congress and the Pan-African Congress have been receiving material backing from the U.N. According to a Heritage Foundation study, between 1975 and 1981 the U.N. spent or budgeted at least $116 million to support these and similar groups. This figure was compiled solely from public records. The real U.N. outlay for terrorism, including items camouflaged and hidden in innocent-appearing budget items, surely exceeds by several fold this publicly verifiable outlay. Of this sum, the U.S. taxpayer contributes at least 25 percent.

U.N. support for terrorists takes a number of forms. It ranges from gifts of food, housing and health services to providing radio channels through which a terrorist group can broadcast propanganda. The United Nations Education, Scientific and Cultural Organization has given money earmarked for education to a wide range of terrorist groups. Totalling at least $8 million for 1981-1983, there is no way to account for how the terrorists actually spent the money. To be sure, the public record reveals no U.N. funds used to purchase arms. U.N. accounting and expense monitoring procedures, however, are widely ridiculed as lax, if not deliberately permissive. There is thus valid cause to question how the PLO and similar groups spend UNESCO's "educational" grants. Even by providing food, medicine and training for civilian cadres, the U.N. allows terrorists to earmark more of their own funds for weaponry.

As important as material aid is the political legitimacy that the U.N. confers on terrorist organizations. Official U.N. recognition amounts to a seal of approval which gives the Marxist-oriented PLO, SWAPO, ANC and PAC a definite advantage over their non-Marxist rivals at home. They enjoy U.N. money, aid projects, publicity and international lobbying power not available to their competitors. Example: SWAPO has access to the U.N. Department of Public Information Radio Service which broadcasts worldwide. With this, SWAPO airs special programs on Namibia. The Department of Public Information also provides photographic and exhibition services for special SWAPO events—such as displays which become semi-permanent exhibits at U.N. headquarters in New York and offices in Geneva and Vienna. The U.N. imprimatur makes the terrorists appear to be the sole representatives of their respective peoples. In reality, SWAPO, PLO, ANC and PAC face formidable challenges at home from non-Marxist and non-terrorist groups.

The United Nations excuses its support for terrorists by claiming that it has a responsibility for helping so-called National Liberation Movements battle colonialist regimes. U.N. aid for these movements, however, is curiously selective. No backing, for instance, is given to pro-Western National Liberation Movements such as UNITA, now fighting what appears to be a successful guerrilla war in Angola against the Soviet and Cuban-backed Marxist regime. Nor has the U.N. been willing to recognize the non-Marxist representatives of the Palestinians or the democratic political parties of Namibia. Instead, the U.N. General Assembly grandly declares and treats the PLO and SWAPO as the sole, legitimate representatives of their respective peoples. These two terrorist groups, for example, hold coveted "permanent observer" status at key U.N. agencies and bodies—including the Security Council when questions concerning their areas of the world are on the agenda. And while the General Assembly effectively has barred the sovereign state of South Africa from its proceedings, denying the South African delegations even the right to answer charges against it, the General Assembly has asked all U.N. organs to include the ANC and PAC in their meetings dealing with southern Africa.

No terrorist group enjoys U.N. munificence more than the Palestine Liberation Organization. It has full observer status at UNESCO, the International Labor Organization, the World Health Organization and the International Civil Aviation Organization. Affiliation with the aviation body permits the PLO, whose members are among the most veteran and violent airplane skyjackers, to attend meetings called to discuss international air travel security. In 1977, meanwhile, the PLO was admitted to the U.N. Economic and Social Council's Commission for Western Asia. This was the first full-membership ever granted to a non-country. Since then, the PLO has been allowed to chair the Commission's sessions.

Two U.N. committees were created for and are dominated by the PLO: the Inalienable Rights Committee and the Special Unit on Palestinian Rights. These committees allow the PLO to use U.N. funds to produce a wide variety of publications and mount a public relations campaign, including an annual "International Solidarity Day with the Palestinian People." PLO booklets lauding Yassir Arafat as a freedom fighter and defending the PLO's use of terrorism are featured at U.N. bookstores—including those in New York. PLO exhibitions, meanwhile, adorn corridors of U.N. buildings. Despite protests from Israel, a PLO U.N. exhibit displayed a map of the Middle East which depicted a state identified as "Palestine" but omitted Israel.

Through its officially sanctioned presence, the PLO gains inordinate influence at the U.N. On many issues, including a good number of personnel matters, the PLO wields a widely recognized veto. This not only adversely affects American and Israeli interests, but undermines the efforts of moderate, democratic Palestinian leaders to find a peaceful solution to the Palestinian problem. By blindly supporting the PLO, the United Nations actually creates obstacles to the achievement of an Arab-Israeli peace.●

THE SANDINISTAS HAVE FAILED THE PEOPLE OF NICARAGUA

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, contrary to the belief of many of my colleagues, it is not the United States that is seeking to overthrow the Sandinista government, but instead the people of Nicaragua who are tired of 4 years of broken promises.

Upon taking power in 1979, the Sandinista govenment promised the Nicaraguan people that human rights, freedom of religion, and free elections would be their highest priorities. The Nicaraguan people are still waiting for these empty promises to be fulfilled.

William Urschel, Jr., traveled to Nicaragua last spring to film a CBS documentary on the anti-Sandinista movement and met not only with the ruling Sandinistas but also the farmers in the field, the children in the schools, and the poor and deprived people in the mountains. He published his observations in the September 7, Princeton Alumni Weekly, and I am including the text of his article at the end of my remarks. I believe my colleagues who have not visited Nicaragua, as Mr. Urschel and I have, should be aware of the unrest that exists in that country where human rights and freedoms continue to be disregarded as they have been throughout the 4 years of Sandinista rule. His observations are not from secondhand sources or from news accounts, they are the result of personal meetings with people in the Nicaraguan countryside.

As Mr. Urschel found, many of the same people who supported the Sandinista revolution in 1979, now believe it has failed the Nicaraguan people and as a result has become the people's enemy. He found that:

The Sandinista government forces the farmers to sell their crops to the state at very low, fixed prices. The government arbitrarily confiscates their land, commandeers their cars, their trucks, and their sons for the military. Those who complain or refuse are sent to La Barranca prison near Esteli, which a Sandinista "vigilante" told me "probably" holds more than 350 men and women. They sit, month after month, without trial, accused of "anti-patriotic" sentiments.

This is the same government which so proudly told the world in 1979 that the Nicaraguan people would at last enjoy the same rights as other free people throughout the world. The Nicaraguan people want their stories of repression told to the world because there is no free press within Nicaragua, as promised by the Sandinistas, to tell this story. Their story can only be told when those who disseminate information to the world leave the cities of Nicaragua and the guided Sandinista tours and venture to the fields and mountains.

It is there that all who look will find hatred and disgust for the Sandinistas and a longing for the peace and freedom which the Sandinistas promised.

Mr. Urschel came away from his trip to Nicaragua with a warning I have long issued to my colleagues:

What has happened to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua reminds one of Cuba. A left-wing party, with genuine popular support overthrew a repressive right-wing regime. But being made up of just one party, the new government has become increasingly fascistic and dictatorial to maintain its sovereignty.

If our findings are not dramatic enough to demonstrate an overwhelming desire for freedom in Nicaragua, sheer numbers speak for themselves. Mr. Urschel writes:

In the U.S. we have heard little about life inside Nicaragua, about the pressure put on the farmers, about the midnight conscriptions, about the keen-eyed vigilantes, about the attack on the Catholic church. But the Contra guerrilla force has grown from a couple of thousand two years ago to perhaps 13,000 today. Something onerous is making so many men and women, in a country with only 2.7 million inhabitants, ready to fight so soon after the "people's" victory fours years ago.

Mr. Speaker, this is the story of Nicaragua I have been telling my colleagues ever since 1979 when the Sandinista government took control of Nicaragua. Now is not the time for our Nation to turn its back on the people of that nation who continue to strive for the freedom they have long been denied.

[From the Princeton Alumni Weekly, Sept. 7, 1983]

THE COUNTER-REVOLUTION IN NICARAGUA

(By William Urschel, Jr.)

San Fernando is a loose cluster of farmhouses along the 70-kilometer dirt road connecting Ocotal and Jalapa in Nueva Segovia Province, Nicaragua. One day last spring, two other American journalists and I sat visiting with José and Esteban on their patio, surrounded by their wives and children. The view from their cool, thick-walled adobe home is dominated by a long ridge of mountains less than 12 kilometers to the north. That is the Honduran border.

José and Esteban are farmers. They have a Ford truck, a large house, and about 80 acres of land, on which they grow beans and coffee and run a few cattle. By Nicaraguan standards they have done very well. But this day Esteban looks at us and says, "No, there is no other way. I will have to leave too. Go across, over the mountains, and come back with a gun." José, looking around at his house and family and everything else he'll have to leave behind, nods sadly. He will go too. There is no other way.

José and Esteban will join the Contras, the counter-revolutionary guerrilla force trying to overthrow the Sandinista government in Managua. Like virtually all of the farmers I spoke with in the northwestern provinces, they say the Sandinistas, a popular guerrilla movement themselves only four years ago, have failed the people. Worse than that, they have become the people's enemy. The Sandinista government forces the farmers to sell their corps to the state, at very low, fixed prices. The government arbitrarily confiscates their land, commandeers their cars, their trucks, and their sons for the military. Those who complain or refuse (or who are simply "denounced" by a local Sandinista party member) are sent to La Barranca prison near Esteli, which a Sandinista "vigilante" told me "probably" holds more than 350 men and women. They sit, month after month, without trial, accused of "anti-patriotic" sentiments.

On Good Friday, in Managua, I joined the religious procession led by Archbishop Miguel Obando y Bravo. The Sandinistas had forbidden him and the other church leaders to say mass where it's always been held, in the central plaza between the Cathedral and the National Palace. So Obando and the others took their 50,000-member flock to the place where San Antonio Church used to stand, a decade ago, before the earthquake. In the presumed safety of the crowd, people came up to us, shaking their fists at the Sandinista government, saying they welcomed the "free American press," because "what is happening has to be told." They told us the "popular church" being promoted by the Sandinistas is an abomination. They told us brown-shirted Sandinista "vigilantes" come in the night to take people away, just like Somoza's police did. They said there is no free press in Nicaragua, and no way to leave.

One man, his scared wife trying to quiet him, said, "Tell the world the Nicaraguan people are Catholics. We are not Communists. We will never be Communists. We are good Catholics. They will never take our church from us." The one Sandinista supporter we found in the crowd—a fat, tough-looking bulldog of a man—was shouted down by the people around him. He was a "Turbo," they said, a professional government agitator. It was he and his sort who harassed the Pope in Managua last spring. He wisely left the procession, under a hail of angry accusations and insults.

The anti-Sandinista sentiment extends beyond Managua and the hilly, agricultural northwest. For two years now, on the Atlantic side, in the vast, flat, jungle lowlands, the Sandinistas have been crudely "relocating" the Miskito Indians. The Miskito villages used to be scattered near and on the Honduran border, but to keep the Indians from linking up with the Contras, the Sandinistas have forced them farther into Nicaragua, killing or beating any who resist. These Indians have never been known to wage war, but when I was in Tegucigalpa a starving band of Miskito refugees, having fled under fire from the Sandinistas, made it across the border into Honduras. They were all old men, women, and children; the young men, having gotten their families to the border, had gone back to fight.

Of course, not everyone in Nicaragua is a counter-revolutionary. My two companions and I were given a midnight tour of the vigilantes' defense system in Jalapa. We were taken out to a strategic hillside at the edge of town by a young man with a Russian-made AK-47 automatic rifle. Here we saw locally recruited teenage boys and girls sitting in brush-covered holes with their own AK-47s, waiting for the Contras to attack. There is tremendous political pressure on these kids to join the party and "defend the homeland," but one has to wonder how effective they would be against the "aggressors" upon recognizing them as those friends and schoolmates who disappeared and crossed the mountains last year, last month, or even last week. Early the next morning we saw more of the town's defenses, a classic World War I-style trench system, a Maginot Line against any real guerrilla attack. I assume the digging of these patriotic ditches was intended more to occupy the minds and hands of the young vigilantes than to defend the town.

Back in Managua I visited Colegio Rigoberto Lopez Perez. This is a model Sandinista junior high school, designed for the "new Nicaraguan" and named, one teenage girl told me, after the man who assassinated Somoza. Portraits of Augusto Sandino, Che Guevara, and modern Sandinista "martyrs" are stenciled on the walls of the classrooms. Under the portraits are slogans like "A free Nicaragua is a Sandinista Nicaragua." In fact, slogans are posted, stenciled, and scribbled everywhere—on the walls, on the blackboards, on the floors. How many times can a boy or girl hear "Sandinoism equals free Nicaragua" before accepting the belief that any criticism of the party is a criticism of the country itself?

A 15-year-old boy told me there are only three classes of people in Nicaragua: Sandinista party members, Contras, and "Reactionaries." Reactionaries are people who aren't party members, who don't go to the rallies, who persist in being bourgeois and uninvolved. These people, he explained, would find it increasingly difficult to get jobs, buy food, and locate houses or even shacks to live in—and that is their own fault, for not joining the party. But there is still hope for the reactionaries, he said: they can be educated. Contras, on the other hand—those criminally ignorant few who actually resist the Sandinistas—those you just have to kill. The bell rang, ending the noon recess, and he went on to math class with the other kids, all of them wearing the innocent blue and white school uniform, a reminder that two years ago this was a Catholic school.

In Esteli I met a young "vigilante." At the age of 12 he had become a Sandinista guerrilla, carrying an M-16 in the fight against Somoza. His whole life, his whole sense of manhood, comes from carrying a weapon as a victorious Sandinista. Now, at 17, he has staked out the town square, looking for Contras in the crowd walking by. He takes himself and his job very, very seriously. Anyone he suspects of being a Contra will go to La Barranca, the political prison outside town—if they're lucky. It can be hard to tell far left from far right; repression is a nonpartisan phenomenon.

What has happened to the Sandinistas in Nicaragua reminds one of Cuba. A left-wing party, with genuine popular support, overthrew a repressive right-wing regime. But being made up of just one party, the new government has become increasingly fascistic and dictatorial to maintain its sovereignty.

In the U.S. we have heard little about life inside Nicaragua, about the pressure put on the farmers, about the midnight conscriptions, about the keen-eyed vigilantes, about the attack on the Catholic church. But the Contra guerrilla force has grown from a couple of thousand two years ago to (averaging all available estimates) perhaps 13,000 today. Something onerous is making so many men and women, in a country with only 2.7 million inhabitants, ready to fight so soon after the "people's" victory four years ago. They aren't all "Somocistas." Only 3 percent or so of the Contras are said to be former National Guardsmen, supposedly the more humane veterans; the worst elements of Somoza's Guard knew they had no future at all in Nicaragua and moved to Miami.

Why aren't we hearing about the metamorphosis of the Sandinistas? One reason, of course, is the whole situation is so new. After all, the Sandinistas have been in power only four years, and it's hard to believe a regime that came in with such popular support could become so repressive so quickly. And, too, since Anastasio Somoza Debayle was so unarguably evil, we are eager to give the benefit of the doubt to any alternative that seems at all reasonable. Unfortunately, those of us who should be most alert to reality aren't.

In the restaurant of Managua's Hotel Intercontinental, where the press stays, I overheard the correspondent for one of our national news magazines say he thought the Sandinistas weren't so bad. "I mean, look at the new roads, and the hospitals they've put in. And there's nowhere near as much torture." This man had taken the government bus tour to Matagalpa and Nueva Segovia, where most of the fighting had occurred. He never left the protective company of his Sandinista guides to go door to door, asking people, in the relative freedom of their patios and tobacco fields, what was really going on.

I first visited Nicaragua, briefly, in 1979, just before Somoza was evicted. I cheered the guerrillas' victory. I was quick to support any sane alternative to right-wing represssion—as were most Nicaraguans. This is how I felt, too, when I arrived in Managua last spring. I damned the CIA for "meddling" with a noble experiment. But now, after speaking to hundreds of Nicaraguans on both sides of the issue—and there only seem to be two sides—I have to support the Contras. I thought it telling that whenever I asked a Sandinista supporter (I never found one who wasn't in the government, the military, the Sandinista Youth, or the vigilantes) about the current "situation," the answer was always the party line, "I just want peace. We didn't ask to be attacked by the imperialists over the border. All the Sandinistas want is to be left alone." The refrain sounds reasonable, the first 30 or 40 times you hear it.

But from the civilians in the countryside who aren't too terrified to speak—farmers, sincere Catholics, small businessmen—the responses were graphic, immediate, and personal: "My sister Zonia was denounced and taken to prison." "My family is starving because I can't sell my crops." "The soldiers came to take my brother Juan into the army, but he escaped and went over the mountains." These people aren't mouthing political half-truths.

Another reason we don't hear much about life inside Nicaragua is that the American press focuses, perhaps understandably, on what the whole affair means to us, not to the Nicaraguans. For a long time the big question was whether the CIA was aiding the Contras, and later, when the answer to that became obvious, whether the CIA was in contempt of the Boland Amendment, Congress' specific prohibition against funding the overthrow of the Nicaraguan government. People seemed to stop talking about the Boland Amendment, however, after the two American journalists, Dial Torgerson and Richard Cross, drove over a land mine planted by the Sandinistas.

More recently, of course, the spotlight has been on President Reagan's decision to send the aircraft carrier Ranger from San Diego to Nicaragua's west coast, and a Mediterranean-bases flotilla to its east coast. Previously, America's support of the Contras had been limited to intelligence data and some small arms—nothing compared to the backing given the Sandinistas by Russia and Cuba to save the party from "American Imperialism," and coincidently, all non-Sandinista Nicaraguans. This new show of U.S. interest—warships on both coasts and 5,000 American troops poised just a hop away in Honduras—may backfire by alienating the Contras' natural supporters before it intimidates their enemies.

I don't know who is going to win in Nicaragua, but the polarization seems to complete for an amicable solution. In the long run, I would bet on the Contras. Like the Sandinistas when they defeated Somoza, they have widespread popular support, however quiet and cautious much of it is. What's more, the Contras have a strong second front with the Miskito Indians in the eastern jungles, led by an Indian named Steadman Fagoth.

Before long, the Contras may even have an active third front, led by Eden Pastora, the well-publicized Commander Zero. A former Sandinista hero, he has thus far refused to have anything to do with the "Somozan" Contras. But he's been seen in Tegucigalpa recently, the Contras' home-away-from-home, and it's reported that he's taken his small band from Costa Rica into southern Nicaragua. The biggest threat to the Contras right now is a loss of their patriotic purity in the eyes of the unswung Nicaraguans, something that will happen in proportion to overt American involvement.

A military victory, of course, doesn't guarantee peace and prosperity. But the counter-revolutionary force is not in an ideological lockstep like the Sandinistas, and if the Contras do win—with the help of the Miskitos, Pastora, and the various factions within the Contras organization—they are going to have to transfer that basic plurality to their government. It's this plurality, and the necessary accommodation of different interests and ideologies, that gives hope the Contras will govern their country, not rule it.

By the time you read this, José and Esteban will have gone over the mountains, and may well be back, armed and fighting in their home territory. They probably kissed their wives and children goodbye, checked to make sure the corral would keep in the cows, looked at the oil level in their truck, then took a small sack of clothes and a canteen and walked off down the road to get themselves "abducted." It's sort of charade the guerrilla volunteers play to make it easier on their friends and family who stay behind. Can they help it if the Contras took them away at gunpoint?

José has already been abducted once. Several months ago he and his cousin were up in the hills "picnicking" with some friends. A Contra band happened by and they were all taken prisoner. José, however, told them he couldn't go, because he was needed at home. So home he went. His cousin became a guerrilla. José tells us, with a smile, that he has had nothing to do with the Contras since. Sure, somebody has been helping them in the villages, but not him. Nevertheless, he was able to describe to us exactly where we could go to meet the Contras ourselves, when they would most likely be there, and where we could find a hidden cache of food, in case we got hungry. The Contras are obviously not operating in hostile territory.

Neither was Augusto Sandino, the patron saint of the Sandinistas. In 1927 he led a guerrilla army of local farmers and woodcutters in a fight against an oppressive Managua regime backed by a foreign power. He fought in these very same canyons and valleys—right here in the villages of Octotal, San Fernando, Santa Clara, and Jalapa. José is aware of the irony. "Who," he asks us, "is following Sandino now?"

(William Urschel Jr. '78 was in Nicaragua last spring to film a CBS documentary on the anti-Sandinista movement. A California-based writer, he has traveled extensively in Latin America. For his senior thesis in history, he rode a horse and led a pack mule 1,200 miles across the desert from Taos, New Mexico, to San Diego, California, retracing the trail taken by General Stephen Watts Kearny in 1846. A condensed version of Urschel's thesis was later published in Quest/78 magazine and reprinted in Reader's Digest. After graduation, he went to the headwaters of the Peruvian Amazon and paddled a canoe down the Rio Ucyali, being temporarily abducted along the way by Conibo Indians. He is presently writing his third screenplay and producing a feature film in Santa Barbara.)●

STRENGTHENING INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONSULTATION

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, the past decade has seen a vast increase in the interparliamentary contacts of the Congress.

Of these relationships the most important is the North Atlantic Assembly, the interparliamentary assembly of the 16 countries of the North Atlantic Alliance.

The Atlantic Council of the United States recently completed a 2 year study of the North Atlantic Assembly. The working group which performed the study was chaired by our distinguished permanent representative to NATO, David Abshire, and included several outstanding Americans with long experience in alliance affairs, such as the Honorable JACK BROOKS, our colleague and a former president of the Assembly, former Senator Jacob Javits, former Deputy Secretary of Defense Kenneth Rush, and two former counselors of the State Department, Ted Achilles and Helmut Sonnenfeldt.

I commend the report to my colleagues as it is a concise, well-written analysis of the value of the North Atlantic Assembly and contains several thoughtful proposals for strengthening the Assembly and improving American participation.

Mr. Speaker, I request unanimous consent to include the following executive summary of the report in the RECORD.

STRENGTHENING INTERPARLIAMENTARY CONSULTATION

EXECUTIVE SUMMARY

Members of the U.S. Congress and their counterparts in the other nations of the North Atlantic Alliance play a key part in formulating and authorizing foreign policies. Moreover, through the press, the podium, and personal contact, they probably contribute more to public perceptions of public issues than any other group of individuals. How well they do these things depends in large part on their own grasp of complex issues. In the affairs of a far-flung alliance, this in turn depends on having adequate opportunity to learn the views and concerns of their foreign colleagues—and to communicate their own. Nowhere can they find greater possibilities for this than in the plenary halls, committee rooms, and corridors of the North Atlantic Assembly.

The Assembly, established in 1955 as the NATO Parliamentarians' Conference and renamed in 1966, is the only body that regularly brings together members of the United States Congress and members of the Canadian and West European parliaments to address issues of world peace and cooperation. The Assembly currently comprises 172 parliamentary delegates from the sixteen countries of the North Atlantic Alliance. Recently it began including members of parliament from Japan and Australia as observers. The Assembly meets in plenary session twice a year for a total of about six days. Most of its preparatory substantive work is done in five committees and their subcommittees, and in ad hoc committees established from time to time such as current Special Committee on Nuclear Weapons in Europe.

The North Atlantic Assembly can and should strengthen its capacity to serve as the premier interparliamentary forum of the developed democracies, where Members and Congress can state candidly and debate vigorously the great issues of political and economic relations and collective security, and where they can confront their differences and reach a better understanding of each other's policies and purposes. A basic prerequisite is a consistently broader and more active participation by Members of the U.S. Congress.

The special importance of the North Atlantic Assembly arises from two circumstances: the complexity and urgency of the issues confronting the developed democracies and the key role legislators play at the nexus of foreign policy and public opinion.

The Assembly seeks to serve two major functions:

Interparliamentary dialogue and the mutual education of legislators in international relations and alliance politics; and Direct influence on public and parliamentary opinion and on policymaking.

The Assembly's success has been more clear-cut in the former than in the latter.

Today, West European and North American legislators perceive that a more effective interparliamentary dialogue on the issues of world peace and cooperation will require above all else stronger U.S. participation in the North Atlantic Assembly. From the European point of view this is so in part because our legislature plays a more direct and independent role in foreign affairs than do its counterparts in Western Europe. Both to understand adequately U.S. views and the role of Congress and to make their own views sufficiently known in this country, our allies must deal directly with the Congress more than ever before. "Our embassy," as former West German Chancellor Helmut Schmidt has acknowledged, "is not enough." It is a truism that if American policies are to succeed, they must take into account the concerns and interests of our allies. The European side of the dialogue must be well heard by the Members of Congress.

It is likewise in the interest of both the United States and its allies that American legislators have comparable opportunities to make their concerns and ideas felt. It is true—and worth noting—that both the governments and the publics of the allied democracies remain in general agreement on fundamentals: Soviet policy at home and abroad obliges the democratic allies to maintain appropriate military force for deterrence and defense. At the same time, shared interests of East and West in avoiding world catastrophe, military or economic, underpin necessary efforts to settle disputes, reduce armaments, foster international trade, and promote communication. The differences among Western allies arise not over these broad matters of principle, but over means and modalities.

Here the United States has significant and at times serious differences with its European allies. The U.S. Government and/or members of Congress have, for example:

Sought a major catch-up effort in military readiness which the Europeans have accepted (in NATO's Long-Term Defense Program, begun in 1978) but seem unable or unwilling to carry out;

Pointed out the possibility that unless Western Europe assumes a larger share of the total defense burden, a disillusioned Congress and public may bring home some if not all of the 300,000 American troops now stationed in Europe;

Urged the Europeans to accept a larger responsibility for the security of mutual interests outside the NATO area, notably in the Middle East, thus far with an inadequate response;

Sought with little success a united allied front to impose economic and other sanctions on the Soviet Union in protest against the invasion of Afghanistan and the destruction of the free labor movement in Poland.

Finally—although this is not an issue among the NATO governments—many Americans are distressed that NATO's program for modernizing theater nuclear arms in Europe, adopted in 1979 in response to European concerns, now appears to be opposed by significant sectors of European opinion.

These American positions, whatever may be their merits, are widely held in this country. They are among many other such positions that must be presented, clarified, adjusted, and defended effective in the North Atlantic Assembly.

It is a regrettable irony that, for a variety of largely remediable reasons, U.S. participation in the Assembly over the years has been less than optimum in size, structure, and prominence. While a number of eminent Senators and Representatives have taken leading roles in this work, the U.S. has seldom fielded a full delegation, and too often the most appropriate legislative committees, those concerned with foreign policy and national security, have been underrepresented.

Certain changes in present arrangements and attitudes could help bring about more consistently effective U.S. participation in the North Atlantic Assembly—and provide other gains as well. These changes are outlined in the following conclusions and recommendations.

CONCLUSION NO. 1: SCHEDULING DIFFICULTIES

By reason of the size of their constituencies and the nature of their consitutional responsibilities, American legislators have considerably less free time than do most of their European counterparts. While some European MPs find it possible to devote as much as ninety days or more per year to international parliamentary activities, American legislators are hard put to devote ten.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 1: SESSIONS IN NORTH AMERICA

To the extent that time required for overseas travel is a deterrent to U.S. participation, the Assembly should experiment with a plan to increase the number of annual plenary sessions convened in North America, with preference for cities other than the U.S. and Canadian capitals, as well as to increase the number of committee meetings held on this side of the water. This would also heighten the visibility and public understanding of the Assembly in the United States. In this connection, the Assembly should make every effort to schedule its annual meetings when the Congress is in recess or not in session.

CONCLUSION NO. 2: DIPLOMATIC RESERVE

Understandably, professional diplomats tend to try to manage international issues directly rather than encourage candid and wide-ranging public debate about them, as such discussion can complicate and delay their diplomatic tasks. Accordingly, Executive Branch support of U.S. participation in the North Atlantic Assembly has not always been as strong as it should be.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 2: EXECUTIVE BRANCH SUPPORT

The President and the Secretary of State could do much to correct public and media ignorance of the North Atlantic Assembly and to encourage enhanced Congressional participation in it. They should take every opportunity to do so, including a regular meeting of the U.S. delegation with the Secretary of State and/or the President upon the delegation's departure for or return from the annual Assembly sessions.

CONCLUSION NO. 3: LEGISLATIVE SUPPORT

The Congress has supported and underwritten U.S. participation in the North Atlantic Assembly, but there are larger opportunities which Congress should now consider.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 3: LEGISLATIVE SUPPORT

The Congressional leadership should consistently seek to appoint the strongest possible bipartisan U.S. delegation, a substantial part of which should include members otherwise isolated from the international scene as well as members of committees that are directly involved in foreign policy and international security issues, in a systematic effort both to draw in new Members of Congress and to provide resasonable continuity. The leadership should also assure that the delegation has sufficient staff support and sufficient time off from their legislative duties to enable them to attend to annual meetings.

CONCLUSION NO. 4: A PROBLEM OF PUBLIC PERCEPTION

Members of Congress have often found that participation in the North Atlantic Assembly can be a political liability by unfairly exposing them at home to charges of "junketeering" (which may be defined as frivolous travel to the detriment of their duties and the taxpayer's pocketbook).

RECOMMENDATION NO. 4 : "JUNKETEERING"

In our fragile and interdependent world, what some may carelessly call "junketeering" can in truth be something of substantial national interest. The North Atlantic Assembly makes possible an indispensable learning and teaching experience for responsible men and women who carry an important share of the burden in managing our national security. It is essential that the media, the interested public, and political candidates make an effort to understand this.

CONCLUSION NO. 5: BROADENING THE DIALOGUE

The recent inclusion in the Assembly proceedings of Japanese and Australian members of parliament as observers is a highly significant development in the Assembly's institutional history.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 5: TOWARD A BROADER-BASED ASSEMBLY

Underlying the sometimes fierce competition among the developed democracies is a shared interest in the vitality of the global economic system. A wide and continuing association of their parliamentarians would materially advance that interest. Closer interparliamentary ties should be encouraged by all appropriate means with Japan, Australia, and New Zealand, and with other members of the Organization for Economic Cooperation and Development.

CONCLUSION NO. 6: COST-EFFECTIVENESS

In relation to value conferred on the developed democracies involved, the annual cost of the North Atlantic Assembly has been extremely modest. Several interesting projects for improving the Assembly's work have been suggested by participants or observers but would require additional financing. These include increasing the Secretariat's capacity to prepare studies concerning agenda items, expand the program of visits to military installations and NATO exercises, reinforce liaison with parliaments and the US Congress, organize parliamentary seminars, and strengthen media relations and the publications and public information programs.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 6: THE ASSEMBLY'S BUDGET

The Congress should support reasonable increases in both its delegation's allocation and the Assembly' budget to permit the wider and more effective interparliamentary dialogue that is now clearly possible. Specifically at this time, the Assembly should add a full-time information officer to its Secretariat.

CONCLUSION NO. 7: IMPROVING ASSEMBLY PROCEDURES

The major inherent functions of the North Atlantic Assembly are to promote interparliamentary dialogue and the mutual education of legislators, on the one hand, and to influence policymaking and pubic opinion, on the other. To date the Assembly has achieved significant success in the former but far less than it can and should in the latter. The practice of adopting formal resolutions and recommendations has served as one useful means of promoting the dialogue but has had little impact on policymaking or public opinion.

RECOMMENDATION NO. 7: THE DEBATE AND THE END-PRODUCTS

The Assembly should retain but de-emphasize the practice of adopting resolutions, while developing new procedures better calculated to enhance its political influence. To that end, the Assembly should experiment along lines suggested elsewhere in this Policy Paper with a new format and style for its committee reports, and cultivate a mode of plenary debate notable for its clash of opinion, its elucidation of significant differences, and its quest for new avenues of accommodation and consensus. Debates and reports of that character could contribute much to public understanding of the issues, and be noted with interest and profit by parliamentarians and government leaders throughout the Alliance.

It will be noted that the seven recommendations set out above are interdependent and mutually reinforcing. US Congressional participation would improve if the Assembly sessions were more newsworthy. Sessions would be more newsworthy if improvements were made in Assembly procedures, scheduling, resources, and end-products. Adoption of such improvements would enhance the Assembly's impact on public opinion and policymaking. Greater impact on public opinion and policymaking would vitiate concerns about "junketeering", elicit greater resources, stimulate Executive Branch cooperation—and encourage stronger US Congressional participation. We believe simultaneous action on all seven recommendations would advance the purposes of a more productive discourse and a stronger partnership among the developed democracies.●

CONSTRUCTIVE ENGAGEMENT—A FOOLISH POLICY ON SOUTH AFRICA

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, I would like to call to the attention of my colleagues an excellent op-ed piece by Franklin Williams which appeared recently in the New York Times.

Mr. Williams, the president of the Phelps-Stokes Fund, is an knowledgeable observer of South Africa. His article forcefully expresses his dismay at the current administration's policy of "constructive engagement in South Africa."

His apt headline describes how many Americans, both black and white, feel about the current administration's dealing with that nation which have produced neither a settlement on Namibia, which South Africa continues to occupy in defiance of international law, or any significant movement away from the racist, restrictive, and oppressive policies of apartheid.

I urge those who have not had an opportunity to read this article to do so, and then reflect on the serious issues which it raises about that regime and our policies toward it.

Mr. Speaker, I ask that this be reprinted in today's RECORD.

FOOLISH POLICY ON SOUTH AFRICA

(By Franklin H. Williams)

The Reagan Administration's policy of "constructive engagement" in South Africa could very well have been designed in Pretoria.

In exchange for what the Administration calls "progress" toward the elimination of apartheid, the United States' relations with the South African Government are more friendly and extensive than they have been for years.

The ultimate folly of such a policy for the United States is that favor is being won with the wrong people.

The so-called reforms applauded by the Reagan Administration are merely cosmetic changes in a system deeply entrenched and jealously guarded by "white" South Africa. That this is the view of the black majority, which will inevitably hold power in South Africa and with which we will, therefore, have to deal, is made clear by the recent explosions of violence there.

Perhaps most pernicious, because it camouflages a very basic aspect of apartheid, is the latest so-called reform. The Appeals Court of South Africa recently ruled that black migrant workers who have been continuously employed in one job for 10 years or in various jobs for 15 years now have rights of permanent residency in "white" South Africa even if they must return to their "homelands" each year to renew their work contracts. They can no longer be deported to the homelands if they lose their jobs.

To regard this as a reform, however, is to ignore the basic injustice of a system that requires a court ruling to allow an individual the right to reside wherever he pleases in the country of his birth.

To then use such decisions as justification for closer diplomatic relations is ludicrous.

It is also dangerous since it diverts attention from the South African regime's relentless pursuit of apartheid.

While the world applauds its magnanimity in granting urban blacks—whose labor it needs—rights of permanent residency, South Africa continues to implement its homelands policy, denying blacks any citizenship rights in South Africa and forcibly removing hundreds of thousands of them from land designated "white." Euphemistically referred to as separate development, the homelands policy is the fulcrum upon which turns the ultimate success and international acceptance of white domination of South Africa.

The policy is so simple and surrounded by such deceptive rhetoric that I fear a world that has proved itself extemely willing to accept a fait accompli in other instances will do so once again. For instance, when Goa and Tibet were taken over by larger neighbors (India and China, respectively), the world was outraged. But today who cares? More recently, in the wake of the furor over Israel's occupation of Lebanon, demands that it withdraw immediately evolved into protracted negotiations offering Israel inducements to withdraw.

South Africa is counting on a similar international reaction to its homelands policy, under which no blacks are considered citizens of South Africa. They are all regarded as citizens of an ethnic homeland. That many of them have never even visited these so-called homelands matters not at all. The white Government has decided that it is there and only there that they have any citizenship rights.

Ten homelands, comprising 13 percent of the land, have been created. Most of them consist of noncontiguous, fragmented areas and are unable to support economies that would make them self-sustaining. They are dependent on South Africa to provide employment for the vast majority of their "citizens." Since the sophisticated and affluent white-controlled South African economy is in need of cheap, plentiful labor, it is an arrangement that works to its definite advantage.

Even though their economies are so dependent on the rest of South Africa, four of the homelands—Bophuthatswana, Ciskei, Transkei and Venda—have been declared independent. Not one country in the world, except South Africa, has yet recognized this pseudo-independence. Late last year, however, the United States took what is perhaps a first step toward changing that when American diplomats made their first official visits to the homelands.

While the anti-apartheid movement has not succeeded in shaping world opinion about racism in South Africa to the point where strong international actions have been taken, it has kept the issue before the public. In the absence of an informed cadre of activists to prick the conscience of the world and its leaders, it is doubtful that policy statements such as the Reagan Administration's recent condemnation of apartheid as "morally wrong" would be made.

But I wonder if the vigilance of the dedicated few will be enough to counter pragmatic world opinion when the homelands scheme has been fully implemented and the Government of South Africa grants political rights to the ineffectual number of blacks remaining citizens of the Republic. It is more probable that they will be viewed as radicals standing in the way of the new, established order. Who will listen to their protest that by allowing 20 million people to be evicted from the land of their birth the world acquiesced in racial and human injustice of monumental proportions?●

THE ARTIE BUTLER STORY

HON. BARNEY FRANK

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. FRANK. Mr. Speaker, with the retirement of Carl Yastrzemski, a lot of attention has been focused on the twin subjects of age and baseball players. The baseball fans in Massachusetts and elsewhere in the country will miss Carl Yastrzemski. But as Artie Butler demonstrates, there can be life after baseball—long after baseball.

Artie Butler, who lives in the sports-minded community of Fall River, is the oldest living former major league baseball player. His professional career began 75 years ago and he remains an interested and knowledgeable baseball fan today. The accompanying article from the Boston Herald tells the wonderful story of Artie Butler. Too many people in America today still operate with prejudice against older people, assuming that those who have reached an advanced age are somehow no longer interesting or worth the attention of the rest of us. As this article shows, the richness of experience of our older citizens is a great asset for all of us. I congratulate Dick White and the Boston Herald for sharing the Artie Butler story with us.

I ask that it be printed here.

At 95 years old, Fall River's Artie Butler is older even than Carl Yastrzemski. He is, in fact, the oldest living former major league baseball player. He took his place in baseball history to do battle alongside Honus Wagner, Christy Mathewson, Rogers Hornsby, and yes . . . he remembers it well.

The diamond dust has long since settled for the still-spry former infielder whose professional career in baseball began in 1908 in the old New England League and ended in 1928 with the Providence Grays in the Eastern League. In between, he played for Boston, Pittsburgh and St. Louis.

He is a man who chased a dream and caught it during a time when only the most rugged survived.

"I wasn't a star," Butler says (his real surname is Bouthitier). "I had to hit if I wanted to live. In 20 years, I missed only one ballgame because of a broken nose.

"My greatest fan was my dad," he recalls. "He brought the whole family up to Boston for the dedication of the new Braves Field. I was playing for the St. Louis Cardinals in 1913."

In that opening game, there was a $50 prize offered for the player who got the first hit in the spanking new park. Manager Miller Huggins inserted himself into the starting line-up at Butler's usual spot as lead-off hitter.

"He wanted that fifty bucks," laughs Butler. "I was the second batter. After Huggins grounded out, I got the first hit and the $50. Miller just shook his head.

"The best pitchers I ever faced were the great Christy Mathewson, Grover Cleveland Alexander and Jack Chesbro, who threw a nasty spitball," says Butler. "But the greatest of them all was Walter Johnson over in the American League. I batted against him in exhibition games and his fastball was just unbelievable!"

After playing in only 27 games for the Boston Braves, Butler was purchased by the Pittsburgh Pirates in 1912 to replace the legendary (and retiring) Honus Wagner at shortstop. In his Pittsburgh debut, Butler had a single and a triple off Mathewson that helped to beat the New York Giants.

But Wagner, the future Hall-of-Famer who earned the unheard of annual sum of $12,000 a season, changed his mind about retiring and Butler waited in the wings.

A year later, while pitching batting practice, "I threw my arm out showing off," Butler says. "That's why they traded me to St. Louis the next year."

When a ballplayer was hurt in those days, he would often keep that damaging information to himself for fear of being benched.

Unaware of his shoulder separation, the Cardinals played Butler at shortstop. "I just couldn't turn a major league double play," he says, "or make a strong relay throw from the outfield."

In 1915, Butler gritted his teeth and played 130 games at shortstop, batted .254 and stole 34 bases—all with a bum shoulder.

During that same season, he took a young kid from Texas under his wing. The kid's name was Rogers Hornsby, later known as, "The Rajah."

"He had a pair of blue jeans, two shirts and a pair of dice when he walked in," chuckled Butler. "I worked with him for four hours every day at the ballpark. He only batted .246 and I gave him hitting and fielding tips and had kids shag the balls."

Hornsby went on to stardom as Butler's arm worsened. Hornsby led the league in batting for seven consecutive years.

In 1916, the sore shoulder forced Butler to play at second base and the outfield, often filling in as a pinch hitter.

In one of those games, the Philadelphia Athletics' great hurler Grover Cleveland Alexander had a no-hitter going with two outs in the ninth. At that point in his illustrious career, Alexander had never thrown a no-hitter.

Butler was called in to pinch hit.

"Everybody was rooting for Alexander," says Butler, "including some of my teammates! I was in a bad slump at the time, but I told the guys on the bench that I was going to hit one down his throat."

Butler cracked the first pitch right into centerfield for a base hit.

In 1917, Butler began an 11-year stint in the American Association, the International and Eastern Leagues. He says that he led just about every team he played for in the minor leagues in hitting, runs scored and stolen bases from 1917 to 1928. At the age of 40, playing for the Providence Grays, Butler led the league in hitting with a .368 average. That's when he decided to call it quits.

Now, Artie Butler lives in a modern high-riser in Fall River. What greets you as you enter the living room is a mini Baseball Hall of Fame.

There are sketches and framed photos on the wall, baseballs, statues, bats, priceless ancient baseball cards and yellow clippings of a more innocent time—a tribute to a sport and its luminaries.

He produces one of his Louisville Slugger, Artie Butler model bats that he used in the major leagues. It resembles a war club.

"I used to choke up on it," he says going into his batting stance. "There's good wood in that bat. The weight is evenly distributed and the wood ash was aged just for the stars in the major leagues. It's a 42-ounce bat. Today, they're 36—just like a tennis racket.

"Don't misunderstand, I still love baseball. But a lot of people today are home run happy. I don't bat an eyelash when someone hits a home run. I like the line drive hitters, you know. Jerry Remy is my boy. Absolutely."

Butler reminisces in his living room, seated in front of a huge, 1909 "Silvertone" short-wave radio console. "I have the feeling that I'll live to be 110, but I'm not kidding anybody. I'm here today, but who knows where I'll be tomorrow?

"I'm the only one left in the family. It won't be long now."

Artie Butler smiles peacefully as he turns on the old Silvertone to listen to the ballgame.●

SALUTE TO JAMES R. MALONEY, DIRECTOR OF ALLEGHENY COUNTY PORT AUTHORITY

HON. DOUG WALGREN

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. WALGREN. Mr. Speaker, one of the most interesting purposes of the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD is to chronical the history of our country and the individuals who have contributed to our Nation's progress. There is a special person from Allegheny County that deserves to be recognized in that context.

Jim Maloney will retire next week as executive director of the Port Authority of Allegheny County. Since coming to the Port Authority in 1970, Jim has been responsible for major developments in public transportation in Allegheny County—developments that have seen $700 million invested under his supervision in a variety of public transportation efforts. Jim has played a critical role in positioning the Pittsburgh area to compete with other cities across the country as a good place to live and work well past the year 2000.

Jim is a product of Pittsburgh as much as any of us are "products" of where we grow up. He went to western Pennsylvania schools and western Pennsylvania colleges, graduating from Duquesne University and the University of Pittsburgh School of Business. It is especially good to see someone whose background is so associated with the Pittsburgh area make such a significant contribution to keeping the Pittsburgh area vital.

Those who have worked with him or come to know him have an unusual amount of respect and affection for him. On the national level, he has been honored by the American Public Transit Association, the Urban Mass Transportation Administration, and other transportation organizations.

Jim's ability to command both respect and affection must be at the bottom of his success. Implementing major initiatives in public transit is very difficult. High inflation, changing and divided government direction, the intense interests of organized labor, and the sharp judgment of the public, all are major obstacles. Strong personal qualities are necessary to succeed in public administration under these kinds of pressures.

And Jim has come through with discipline and compassion. His administration of millions of dollars in public funds has been a model of good government. And one of his greatest credits has been his readiness to support transportation for the handicapped which led to financial support for the "Magic Carpet" in Allegheny County and ultimately to countywide "door-to-door" service that is broadening the life of many people with special disabilities and handicaps. Jim has put in place a helping hand for others that we all should aspire to live up to.

Jim Maloney is retiring for health reasons, difficulties he has met with both courage and humor. Our country is so fortunate to have individuals like him who have made ideas of progress become real benefits for the rest of us. Jim Maloney has enriched our lives, earned our respect, and left us with a feeling of kinship with him. And for all of that, we want to express our appreciation and our best wishes.●

75TH ANNIVERSARY AND AMORTIZATION OF ST. MARY'S CHURCH MORTGAGE, WILKES-BARRE, PA.

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on Saturday evening, October 15, the parishioners of St. Mary's Antiochian Orthodox Church will celebrate the 75th anniversary of their parish and the amortization of their church's mortgage.

The founding fathers of St. Mary's began their immigration to America in the year 1890. The families of Saba, Hyder, Broody, Audi, Simon, Serhan, and Atiyeh hailed from the area of the mountains of Lebanon, above Tripoli. The Syrian Orthodox families of Betar, Abraham, Johns, Cross, Namey, Baroody, and Solomon were among the earliest to arrive from the area of Latakia before 1900.

The young men came alone and found work here under sponsorship of Protestant missionaries in the Middle East. Once these single men earned enough to set up homes, they returned to their homeland to marry and raise children in America. They sought religious freedom and free enterprise in the land of hope and promise. Several of the young men married American women of Irish and Dutch descent and made happy marriages.

By the year 1904, 35 families resided in the Rolling Mill Hill section of Wilkes-Barre, and they convened to organize a parish. A worthy householder, Michael Saba, was elected to be the new clergyman. A bishop from Christian Russia, Raphael of Blessed Memory, came from New York City and ordained the priest. Father Michael served the parish for 4 years. By the year 1908, 30 new families joined the parish, and a new priest, Father George Kattouf, led ably in the purchase of land at 132 High Street in Wilkes-Barre, and the church building was completed at a cost of $9,000.

A rectory was also built in 1912, behind the church at 19 McCarragher Street, for $4,000.

The congregation grew steadily until 1914, when the First World War began. A number of our young men joined the Army and served well. By the year 1928, the old church was enlarged and lifted to build a large community hall underneath, at a cost of $13,000. The congregation, by 1940, was 300 families strong, and boasted business and professional people. During World War II, 130 of its young men served in the Armed Forces and 7 lost their lives in the European Theater.

In 1958, the congregation voted to erect a new church edifice, hall, and rectory. This was done in the year 1969, located at 905 South Main Street, Wilkes-Barre, Pa., at a cost of $800,000. The parish has been active in all civic activities.

Over the years, 534 marriages and 2,156 baptisms have been performed in the buildings of St. Mary's Antiochian Orthodox Church.

And so, Mr. Speaker, October 15 is indeed a very special day for the Wilkes-Barre community. At a banquet that evening all of us will rejoice with Very Rev. Herbert G. Nahas, the pastor, and all of the people of St. Mary's Antiochian Orthodox Church. It will be my honor to be there, Mr. Speaker, and it is my pleasure today to share this significant moment in the history of the Wyoming Valley with my friends and colleagues in the House.●

THE AFGHAN GESTAPO AND SOVIET RULE

HON. ROBERT H. MICHEL

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MICHEL. Mr. Speaker, the recent outcry over the Soviet Union's barbaric destruction of a Korean airliner disclosed to some people the true nature of the Soviet Union. But to many, this incident was merely yet another example of Soviet perfidy.

The same Soviet contempt for human rights is being shown in Afghanistan right now and has been since 1979. At this moment, Afghan Government secret police, known as the Khad, are carrying out Gestapo-like raids on the Afghan people. Torture, deceit, violence, subversion—these are the familiar tools of totalitarian secret police and the Khad are using them against the people of their own country and in the interest of the Kremlin.

Among our colleagues who are so eloquent in their denunciation of American allies in Latin America, I cannot think of one who has managed to bring to the attention of the House the existence, let alone the human rights violations, of the Khad. So I want to take this opportunity to provide these eloquent speakers with enough information to allow them to exercise their talent for criticism where it belongs.

At this point I wish to insert in the RECORD, "The Khad—U.S.S.R.'s Secret Weapon Against Afghan Rebels," from the Christian Science Monitor, September 29, 1983.

THE KHAD—U.S.S.R.'S SECRET WEAPON AGAINST AFGHAN REBELS

(By Edward Girardet)

PESHAWAR, PAKISTAN.—Just over a year ago, Afghanistan's secret police, the Khad, unceremoniously arrested a small group of Kabul University professors.

The academics were charged with disseminating anti-Soviet literature and starting an underground resistance organization. They denied the accusations, but were jailed without trial anyway.

Little has been heard about them since. But two months ago, according to a recent Afghan-resistance report, one of the group, historian and writer Hassan Kakar, was brought before a "revolutionary" court and sentenced to eight years imprisonment for his alleged activities. He was then bundled off to Pul-i Charkhi prison, a cumbersome cluster of concrete detention blocks on the outskirts of the capital, where an estimated 8,000 to 15,000 inmates are being held, mainly for political reasons.

During his trial, Dr. Kakar reportedly denounced the Soviet invasion. He also criticized the "Sovietization" of his country's higher-education structure. This involves the current practice of replacing university teachers who have been purged or have fled—more than four-fifths of the total since the 1978 communist coup d'etat—with Soviet advisers and often-unqualified party activists.

Dr. Kakar resfused to read a prepared statement on national television, and he condemned the Babrak Karmal regime to what he referred to as the "sentence of history."

As in many other totalitarian systems, the internment or intimidation of citizens by the Khad is only one aspect of the Afghan government's contrivance to crush widespread opposition. Reliable estimates of the number of political prisoners interned by the communist authorities or dispatched to camps in the Soviet Union, as some reports indicate, are not available.

Nor are reliable estimates of the number of prisoners tortured or executed since the Soviet invasion. But the figure is thought to be well into the tens of thousands.

The threat of the knock on the door or the street sweep remains a constant concern for Afghans living in the Soviet-occupied areas. Even the remote suspicion of resistance affiliation is enough to land one in the Khad basement interrogation rooms near the prime minister's offices in Kabul. Show trials followed by television appearances of accused admitting to "CIA crimes" or "collaboration with imperialist antirevolutionary forces" are therefore staged to remind the population of what happens to those who continue to oppose the authorities.

Cases of outright defiance, such as that of Dr. Kakar, are not uncommon, but the Khad can bring often-nefarious pressures to bear on prisoners who refuse to cooperate, including torture of prisoners and the harassment of their families, bribery, and promises of release or reduced sentences.

A far less-sophisticated version of its KGB big brother in the Soviet Union, the Khad nevertheless has developed into a formidable security weapon for Soviet divide-and-rule tactics. Its extensive activities—gathering intelligence, infiltrating the resistance, spreading false information, and processing of political prisoners—in many cases have proved even more effective against the guerrillas than have massive military onslaughts.

Over the past years, the Soviets have succeeded in broadly penetrating resistance organizations by means of the Khad—not only in Afghanistan, but also among the political groups and refugee camps in neighboring Pakistan and Iran.

The Khad is thought to be responsible for much of the internal rivalry and political divisions among the major guerrilla fronts. Complains one resistance commander: "In some areas, Khad agents have rendered mujahideen groups completely useless by getting them to fight among themselves. Why should the Soviets worry about killing Afghans if the mujahideen do it for them?"

Khad control of the Afghan militia, the "defenders of the revolution," also has seriously weakened the resistance struggle in some parts. Attracted by high salaries and proper weapons, militiamen—who dress and look like the mujahideen—are considered more reliable than conscript soldiers of the defection-ridden Afghan Army. Although not necessarily pro-Soviet they are willing—for financial bonuses—to participate in special operations.

The Soviets, via the Khad, ensure that money is never lacking.

Disposing of an enormous budget channeled directly to it by the Soviets—estimated by some observers as being equivalent to that of the total Afghan budget just 10 years ago—the Khad is believed to employ at least 15,000 to 20,000 full-time trained agents. Many of them have gone to the USSR or other East-bloc countries, notably East Germany, for three to six months of instruction.

According to Western intelligence sources, this includes training in interrogation and torture methods. An additional 100,000 or more male and female informants are said to be on the payroll.

The Soviets also have subtly exploited the tendency among certain guerrilla fronts to establish nonaggression pacts with the militia. The expansion of noncombat zones, particularly around the towns, suits the Soviets to the extent that they introduce economic projects or fill the shops with goods in an effort to win over the local population.

As a result, increasing numbers of security posts—as many as 900 in the Kabul area—are being manned by the militia. Astute mujahideen commanders view this guerrilla-militia cosiness with growing unease. They are now trying to discourage such "understandings" unless they are considered to serve legitimate resistance interests.

But by many mujahideen, such pacts are regarded as a victory. Many have only "defected" to the militia on a temporary basis in order to procure weapons, ammunition, and money—often on orders of their resistance commanders. Some return immediately to the mountains. Others remain with their militia units, but actively collaborate with the mujahideen during anti-government operations.

One region where guileful KGB tactics have severely undermined the resistance struggle is Hazarajat in the central highlands.

Among the first to revolt against the communists prior to the invasion, the Mongolian-featured, Shiite Hazaras rapidly established their own self-governing resistance organization, run by the Shura (assembly) in 1979. Both Afghan government and Soviet attempts to take the region militarily were thwarted by well-coordinated guerrilla units controlling the narrow passes leading into the mountainous outback.

Shortly after the invasion, the Soviets changed tactics and sought to pressure the Hazaras into submission by imposing an economic blockade. At the same time, they initiated a subversive campaign aimed at infiltrating the Hazara resistance, using Khad and Iranian Tudeh (Communist Party) agents.

Often regarded as the underdogs of Afghan society, the Hazaras have traditionally turned to Iran for religious and economic solidarity. As fellow Shiites, many hold Ayatollah Khomeini in high esteem and retain close relations with Iranian clerics. When unable to live off the land, Hazara men have usually headed to Iran in search of jobs to maintain their families back home.

In late 1980, Hazaras recruited by the Tudeh Party in conjunction with the Khad and KGB began to filter back to Afghanistan. So did Tudeh agents purporting to represent Khomeini. Within months, they succeeded—by playing on religious and traditional sentiments—in disrupting the shura, thus curbing organized resistance activities.

Local guerrilla commanders and intellectuals were gradually hounded by the spread of false rumors. Even volunteer French doctors, who were providing basic health care in many villages, were forced to leave the Hazara heartland by clerics persuaded that the Europeans were "godless imperialists" and anti-Khomeini instigators.

Only highly respected mujahideen commanders were able to resist such tactics. More recently, however, awareness has begun to emerge among both the mujahideen and local populations in the Hazarajat and elsewhere of what the Soviets are up to. This has prompted appropriate countermeasures.

Guerrilla leaders are seeking to eliminate rivalry through force, persuasion, and third-party reconciliation. Just as the Khad has succeeded in penetrating the resistance, the mujahideen have never lacked collaborators among government ranks. Tipoffs have led to the rooting out of informers, who are then tried and usually executed, while communist officials or Khad operators known to be specifically involved in resistance infiltration are, wherever possible, assassinated.

For the resistance, dealing with the Khad will no doubt remain one of its stickiest predicaments. With substantial independent powers of its own, the Khad is a constantly growing "state within a state." Ironically, despite close KGB management, it is also an organization over which the Soviets do not command the control they would like. Much to the KGB's dismay, the Khad is becoming increasingly involved in the bitter rivalry between Afghanistan's two communist factions: the Parcham (Banner) and the Khalq (Masses).

Although the Khalq-dominated Interior Ministry operates its own substantial security and intelligence service, it is the Parcham-influenced Khad that has achieved for itself the central position in the government's repressive apparatus. Khad agents often will purposely provide arms or information to the mujahideen in the knowledge that they will attack control posts manned by pro-Khalq militiamen or soldiers. Similarly, some of the assassinations carried out against Khalqis are thought to be Khad-initiated. The Khalqis play a reciprocal game against the Parchamis.●

CLAUDE "BUDDY" YOUNG, A FRIEND TO ALL PEOPLE, A MAN FOR ALL SEASONS

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to my friend and professional football colleague, Claude "Buddy" Young. His untimely death over the Labor Day weekend shocked and saddened us all. Buddy was one of football's finest gentlemen and greatest sportsmen. He was a man far larger in his love of life and his love of the people whose lives he touched, than most any man I have ever known.

Buddy faced many challenges on his way to success and fame, challenges that might have defeated many a lesser man. But Buddy never let these challenges defeat him. He knew that in facing up to the challenges and overcoming them, he was helping to prove that the American dream of a better life was available to anyone who wanted to reach for it.

From the time Buddy was NCAA sprint champion and All-American in the same year, at the University of Illinois, through his career and association with the NFL, he worked hard to improve the game of football, and to gain respect for all those who played the game.

Buddy Young will be missed, but he will never be forgotten. He was in the truest sense, a friend to all people, a man for all seasons.

The following article from the New York Times gives a wonderful picture of Buddy, his character, his love of life, his love of people, and peoples' love for him. I would like to share it with my colleagues.

EVERYBODY'S BUDDY

(By Dave Anderson)

In the hours after the dessert dishes had been cleared away by the waiters at the football dinner in the midtown hotel ballroom, too many speeches had been too long. Now, his head barely above the lectern, Buddy Young identified himself as representing the N.A.A.L.P., which woke up his half-dozing listeners who confused the initials with those of another organization.

"Yes," said Buddy Young without a smile, "the National Association for the Advancement of Little People."

Little in height, perhaps, at 5 feet 4 inches, but Claude (Buddy) Young stood tall, in or out of football. His sense of what life is all about towered over that of many others who think they have the answers. Two weeks ago he was driving to the Dallas-Fort Worth airport to catch a late night plane to New York to enjoy the rest of the Labor Day weekend with his family. He apparently fell asleep at the wheel. His car careened off the highway. The next afternoon he was found dead.

The tragic irony is that 57-year-old Buddy Young, as the National Football League's director of player relations, had been attending a memorial service in Louisiana at Northwestern State University for Joe Delaney, the Kansas City Chiefs' running back who had drowned June 29 while trying to save three youngsters from drowning.

Today at 11 A.M. hundreds of Buddy Young's friends will attend a memorial service for him at Christ Church, 520 Park Avenue at East 60th Street, which he often passed as he walked to the N.F.L. office a few blocks away. Sometimes he had walked all the way from his home in Hartsdale, sometimes from Van Cortlandt Park where his wife, Geraldine, would drop him off. On his arrival, in the years before a shower was available in the N.F.L. office, he would clean up in the basement with the janitors.

"Instead of walking all those miles," he once was asked, "why don't you run?"

"I've been running all my life," he said. "I'm never going to run again."

As an all-American 172-pound halfback with sprinter speed at Illinois, he had run for 13 touchdowns as a freshman in 1944, tying Red Grange's record. His touchdowns included runs of 92, 82, 74, 63 and 40 yards. He emerged as only the second black all-American, half a century after Fritz Pollard of Brown had been the first. He then joined the New York Yankees of the All-America Conference, whose star was Orban (Spec) Sanders, a white tailback from Texas.

"I'd like to room with you," Buddy Young suggested to Spec Sanders, "so that you can get to know me and I can get to know you."

Buddy Young didn't talk about integration; he integrated. He later roomed with another white running back, Zollie Toth of Louisiana State, after whom he named his youngest son.

"But the worst discrimination of all," Buddy Young once said, "is size discrimination."

If so, he taught coaches not to discriminate against him at a time when black players were new to pro football. But in 1945, with the Fleet City Bluejackets, a Navy service team near San Francisco, he had run with and against several N.F.L. players. As a rookie with the Yankees, he rushed for 712 yards, averaging 6.1 yards a carry. But perhaps his most memorable moment occurred in 1951 at the Polo Grounds. With the New York Yanks trailing, 23-17, the late Emlen Tunnell of the Giants returned a kickoff 100 yards for a touchdown. On the ensuing kickoff, Buddy Young scooted 90 yards for a touchdown.

"I don't think that ever happened in the N.F.L., before or since," says Wellington Mara, the Giants' coowner. "And on the next kickoff, Emlen got across midfield before the last man tackled him."

But in recent years, Buddy Young was always thought of as the N.F.L.'s player relations director, not as a former player. In two decades since being hired by Commissioner Pete Rozelle, he had developed into a behind-the-scenes mover and shaker. His job, as he said, was to "sell business and industry on the untapped resoruces of athletes beyond the playing field." Back during the battle for players with the American Football League, his job also was to persuade the best draft choices to sign with N.F.L. teams.

"Markets," he told Gale Sayers in 1965, "the choice you make ought to do with markets rather than the name of the football team."

Gale Sayers, then a rookie running back out of Kansas, signed with the Chicago Bears instead of the Kansas City Chiefs because of "markets," not money.

Buddy Young could be as formal as a board room, or as informal as a bottle of beer in one hand and a cigar in the other, his tie usually loosened.

"I think all any man deserves in life is the chance," he once said. "Nothing more, nothing less."

With his corporate and Congresional connections, Buddy Young gave that chance to dozens of former N.F.L. players, black and white. But he never believed that an athlete's character had been molded by playing football.

"Football doesn't make great men," he once said. "Great men have made football."

Buddy Young never had the opportunity to implement fully his latest idea—developing an anti-drug program for high school kids in conjunction with their high school football coaches and the mayors of America's leading cities. He had attended the first seminar in Chicago not long before his funeral at a South Side church where services were scheduled to start at 7 o'clock in the evening to accommodate the working people.

"So many people showed up to file past the casket," Pete Rozelle recalls, "the services didn't begin until 8."

Outside, later, some of those who had attended the funeral were saying that somebody should have thought to hire a hall where all of Buddy Young's friends could have gathered after the services. Paul (Tank) Younger, now the San Diego Chargers' assistant general manager and once a fullback with the Los Angeles Rams, smiled.

"For all of Buddy's friends," he said, "you'd need to hire Soldier Field."●

THE FACTS SPEAK FOR THEMSELVES

HON. C. W. (BILL) YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, Soviet President Yuri Andropov yesterday charged the United States with pursuing a "militarist course which poses a grave threat to peace." I submit to my colleagues that it is the Soviet Union and not the United States which threatens world peace. Soviet actions over the years speak for themselves.

It was the Soviet Union, and not the United States, which on September 1, shot down an unarmed Korean Air Lines passenger aircraft, murdering all 269 people on board.

It is the Soviet Union, and not the United States, who continues to occupy Afghanistan. Since its military invasion, the Soviets have ransacked towns and villages in that nation killing and wounding thousands of innocent men, women, and children.

It is the Soviet Union, and not the United States, which continues to deny the people of Poland their right to live as free people. Soviet rule there is similar to its control of other Eastern European countries such as Czechoslovakia, East Germany, Hungary, Romania, Bulgaria, and Yugoslavia.

It is the Soviet Union, and not the United States, which incites armed conflicts in Southeast Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Central America.

Yet Yuri Andropov charged later in his speech yesterday that the United States seeks a "domineering position in the world without reckoning with the interests of other states and peoples."

Did the Soviets consider the interests of the 269 people aboard flight 007 before they ordered its destruction? Did the Soviets consider the welfare of the innocent men, women, and children of Afghanistan before they fired upon them with deadly chemical weapons? Did the Soviets have the interest of the Polish people at heart when they imposed martial law in that nation?

The answer to all these questions is no, and the evidence is clear that the Soviet Union is the aggressor nation in the world. Soviet leaders have demonstrated time and again that there is no limit to the actions they will undertake to fulfill their ultimate goal of world domination.

Among his other charges yesterday, Yuri Andropov also blamed tensions in Europe, Asia, Africa, the Middle East, and Central America on the United States, failing to mention that Soviet arms shipments and support in all those parts of the world are the real underlying causes of tension.

He criticized President Reagan's latest proposal on strategic arms negotiations, saying our Nation is unwilling "to conduct serious talks of any kind." When was the last time the Soviet offered any proposals at the strategic arms talks in Geneva?

Yuri Andropov went on to charge that the United States is attempting to disrupt the existing strategic balance. What balance can he be referring to? The Soviets now have 600 more nuclear launchers than the United States and have upgraded their intercontinental ballistic missile system three times since our most modern ICBM was phased in during the early part of the last decade. To the Soviets, strategic balance means any level where they remain superior.

The Soviet President's speech is nothing more than the latest piece of the continuing Soviet propaganda campaign. In this case, it is propaganda at the most obvious and highest level. While most Americans are aware of Yuri Andropov's exaggerations and lies, many people throughout the world do not have access to a free press and the wealth of information supplied to us in the United States. To people without an understanding of the facts, his speech may sound believable, and therein lies the success of the Soviet propaganda campaign.

While the United States strives to insure world peace, the Soviet Union's aggressive actions and growing arsenal continue to contradict their rhetoric. For the Soviet leaders, the world will be at peace only when there exists no opposition to their rule.

I include the following articles:

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 29, 1983]

ANDROPOV BLASTS U.S. 'MILITARIST COURSE'

(By Michael Dobbs)

Moscow, Sept. 28—President Yuri Andropov today belittled the Reagan administration's commitment to arms control in one of the sharpest attacks on U.S. foreign policy by a Soviet leader in recent years.

In a lengthy statement devoted entirely to U.S.-Soviet relations, Andropov accused Washington of pursuing a "militarist course" that raised the danger of nuclear war. He dismissed President Reagan's latest proposals on intermediate-range nuclear weapons in Europe and warned that the Soviet Union would respond to any attempt to disrupt the existing strategic balance.

Commenting for the first time on the shooting down of a South Korean airliner by the Soviet Union, Andropov blamed the United States for what he called "a sophisticated provocation, masterminded by U.S. special services" and "an example of extreme adventurism in politics." He said that Washington had exploited the furor surrounding the incident to step up the arms race.

Western diplomats who heard Andropov's statement, which was read by an announcer as the lead item on state television news, expressed surprise at the virulence of his language and the bleakness with which he depicted the current state of international relations. They said he appeared to be mounting a counter-offensive following a series of attacks by President Reagan and senior U.S. officials on the Soviet Union.

While Soviet rhetoric against the United States has reflected the deterioration in relations between the superpowers during the past few years, diplomatic observers here could recall few precedents for the sweeping nature of Andropov's attacks. The Soviet leader seemed to rule out all hope of any break-through in the Geneva talks on intermediate nuclear weapons on the basis of present U.S. proposals.

[In Washington, a State Department statement said, "The world will be deeply disappointed with the Andropov statement. He has for the first time associated the highest levels of the Soviet government with the pathetic charge that the Soviet shootdown of the civilian aircraft was the result of 'a sophisticated provocation, organized by the U.S. special services.' The international community expects and awaits a different answer. * * *

["The world will be disappointed that Mr. Andropov's response to the president's major arms control initiative at the United Nations is a threatening restatement of their long-standing position that the Soviets will maintain their monopoly of intermediate-range missiles in Europe. For our part, we will continue to work in Geneva for a negotiated settlement that strengthens international peace and security."]

Andropov lashed into past and present U.S. policies around the world—from Central America to Lebanon to what he depicted as attempts to stir up militarism in Japan. On arms control, he said the United States was unwilling "to conduct serious talks of any kind" and was simply playing for time at negotiations in Geneva on intermediate-range nuclear weapons and the parallel talks on long-range, or strategic missiles.

Andropov also questioned the suitability of the United States to act as the host for the United Nations and warned Western European leaders that they were being used as political "hostages."

One of the main messages in the 3,000-word statement was that the Kremlin would show no weakness in the face of threats from abroad. Andropov said that people who had attempted to undermine the Soviet Union's independence or Communist system in the past had ended up on "the garbage heap of history."

"The Soviet people can rest assured that our country's defense capability is maintained at such a level that it would not be advisable to anyone to stage a trial of strength," he said.

Publication of the statement was an unusual way of making the Soviet leader's views known. A Soviet official said today that Andropov, who has not been seen in public since late August, has still not returned to Moscow from his vacation.

The statement, which was couched in grave and somber terms, began with the words: "The Soviet leadership deems it necessary to make known to the Soviet people, other peoples, and all those who are responsible for shaping the policy of states its assessment of the course pursued in international affairs by the present U.S. administration.

"To speak briefly, this is a Militarist course which poses a grave threat to peace. Its essence is to try and assure for the United States domineering positions in the world without reckoning with the interests of other states and peoples."

Andropov said that the past two years of talks in Geneva had proved that U.S. negotiators were not ready to reach an agreement.

"Their task is different—to play for time and then start the deployment in Western Europe of ballistic Pershing II and long-range cruise missiles. They do not even try to conceal this. All they do is prattle about some flexibility of the United States," he said.

Dismissing Reagan's latest arms proposals, Andropov said: "We are [being asked] to talk on how to help the NATO bloc to upset to its advantage the balance of medium-range nuclear systems in the European zone. And this move is presented brazenfacedly as something new."

He did not deal with the details of Reagan's offer to include nuclear bombers in calculations of medium-range weapons systems or to refrain from matching global levels of Soviet warheads.

Describing U.S. policies as short-sighted, cynical and suicidal, the Soviet leader expressed surprise that Western European politicians were going along with Washington's determination to deploy new U.S. nuclear weapons in Europe. He accused the European leaders of "disregarding the interests of their peoples and the interests of peace" by helping to "implement the ambitious militarist plans of the U.S. administration."

Adding that the Americans had shown no sign of being willing to do business at the strategic arms talks, Andropov said the United States was planning to launch the production of new "weapons which may radically alter the notions of strategic stability and the very possibility of effective limitation and reduction of nuclear arms."

"No one should mistake the Soviet Union's good will and desire to come to agreement as a sign of weakness. The Soviet Union will be able to make a proper response to any attempt to disrupt the existing military-strategic balance, and its words and deeds will not be at variance," he said.

Claiming that U.S. leaders had shown contempt for the United Nations, Andropov asked: "Can the international organization, called upon to maintain peace and security, remain in the country where outrageous militarist psychosis is imposed and the good name of the organization is insulted?" The Kremlin has accused the United States of making it impossible for Foreign Minister Andrei Gromyko to attend the present session of the U.N. General Assembly in New York.

Saying that the Reagan administration was waging a crusade against communism, Andropov attacked the "transference of ideological contradictions to the sphere of inter-state relations."

"This is simply absurd and inadmissable at present in the nuclear age. Transformation of the battle of ideas into military confrontation would be too costly for the whole of mankind," he said.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 29, 1983]

ANDROPOV: U.S. BREACHES NORMS OF MORALITY, DECENCY

Moscow, Sept. 28 (AP).—Here are excerpts from the text of Soviet President Yuri Andropov's statement on international affairs. The English-language version was provided by the official news agency Tass:

The Soviet leadership deems it necessary to make known * * * its assessment of the course pursued in international affairs by the present U.S. administration.

To speak briefly, this is a militarist course which poses a grave threat to peace. Its essence is to try and assure for the United States domineering positions in the world without reckoning with the interests of other states and peoples. Precisely these aims are served by the unprecedented build-up of the U.S. military potential, large-scale programs of manufacturing weapons of all types—nuclear, chemical and conventional. Now it plans to spread the unrestricted arms race into outer space too.

American military presence is expanded under invented pretexts of all sorts thousands of kilometers from U.S. territory. * * * As a result, tensions have grown worldwide—in Europe, Asia, Africa, Middle East and Central America. * * *

Peoples judge about the policy of a government first of all by its actions. That is why when the U.S. president in his grandiloquent speech from the United Nations rostrum declares about commitment to the cause of peace, self-determination and sovereignty of peoples, these mere declarations can convince no one.

Even if someone had any illusions as to the possible evolution for the better in the policy of the present American administration, the latest developments have finally dispelled them. For the sake of its imperial ambitions, it goes so far that one begins to doubt whether Washington has any brakes at all preventing it from crossing the mark before which any sober-minded person must stop.

The sophisticated provocation, masterminded by U.S. special services with the use of a South Korean plane, is also an example of extreme adventurism in politics. We have elucidated the factual aspect of the action in a thorough and authentic way. The guilt of its organizers, no matter how hard they might dodge and what false versions they might put forward, has been proved.

The Soviet leadership expressed regret over the loss of human lives due to that unprecedented, criminal subversion. It is on the conscience of those who would like to assume the right not to reckon with the sovereignty of states and inviolability of their borders, who masterminded and carried out the provocation, who literally on the following day hastily pushed through Congress colossal military spending and are now rubbing their hands with pleasure.

Thus the "humanism" of statesmen who are seeking to lay the blame for the death of people that were aboard the plane on others is turning into new heaps of weapons of mass destruction—from MX missiles to nerve gas containers.

In their striving to justify in some way their dangerous inhuman policies, the same people pile heaps of slander on the Soviet Union, on socialism as a social system, with the tone being set by the U.S. president himself. One must say bluntly—it is an unattractive sight when, with a view to smearing the Soviet people, leaders of such a country as the United States resort to what almost amounts to obscenities alternating with hypocritical preaching about morals and humanism. * * *

Now they in Washington breach along with morality also elementary norms of decency, showing disregard not only for statesmen and states, but also for the United Nations organization. A question arises: Can the international organization, called upon to maintain peace and security, remain in the country where outrageous militarist psychosis is imposed and the good name of the organization is insulted? * * *

As to the U.S. policy, its growing militarization is manifested among other things in the unwillingness to conduct serious talks of any kind, to come to agreement on questions of curbing the arms race.

The Soviet-American talks on the burning problem—reduction of nuclear armaments in Europe—have been going on for two years now. The position of the Soviet side is directed at finding mutually acceptable solutions on a fair, just basis, solutions which do not infringe anyone's legitimate interests. At the same time, these two years made it clear that our partners in the talks at Geneva are not at all there to reach an accord. Their task is different—to play for time and then start the deployment in western Europe of ballistic Pershing II and long-range cruise missiles. They do not even try to conceal this.

All they do is prattle about some flexibility of the United States at the Geneva talks. Another portion of such "flexibility" has just materialized. And the deception contained in it has become clear this time as well. To leave aside details, the essence of the so-called new move in the U.S. position, billed as superb, is reduced to the proposal to agree, as before, on how many Soviet medium-range missiles should be reduced and how many new American missiles should be deployed in Europe in addition to the nuclear potential already possessed by NATO.

In brief, we are proposed to talk on how to help the NATO bloc to upset to its advantage the balance of medium-range nuclear systems in the European zone. And this move is presented brazen-facedly as something new.* * *

The operation on stationing these American nuclear missiles in Europe is seen from Washington's control room as simple in the extreme and maximally advantageous for the United States—advantageous at the expense of Europe. The U.S. European allies are regarded as hostages. This is a frank, but cynical policy.

But here is what is not really clear: Does this thought occur to those European political figures who, disregarding the interest of their peoples, and the interest of peace, help implement the ambitious militarist plans of the U.S. administration? * * *

Mankind has not lost, nor can it lose, its reason. This is manifested with great vigor in the scope of the antimissile, antiwar movement, having mounted in the European and other continents, the movement which draws people of different social, political and religious affiliation. * * *

Our aspirations and strivings are implemented in concrete proposals directed at effecting a decisive turn for the better in the world situation. The Soviet Union will continue to do everything possible to uphold peace on earth.●

THE TRAGEDY OF FLIGHT 007

HON. LEE H. HAMILTON

OF INDIANA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HAMILTON. Mr. Speaker, I insert my foreign affairs newsletter for September 1983 into the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD:

The foreign affairs newsletter follows:

THE TRAGEDY OF FLIGHT 007

In the early morning hours of September 1, 1983, a Soviet fighter shot down a South Korean airliner en route from Anchorage to Seoul, killing 269 innocent people. The tragedy of Korean Air Lines Flight 007 is one of the worst in civil aviation history. It has dashed hopes for modest Soviet-American rapprochement and has forced a reexamination of Soviet-American relations.

We may never know what caused the airliner to stray so far into Soviet airspace or why the Soviets shot it down just as it was leaving their airspace. Their claim, made repeatedly and without supporting evidence, that the airliner was on a "spy mission" is not satisfactory, but the closed nature of Soviet society will allow neither an investigation of the tragedy nor the release of information on it. The cockpit recorder from the downed aircraft may answer a few questions, but we first must recover it and interpret its data.

From the Soviet point of view, the airliner was suspicious. It flew over some of their most sensitive military installations and may have taken evasive action at some point. Even so, there is little doubt that the Soviet Union violated international law. While international law permits a nation to defend its airspace, it insists that the first duty of a nation faced with a stray aircraft is the welfare of the passengers. We are not sure whether the Soviets attempted to warn the airliner, but even if they tried and failed there could be no justification for the attack. This was a case of an airliner off course, and it posed no threat to Soviet security. The tragedy of Flight 007 was horrifying, but not surprising. Soviet attitudes toward the sanctity of national territory being what they are. The awful death toll makes the incident stand out, but the Soviets have taken hostile action against airliners before.

There are discomforting lessons about Soviet attitudes both in the decision to shoot down the airliner and in the Soviets' subsequent insistence that given the same circumstances, they would do it again. The Soviet Union's fanatical commitment to the defense of its airspace, its quest for total security, its passion for secrecy and its unwillingness to admit a mistake are deeply rooted in its history. In refusing to apologize to or provide compensation for the families of the victims, however, the Soviets have displayed great ineptitude and have invited worldwide disgust. Their virulent response to that disgust is further proof of their contempt for standards of civilized conduct. Equally discomforting is what the incident may tell us about the hidden workings of the Soviet bureaucracy. If the Soviets did not distinguish the large Boeing 747 commercial airliner from the small Boeing 707 military reconaissance aircraft on duty in the area outside Soviet airspace (and there is no direct evidence that the Soviets ever identified the aircraft as civilian), then Soviet air defense may be quite incompetent and the chances of misidentification and overreaction quite high. If local air defense authorities alone made the decision to fire on an unknown target, then the military may have achieved a frightening omnipotence within the Soviet system. Finally, if someone high in the Soviet political leadership issued the order to attack, then we must feel skeptical when Soviet leaders speak of the need for world peace, arms control or better East-West relations.

Although the President appropriately has used strong language to condemn the Soviet Union, our actions have been restrained. The date, the United States has reaffirmed the ban on American flights of the Soviet airline Aeroflot, closed Aeroflot's offices in New York and Washington, revoked Aeroflot's right to sell tickets here, stopped negotiations on new consulates in Kiev and New York, introduced a United Nations resolution deploring the Soviet action, called for a special session of the International Civil Aviation Organization to investigate the action, suspended several cultural and scientific programs with the Soviet Union and cancelled Soviet-American transportation accord. We are also seeking common action from our allies, and the international community has been supportive. Within a week of the incident, most of our European allies had agreed to a ten-day suspension of air travel to the Soviet Union. We have tried to expand this to a 60- to 90-day two-way suspension. Canada unilaterally suspended Aeroflot's landing rights for 60 days. Also, the International Federation of Air Line Pilots Associations called on a 60-day boycott of flights to Moscow and was quickly supported by pilots from many nations. We and our allies also have continued to demand an explanation, compensation and an apology, but the Soviets are not likely to answer.

Tougher responses could be made to the Soviet action, but they would entail certain risks. If we chose to expel Soviet diplomats or cancel arms control talks, the probable result would be a much higher state of tension. If we chose to back away from the grain sales agreement, we would hurt ourselves more than we would hurt the Soviets. Nonetheless, tougher responses should not be ruled out. Ending the extension of subsidized credit to the Soviet Union could be one economic sanction that we and our allies ought to consider.

The incident has made a return to stable dealings with the Soviet Union more difficult, at least in the short term, but also more necessary. Regrettably, the tragedy occurred as Soviet-American relations were improving. We had signed a new five-year grain sales agreement with the Soviet Union; our two nations and others had agreed on a final document at the Madrid Conference on European Security; arms control negotiations had entered a more serious phase, with more interest in an accord apparent on both sides; talks had commenced on new consulates in Kiev and New York. Although relations between the superpowers are now in a nosedive, with hostile rhetoric escalating and communications breaking down, and although it is not clear when the slide will end, a total rupture is not likely simply because both superpowers know that they can blow the world apart. Sooner or later, we must return to diplomacy and renew our effort to set the relationship back on course. We have no choice but to seek an alternative to confrontation.●

MISLEADING AND VICIOUS EDITORIAL BY THE LOUISVILLE TIMES

HON. CARROLL HUBBARD, JR.

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HUBBARD. Mr. Speaker, on September 16, the Louisville Times printed an incorrect, misleading and vicious editorial criticizing my recent foreign trip to Seoul, Korea, where I attended the conference to commemorate the 30th anniversary of the mutual defense treaty between the United States and the Republic of Korea.

The Louisville Times stated as fact that the "junket" was paid for with taxpayers' money and that "nearly three dozen other Congressmen" attended the conference.

The truth is that the total expenses for the five Members of Congress—

U.S. Senators ORRIN HATCH, ED ZORINSKY, JESSE HELMS, and STEVE SYMMS and I—were paid by the Asiatic Research Center of Korea University at Seoul and the Institute of American Relations here in Washington, D.C.

I assure my colleagues that if you find the Village Voice and the National Enquirer enjoyable reading, you will love the Louisville Times.

I have written a letter to the editor of the Louisville Times. The text of that letter follows:

CONGRESS OF THE UNITED STATES,
HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
Washington, D.C., September 29, 1983.

Mr. BARRY BINGHAM, Jr., Editor,
Mr. PAUL JANENSCH, Executive Editor,
Mr. VAN A. CAVETT, Opinion Page Editor,
The Louisville Times,
Louisville, Ky.

DEAR EDITORS: At the Paducah Labor Day picnic, several friends were commenting about the recent Korean Airlines Flight 007 disaster.

These friends said they were glad my schedule was changed by a Murray State University invitation for August 30, which caused me to fly from Nashville to Los Angeles where I boarded Korean Airlines Flight 015 for the trip to Seoul, Korea. I was scheduled for several days to fly from New York City to Seoul on August 30 on the ill-fated Flight 007.

An elderly couple from Kevil in Ballard County said to me at the Sept. 5 picnic: "Have the Courier-Journal editorial writers criticized you yet for being on the wrong airplane?" I laughed and said "No."

I have mailed to the Kevil couple a copy of your incorrect, misleading and vicious editorial of September 16 from The Louisville Times, a newspaper which has the same Editor and Executive Editor as The Courier-Journal.

The editorial is entitled "Safe landings with Rep. Hubbard." Those who for many years have read the editorials of the Bingham newspapers know that when the subject is U.S. Rep. Carroll Hubbard the editorials are anti-Hubbard and contain errors.

As to tax-paid trips to foreign countries, I can remember your newspapers editorially supporting and defending such trips by other Members of Congress.

I have taken two tax-paid trips to a foreign country during the 8 years and 9 months I have served in the U.S. Congress.

Since February 6, 1979, I have been Chairman of the House Panama Canal/Outer Continental Shelf Subcommittee.

My two tax-paid trips out of the country were both to Panama. After the second visit to Panama in March of 1982, a Washington reporter for the Courier-Journal questioned colleagues of mine in the U.S. House of Representatives as to whether or not I owned real estate in Panama. As other Members of Congress asked me about The Courier-Journal reporter's questions, I told them I had never even considered purchasing real estate in Panama.

So, in 1983 I make my first trip ever across either the Pacific or Atlantic Ocean and I am naturally, automatically criticized erroneously by the Bingham media empire, this latest attack coming in a Sept. 16 editorial entitled "Safe landings with Rep. Hubbard" in The Louisville Times.

The Times editorial says: "Rather, the Congressman might consider easing up on the junkets. He wouldn't have been headed to distant South Korea at taxpayers' expense if he hadn't determined that his presence, along with that of nearly three dozen other congressmen, was essential in marking the 30th anniversary of a U.S./Korea defense treaty. . . ."

As usual, your editorial writers were in such a hurry to criticize and castigate me that they failed to ask about or check the facts about who paid my expenses to Korea. Not one penny of taxpayers' money was used to pay my expenses for this trip. The total expenses for my visit to Korea were paid by the Asiatic Research Center of Korea University at Seoul and The Institute of American Relations at Washington, D.C.

Further, the five Members of Congress who attended the Sept. 1-3 conference in Seoul were U.S. Senators Ed Zorinsky, Jesse Helms, Orrin Hatch, Steve Symms and U.S. Rep. Carroll Hubbard. The Times again is wrong in saying "nearly three dozen" congressmen attended.

Pursuant to Kentucky Revised Statutes 411.051, I respectfully demand corrections of the specified errors from The Louisville Times on your editorial page within three business days after the day on which this demand for corrections is received by you.

Sincerely,

CARROLL HUBBARD,
Member of Congress.●

STATEMENT OF HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT ON THE INTRODUCTION OF H.R. 4054

HON. JOHN P. HAMMERSCHMIDT

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1982

● Mr. HAMMERSCHMIDT. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues on the Public Works and Transportation Committee today for the purpose of introducing legislation designed to fulfill the previous commitments made by the Congress and the administration to the aviation community.

One year ago, when Congress approved the Airport and Airway Improvement Act of 1982 (AAIA) and its accompanying user fee tax measures, a primary objective was to fully fund the approved program authorizations contained in that legislation. In passing this statute the Congress declared that the highest aviation priority would be given to the safe and expeditious operation of the airport and airway system. The funding mechanism of this legislation required a substantial increase in existing user fees—an increase that was supported by this administration as well as by most of the various aviation user groups.

Unfortunately, the fiscal year 1984 Department of Transportation Appropriations Act which was recently signed into law falls considerably short of the approved program authorizations for the airport and airway trust fund programs. The most glaring example of this is the $750 million funding level adopted for the facilities and equipment program, which, if allowed to continue, could seriously jeopardize the national airspace plan to modernize this Nation's air traffic control system.

In recognizing the need to modernize our airport and airway system, I have consistently supported efforts to fund the capital costs of the projects necessary to increase both the safety and capacity of our national air transportation system. I have also supported the user fee concept provided that the yearly appropriations were consistent with the program authorizations. Unfortunately, this has not occurred, and I believe that it is now up to the Congress to prevent the kind of huge trust fund surpluses which we had hoped to avoid and which we were assured would not occur.

Mr. Speaker, the funding levels requested by the administration and recently enacted for fiscal year 1984 do not coincide with previous assurances which we had received from the administration that the money collected from aviation users would be spent primarily to meet the capital needs of our Nation's air transportation system. Understandably, the aviation community is now expressing its outrage and calling for a reduction in aviation user taxes now that appropriations have fallen substantially below congressionally approved authorizations.

In introducing this legislation, I want to emphasize that my primary intention is to guarantee that the authorized amounts will be appropriated in the future, barring any unforeseen events which may make this undesirable. Because I remain firmly committed to the need to update and modernize our air traffic control system, I believe that the best approach at this time is to implement an across-the-board tax reduction for calendar year 1984, along with a simple trigger mechanism which would keep user taxes low in succeeding years only if the unobligated balance of the airport and airway trust fund exceeded $2.3 billion.

This approach will serve as an incentive to fulfill the spending obligations which were intended when we passed the AAIA 1 year ago. It should also serve as a disincentive for allowing a surplus to build up in the trust fund, which could then be used by OMB to reduce the total budget deficit. As it now stands, the low 1984 appropriations for the trust fund programs will create an estimated $3.4 billion unobligated surplus by the end of fiscal year 1984—a level which I believe is excessive.

Several legislative options were considered to prevent this from occurring in the future and while I believe the best approach to pursue at this time is to establish a simple linkage between the tax rates and the unobligated trust fund balance, I certainly am not locked into this concept. We all have the same valid concerns in mind and will be looking forward to any suggestions for improvement or alternative approaches which would better achieve the same goal.

Mr. Speaker, I have found it impossible to justify to aviation taxpayers why the many safety related programs and projects were not funded during fiscal year 1984. I believe this legislation represents an appropriate response and urge my colleagues to give it their full support.●

ETHYLENE DIBROMIDE: A RISKY CHEMICAL

HON. G. WILLIAM WHITEHURST

OF VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. WHITEHURST. Mr. Speaker, in "The Federal Review" section of the September 30, 1983, edition of the Washington Post, an article by staff writer Pete Earley outlined the proposal by OSHA to tighten the standards for the use of ethylene dibromide, as he says, "a potent chemical used in leaded gasoline, on fruit, and in flour mills."

I am including a copy of this article at this point in the RECORD, but I would like to call my colleagues' attention to a statement which I inserted in the RECORD on February 23, 1982, beginning on page E481, containing articles written by Dr. Eugen Wierbicki, a pioneer in the development of the use of low-level irradiation in food preservation. In one of those articles, Dr. Wierbicki pointed out that—

With the lowest dose ranging from 10 to 100 krad, irradiation can easily kill any kind of insect in any physiological development status—eggs, larva, etc. For example, it can be used to kill the Mediterranean fruit fly, which has created so many problems in the export of citrus fruit. This would require no more than 25 krad. The radiation can also be used very efficiently as a physical method for disinfestation of citrus fruit and could well replace fumigants such as ethylene dibromide, which is known to be a carcinogen [italics mine].

At this low level dosage, irradiation could likewise be used to rid grain of insect infestation. Its most useful application would be in the areas of big volume, probably in grain elevators.

In his articles, Dr. Wierbicki has outlined the values of food irradiation in some detail, and his comments are very much worth reading. Additionally, Mr. Speaker, on March 24 and July 12 of this year, beginning on pages E1329 and E3413 respectively, I inserted other articles dealing with the uses—and the safety—of food irradiation.

It is ironic that India is making wide use of the technique which we developed in our own Army Research Laboratories in Natick, Mass., and that China has recently sent a delegation to the United States to pursue the possibility of employing this same method there. Yet, here in the United States, where so much time and effort have been put into perfecting the technique, we have been reluctant to make use of it in food preservation, even though it could enhance our ability to buildup our exports of fresh fruit and vegetable, as well as pork. I must confess that I am somewhat at a loss to understand why the FDA has not acted more expeditiously in approving this method.

I would hope that, in light of the further evidence of the dangers of continuing to make widespread use of ethylene dibromide, long known to be carcinogenic, we would begin to move promptly toward replacing this vicious chemical with low-level irradiation.

Thank you, Mr. Speaker.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 30, 1983]

ETHYLENE DIBROMIDE: OSHA WANTS TO TIGHTEN GRIP ON RISKY CHEMICAL

(By Pete Earley)

The Occupational Safety and Health Administration yesterday proposed a more stringent standard for worker exposure to ethylene dibromide, a potent chemical used in leaded gasoline, on fruit and in flour mills. It has been linked to cancer and reproductive damage in humans.

The agency's announcement came less than two weeks after it was disclosed that OSHA had refused to issue an emergency standard for EDB for more than a year, even though it had two studies showing that virtually every worker exposed to the legal limits of the chemical for a career could expect to die of cancer.

Shortly before reports on those studies appeared, OSHA officials had told a congressional panel that a new standard for EDB would not be ready for at least six months. But, faced with mounting public criticism after the disclosure, OSHA moved quickly to ready the standard for publication in today's Federal Register.

"The significant risk of harm to worker health posed by EDB compels OSHA to promulgate a more protective standard to substantially reduce that risk," OSHA Administrator Thorne G. Auchter said.

The new standard would lower the allowable limit for EDB from 20 parts per million in the air, averaged over an eight-hour day, to 0.1 parts per million.

It also would set a short-term exposure limit of 0.5 parts per million, averaged over a 15-minute period, and would prohibit eye and skin contact with the chemical.

EDB is used as an anti-knock agent in leaded gasoline and as a fumigant for citrus and tropical fruit to prevent the spread of fruit flies and other pests.

In 1981, nearly 170 million pounds of EDB were produced in the United States. Massive amounts of it were used that year to combat the Mediterranean fruit fly in California.

OSHA estimates that about 56,000 U.S. workers are exposed to EDB for varying periods. But the agency doesn't have justification over small farming operations, and other estimates of the workers potentially at risk from the chemical range as high as 100,000.

OSHA claims its studies show that most workers are currently exposed to levels of EDB far below the existing 20 ppm standard and much closer to the new standard. But the International Brotherhood of Teamsters has testified that many flourmill workers can smell the chemical, which has no odor until it reaches a concentration of 10 parts per million.

Besides causing cancer and reproductive damage, high exposure to EDB can damage the kidneys, liver, spleen, respiratory tract, central nervous system, circulatory system, skin and eyes.

EDB is so potent that OSHA once said the exposure risks "appear to be far greater than for any other hazard that OSHA has regulated in the past."

Yet the agency repeatedly rebuffed calls by other federal agencies and the Teamsters to take emergency action on EDB, even though OSHA had two Environmental Protection Agency studies in its files in 1981 that showed the "excess cancer deaths" that could be expected from exposure at the maximum legal limit were 999 of every 1,000 workers.

At the time, Auchter said an emergency standard wouldn't stand up in court because OSHA didn't know enough about how many workers were being exposed or at what levels.

Recently, OSHA said it had collected that data and the figures proved Auchter acted correctly by waiting to issue a new standard.●

MO UDALL ON THE CRISIS IN MEXICO

HON. JOHN F. SEIBERLING

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 3 , 1983

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, Congress and the administration continue to wrestle over the problems facing Latin America. Understandably, most of the debate has centered around U.S. policy toward Central America, where we perceive the most immediate threat to our national security to lie. But while Central America preoccupies American attention, a problem of potentially far greater magnitude is developing much closer to home. I refer, of course, to our closest neighbor to the south—Mexico.

Last month, the Tucson Citizen carried a thoughtful and perceptive article on Mexico's problems written by my friend and distinguished colleague, MO UDALL. As he notes, "Mexico is not some distant trouble spot. It is right next door. If our neighbor gets into serious trouble, we can hardly expect to escape unharmed. Problems have a way of spilling over borders. We can see that in the evergrowing numbers of illegal immigrants crossing the borders. We can also see it in the business failures that followed the peso devaluation. But still larger troubles may be in store for Mexico—and for us."

Congressman UDALL'S article highlights the economic problems facing Mexico today—an international debt requiring servicing payments amounting to 129 percent of export earnings, an inflation rate of 100 percent, declining oil revenues, and skyrocketing prices for domestic goods. This problem is not simply an internal domestic matter. As Congressman UDALL clearly explains, "whatever happens in Mexico, we will feel the impact here. If Mexico should 'fall' sometime in the next decade, it will not fall due to any Communist insurgency in Central America. It will fall because it is economically weak and politically torn from within."

Mr. Speaker, we have got to take Mexico off the back burner. If we fail to deal with Mexico's pressing problems, we are going to suffer the consequences of a deteriorating political situation which will make Central America pale in comparison. Congressman UDALL should be commended for his efforts to focus congressional attention on Mexico's problems, and I urge my colleagues to pay careful attention to his views.

The full text of Congressman UDALL's article follows:

MEXICO—THE NEXT CRISIS?

(By Morris K. Udall)

Judging by Administration rhetoric, the fate of the free world is somehow closely linked to the outcome of the struggle in El Salvador. The same domino theory that was used to promote our involvement in Vietnam is now being used to justify our actions in Central America. The President even talks about a "Soviet-Cuban-Nicaraguan Axis" with the same intensity that Churchill and others talked about the German-Italian-Japanese Axis in World War II.

Maybe we are losing our sense of perspective in foreign policy. There are problems in Central America. Few can argue with that. And American interests are at stake in the region. No argument there either. But the problems in Central America go far deeper than any communist insurgency or conspiracy. And our interests in this hemisphere go far beyond El Salvador or even the whole of Central America.

We can't ignore Cuban attempts to sow discord in this hemisphere. Every reasonable effort should be made to contain Castro's adventurism. But let's recognize that there would be trouble in Central America today with or without Fidel Castro. Years of autocratic rule and economic mismanagement have wrought serious social and political troubles throughout the region. We should also recognize that earlier U.S. military intervention in that region has left lingering resentment against "Yankee imperialism." And many there still question our motives.

Various factors suggest there is more to be gained by negotiation, than by confrontation, in Central America. We should be working in concert with other countries like Mexico, Panama, Columbia, and Venezuela—the Contadora group—to reach a solution. The regional 'powers' have an interest in ending the conflict and stabilizing the area. We should work together.

But whatever we do in Central America, I think we make a mistake if we ignore an even greater concern, one that is even closer to home. I refer to Mexcio.

Mexico is not some distant trouble spot. It's right next door. If our neighbor gets into serious trouble, we can hardly expect to escape unharmed. Problems have a way of spilling over borders. We can see that in the ever growing numbers of illegal immigrants crossing the borders. We can also see it in the business failures that followed in the wake of the peso devaluation. But still larger troubles may be in store for Mexico . . . and for us.

Over the last decade, a combination of rapidly expanding production and escalating world oil prices encouraged Mexico to embark upon an ambitious industrialization plan financed by foreign capital, much of it loaned by American banks. Development plans, unfortunately, carried overly-optimistic assumptions about oil prices and about world trade and domestic growth.

The collapse of those expectations has left Mexico with massive economic troubles. Not only did public and private debt double in just four years, inflation skyrocketed from 20 percent in 1979 to nearly 100 percent last year.

Mexico's budget deficit, meanwhile, has risen to 16 percent of the country's gross national product and last year's debt servicing payments amounted to 129 percent of export earnings. Interest payments alone amounted to 37 percent.

The government of Mexico, in other words, is in serious financial trouble. After paying for essential food and industrial imports this year, Mexico will have difficulty just paying an estimated $12 billion in interest on its debt. In fact, Mexico's interest payments this year will nearly match its oil revenues. Its total foreign debt of nearly $85 billion makes it the second most indebted third world country, second only to Brazil and a close second at that.

Action already has been taken to avert the immediate crisis. The International Monetary Fund has agreed to extend another $3.9 billion in credit and private banks, another $5 billion. But those measures will only help temporarily, and just postpone the eventual—and inevitable—day of reckoning.

World oil prices play a critical role in Mexico's financial future. They have dropped sharply in the past year and each $2 drop in the price of a barrel of oil deprives Mexico of another $1 billion in desperately needed cash.

In an effort to put its financial house in order, Mexico has been forced to undertake a number of unpopular austerity measures. International lenders have asked Mexico to cut its budget deficit to 3.5 percent of GNP by 1985 and cut the growth of money and credit.

Taxes and prices on a variety of basic goods, ranging from gasoline to food, have been hiked sharply. Just a few weeks ago, the price of corn tortillas was raised another 42 percent and the price of white bread was doubled. At the same time, many workers have been laid off and many more have taken big wage cuts.

It's difficult to gauge what effect the economic misfortunes and reforms will have on Mexico's politics, but Mexico long has been plagued with aggressive political dissent, much of it centered in the country's interior and at universities in cities like Mexico City and Guadalajara. Foreign analysts generally dismiss the influence of these radical groups, arguing that the people in the rural areas remain loyal to the government's Institutional Revolutionary Party (PRI). And others insist that labor is still friendly to the government despite the recent wage setbacks.

Still, the potential for serious political turmoil in Mexico, exists, particularly if economic conditions take another turn for the worst. We have already seen an increase in the scattered political violence that has long plagued Mexico. Fighting recently broke out in one northern Mexican town, resulting in the deaths of two opposition party members. And earlier this year, there was a serious and violent takeover of town halls in central and southeast Mexico. What will happen if workers are forced to make more wage concessions or the universities erupt in violence?

Whatever happens in Mexico we will feel the impact here.

The rate of illegal immigration into the U.S. from Mexico is one of the best barometers of conditions in Mexico, and it should come as no surprise that the rate is rising. Border officials have reported sharp increases in the number of arrests. Some are describing the situation as virtually uncontrollable at existing enforcement levels. The Border Patrol in Yuma reports that arrests were up over one-third in the first few months of this year. In other areas of the country arrests have doubled.

There has been much talk recently about tougher immigration curbs. But in the event of a major political upheaval in Mexico, even tougher immigration curbs, like those in the Simpson-Mazzoli bill, would fail to stem the tide of refugees and illegal immigration. No amount of barbed wire or employer sanctions would stop the flow of those seeking asylum or employment.

But uncontrolled immigration would not be the only problem in the event of big upheaval in Mexico. Our economy would also suffer. In fact, it already has. Troubles began when the rate of exchange for pesos to dollars went from 25 to 1 in January, 1983, to the present rate of 150 to 1. But the trouble is not over. Dollars still trade on the black market for more than the official exchange rate. More devaluations could come.

In 1981, Mexican customers accounted for 47.9 percent of the sales made by American merchants on the Arizona border. But devaluation of the peso has now priced American goods beyond the reach of most Mexican visitors and placed many American businesses on the brink of financial disaster. All along the border, communities like Douglas, Nogales and San Luis are reporting unemployment rates of 20 percent or higher.

But it's not just the border areas. The peso problem has contributed to a sharp drop in overall U.S.-Mexican trade. In 1981, the U.S. exported goods worth $17.8 billion to Mexico and imported goods worth $13.8 billion from Mexico. But last year, we recorded a negative trade balance with Mexico—the first since World War II. And Mexico's economic woes will probably result in still further cuts in U.S. exports to Mexico, as Mexico seeks to save foreign exchange for its debt payments. At the same time, Mexico will try to increase its foreign exchange by boosting exports to the U.S., even at the added cost of subsidizing those exports. Many of those exports, like copper and cement, will compete with U.S. production. As that happens, we can expect trade tensions between our two countries to rise.

Beyond the immigration and trade worries, there is an even larger concern: the stability of the international banking system. The banks having large outstanding loans to Mexico read like a "Who's Who of Domestic Banks." The Bank of America, Bankers Trust, Chase Manhattan, Chemical Bank, Citicorp, Manufacturer's Hanover, and Morgan Guaranty all sit on a 14 member of Advisory Group of banks negotiating the rescheduling of debts with Mexico. Large numbers of smaller U.S. banks also have outstanding loans to Mexico, including a number of banks in the Southwest.

No one expects Mexico to repudiate its debt anytime soon. Mexico would be cutting itself off financially from the rest of the world. It would be economic suicide. But unless it can sustain a solid economic recovery, the government may be unable to meet its existing payment obligations without going farther and farther into debt.

Depending on what form it took, a "default" could have very serious consequences in this country. Some insist that an international banking crisis could result, much like what happened during the Great Depression. I doubt that, but the problems for this country could be serious.

Recent reports suggest that the immediate financial rescue is working. The government hasn't used all the emergency credit it was granted. And the economy is performing better than expected. Still, the crisis isn't over and it won't likely go away for several years.

So what should be done? Some things have already been done. The Department of Agriculture has extended a $1.7 billion loan, allowing Mexico to buy $6.2 million tons of grain, oilseed and dairy products from American farmers. New lines of credit of up to $2 billion have been opened through such agencies as the U.S. Export-Import Bank. And the U.S. has agreed to buy more oil from PEMEX for the U.S. strategic petroleum reserve.

Beyond this, the U.S. sent Secretary of State George Shultz, Treasury Secretary Donald Regan and Malcolm Baldrige to Mexico for a two-day meeting in April to discuss Mexican trade issues and Mexico's relationship with Central America.

But is this enough to ward off any future crisis? Probably not. To date, our actions have been aimed at staving off any immediate collapse not preventing future ones. Mexico's future has been put on the backburner of U.S. diplomacy, while El Salvador continues to occupy the frontburner. That's a bad call. What happens in Mexico over the next several years is of far greater importance than the outcome of any struggle in El Salvador.

If Mexico should "fall" sometime in the next decade, it will not fall due to any communist insurgency in Central America, it will fall because it is economically weak and politically torn within.

We can't be expected to "bail out" Mexico. We should, however, take steps to prevent the need for any bail out. And that will require careful consultations with our neighbor to the south. President Reagan's August 14th meeting with Mexican President de la Madrid is an important step, but it's only a first step. There should be another meeting next year, but it should be a summit with a full agenda, not merely a friendly meeting.

In fact, annual U.S.-Mexican summits would be helpful. Face-to-face, both leaders could begin to take steps to help ease a mutually dangerous situation. Several items should be on the agenda, including the discussion of:

Long-term oil purchase agreements;

Barter arrangements involving the swap of U.S. grain for Mexican oil;

Joint economic development plans for the border areas;

The liberalization of U.S. trade restrictions on Mexican produce;

Immigration problems;

Expansion of the Border Industrialization Plan, which permits duty-free twin plants within 12 miles of the border; and Relations with Central America.

At the very least, the Administration should begin an internal evaluation of its attitude and approach to Mexico. I have urged the President to establish a bipartisan commission to study U.S.-Mexican relations.

Our stake in Mexico's future is too great to neglect. More than just our neighbor to the South, Mexico is a valued friend. We have long-standing cultural and historical ties to Mexico. In acting upon that friendship and those ties, we would be acting in our own best interests.●

100TH ANNIVERSARY CELEBRATED BY SACRED HEART CHURCH OF PLAINS, PA.

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, September 25, the pastor and parishioners of Sacred Heart Church in Plains, Pa., will celebrate the 100th anniversary of their parish.

The 100th anniversary of Sacred Heart Church is a monumental occasion and on such an occasion we should reflect back on Sacred Heart's beginnings and how it has progressed over its 100 years of service to the people of Plains.

Prior to the conception of Sacred Heart Church the early Catholics of Plains tramped by foot or rode by horse and buggy to St. Mary's Church in Wilkes-Barre. The idea of a Catholic Church of their own was born one Sunday when a group of those pioneer Catholics, walking home from Mass at St. Mary's, were forced to take refuge from a rainstorm. A group of men from Plains met with Father Dennis O'Haran, pastor of St. Mary's, who assisted them in attaining their dream of a church of their own. He made arrangements for the Holy Sacrifice of the Mass to be offered there on Sunday, May 4, 1879. On December 10, 1879, Father O'Haran purchased the Kauffman Hotel and Hall which was located on the site of the existing parish buildings.

No time was wasted in giving the people of Plains their own house of worship. Excavation was begun immediately with Father O'Haran on hand daily to supervise the work. The men of the parish, themselves, after finishing their day's work in the mines, would labor well into the night laying the foundation for the new church. The cornerstone was laid on June 8, 1880, by the Right Reverend William O'Hara, bishop of Scranton and the name given the new church was Sacred Heart. The basement of the church was ready for religious services on November 21, 1880, and Father O'Haran offered the first mass. After 3 years of services in the basement, the parishoners were then able to use the completed church. The dedication was on Sunday, September 16, 1883. The celebrant of the Solemn Mass of Dedication was Father O'Haran with Father McDermott of West Chester, Pa., as preacher. A week later Father John W. Dunn, D.D., who was the assistant at St. Mary's became the first pastor of Sacred Heart. When Father Dunn assumed his pastoral duties the parish was totally free from debt. In 1884, Father Dunn supervised the construction of the new rectory and established a parochial school in the Kauffman Building. In 1884, the Sisters of Mercy opened the school with an enrollment of 330 children. Father Dunn served the parish until his death on January 9, 1866.

Father John C. McDermott, the second pastor, was appointed in January 1886. During his tenure he purchased 6 acres of land in order to establish the parish cemetery. In 1888, Father McDermott died and was the first priest to be buried in the priests' plot.

Father E. S. Phillips of St. Gabriel's, Hazleton, assumed the pastoral duties in June 1888. In 1891, Father Phillips had to refurbish all of the parish buildings due to an extensive mine subsidence. This subsidence also affected the parish cemetery. In 1896, Father Phillips returned as pastor of St. Gabriel's, Hazleton, and was replaced by Father Edmund W. Fitzmaurice who served Sacred Heart for only 1 year and then was forced into retirement due to poor health.

Father James Hussie was appointed in March 1899. He established the first high school and Sacred Heart graduated its first alumni in 1901. In May 1901, Father Hussie left Sacred Heart to become pastor of St. Gabriel's and was succeeded by the Reverend P. J. Colligan.

In 1902, Father Colligan built a temporary convent adjacent to the school and in 1910 the temporary convent and school were torn down and the present convent and school were erected. Father Colligan arranged for an artist from New York City to paint a picture of the Sacred Heart in the center of the ceiling, as well as arranging other renovations of the church. Father John J. O'Malley succeeded Father Colligan in March 1911.

One of Father O'Malley's first actions was to lengthen the high school course to 5 years. In 1920, the school was badly damaged due to mine caves and the building was closed for 5 years during which time classes were held in the convent. Father O'Malley died in February 1925 and was succeeded by Father Dennis Kane.

Father Kane was instrumental in installing the stained-glass windows. At the same time he removed the Crucifixion tapestry and donated it to College Misericordia. In 1928, Father John Holmes became the next pastor. Due to poor health, he was forced to retire in 1932.

Father James Mulholland succeeded Father Holmes and during his tenure he installed the present pews and new altar. Father Mulholland was transferred in 1945 and was succeeded by Father Edgar Conlon. Father Conlon died after serving only 5 months. Father Andrew Lengel served as administrator of the parish.

On July 2, 1946, Father Francis G. McNulty, S.T.D., J.C.D. became pastor of Sacret Heart. During his years at the church he made many improvements including a new heating and lighting system, a new electric organ, a new sound system, new Stations of the Cross, redecoration of the church interior as well as the exteriors of all the parish buildings along with a new French drainage system in the parish cemetery. Father McNulty was named a Domestic Prelate with the title of Reverend Monsignor on June 23, 1962, and was honored with a parish celebration.

In the period 1962-65 Pope John XXIII initiated Vatican II which resulted in the English Mass, liturgical changes, more participation in the Mass by the laity, updating of all the sacraments, revisions in the Canon Law and renewal of religious life. These changes were all made in an effort to update the church to the 20th century and Sacred Heart eagerly participated in all of these changes.

In 1969, Project Expansion, a diocesan effort, made possible through the support of local parishes, the construction of Villa St. Joseph, Little Flower Manor, the renovation of the Cathedral in Scranton and the construction and renovation of centralized high schools.

In 1971, Sacred Heart School and Covent were closed and many of those students then went on to the centralized Bishop Hoban High School in Wilkes-Barre.

In 1976, Monsignor McNulty celebrated his 50th year in the priesthood with Mass and a banquet. In 1979, he retired as pastor of Sacred Heart after 33 years of dedicated service which was the longest tenure of any pastor in the history of Sacred Heart.

Upon Monsignor McNulty's retirement, Bishop J. Carroll McCormick instituted a new pastoral assignment which changed the structure of the parish from a pastor and assistant pastor to a pastor alone. Father Thomas J. Croghan assumed the responsibilities as pastor with Father James T. Tracy in residence. Father Croghan reactivated the Holy Name and Altar and Rosary Societies. In 1981 the convent was renovated and soon afterward it was again occupied by the Sisters of Mercy. Also, 1981 was the year of Father Croghan's 35th anniversary in the priesthood which was celebrated with a Mass and parish dinner.

For the first time in Sacred Heart's history the necessity of a fund drive arose. This drive has proven very successful because of the sense of dedication of the parishioners to their parish. This drive enabled the church to undertake numerous improvements which include but are not limited to painting, carpeting, installation of a new heating system, a new altar of repose, a new Risen Christ, and various other structural renovations.

It is an honor for me, Mr. Speaker, to share this important part of our Wyoming Valley's history with my friends and colleagues in the House. It is also my honor to salute the parishioners of Sacred Heart Church on this happy occasion in the words which they themselves have chosen: "The Lord has watched over us for the past 100 years and has provided us with both the spiritual and material strengths to persevere through turbulent times and to forge ahead and survive. Our survival in the future is dependent upon the continued dedicated service of the parishioners."●

LEBANON: WHO'S THE ENEMY?

HON. DAVID R. OBEY

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. OBEY. Mr. Speaker, William Raspberry has an excellent column in the Washington Post this morning which emphasizes the need to think before becoming militarily tied down in Lebanon with no clear goals and no clear enemies.

The Raspberry column is defective only in failing to point out the major responsibility that the PLO must bear along with others for the destruction of Lebanon.

Outside of that omission, the thrust of the article is on the mark and I recommend it to my colleagues.

[From the Washington Post, Sept. 30, 1983]

LEBANON: WHO'S THE ENEMY?

(By William Raspberry)

I'm not sure I understand the debate over the War Powers Act. It isn't clear to me whether it's a question of hawks vs. doves, of Republicans vs. Democrats, or of macho men vs. nervous nellies. I'm certain that I don't understand the compromise that says the president can send the Marines into combat if he chooses, but only for 18 months. After that, Congress will start thinking about invoking its constitutional power to declare (or not declare) war.

But one thing does seem fairly clear to me, though it seems to be no part of the current debate: before you go to war—before you get yourself in a situation where you will likely have to shoot and be shot at—it makes sense to have a pretty fair idea of who your enemy is. Who is our enemy in Lebanon? Our friend, one supposes, is the Gemayel government. But who are our enemies? The Syrians, who seem to be in control of a huge hunk of northern Lebanon and who seem intent on blocking peace negotiations? The Druze and their Palestinian allies, upon whom our battleships opened fire a couple of weeks back? The Christian Phalangists, whose massacre of Palestinian men, women and children in the Sabra and Shatilla refugee camps led to our dispatch of the Marines (part of a multinational force) in the first place? The Israelis, whose invasion of Lebanon helped to further destabilize the state? Some combination of the various Moslem or Christian sects.

The official answer is that we have no enemy in Lebanon. We are there not to prosecute a war but to preserve the peace. Fine. But when one of the factions attacks the Lebanese government, on whose behalf we are (presumably) keeping the peace, and we open fire on that faction in order to protect the government, haven't we just bought ourselves an enemy? And if this multifactional civil war continues for much longer, aren't we likely to buy ourselves other enemies? And won't we then come under pressure, both there and at home, to do what is necessary to defeat those enemies?

In short, the line between keeping peace and making war is not all that clear, and the sinking feeling is that we may already have crossed it. But not necessarily irrevocably. The cease-fire that went into effect on Monday provides at least a chance of a negotiated settlement among the parties to the Lebanese war—and a chance for the United States to find a way to get its troops out. We clearly ought to do what we can to assist those negotiations, including keeping the Marines in place for yet a while longer.

The trick is how to help bring peace among the warring factions without becomming one the the warring factions if the peace effort fails. Maybe the only way out is to find some way of turning the peacekeeping duty over to the United Nations—preferably without the direct involvement of U.S. troops. Meanwhile, the debate on Capitol Hill, while of doubtless constitutional significance, seems to have nothing to do with what we ought to be doing in Lebanon. That argument has to do with how, and by whose authority, we are to go to war. In the case of Lebanon, the fact that we don't have an enemy there strikes me as a pretty good reason not to go to war.●

JEWISH ASSOCIATION FOR SERVICES TO THE AGED DEDICATES SCHEUER HOUSE OF MANHATTAN BEACH

HON. STEPHEN J. SOLARZ

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. SOLARZ. Mr. Speaker, on October 9 the Jewish Association for Services to the Aged will officially dedicate its newest housing for the elderly, Scheuer House in Manhattan Beach.

This most needed facility was developed by a major rehabilitation of the old Mahattan Beach Hotel with a $7.7 million Federal 202 housing grant, a $750,000 gift from the Sh. H. and Helen R. Scheuer Foundation, and a tax abatement from the city of New York.

I am indeed proud to have played a role in bringing this much needed housing development to our community. I would like to take this opportunity to pay tribute to the many dedicated people at JASA—among them Bernard Warach, executive director; Morris Stutman, director of housing management; and Rabbi Jerome Fishman, Brooklyn Borough director—whose tireless energy, efforts, and dedication helped bring this project to fruition.

Scheuer House-Manhattan Beach provides safe, attractive, affordable housing for some 250 elderly and handicapped residents who live in its 150 apartments. Many of the residents formerly lived in dilapidated and rundown buildings under the most difficult conditions, and the opportunity to move to Scheuer House has provided them with a new lease on life. Apartment rentals are fully subsidized and all tenants had to meet Federal section 8 income eligibility standards before they could be considered for an apartment in this development.

An indication of the demand and need for this type of housing can be seen from in the fact that 6,500 applications were submitted. A lottery system was devised under the close scrutiny of HUD to provide all applicants with an equal opportunity for an apartment. After exhaustive efforts by JASA, all the apartments were quickly occupied, with many thousands of New Yorkers remaining on the waiting list.

JASA also operates the Senior Alliance Center which is housed in the community space of Scheuer House. The SAC provides 205 hot kosher meals each day to the residents of the development and senior citizens in the community. In the last year, the meal program at the center has proved extra popular, proven by the 99 percent use rate of the meals allocated to SAC by the New York City Department for the Aging.

The center also provides a wide range of recreational programs and services to center members, many of whom live alone. In addition to a full-time social worker on its staff, JASA has now added the services of a part-time social worker to provide much needed services during evening hours and on Sundays—often the loneliest time for many of our elderly.

As a member of the Manhattan Beach community, I have had the opportunity to watch this project come to completion, and to see how the new residents of the building have enjoyed its excellent facilities and programs. Through the hard work and determination of JASA and a number of community leaders our mayor, and borough president what was once a decaying hotel has become again a source of neighborhood uplift and community pride.

I hope all of those who participated in making this project possible will redouble their efforts to see that more facilities like Scheuer House can be made available for our senior citizens, who lives and work have helped make New York such an incredible place to live.

May all the new residents and center members enjoy many years of health and happiness in their new surroundings, and may the people at JASA continue their efforts to provide safe and attractive housing for the many senior citizens in our community.●

THE 125TH ANNIVERSARY OF THE ZION UNITED METHODIST CHURCH

HON. MARCY KAPTUR

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Ms. KAPTUR. Mr. Speaker, recently, Zion United Methodist Church in my district celebrated its 125th anniversary. The church's gala celebration commemorated a century and a quarter of providing a place of worship for many of my constituents with a German-language heritage. We in America are justly proud of the fact that ours is a diverse society made rich over time by the blend of many cultures. Zion United Methodist Church has helped many of the German-Americans of the Toledo area to strengthen their heritage and celebrate their roots. On behalf of the House of Representatives and all the people of the Ninth District, I offer congratulations to the entire congregation of the Zion United Methodist Church and wish its members the very best for the future.●

ACID RAIN: HIGH-FLYING HUNT FOR THE CULPRIT

HON. ALAN B. MOLLOHAN

OF WEST VIRGINIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MOLLOHAN. Mr. Speaker, the debate surrounding the issue of high acidity in areas in the Northeast has sparked a search for a scapegoat. In this country, that scapegoat is often the coal-fired utilities of the Midwest.

In other countries around the world, however, the search continues with less assurance of the ultimate outcome. As the following article indicates, the issue may be more complex than some of us in America would like to believe. I commend this article on the international aspects of acid rain to my colleagues:

[From the Financial Times, Sept. 7, 1983]

ACID RAIN: HIGH-FLYING HUNT FOR THE CULPRIT

(By David Fishlock)

There was talk recently at a U.S. trade association in Washington of a bumper sticker no one had had the courage to issue. The trade body was the Atomic Industrial Forum, representing makers of nuclear plant. The message was: "Acid rain causes nuclear power."

No one knows what causes acid rain. This is the evocative term for the apparent consequences of high acidity in soils and surface waters in several countries, notably Norway, Sweden, West Germany and Canada. But it is plain—Sir Walter Marshall, chairman of the Central Electricity Generating Board, stressed the point again this week—that any precipitate action against the electricity industry to cut its sulphur emissions from coal-fired stations will tilt the economic balance still more strongly in favour of nuclear plant.

Mr. Ian MacGregor, newly-appointed chairman of the National Coal Board, made the same point when he said there were too many people "avidly looking for simplistic answers to complex questions." There was so much at stake for the coal industry that it was very important to take advantage of the highest level of research capability, he said.

The two nationalised industry chairmen were taking the unprecedented step of committing substantial funds—£5m between them over the next five years—to a research programme over which they would have no control, either of the questions posed or the publication of results.

Sir Walter had no doubt his auditors would raise their eyebrows at this—but his worries about acid rain are much bigger. If the British electricity industry, of which the CEGB is the major component, took the action now being urged by the EEC, to cut its sulphur emissions at source to one-third, it could mean the investment of more than £4bn in such plant as flue gas desulphurisation equipment. And this would mean an additional operating cost of about £700m a year.

The sulphur comes from the NCB coal it burns, which accounted for about 80 per cent of CEGB electricity last year. The NCB's research concerned with sulphur has concentrated mainly on new ways of burning coal, such as fluidised-bed combustion, where the sulphur is retained in the combustion system. But such practices are far from proven for large-scale electricity production.

The CEGB, on the other hand, has spent at a more fundamental level, in its "flying chemistry" research programme.

The aim of this programme, mounted by the Central Electricity Research Laboratories at Leatherhead, is to track emissions from its tall power station stacks as they are blown across the North Sea. This involves flying the highly instrumented aircraft of the Meteorological Office back and forth, up and down in the path of the plumes.

The CEGB reckons it has spent about £5m on the flying chemistry programme over the past five years. It has received some help from the U.S. electricity industry through its cooperative research body, the Electric Power Research Institute (EPRI) in California.

But Sir Walter recognises a "credibility gap" for any research into acid rain that the electricity industry may mount itself, no matter how worthy it may be scientifically. "Our difficulty is that we are so obviously so much affected by the effects of acid rain that any research we do ourselves is immediately suspect."

He therefore conceived the idea of putting money into what he calls a "blind trust." As a Fellow of the Royal Society of long standing, he proposed that this eminent body should manage an independent investigation of acid rain.

He also proposed that the CEGB and the Coal Board—as the industries which would suffer most grievously if governments gave in to the current clamour of environmental bodies—should fund the programme jointly.

This week the Royal Society announced that it had accepted his scheme. The Royal Society, the Norwegian Academy of Science and Letters and the Royal Swedish Academy of Sciences have jointly agreed to initiate a long-term collaborative programme of research into the causes of acidification of surface waters in Norway and Sweden, and the implications for fisheries.

The announcement was made at the start of a three-day scientific meeting on acid rain at the Royal Society. But it said the aim of the new programme was not to duplicate "much intensive theoretical and experimental research in many countries." It was to "provide a sufficient understanding of the processes at work in soils and surface waters to be able to predict, with confidence, the effect on fisheries of particular reductions in acid concentrations."

"We could see no sense in going into this programme unless we had the co-operation of our colleagues in the Scandinavian academies," says Sir Morris Sugden, physical secretary of the Royal Society, who is chairman of the management committee for the research programme. Scientists from Norway and Sweden will sit on his committee, which hopes to hold its first meeting next month.

To direct the project, the Royal Society has chosen a vice-president, Sir John Mason, shortly to retire after 18 years as director-general of the Meteorological Office. Sir John sees a five-year programme as "just a start" on a very complex problem. "But we've got to make a start."

Sir John recalls his close involvement with a similar "but simpler" problem, namely accusations by the environmentalists that large fleets of Concordes flying at 70,000 feet would damage irreparably the ozone layer of the upper atmosphere which protects us from excessive ultra-violet light.

As the research progressed down through the 1970s, the estimated damage by supersonic emissions grew less and less, to the point where the scientists are now saying that fleets of Concordes would cause an increase in ozone, Sir John says.

The scientists say the same pattern has been followed in the case of acid rain. One of Britain's foremost environmental scientists, Dr. Kenneth Mellanby, former director of the Nature Conservancy and since his retirement editor of the journal Environmental Pollution, reviewed a recent scientific conference on acid rain for Nature last month.

After pondering the results of about 50 papers presented at the conference in West Germany, Dr. Mellanby concluded that what he called the "simplistic" scare stories of how German industry is destroying the Black Forest are "neither accurate nor supported by scientific evidence." The evidence shows that sulphur dioxide levels in the Black Forest are "very low indeed, as is demonstrated by the wealth of foliage and leafy lichens, particularly on the moribund firs."

He concludes that if sulfphuric acid is to blame for the death of Germany's trees, then it must have come from further away than German factories and power stations. "So the policy of German Government, spurred on by the Green Party, to reduce sulphur output from their industry to low levels, at a very considerable expense, may be, on a global scale, very altruistic, but it will not do any good (or any harm) to the trees of the Black Forest," Dr. Mellanby says.

The cause of the damage to the trees was not agreed among the scientists, he continued. But he says there were few supporters for the view that acid rain had been proved to be the only, or even the main, culprit. "The general consensus suggested that the most likely cause was the combination of a cold winter, a dry summer, fungal disease, elevated ozone levels with, possibly, raised aluminium levels in the soil water arising from the effects of acid precipitation."

Dr. Mellanby also took the trouble to do what few who have attacked the electricity industry have troubled to do. He toured the stricken areas of Germany himself. "This was a revealing experience," he says. "Far from the widespread devastation highlighted in a recent television programme shown in Britain, the ordinary tourist, or even the visiting scientist, could travel for days without seeing any serious damage."

In April, Dr. Peter Chester, director of the Central Electricity Research Laboratories and responsible for co-ordinating all the CEGB's scientific work on the environment, gave a public address on acid rain at the Royal Society of Arts in London. He showed how all fears of acid rain so far were purely hypothetical, and how, each time a new theory of devastation allegedly being caused by atmospheric sulphur was tested scientifically, it simply faded away.

As scientific evidence accumulates, the Swedish case against the electricity industries of Britain and Western Europe weakens, Dr. Chesters says. If indeed there are any reductions in crop yield caused by sulphur dioxide, "their cost dwindles into insignificance in relation to the cost of avoiding them and the remedy is largely in national hands."

Sweden now finds no evidence of damage to its forests. Sulphate levels and acidity in Swedish rivers have "evidently not risen dramatically' as the Swedes were claiming so vociferously at the UN Conference on the Human Environment in 1972. There has been no substantial trend in rain sulphate—acid rain—in Europe or North-East America since at least 1965, he says.

Dr. Chester says there is strong circumstantial evidence that declining fisheries in Scandinavia "may be due to acid deposition." But he added that the degree of damage in the most affected areas does not correspond to differences in deposition. "Nor is their an adequate scientific basis for asserting that the problem will get worse, or spread, without urgent action, nor for predicting what improvement can be expected from a given reduction in acid deposition."

According to Dr. Chester, the Swedes are containing their acidity problems by dumping comparatively small quantities of limestone in takes to neutralize the acid. In principle, he says, it needs only 10 grams of limestone per square metre of catchment to counter the heaviest acid deposition in Scandinavia. "A European fund for such measures would involve less than one-hundredth of the cost of the programme of sulphur dioxide controls now being rushed through the community."

Lord Flowers, former chairman of the standing Royal Commission on Environmental Pollution, summed up the whole acid rain debate by suggesting that the environmentalists were perhaps urging "the $1bn solution to the $1m problem."●

THOUGHTS ON THE OLDER AMERICANS ACT

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, recently the House of Representatives passed H.R. 3913, the Departments of Labor, Health and Human Services, and Education, and related agencies appropriation bill—a measure which will appropriate funds and strengthen many of our domestic programs. Legislation of this kind provided for the needs of millions of Americans, especially our elderly Americans, who depend on the programs authorized under the Older Americans Act.

Knowing of the tremendous growth in the elderly population in the United States, and especially in my district, I strongly supported the passage of this bill, in hopes that the existing programs will continue to develop and that others might grow.

I am pleased to see that funds will be allocated to each State according to the number of older persons in the State and I am hopeful that Florida will receive her fair share of the funds, as she leads the Nation in congressional districts with a high elderly population.

The programs funded by the bill will continue at an increased level of $5 million over the 1983 funding level. This increase is certainly needed to meet the rising costs and demands.

Many of us are familiar with the well-known Meals on Wheels or congregate meals program which were funded in this bill. This legislation, however, offers much more for our older Americans, such as funding for gerontology centers research projects and other needy areas. It is interesting to note that funding is also included for the career preparation awards program, which assists colleges and universities in expanding education programs in gerontology and geriatrics. Another section of the bill, under the multiagency health issues, provided for our golden Americans. The Department of Health and Human Services is directed to develop a clear plan of action to improve and expand training in geriatrics and gerontology and to focus on the need for geriatric physicians who are skilled in the diseases common among the elderly.

Research on aging is an essential response to the changing demography of the U.S. population. The number of elderly people in this country is expected to reach 30 million in this decade and to exceed 40 million by 2020. As this segment of our population increases in its relation to the total population, we must find ways to deal effectively with the changes that will occur. The increases which have been appropriated for the National Institute on Aging have been allocated for this reason to meet the needs of an aging population.

A part of the funding for the National Institute on Aging is for establishing up to five specialized research centers on Alzheimer's disease and related disorders. Hopefully, the center approach will be instrumental in building a strong base for multidisciplinary research, training, and community education on Alzheimer's disease and related disorders.

The above examples are only a part of the package for older Americans, but they clearly indicate the concern of the Congress for a special segment of our society, who truly deserve to have the final years be golden ones.●

BLUEPRINT FOR PARADISE: HOW TO LIVE ON A TROPICAL ISLAND

HON. RON de LUGO

OF VIRGIN ISLANDS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. DE LUGO. Mr. Speaker, as the sun passes through the autumnal equinox and the shadows slowly begin to lengthen, many of our colleagues' thoughts begin to drift to what it must be like to represent a district as beautiful as my own, the U.S. Virgin Islands. It is this time of year that I see it in their eyes—the envy—the urge to run away from those frosty climes to a green jewel set in a sapphire sea. Being the sympathetic soul you all know me to be, I can now tell you how you too can find and enjoy a bit of paradise.

Ross Norgrove, sea captain, author, and friend, has finally written the book to answer all your questions. His latest work, "Blueprint for Paradise: How To Live on a Tropical Island," comprises a lifetime of knowledge and advice for anyone considering such a move. Information on how to choose an island, a homesite, the problems of logistics, selecting a boat and much more is presented in a lively, entertaining style.

Each of our colleagues, particularly those members of the Northeast-Midwest Congressional Coalition, should pick up a copy. Who knows? If it does not convince them to up and move right away at least it will help keep the chill away.●

END OF FISCAL YEAR 1983

HON. BILL ALEXANDER

OF ARKANSAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. ALEXANDER. Mr. Speaker, today is a very important day for President Reagan, the leadership of the Republican Party, and all those supply-side economists who have had such a profound impact on shaping the economic policies of this administration.

Today—the last day of fiscal year 1983—today is the day Ronald Reagan promised the American people he would deliver a balanced budget.

However, instead of financial solvency, President Reagan is giving the American people a deficit in excess of $200 billion. That is a world record figure. It is also quite an accomplishment for Mr. Reagan personally. Only 3 years ago he was criticizing then-President Carter for $30-billion deficits he said were "skyhigh."

Well, Mr. Speaker, if Mr. Carter's deficits were "skyhigh," we must conclude that Mr. Reagan's megadeficits are proceeding toward some outer galactical black hole.

Mr. Speaker, there are those on the other side who attempt to defend these megadeficits by alleging that they were caused by the failure of congressional Democrats to hold down domestic spending.

Mr. Speaker, I feel it is important to make clear that these record high deficits do not reflect any failure on the part of Congress to enact the spending and tax policies proposed by the President. Rather they are occurring precisely because Congress has acted to pass both his spending and tax policies. And I might add that both the minority leader, and his colleague, the minority whip were among the crafters of the legislative strategy which produced those important victories for the President's policies—and eventually produced these record high deficits.

With respect to spending cuts, Congress has cut more than that requested by the President in each of the last two fiscal years. For fiscal year 1982, the President proposed budget cuts totaling $40.3 billion, while Congress approved cuts in excess of $41 billion. In fiscal year 1983, the President proposed additional cuts of more than $41.2 billion, and Congress approved $41.4 billion.

Despite these budget cuts the budget deficit skyrocketed.

The reason for these stunning deficits can be found in the tax cuts for the wealthy and massive military spending measures which have been pushed through Congress by Mr. Reagan and the Republican leadership. The cost of these tax cuts and military spending increases far outweighs the savings achieved through cutbacks in the domestic budget, and therefore has forced the deficit higher and higher.

The tax bill of 1981—which extended enormous tax increases to wealthy Americans—was rammed through this House by President Reagan and his Republican allies. That tax bill locked in a series of massive multiyear tax reductions. By 1985, the cumulative revenue loss from this tax bill will equal $374 billion.[1]

At the same time taxes have been cut, military spending has been increased under Mr. Reagan at a staggering rate. Under the Reagan administration by fiscal year 1985, we will be spending approximately $281 billion for military purposes—almost one-third of the entire budget. Overall, the Reagan military budget will result in a cumulative military spending increases of approximately $184 billion after adjusting for inflation by fiscal year 1985.

A third factor contributing to the deficit has been the Reagan recession. In fiscal year 1982 for example, the deficit was increased by up to $50 billion because of increases in Federal programs providing assistance to the unemployed, coupled with a loss of tax revenue from the millions of Americans who found themselves out of work.

The cost of the tax cuts along with increases in military spending accounted for more than half of the deficit in fiscal year 1982. It is reasonable to assume that the recession may account for the remainder.

In fiscal year 1984 and subsequent years, the projected increases in defense spending and the impact of the tax cuts can be expected to amount to more than 100 percent of the deficit—suggesting obviously, that in the absence of the Reagan tax and spending programs we could be facing years of surplus in our Federal budget rather than the dismal future Mr. Reagan has given us.

COMPARISON OF PRESIDENTIAL BUDGET REQUESTS AND CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATED AMOUNTS ENACTED IN REGULAR ANNUAL, SUPPLEMENTAL, AND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS BILLS

Calendar year	Presidential budget requests	Congressionally appropriated amounts	Congressionally appropriated amounts less (−) or more (+) than Presidential request
1943	$115,041,366,395	$110,634,660,785	−$4,406,705,610
1944	63,513,471,020	61,257,906,152	−2,255,564,868
1945	62,453,310,868	61,042,345,331	−1,410,965,537
1946	30,051,109,870	28,459,502,172	−1,591,607,698
1947	33,367,507,923	30,130,762,141	−3,236,745,782
1948	35,409,550,523	32,699,846,731	−2,709,703,792
1949	39,545,529,108	37,825,026,214	−1,720,502,894
1950	54,316,658,423	52,427,926,629	−1,888,731,794

[1] CBO figures were used by the DSG in compiling this information.

COMPARISON OF PRESIDENTIAL BUDGET REQUESTS AND CONGRESSIONAL APPROPRIATED AMOUNTS ENACTED IN REGULAR ANNUAL, SUPPLEMENTAL, AND DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATIONS BILLS—Continued

Calendar year	Presidential budget requests	Congressionally appropriated amounts	Congressionally appropriated amounts less (−) or more (+) than Presidential request
1951	96,340,781,110	91,059,713,307	−5,281,067,803
1952	83,964,877,176	75,355,434,201	−8,609,442,975
1953	66,568,694,353	54,539,342,491	−12,029,351,862
1954	50,257,490,985	47,642,131,205	−2,615,359,780
1955	55,044,333,729	53,124,821,215	−1,919,512,514
1956	60,892,420,237	60,647,917,590	−244,502,647
1957	64,638,110,610	59,589,731,631	−5,048,378,979
1958	73,272,859,573	72,653,476,248	−619,383,325
1959	74,859,472,045	72,977,957,952	−1,881,514,093
1960	73,845,974,490	73,634,335,992	−211,638,498
1961	91,597,448,053	86,606,487,273	−4,990,960,780
1962	96,803,292,115	92,260,154,659	−4,543,137,456
1963	98,904,155,136	92,432,923,132	−6,471,232,004
1964	98,297,358,556	94,162,918,996	−4,134,439,560
1965	109,448,074,896	107,037,566,896	−2,410,508,000
1966	131,164,926,586	130,281,568,480	−883,358,106
1967	147,804,557,929	141,872,346,664	−5,932,211,265
1968	147,908,612,996	133,339,868,734	−14,568,744,262
1969	142,701,346,215	134,431,463,135	−8,269,883,080
1970	147,765,358,434	144,273,528,504	−3,491,829,930
1971	167,874,624,937	165,225,661,865	−2,648,963,072
1972	185,431,804,552	178,960,106,864	−6,471,697,688
1973	177,959,504,255	174,901,434,304	−3,058,069,951
1974	213,667,190,007	204,012,311,514	−9,654,878,493
1975	267,224,774,434	259,852,322,212	−7,372,452,222
1976	282,142,432,093	282,536,694,665	+394,262,572
1977	364,867,240,174	354,025,780,783	−10,841,459,391
1978	348,506,124,701	337,859,466,730	−10,656,657,971
1979	397,653,765,836	386,822,093,291	−10,831,672,545
1980	340,339,446,763	333,695,164,197	−6,644,282,566
1981	440,398,234,909	442,215,127,541	+1,816,892,632
1982	507,740,133,484	514,832,375,371	+7,092,241,887

Data source: Committee on Appropriations, U.S. House of Representatives.●

TRIBUTE TO RABBI ABRAHAM D. BARRAS

HON. FRANK HARRISON

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HARRISON. Mr. Speaker, with the death of Rabbi Abraham D. Barras on July 20, 1983, the congregation of Temple Israel, in Wilkes-Barre, lost its spiritual leader. The Wyoming Valley community lost one of its greatest citizens. And the community of man lost both a friend and an inspiration.

Dr. Barras was a graduate of Columbia University with continuing advanced studies at New York University and the Jewish Theological Seminary of America. He was ordained in 1946 and earned the degree of doctor of Hebrew letters in 1954. In 1971, the Jewish Theological Seminary of America conferred upon him the honorary degree of doctor of divinity.

After service in Monticello, N.Y., and Atlantic City, N.J., Dr. Barras came to Temple Israel in 1952 and served there until his death. Abraham D. Barras was truly a leader of the Jewish community, not only in the Wyoming Valley but in the Nation. Even a brief recollection of his work with the Jewish Theological Seminary, the United Jewish Appeal Campaign, the Zionist Organization of America, and the United Jewish Appeal Cabinet recalls all that he accomplished among his own people. But he was more than that, Mr. Speaker, he was a leader of us all. The Labor-Management Citizens Committee of Wyoming Valley, the Wilkes-Barre Kiwanis, the Family Service Association, the United Way, the Red Cross and many other civic and charitable organizations claimed of his time and gained of his inspiration.

Even more importantly, beyond all the titles and the honors, the offices and the responsibilities, Rabbi Barras was a man to whom any other man or woman could turn in a time of need and be assured of a listening ear, a helping hand and a word of faith and of hope. He will be deeply missed by those whose congregation he served and all of us whose community he shared.

I rise, Mr. Speaker, to share the news of his untimely death with my friends and colleagues in the House and to extend my own deep sympathy to his widow, Sylvia and to his children, David, Daniel, and Joshua.

In their sorrow, Mr. Speaker, I pray his beloved family may find consolation in the memory he has left and in the knowledge that his "is a name that will shine on the entablatures of truth forever."●

TRIBUTE TO ALFRED E. ALQUIST

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, on behalf of my colleague DON EDWARDS and myself, I rise today to honor one of California's premier legislators, State Senator Alfred E. Alquist. Senator Alquist has served the people of California in Sacramento since 1966 where he has been a dedicated and tireless champion for the rights of workers, quality education, and care of the disadvantaged.

It is with pleasure that we note that Al has been presented with the National Humanitarian Award for Community Service at the 84th Anniversary Dinner of the National Jewish Hospital and Research Center/National Asthma Center, an institute whose accomplishments are internationally recognized in the area of chronic respiratory diseases, allergic diseases, and immune system disorders.

Al diligently served in the California State Assembly for two terms beginning in 1963, and we have long admired his work in the California State Senate. Until 1981, when he became the chair of the budget-writing senate finance committee, Al served continuously on the education committee where he was instrumental in providing funding for schools and services for disadvantaged students.

In addition to his keen grasp of postsecondary education and State finance issues, Al is an expert in public utilities, energy matters, transportation and seismic safety.

We are honored to have known Al Alquist for more than 20 years. In addition to his many professional accomplishments for the people of California, Al is a man of deep convictions and principles, a man who believes in the basic human dignity of all people, regardless of race, creed, color, or income.

Al Alquist is an honest, caring man for whom we have the deepest respect. He is much more than a representative of the people of the 11th senatorial district, he is an untiring worker and compassionate voice for all Californians.

Mr. Speaker, and my fellow Members, I hope you will join me and Mr. EDWARDS in congratulating Al Alquist on his many years of dedicated public service, his wise counsel, and his friendship over the years. Clearly, Al Alquist has made California a better place in which to live.●

COLUMBUS DAY

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, on October 10 we will celebrate Columbus Day. This year's celebration is the 491st anniversary of the discovery of America.

Although Christopher Columbus was Italian, the day that bears his name has become a truly national celebration. Although I share with my fellow Americans of Italian heritage a special pride in Columbus' achievement, Columbus Day is a time for Americans of all ethnic backgrounds to rejoice in the diversity of our country and to appreciate the fact that we are a "nation of immigrants." For we not only honor the man responsible for the discovery that changed the world—we honor the land that he discovered. America became a great country because of the millions of individuals who followed Columbus, from all over the world, who sought a better life and were given the opportunity in this country to achieve their full potential.

We celebrate the "father of immigration" and all of those who came after him, as well as his spirit of adventure and willingness to risk tremendous odds for what he believed in. Columbus day is a tribute to the courage and persistence of the American spirit.

We are now 9 years away from the year 1992, which will mark the 500th anniversary of Columbus' voyage. I am especially pleased that the House of Representatives has already passed the bill H.R. 1492, which I introduced along with my colleague Representative GARCIA, and which Senator MATHIAS has introduced in the Senate. It will establish the Christopher Columbus Quincentenary Jubilee Commission, to plan for the events that will commemorate this historic anniversary. Although each year's Columbus Day is special, the worldwide celebration is bound to be an extraordinary occasion.

On Sunday, October 9, I will be participating in the 13th annual Columbus Day parade in my home city of Newark. The Columbus Day activities in Newark are successful each year because of the dedicated service and hard work of my friend Ace Alagna, publisher of the Italian Tribune. I continue to marval at Ace's ability to give the Columbus Day ceremonies a truly national and diverse spirit, making each year's celebration even more festive and enjoyable than the last.

The parade will have as its grand marshall the well-known and talented actor Dom DeLuise. Also appearing will be the U.S. Military Academy Marching Band, the West Point Cadets Color Corps, and the Knights of Columbus Color Guard. The parade coordinator will be John A. Zimbardi. A number of my colleagues from New Jersey will also be participating, including Senators BILL BRADLEY and FRANK LAUTENBERG and Gov. Thomas Kean.

At a dinner which will be held later that Sunday, awards will be presented, including Man of the Year to Cavaliere Louis Piancone, president of Roma Foods in South Plainfield, N.J.; Humanitarian of the Year to Gene Mulvilhill, owner of Action Park in Vernon, N.J.; and Woman of the Year to Felicia Salandra, a retired teacher and principal of the Franklin School in Newark. I am especially delighted about this last award, as I was one of Ms. Salandra's students, many years ago.

I know that this year's Columbus Day celebration will be a special one, as we pay tribute to a great man, a great historic event, and a great country.●

HELEN SABOL'S TESTIMONIAL DINNER

HON. JERRY LEWIS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. LEWIS of California. Mr. Speaker, on Sunday, October 16, the friends and admirers of Helen Sabol will be honoring this very special lady at a testimonial dinner. Unable to attend this gathering, I would like to take this opportunity to ask the Congress to join me along with her many admirers in expressing our deep appreciation and gratitude to this outstanding human being for her many years of dedicated service.

Helen is a busy wife, mother, and grandmother who still finds time to actively volunteer for many organizations. She and her husband, Andy, just recently celebrated their 50th wedding anniversary.

Volunteer work has been a way of life for Helen over the years and she generously gives her time to many organizations. She has been a member of the Democratic Club, Business and Professional Women, Legislative Action Committee, Women's Club, and Art Association, holding office in many of these organizations.

Some of Helen's current activities include being involved with the Morongo Basin Stroke Club, arthritis swim therapy program, San Bernardino County Health Department, Inland Counties Health Systems Agency Task Force, Mentally Retarded of the Morongo Basin, and Catholic Daughters of America, to name a few.

All who are privileged to work with Helen Sabol recognize and admire her dedication as an outstanding citizen and for her charitable contributions which have made her community a better place to live.

Mr. Speaker, I take great pride in commending to my colleagues, Mrs. Helen Sabol, for her tireless hours of devotion and many years of hard work to benefit the people of her community in a most refreshing way.●

THE MARCOS DICTATORSHIP: SENSE OF THE CONGRESS RESOLUTION

HON. FORTNEY H. (PETE) STARK

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. STARK. Mr. Speaker, Today I am introducing a sense of the Congress resolution stating that the U.S. Government should suspend all security and economic assistance to the Philippine Government if President Ferdinand Marcos reimposes martial law, or does not make significant progress toward restoring democracy and insuring human rights in the Philippines.

In recent weeks attention has been refocused on the Philippines in the wake of the assassination of opposition leader Benigno S. Aquino, Jr. What many people may find surprising is that Mr. Aquino is not the first opposition leader the Marcos government has "allowed to die." Although Marcos denies any involvement in the Aquino assassination, the Marcos government has a long history of arrest, torture, and execution of Philippine opposition forces. And yet the United States continues to support this totalitarian regime.

The United States seems willing to give unqualified and unconditional support to the Marcos government without regard for their abuses of power, suspensions of human rights, and disregard for democratic freedoms. And not only do we overlook these actions, but we allow Mr. Marcos to go on national television and threaten us. President Marcos says that if we do not approve the $900 million U.S. military base agreement he will find friends elsewhere; namely, in the Soviet Union. Mr. Marcos says that if President Reagan cancels his planned November visit to the Philippines our relationship will be greatly strained.

Mr. Speaker, I am sick of being threatened by a man who treats us, not to mention his own people, in such a childish way. I say, let him try and find another nation to befriend him. He will certainly not find one that has been as good to him as the United States. I say President Reagan should not visit the Philippines. It is about time we let Mr. Marcos know that he cannot get away with murder, literally, and still expect our unqualified support.

I believe our friendship should be with the people of the Philippines. Let us show them that we support them, through our support of human rights, that we oppose restoration of martial law, and we support full democratic freedoms. Mr. Marcos and his regime will not last forever, but I believe that our special friendship with the Philippine people should.

I urge my colleagues to support my resolution.●

FORMER CONGRESSMAN ARMSTRONG CELEBRATES 90TH BIRTHDAY

HON. GENE TAYLOR

OF MISSOURI

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. TAYLOR. Mr. Speaker, I wish to recognize the celebration of the 90th birthday this weekend of former Congressman O. K. Armstrong of Missouri. O. K. turns 90 this Sunday, October 2, and will celebrate his birthday with a reception for friends and colleagues Friday here on the Hill; a family dinner Saturday night with 27 relatives who are coming to Washington from all over the country, and church services Sunday at the historic Calvary Baptist Church in Washington, D.C.—the church he attended while a Member of Congress.

O. K. Armstrong served the people of southwest Missouri in the 82d Congress and was a member of the editorial staff of the Reader's Digest for 34 years.

Congratulations to O.K. Armstrong on his 90th birthday.

O. K. ARMSTRONG

Orland Kay Armstrong was born in Willow Springs, Mo., October 2, 1893; Drury College, Springfield, Mo., A.B., 1916; Cumberland University Law School, Lebanon, Tenn., LL.B.; 1922; University of Missouri School of Journalism at Columbia, bachelor of journalism, M.A. in journalism, 1925; was admitted to the bar in 1922, but did not practice; teacher of English and public speaking at Southwest Baptist College, Bolivar, Mo., in 1916 and 1917; during the First World War served from private to lieutenant in the United States Army Air Corps 1917-1919; Y.M.C.A. welfare representative in France in 1919 and 1920; established department of journalism at University of Florida at Gainesville in 1925 and served as director 1925-1928; author of seven books, magazine writer and newspaper correspondent; secretary of Missouri Century of Progress Commission 1930-1932; delegate to Republican State conventions 1932-1945, 1950, 1952, and 1966; delegate to Republican National conventions in 1944 and 1952; member of the State house of representatives 1932-1936 and 1942-1944; member of the staff of the United States Senate Committee on Post Office and Civil Service in 1947 and 1948; elected as a Republican to the Eighty-second Congress (January 3, 1951-January 3, 1953); was not a candidate for renomination in 1952; member of editorial staff of Reader's Digest for 34 years; has more articles published in the Reader's Digest than any other author; is a resident of Republic, Mo.●

SPECIAL OLYMPICS: BEYOND SPEED STRENGTH AND SKILL

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, 15 years ago a group of people lead by Mrs. Eunice Shriver, organized the first Special Olympics games in Chicago, Ill., because of their personal concern for the health and individual well being of our Nation's mentally handicapped. Today, Special Olympics is the world's largest program of sports training and athletic competition for mentally retarded individuals.

It is not, however, the athletic competition of Special Olympics that is the overriding purpose of the games, that indeed, becomes secondary when one witnesses the personal development of each participant, physically, mentally, socially, and spiritually, who takes part in Special Olympics.

Special Olympics uses the medium of sports to attain their goals, but these goals reach far beyond speed, strength, and skill, to the fulfillment of each participant's unique potential as an individual person.

Following is a speech presented by Mrs. Eunice Shriver to a meeting of the National Special Olympics directors.

I would like to commend this speech to my colleagues attention. I would also like to commend Eunice Shriver for her tireless efforts on behalf of Special Olympics and the mentally handicapped of our Nation.

Mrs. Eunice Shriver's speech follows:

PRESENTATION BY MRS. SHRIVER TO NATIONAL SPECIAL OLYMPICS DIRECTORS, JULY 17, LOUISIANA STATE UNIVERSITY, BATON ROUGE, LA.

Good morning!

This has been a marvelous week—for our athletes from around the world; for Bill Bankhead and his incredible volunteers; for our hard working staff at the International Office; for me personally; and, I hope, for you.

It has not been easy. Staging these Games was a monumental task. Your efforts to give your athletes a chance to share the joys and rewards of the 1983 International Games have been magnificent. An inspiration to all of us.

For many of you, these Games were just a beginning; a qualifying event to prepare you for the real challenge which awaits you back home. For others it was another major step forward in programs that have been developing for several years. But none of us can be satisfied now to rest on our laurels. To feel that a goal has been reached now that these Games are over. Special Olympics is not a sprint. It is a marathon. And no matter how far we come there is always more distance to travel.

In my country, and in yours, the Special Olympics dream will not become a reality until all of our mentally handicapped citizens can express the growth, pride and self-fulfillment that Special Olympics training and competition can provide with your energy and devotion. I know this dream will someday be a reality throughout the world.

It has been very interesting to me that we have had to struggle so hard to gain the recognition, understanding and acceptance of our name—Special Olympics. This was never a significant problem here in the United States. But I know that it is a problem for many of you.

Let me address this issue, first. Why did we select the name Special Olympics in 1968, and why do we insist that your programs operate under that title whether they be local or national, whether they be in Belgium, Ghana, Venezuela or New Zealand?

First of all, the primary strength of our international movement lies in our unity—our ability to act as one family regardless of geographic, cultural or political differences. Alone we can accomplish little. Together we can work miracles. However, the size and scope of our movement will not be evident; nor will we be able to accomplish our mission unless we march under one banner and under one name. Despite the problems that it causes in some parts of the world, we are convinced that the name Special Olympics best conveys what we are—Our athletes and our programs are Special. And our spirit and our substance are Olympian.

The word "Olympic" is as well-known worldwide as any single word in any language. It automatically conveys the activities and values that we represent: excellence and internationalism, sports competition, volunteerism, pride in development and achievement; skill, courage, sharing and joy. We stand for all of these values and together they make our movement, truly "Olympian."

Furthermore, as my good friend Takis will verify, the Greek word for Olympics means "many sports." In Special Olympics we are committed to providing regular opportunities for training and participation in multi-event activities for all our athletes.

How then is Special Olympics "special?" The obvious way relates to the population we serve—the mentally handicapped. People whose ability to learn has been significantly impaired. People who, until recently, were never thought capable of taking part in sports with any degree of skill and grace.

But there are many other ways in which our concept of being Olympic is special:

1. We are all inclusive. Our mission is to provide opportunities for all retarded people regardless of ability level or degree of handicap.

2. Our events, even at the international level, recognize individual achievement within the limits of personal potential. Whether or not you conquer others is unimportant. What is important is the conquest of self and the fulfillment of each person's unique potential.

3. Our concern, then is for development of the whole person—physically, mentally, socially, spiritually. We use the medium of sport, but our goals go beyond speed, strength and skill.

4. Our mission is much more than the periodic staging of games. Since our concern is personal development, we must provide opportunities for year-round sports training and participation to challenge and discipline the mind and body every day—in every season of the year. The time between the games is even more important than the games themselves.

5. We strongly emphasize the role of families but not just as spectators. As volunteers, coaches, and committee members, they are an essential part of everything we do. Together with the athletes—their children—they are the most special element of Special Olympics.

6. We are a private organization although many of our national programs would not exist without government support. At its best, Special Olympics is a blend of governmental, volunteer and corporate assistance. It combines and harnesses the resources of a great variety of individuals and agencies in sports, education, rehabilitation, physical education, public service and mental retardation.

7. Our program is "supra-national." We do not total up the medals your athletes won here. We do not set countries against one other. We do not focus on differences of race, culture, or politics. Our focus is on the elements that bind us together—a love of sport and a faith in the unique gifts of the mentally handicapped members of our societies.

This is why Special Olympics is both "Olympic and special." We must all dedicate ourselves to keeping it that way.

In the past 15 years, we have travelled a long way. Special Olympics now exists in well over 50 countries and in almost every part of the world. It exists in vastly different regions of the world, in different cultures, traditions and political systems. As the number of athletes worldwide approaches one and a half million and the number of programs approaches twenty thousand, you, the National Directors, are a living testament to the universality of the Special Olympics spirit.

But we have only begun. There are over 100 countries who have yet to discover Special Olympics. And even those that have joined the movement, including the United States, are reaching only a fraction of their retarded population. How many of your country's retarded people are you serving? Five percent? Ten percent? Here in the United States, after 15 years of extremely hard work, Special Olympics is providing sports opportunities for a little more than 30 percent of America's special people. And so our work is largely before us.

In Special Olympics, I have always said that quantity is very much secondary to the quality of what we provide. Quality requires training—not just of athletes, but officials, coaches, volunteers and administrators.

Some countries have made outstanding efforts in this area. The United Kingdom, Canada and Chile are excellent examples. Because of the dedication and plain hard work of many of you, our international training schools have been very well received: the Bushmills School in Northern Ireland, the Latin American Event Directors' Seminar in Arizona, the Management Training Seminar here in Baton Rouge, the Caribbean Training School in Jamaica, the Asia-Pacific Leadership Conference in Hong Kong, have all been effective in raising program standards.

But we have only scratched the surface. Most of our athletes still do not come well-prepared to local, area or even National Games. The training programs provided for the athletes who came to these International Games should be the standard for your own countries year-round. Only when we are providing adequate opportunities for all our athletes to reach their full potential of development and performance—no matter how limited—only then can we say that our programs have achieved the Olympic Gold.

Quality programs start with quality games. Every athlete and every coach should know that in every event the competition will be fair and equal; that the officiating will be competent; that every performance will be suitably recognized and rewarded; that there will be opportunities to learn and improve at well-conducted sports clinics; that the ceremonies will contain all the pagentry, spirit and joy that befits an Olympic event; that the accommodations will be comfortable, pleasant and safe; that there will be opportunities for social growth at well-planned victory dinners, dances and recreational events; that the whole event will be conducted as a first class sports meet. Anything less falls short of the high standards of Special Olympics.

These goals will not be easily achieved. For many of you, particularly from the developing countries, a major obstacle will be the lack of public acceptance of the mentally handicapped. It is a universal problem and one that we still battle every day to overcome. It will be very difficult for you to establish a sports program for the mentally retarded which is ten or even twenty years ahead of existing programs in special education, vocational training and health care. But the pace of change can be accelerated through Special Olympics by showing the retarded as human beings capable of impressive achievements and worthy of society's care, compassion and support. We consider public education to be one of the major values of Special Olympics and an area which should receive your full attention. It is not enough to just conduct good games and establish good training programs. The public must be aware of them and of their meaning if you are going to have any impact on social attitudes.

Let me give you an example. Last month, in conjunction with the Presidential Premiere of "Superman III", we took sixty Special Olympics athletes to the White House. They came not just from the United States, but from Japan, Chile, Kenya and Greece. There, before President and Mrs. Reagan, an audience of over one thousand people and the world media, they gave a stirring display of soccer, gymnastics and running skills. In that brief moment, they displayed to this nation and to the world the true spirit of Special Olympics—skill, courage, sharing and joy. They showed that their achievements are as worthy of recognition in every capitol building and executive residence of the world as those of any other national heroes—the poets, scholars, musicians and athletes who are so often honored there.

Special Olympics expects a lot from you: an effective organization; quality games at local, area and national levels; sports training opportunities for all Special Olympians; an effective program of public education. That is what this Conference of National Directors' is all about. I am giving each of you a list of goals which I believe every National Program should begin to work towards immediately. They are not all possible to achieve in a single year. Some of them may not be relevant to the situation in your particular country. But they are planning objectives which can help you immeasureably in developing a truly successful Special Olympics program.

We are prepared to share with you our experience of fifteen years in achieving each of these objectives. But you will also learn from each other. The Special Olympics spirit is universal, but so are its problems and difficulties, its trials and its challenges. You are divided by distance, by culture, by politics, by religion. But all of these are insignificant when measured against the common factor that binds us together—our belief in the value of each individual human being, regardless of physical or mental handicap. That is what joins us here today. That is what makes us one. That is the hope of the future.

1983 CONFERENCE OF NATIONAL SPECIAL OLYMPICS DIRECTORS

National goals recommended by the President of Special Olympics for 1983-84

Public education

1. Appointment of two well-known athletes or entertainers as active head coaches or volunteer chairmen for Special Olympics.
2. Design and implementation of a professional promotion/public relations program (package) related to your National Games.
3. At least one significant promotional event with media coverage, in addition to your games.
4. Formal endorsement by at least two significant agencies in sport and mental retardation such as your national Olympic Committee and Ministry of Education.
5. One major, national fund-raising event.

Organization

1. Establishment of a working National Committee with representation from established public and private agencies in sport and physical education, mental retardation (including parents), special education, business and finance.
2. Appointment of National Committee members with expertise in finance and fund-raising, public relations, sport and physical education, legal affairs, medicine and administration.
3. Appointment of a paid National Director who devotes at least half-time to Special Olympics development.
4. Establishment of similar committees and organizations in at least half of the major regions of your country.

Games

1. A National games with representation from at least 75 per cent of the regions of your country.
2. At least three sports offered at your Games including a team sport.
3. Qualified, certified officials in each sport to conduct the Games.
4. At least three sport clinics offered at the Games.
5. Local or regional games in 75 per cent of the regions of your country.

Training

1. Design and conduct one national training school for coaches and event directors.
2. Conduct local/regional training schools in 75 per cent of the regions.
3. Conduct one national leadership confernce for local, regional and national chairmen and committee members.
4. Appointment of a National Training Director.
5. Establishment of training programs for Special Olympics athletes in 75 per cent of the regions.●

THE ADMINISTRATION'S MISGUIDED CIVIL RIGHTS POLICY

HON. AUGUSTUS F. HAWKINS

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. HAWKINS. Mr. Speaker, Attorney General William French Smith's recent editorial in the Los Angeles Times is yet another example of this administration's systematic effort to perpetuate damaging myths about antidiscrimination mechanisms and to undermine the civil rights gains which have been supported by every President since World War II. I would like to submit for the RECORD my editorial reply to the Attorney General's article as it appeared in the Los Angeles Times.

WITHOUT GOALS OR QUOTAS, ANTI-BIAS EFFORTS WILL FAIL

(By Augustus F. Hawkins)

Atty. Gen. William French Smith contends that the civil-right community has focused on enacting quotas in direct opposition to the U.S policy of judging individuals without regard to color or sex. Unfortunately, once again, this Administration seems to have missed the mark.

Discrimination on the basis of race, sex and national origin exists in virtually all phases of our society. As a result, minorities and women continue to lag well behind white males when it comes to earnings, access to employment, education and housing opportunities.

The magnitude of the disparity takes on greater significance when we consider that the lowest black unemployment rate for the last decade is greater than the highest white unemployment rate for the same period. During that time black unemployment has consistently been in the double-digit range. In the last few months, while white unemployment has declined, black unemployment has remained constant at more than double that of whites.

Despite the Equal Pay Act's prohibitions against different pay scales for men and women who perform "equal work," women's salaries continue to lag well behind those of white males. There are strong indications that these persistent disparities are not by chance.

A study last November by the United States Commission on Civil Rights—"Unemployment and Underemployment Among Blacks, Hispanics and Women"—found that "improvement in the overall health of the economy and in the education or skill level of minorities and women lead in some cases to the reduction of disparities, but not to their elimination." The commission conservatively concluded, "The suspicion, therefore, remains that discrimination continues to have a major effect on (those groups) in their struggle to find jobs commensurate with their qualifications and experience.

"We believe this report does an excellent job of exploding the myth that the younger age of black and Hispanic populations, the lack of adequate education and skills, or the changes in economic cycles are the principal cause of minority underemployment and unemployment." The commissioners concluded, as I believe this Administration must, "Instead, we must try to end discrimination directly by enforcing the law."

Effective enforcement may mean relying on remedial relief that imposes temporary group preferences. The alternative would be to provide no relief, or meaningless, symbolic relief which serves only to perpetuate the harmful effects of the unlawful conduct. Such a policy clearly provides no incentive for perpetrators of discrimination to stop.

Quotas are remedies of last resort imposed by the courts when discrimination has been proven and other avenues of relief would be ineffective. No one has defended quotas as being without negative aspects. They have been used, often with reluctance, because, on balance, the negative results that they may generate are far outweighed by the clear and present injury that results from permitting discrimination to persist.

As was noted in comments before the House subcommittee on employment opportunities, which I chair: "Goals and quotas are both numbers, as pineapples and lemons are both fruits. But there the similarities cease. A quota is a ceiling; it is rigid, it is usually small, it has no relationship to equity or to availability, and it is designed to be exclusionary.

"A goal is just that—a set objective toward which one strives. It is rooted in reality, related to an organization's . . . needs . . . constraints and opportunities. It is one of the most normal business practices, described by every major treatise on good management since the 1940s as an essential component of proper . . . management. Goals, objectives, targets, deadlines, milestones . . . are standard components of good management . . . and no manager . . . who wishes to do well would dream of doing without these necessary tools for . . . success."

Despite the grim realities of discrimination in America today, this Administration would have us believe that the battle for equal opportunities for minorities and women has been won; that discrimination affects only a few individuals and hence should, and can, be fought on a case-by-case basis; and that they have been doing everything possible to end discrimination and make equal opportunity for all Americans a reality.

To assess the success of the civil-rights struggle, there are no substitutes for objective measures such as the number of women and minorities in professional schools, the percentage employed in a given industry or the number and type of loans that a lender is willing to make to them. If we seem focused on structural adjustments like numerically accessed goals and, in appropriate circumstances, quotas, it is only because experience tells us that other, less controversial mechanisms, have failed to achieve meaningful results in the past. They are, therefore unlikely to generate measurably different results if relied on today.

Ignoring experience in formulating an enforcement policy and returning to failed enforcement practices is illogical since all contemporary effort should be based on historical experience.

Minorities and women are closely monitoring the Reagan Administration's civil rights policies. The Administration should therefore be on notice that all evaluations will be based on what it said or intended, but on the tangible results it achieves.●

APPROPRIATION FOR THE DEPARTMENT OF EDUCATION

HON. MICHAEL BILIRAKIS

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. BILIRAKIS. Mr. Speaker, a great concern in our society today is the quality of education in America. Congressional offices have been flooded with letters and cards insisting that action be taken to improve our public education system. It is rewarding to know that this expression of concern has not been in vain—Congress does care and something is being done.

Recently, the House, with my support, passed the Department of Education appropriation bill, which contains substantial increases for education programs. In addition to funds for the traditional education programs, the bill contains several other measures of special interest.

The Women's Education Equity Act program has again been recommended for funding. This program supports national, State, and other projects designed to promote educational equality for women through such measures as guidance and counseling activities, preservice and in-service training for educators, and courses for underemployed and unemployed women.

Adult and vocational education programs also have support. I am especially pleased to see increases in these funds, as my district, with its growing adult population is expending its efforts in this area. Nearly every community in the district has an established adult education program, several of which have been recognized for their outstanding quality. I also believe that it is important to mention the efforts by Congress to assist our young people in seeking a post-secondary education. A sincere effort has indeed been made to encourage America's youth by providing programs like the Pell grants, college work study programs, and student loans and grants.

These examples, along with the many other provisions of the bill, express the concern of the Congress for quality education in America. I am pleased that the House has taken the needed measures in this area and hope the Senate will agree with the House version of the bill.●

TAX INCENTIVES SPUR GROWTH

HON. ROBERT GARCIA

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues another important article which reinforces my belief that economically distressed areas can be revitalized through the use of specifically directed tax incentives. As you are aware, I have supported the use of tax incentives to rebuild such areas as the South Bronx. The Kemp-Garcia urban enterprise zones proposal is one of several promising ventures in this field.

The Puerto Rican economy is an excellent example of how a tax incentive program has already benefited a troubled area. Thirty years ago Puerto Rico had an impoverished agricultural economy. Since then the economy has grown by more than 350 percent. Much of this outstanding growth and development can be attributed to tax incentives which encouraged investment in manufacturing and high technology industries.

I would like to submit to the RECORD an article which outlines how the use of tax policies has benefited Puerto Rico. The article, written by Dr. Norman B. Ture, traces the use and effectiveness of incentives, and is a follow-up to a previous article:

PUERTO RICO AND SECTION 936: A CASE STUDY OF THE EFFECTIVE USE OF PRIVATE SECTOR INCENTIVES

To what is this truly impressive record of economic progress attributable? Obviously, many factors contributed to the Island's economic development. One of the most important of these is the ethos of the Puerto Rican people. The transformation of this economy could not have occurred but for the price of workmanship, the willingness to take on the most difficult jobs, the zest for achievement that has made the potential for economic develpment a reality. One cannot really comprehend what has happened here over the last thirty years if one ignores the contribution of the cultural and ethical heritage of the Puerto Rican people.

These attributes of the population were a necessary but not a sufficient condition for the transformation of the Puerto Rican economy. The catalytic agent which energized the surge of economic progress was the inflow of private capital, primarily but not exclusively from mainland U.S. This relies on one of the most ancient and fundamental of economic principles, viz., that the pace of advance of labor's productivity depends critically on the amount and quality of the capital with which labor works. It is, of course, not merely phsical capital which advances labor productivity; the accumulation of human capital makes an enormous contribution as well. But one must not lose sight of the well-nigh universally established fact that the ability to accumulate the human capital which makes that contribution itself depends critically on the quantity and quality of nonhuman capital that has been put in place. Without the latter, there are severe limits on the opportunity to use one's time and energies in education, training, and the other activities which expand knowledge and its applicablility in economic activity. In 1940, per capita income in Puerto Rico was about $121 a year; most of the working population eked out a bare existence in the fields in backbreaking hand labor; there were little energy, time, and resources with which to struggle out of illiteracy, disease, malnutrition, and general physical and mental debilitation. People in that condition do not accumulate large quantities of the human capital which can be productively used in economic life.

The inflow of capital to Puerto Rico did not just happen. It resulted in substantial part from the decision by the government of Puerto Rico to undertake an energetic, systematic, and well-organized effort to attract outside capital in order to promote job-creating industrial and business development. This decision was arrived at following unsuccessful efforts to pursue these goals through direct public investment. However, painful the lesson, it was well learned that solid economic progress must rely primarily on the vigor and initiatives of the private sector. It was also clearly perceived that those initiatives, depending critically on the inflow of capital had to be encouraged by appropriate incentives rather than frustrated by a hostile public policy climate.

The principal set of incentives to attract capital and industrial activity from outside took the form of exemption from Puerto Rican taxes. This step, initiated in 1948, took advantage of—complemented—the then existing U.S. Federal income tax exemption of so-called possession corporations. These are subsidiaries of U.S. mainland companies, operating in Puerto Rico and other U.S. possessions. The exemption of possession corporations' income dates back to 1921 when this provision was enacted in order to reduce the tax-induced competitive disadvantage which U.S. firms faced, particularly vis-a-vis British companies doing business in the Philippines.

From 1921 to 1976, no changes in the basic statutory provisions were made. The usefulness of the possessions corporation tax exemption was repeatedly reviewed by the Ways and Means Committee in the House of Representatives from 1973 until 1976 in connection with the claim that the original purpose of the exemption—to even up the tax situation of U.S. companies operating in the Philippines—was no longer relevant and hadn't been since 1946 when the Philippines became independent. The more persuasive argument, however, was that the dependence of "Operation Bootstrap" in Puerto Rico on continuation of possession corporation tax exemption and the manifest effectiveness of the program in promoting the Island's economic development warranted its continuation.

The Tax Reform Act of 1976 left the exemption substantially intact, although certain modifications were made. For one thing, the exemption was confined to the income produced by the active conduct of a trade or business in the possession and no longer could be extended to income earned by the possession corporation in a foreign jurisdiction. For another, the exemption does not extend to non-business income, such as interest and dividends, earned on assets located outside of the possession, but is confined to such income attributable to the investment of funds derived from the conduct of a trade or business in the possession. For yet another thing, the mechanics were changed from the exclusion of the possession corporation's income from the mainland company's taxable income to a credit against U.S. Federal tax liability equal to the tax which would otherwise be payable by the parent company to the Federal Government on such income.

As you can readily imagine, tax provisions as congenial as these to investment in possession enterprises cast up a host of technical tax problems. Over most of the years in which the possessions corporation tax exemption has been available, the Internal Revenue Service's rulings, revenue procedures, technical advice memoranda, etc., have adhered more or less closely to the obvious intent of the Congress. This long era of relative tranquility in taxpayer-IRS relationships, however, came abruptly to an end in 1980. The ensuing, escalating conflict between the IRS and possession corporation taxpayers led to the inclusion in the 1982 Tax Equity and Fiscal Responsibility Act (TEFRA) of several provisions which, ostensibly, were intended to afford certainty and to resolve taxpayer-IRS contests but which also result in a significant increase, in many situations, in U.S. Federal tax liabilities on possession corporation income and have generated new uncertainties about the tax exposure of possession corporations.

Had anyone had any doubts about the effectiveness of the Section 936 tax incentives and of the responsiveness of businesses thereto, he no longer would have after seeing the effect of the 1980 IRS actions and the 1982 tax legislation on mainland investment and new ventures in Puerto Rico. The numbers cited above should suffice to indicate the sturdy growth and development of the Island economy as a result of the inflow of capital and the birth of new enterprises and projects. There can be no doubt that this surge of business creation and growth occurred under the direction of the Fomento Organization in response to the substantial investment tax incentives. The abrupt decline in successful new Fomento promotions since July 1980 indicates the negative impact of adverse tax developments on economic activity and progress.

This is not to suggest that the tax events of the last few years spell the end of the Puerto Rican economy's growth. The good corporate citizens of Puerto Rico are not going to run away because of TEFRA. What has been achieved to date has established a solid foundation for further economic progress, even if at a somewhat less spectacular pace. The ingenuity which the officials of the Island government have repeatedly shown over the years has assuredly not been exhausted; it can be counted on to produce new solutions to the new problems which will emerge in a dynamic environment.

Some of these problems are likely to arise as a byproduct of initiatives by the Federal Government which, on other scores, must be seen as constructive as well as highly innovative. The Caribbean Basin Initiative—if, as, and when it finally emerges—will certainly confront the government of Puerto Rico with a major challenge, in contrast with the substantial benefits which the Island economy might have obtained had the earlier CBI concepts and proposals been enacted. Governor Romero has been untiring in his efforts to inform and advise Federal policymakers on this score. If his efforts are not crowned with as much success as might be wished, one can be sure that he and his associates will be equally unflagging in their search for ways to adjust to the resulting changes in the economic environment in such a manner as to preserve and strengthen the basic conditions for continuing economic progress.

Everyone must wish them success. What has been accomplished in Puerto Rico, in the face of the most substantial obstacles one could imagine, has to stand as a monument to what a community can accomplish if public policy works with rather than against the basic private-sector, market-directed impulses for economic development and progress. Puerto Rico is one of the best illustrations one can find of the potential of the "enterprise-zone" approach to economic reconstruction and advance.

It must be hoped that the Federal Government's policymakers will recognize that in this Island's experience of the last three decades there is to be found a marvelously successful laboratory demonstration of economic achievement relying on the private sector. Similarly, one must hope that future policy developments will seek to fortify those achievements. It is now time to improve on the experiment, not to abandon it.●

SENATOR WILLIAM S. COHEN—1983 WINNER OF THE L. MENDEL RIVERS AWARD FROM THE NON-COMMISSIONED OFFICERS ASSOCIATION

HON. OLYMPIA J. SNOWE

OF MAINE

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Ms. SNOWE. Mr. Speaker, it is with pride and much pleasure that I commend my distinguished colleague from the State of Maine, Senator WILLIAM S. COHEN, on receiving the Non-Commissioned Officers Association's most prestigious honor, the L. Mendel Rivers Award for Legislative Action.

As many of my colleagues know, the Non-Commissioned Officers Association (NCOA) is a national group comprised of more than 250,000 active and retired enlisted personnel. The organization's illustrious award was created in honor of the late U.S. Representative L. Mendel Rivers of South Carolina, who served as chairman of the House Armed Services Committee from 1965 and 1970. The award is presented to the Member of Congress who shares Congressman Rivers' commitment to the honorable men and women serving in this Nation's Armed Forces, his patriotism, as well as his dedication to a strong national defense.

In announcing its selection of Senator COHEN, the NCOA stated:

. . . the Senator displays outstanding courage in supporting a strong defense posture. With social judgment and the ability to carefully weigh the issues, he shows exceptional skill in his support for the systems which will insure an adequate defense.

While serving on the Senate Armed Services Committee, Senator COHEN has supported a strong national defense based on a modern, well-trained, combat-ready force. Accordingly, BILL COHEN has been extremely active in efforts improving the quality of life for our Armed Forces, and has introduced efforts which have helped attract and retain quality military personnel.

Senator COHEN has established himself as a dedicated, hard-working legislator as evidenced by his many accomplishments. Senator COHEN has been in the forefront of efforts reinforcing our Nation's defense capabilities, and has been instrumental in securing support in the Senate for efforts aimed at bolstering our Armed Forces. The Senator has also addressed several military manpower issues. Some examples include his proposal to reinstate GI bill education benefits for military personnel; his advocacy of an All-Volunteer Force, and the fact that BILL has continually initiated and supported legislative proposals enhancing pay and benefits for enlisted personnel. The Senator's dedication to those serving our Nation in uniform is obvious, and I am pleased that his achievements are being duly recognized.

In choosing Senator COHEN, the NCOA referred to him as "one of the Nation's up and coming young statesmen." Certainly, this statement is appropriate, and I commend the NCOA on its selection of this truly deserving Senator from Maine, BILL COHEN.

THE ADMINISTRATION'S SORRY RECORD ON HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT

HON. WILLIAM J. COYNE

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. WILLIAM J. COYNE. Mr. Speaker, the congressionally funded national housing survey tells us that more than 13 percent of all households, and 20 percent of all renter households, live in deficient housing.

Let us consider what this means in real terms in many communities across the land. In the four-county Pittsburgh area, for example, the 1980 census found 23,106 housing units with only half a bath or no bathroom. There are no kitchen facilities in 8,760 units. Portable room heaters, fireplaces, and stoves provide heat in 5,166 units.

One out of five renters nationwide lives in deficient housing. Yet this administration chooses to ignore the extent of housing need among persons of low or moderate income.

Since this administration took office in January 1981, funds for housing assistance have declined more dramatically than any major budget item. In fiscal 1981, budget authority for new activity in assisted housing was $30.9 billion. That dropped to $27.7 billion in fiscal 1982, $15.6 billion in fiscal 1983, and $12.4 billion in fiscal 1984.

The National Association of Housing and Redevelopment Officials, an organization of those who administer our housing and community development programs at the local level, analyzed the administration's performance in a recent issue of the Journal of Housing. The article, by NAHRO associate director Mary Nenno, follows:

THE REAGAN HOUSING, CD RECORD: A NEGATIVE RATING

(By Mary K. Nenno)

With two-thirds of its term in office completed, the inescapable reading of the Reagan Administration's record in housing and community development is that it is negative—many would say deliberately destructive. The Administration has used executive powers—in particular, the budget process—to cut deeply the federal commitment to authorized programs; to reduce federal government involvement and responsibility; and to damage seriously the morale and capacity of the Department of Housing and Urban Development. The record is negative in another way: the Administration has undertaken no positive initiatives to respond to the critical housing and community development needs of the 1980s.

Indeed, there is the question of whether the Administration has ever seriously examined the basic objectives and accomplishments of the programs being constrained—or really considered the leadership role that the federal government could take in meeting the housing needs of low-income American families and in the sound development of a rapidly urbanizing nation. The Administration's statement of urban policy, released in July, 1982, in response to a congressional requirement, relegates housing and community development concerns to a clearly subsidiary status, governed by policies on the economy and realignment of responsibilities in the federal system. They are not recognized as distinct concerns that require independent consideration. Nor are they viewed as strong contributors in the effort to revitalize the national economy, despite the clear linkages of housing and physical development improvements to economic revitalization. (For an analysis of Reagan urban policy, see the Journal of Housing, November/December, 1982.)

REAGAN'S GOALS

In assessing the place of housing among national concerns, the Administration has embraced the views of those who see housing solely as an "income problem." These views make no reference to the facts reported by the national housing survey: that in 1978, more than 13 percent of all households and 20 percent of renter households lived in deficient housing, and that neighborhood conditions (deteriorating housing, undesirable uses, litter, crime, noise, abandoned buildings, poor streets) were significantly worse in 1979 than in 1973 when the data were first collected. These conditions are not corrected by "cash allowances" to families. Documented experience shows that such allowances do very little to improve housing conditions or stimulate neighborhood improvement.

In assessing the place of community development, the Administration has sought to transfer federal responsibility to state and local government, with no acknowledgement of the federal government's impact on rapidly changing national development patterns. Nor does it acknowledge that the federal government has a critical role in ensuring a balanced national growth and development process. The existing housing and community programs developed over the past 50 years have been directed to the above concerns—but this Administration has different priorities.

Since the Reagan term began, the prime objectives have been to cut federal costs and to reduce federal responsibilities in domestic programs. Major proposals to accomplish these objectives for housing and community development—transfer of community development block grants/urban development action grants to the states, enterprise zones for economic revitalization, family housing certificates, and a new method for operating assistance in public housing—have not fared well. The only significant success in these major initiatives has been the transfer of the administration of the small city CDBG program to the states. In general, these major proposals have not generated significant support among constituent groups or in Congress (a summary of the 1981-1983 actions on these initiatives is shown in Chart 1, this page).

THE REAGAN TOOLS

Nevertheless, substantial movement toward the Administration's goals has occurred. The instruments have been the federal budget process and the use of administrative and regulatory powers. In 1983, there appears to be a new congressional challenge to these Administration directions through the appropriations process, the delay of proposed regulations, and the potential passage of a substantive housing and community development bill, which would be the first such bill since 1980. A cloud of uncertainty was cast over this challenge, however, by the action of the United States Supreme Court June 23 when it ruled that the Constitution does not permit congressional veto of executive actions. While the application of this decision to such important areas as executive impoundment of appropriated funds, or to congressional review and delay of proposed executive regulations is still unclear, its potential impact is great. It places further importance on a 1983 housing authorization bill.

The key building block in the achievement of the Reagan Administration's advancement toward its goals over the last two years is the 1981 Omnibus Budget Reconciliation Act. Using the strong political support generated by the 1980 election, the Administration ran virtually uninhibited over the traditional congressional processes in 1981. It by-passed the authorizing committees that set housing and community development policies and programs and the appropriations committees that set annual spending levels. Under the guidance of David Stockman, director of the Office of Management and Budget, all of the functions of budget, authorizations, and appropriations were combined in one legislative piece, the Omnibus Budget Act. The products of this act for housing and community development were the elimination of some programs, deep cuts in housing assistance, and new statutory language changing the shape and direction of existing programs along lines favored by the Administration.

A major part of the story over the subsequent two years is the running confrontation between the Administration and Congress—in particular, the Democrat controlled House of Representatives—over the proposed HUD regulations to implement the provisions of the 1981 act. Some of the key regulations, including CDBG entitlement and rent/income requirements in assisted housing, are still not final because Congress has used the required review process to delay their issuance (a summary of the attempted restructuring of some existing programs under the 1981 act authority, and other regulatory authority, is shown in Chart 2, page 138.)

The Administration did not dominate the congressional processes in 1982 to the degree that it did in 1981. There was a continuing resolution to extend existing programs, and an appropriations act, in addition to a congressional budget resolution. However, there was still no substantive housing and community development act.

ASSISTED HOUSING

The CDBG and UDAG programs, with three-year authorizations extending through 1983, have been able to maintain a somewhat consistent level of funding, although not adequate to cover costs of inflation or the expanding number of eligible communities. But, the HUD area hardest hit by the Administration's budget cuts has been assisted housing. In fact, this is probably the hardest hit area among all the federally assisted domestic programs. The total budget authority available for new activity in assisted housing, including both new and previously committed authority, declined from $30.9 billion in fiscal year 1981 to $27.7 billion in fiscal year 1982, to $15.6 billion in fiscal year 1983, and to $12.4 billion in fiscal year 1984—a cut of 60 percent from the previous commitment, not reflecting any adjustment for inflation. Even this is not the whole story because it reflects the positive appropriations actions by Congress and not the use of recaptured budget authority. If the Administration's budget proposals had prevailed, the cuts would have been far deeper.

In fiscal year 1984, for example, the new budget authority for assisted housing is $9.9 billion, rather than the $515 million originally requested by the Administration. Key Administration goals in assisted housing are designed not only to cut off any new production—the only new construction in its fiscal year 1984 budget proposal was 10,000 units of Section 202 housing for elderly and handicapped—but also to reduce the existing federal commitments. The Administration has recaptured and/or rescinded significant amounts of long-term budget authority. It has converted long-term (30-year) contracts in existing Section 236 and rent supplement projects to 15-year Section 8 leasing commitments. (For an explanation of how this process was pursued in fiscal year 1983, see the Journal of Housing, March/April, 1982). In addition to its efforts to curtail new housing production activity, the Administration battled in both 1981 and 1982 against levels of supplemental appropriations for operating assistance in public housing, even though these levels reflected the performance funding system guidelines.

Beyond appropriations, the Administration also has sought to cut assisted housing through the administrative and regulatory processes. In February, 1982, it issued regulations to put a national cap on total development costs in public housing, leaving little room to adjust to varying land and site cost situations. This rule was suspended by the appropriations committee in December, 1982, but is now back in effect. This same rule prohibited such "amenities" as balconies, garages, carports, and basements in public housing, even those within the prototype construction cost limits. In 1983, HUD has sought to reduce the housing quality standards for modernization of public housing from the existing modified minimum property standards to Section 8 existing housing occupancy standards or local codes. In the same program, it issued a proposed regulation to move away from "comprehensive" modernization, assuring the long-term usefulness of restored public housing, to shorter-term concepts of "health and safety standards" and "cost-effective energy conservation."

Modifications of these proposed changes in modernization priorities have been forced by the congressional review process, including approval for comprehensive modernization, but a ranking criterion is still required based on "cost savings." In the Section 8 existing program, a HUD-proposed regulation would reduce the level of fair market rents (from the 50 percentile of available rents in the local area to the 40th percentile), thereby reducing the quantity of housing available for leasing to low-income families, as well as the dollar amount of assistance to these families.

STAFF REDUCTIONS

An integral component of the Administration's goals since 1981 has been the reduction of the HUD staff. Overall, the staff was reduced from 15,122 permanent, full-time employees at the end of fiscal year 1981 to 12,929 such employees at the end of fiscal year 1983, a drop of 15 percent. Projections are for a further reduction to 11,791 employees at the end of fiscal year 1984 for a total reduction since 1981 of 22 percent. The HUD Washington, D.C., staff will have been reduced by 25 percent, and the field office staff by 21 percent. As the Administration moves to curtail activity in such areas as new construction of assisted housing, it is easy to rationalize that housing production staff is no longer required. This loss of capacity could make it difficult to process new housing construction applications if Congress should authorize them.

HUD also is taking steps to place more and more responsibility on its field offices and to combine regional and area office functions. Processing of UDAG and Section 202 elderly housing previously involving a significant central office review, is being shifted toward field offices. What the statistics do not show is the voluntary departure of skilled program professionals who left because of discouragement with HUD program directions. This is a great loss of dedication and capacity within the department. If the Administration's full objectives should be realized—transfer of CDBG/UDAG to the states, elimination of new assisted housing construction, cash housing assistance requiring minimal oversight, and assumption of major FHA insurance activity by private mortgage companies—little activity would be left to justify a federal cabinet department for housing and community development.

UNRESOLVED ISSUES

In mid-1983, the direction of housing and community development for the foreseeable future rests on one completed action, and on some still unsettled actions. The one completed action, which was a strong, positive stroke to maintain stability in existing housing and community development programs, is the passage of the HUD appropriations bill by Congress on June 29. The HUD appropriations bill was the first one to clear the 1983 session; it was the first time in many years that an appropriations bill has been passed by Congress and sent to the President before the end of June.

The HUD appropriations levels for fiscal year 1984, as set in the act, provide funding for key programs at moderate levels—$3.5 billion for CDBG and $440 million for UDAG (both 3-year authorizations); $1.5 billion for public housing modernization; and $1.5 billion for public housing operating assistance. The act provides funding for 35,000 new regular and 5,000 moderate rehabilitation units under the Section 8 existing housing program. Moreover, the bill not only funds 14,000 new units of Section 202 elderly housing, it also provides authority for 5,000 newly constructed or substantially rehabilitated public housing units and 2,500 Indian public housing units. While the number of these units is small, they are an encouraging indication of congressional support for the future of these programs.

The total new budget authority for assisted housing is $9.9 billion, 15 percent over the fiscal 1983 level of $8.6 billion. Most significantly, this fiscal year 1984 authority is $9.4 billion more than the $515 million in new authority originally requested by the Administration. One of the matters still to be settled in 1983 is the use of a reserve fund of $1.5 billion authorized by the appropriations act, but awaiting possible approval of new programs in pending substantive legislation. Such programs include a new multifamily housing production program contained in the pending House bill, as well as a new rental rehabilitation grant program and a new housing payment certificate program in the pending Senate bill. (HR1 passed the House on July 13 by a vote of 263 to 158. The Senate bill, S1338, was still pending floor action at Journal presstime.)

These bills have important implications beyond the authorization of new programs. They both contain provisions restating congressional intent in exist programs. The House bill, in particular, contains detailed statutory language on the CDBG program that negates the changes in the 1981 Budget Act and moves the program closer to the original purposes of the 1974 Housing and Community Development Act. The House bill also contains detailed language governing the operation of the performance funding system in public housing. Other language in the bill is related to HUD regulations governing income and rent determinations in assisted housing, the level of fair market rents in the Section 8 program, and the requirements of the Section 202 elderly/handicapped housing program.

It is hard to overstate the influence that the passage or the failure to pass substantive legislation in 1983 can have on the direction of housing and community development programs. If such legislation passes containing any of the detailed statutory changes for existing programs in the House bill, the Administration will be forced to recast the direction of its regulations. If such legislation fails, Administration-drafted regulations will be given a new green light. This action is particularly relevant because of the June 23 Supreme Court decision prohibiting legislative vetoes of executive actions. The record of the first two-thirds of the Reagan Administration in housing and community development leaves little doubt concerning the direction that will be pursued if the executive branch has its way.●

NATIONAL ADULT CARE CENTER WEEK

HON. C. ROBIN BRITT

OF NORTH CAROLINA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1982

● Mr. BRITT. Mr. Speaker, this week is National Adult Care Center Week, and I urge my colleagues to recognize these facilities which are so important to our older Americans.

Mr. Speaker, adult day care is a vital part of a larger network of services in my district supporting the home environment of older adults. With a waiting list of more than 2 years for nursing home beds in Guilford, Alamance, and Davidson Counties, a moratorium on new nursing home beds throughout North Carolina, and the growing numbers of persons achieving the age 60 plus, the importance of inhome services and adult day care assumes real significance.

Adult day care programs provide structured programing and a noon meal for older adults requiring supervision during the daytime hours. These programs are professionally staffed and basically one of three general types:

First, county departments of social services with title XX funding provide adult day care centers and home-based programs (five clients per home) for low-income clients. There are currently only 10 counties in North Carolina with such programs. There are, correspondingly, 84 counties with no such programs;

Second, there are some private nonprofit agencies providing adult day care. These programs are usually housed in churches or private homes and are in a few instances combined with child care programs. Such programs usually have diverse funding, including self pay from clients, and are able to serve clients at all income levels. Start-up dollars for these programs are very limited;

Third, there are private for-profit adult day care programs. Most frequently, these are based in private homes, freestanding facilities, or in association with rest homes or nursing homes. Because of the levels of supervision required, the staff to client ratios are relatively low and the costs correspondingly high. They tend to be far less expensive, however, than other forms of institutional care and are intended to postpone or prevent more costly institutionalization (for example, nursing homes).

Mr. Speaker, we in Congress and all levels of government should recognize the circumstances of these adult day care centers. More importantly, we should support the vital services they provide to our senior Americans.●

AVIATION TAX REDUCTION

HON. NORMAN Y. MINETA

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MINETA. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing two similar bills reducing the taxes imposed on aviation users.

Only a year ago the Congress enacted legislation providing higher funding levels for critically needed airport and airport improvements and imposing the higher aviation user taxes necessary to support those programs. Both the increased airway spending and the increased taxes were proposed and actively sought by this administration. The administration pledged that it would in fact spend for airports and airways the levels which were authorized in that legislation and which were the sole justification for the increased taxes.

The adopted package of higher airport and airway spending and higher user taxes made excellent sense then and continues to make sense today, as numerous studies have pointed out. The increased reliability, efficiency, capacity, and safety of the proposed system, and the substantial reductions it would make possible in annual energy, maintenance, and other operating costs, more than justified, to users and to the Federal Government alike, the additional capital investment required in the early years. The Congressional Budget Office, for example, calculated that the annual rate of return expected from higher airway spending would be 24.3 percent over the next two decades, a rate it characterized as a healthy return by any standards and as representing very good value. The CBO analysis estimated a very attractive cost-to-benefit ratio of 1 to 2.3.

It was only 5 months after we agreed to that legislation, however, that this administration began reneging on its commitments. Its budget proposals for the fiscal year 1984 budget called for significant reductions in airport and airway spending, despite the fact that the user taxes were to remain at the higher levels. The administration did not stop there, however. In the course of the consideration of the fiscal year 1984 transportation appropriation bill, the administration continued to push for lower and lower spending levels. For example, the administration eventually insisted on and got a limitation on fiscal year 1984 spending for air traffic control equipment—facilities and equipment—of only $750 million, despite the fact that it was the administration that had the previous year avocated and got a fiscal year 1984 authorization of $1.393 billion for that program and had based its higher tax proposals on that higher spending level.

As I pointed out to this House on August 2 when we adopted the conference report on the fiscal year 1984 transportation appropriation bill, the actual spending levels forced by this administration make a mockery of the commitments it has made and the justifications it had given for its higher tax proposals only a few months earlier. The airport and airway package we adopted a year ago included airport and airway trust fund program authorizations of $3.9 billion in fiscal year 1984, and the tax levels were set at the higher levels necessary to fully support that spending. However in the fiscal year 1984 transportation appropriation bill, that $3.9 billion was cut back to only $1.8 billion. In short, the spending we were planning on, and taxing for, was cut by more than half—by $2.1 billion—while the higher tax levels were left unchanged.

It should come as no surprise that the result is a rapidly increasing surplus in the airport and airway trust fund. To put it simply, we are taking in vastly more in aviation user taxes than we are spending out, something none of us would have supported last year or any other time.

The spending levels agreed to by both the Congress and the administration in the authorization legislation represented an excellent investment a year ago and they would still be an excellent investment today. But the fact is that even if we spend in every future year at the full level envisioned when we agreed to the administration's higher taxes a year ago, the underspending to date has guaranteed such large surpluses in the trust fund that we are now collecting vast sums of money from aviation users that we will not need and therefore have no justification for continuing to collect. There is no choice that has to be made between tax reduction on the one hand and full spending in the future for airport and airway improvements on the other; the surpluses generated by our underspending to date insure that we can do both and that if we fail to cut taxes we are collecting unneeded revenues.

To demonstrate my point, the following trust fund projection, made by FAA at my request, assumes spending levels actually adopted through fiscal year 1984, the full spending levels contemplated when we agreed to increase the user taxes a year ago for fiscal year 1985 through fiscal year 1987, and the tax levels in existing law:

	Fiscal year—
	1984	1985	1986	1987
Beginning unobligated balance	1,993.5	3,373.8	3,050.3	3,099.3
Revenues from user taxes	2,657.1	2,974.7	3,310.4	3,686.1
Program spending	1,813.0	3,926.0	3,911.0	3,737.0
Interest on surplus	536.2	627.8	649.6	655.6
Ending unobligated balance	3,373.8	3,050.3	3,099.3	3,704.0

As the table shows, if we fail to cut taxes, and even if we adopt in all future years the full spending envisioned when we agreed to the higher taxes, the unobligated balance in the trust fund will never drop below $3 billion. Last year there was general agreement that roughly $1 billion would be a prudent cushion in the trust fund. What we have here, however, is roughly $2 billion more than we need even under the most optimistic assumption on spending available.

I should note that I have used here one of the more conservative measures of the trust fund surplus: Unobligated balance. Another commonly cited measure of the surplus is cash balance. For comparison, it can be roughly estimated that the cash balances would run at least $3 billion higher than the unobligated surpluses shown in the above chart. For example, with no tax reduction and given the underspending to date, the CBO forecasts that cash balances in the trust fund may be as high as $7.3 billion by 1987.

This is what we are headed for if we do not adopt reductions in aviation user taxes. These surpluses will cause justifiable outrage. They are irrefutable testimony to the fact that aviation users are continuing to pay taxes at levels that are unneeded and unwarranted.

I am therefore proposing, in two similar bills, a proportional tax reduction for each of the various aviation user taxes. The reduction is roughly 25 percent across the board: No group of aviation users is favored over any other. The reduced tax levels would be as follows:

Tax	Existing law	Proposed
Passenger ticket tax (percent)	8	6
Freight way bill (percent)	5	4
International departure tax	$3	$2
General aviation gasoline [1]	$.12	$.09
General aviation jet fuel [1]	$.14	$.10

[1] Per gallon.

In both of the bills I am introducing today, these proposed tax reductions would take effect January 1, 1984.

If the proposed tax reduction were to remain in effect for 2 years, calendar 1984 and 1985, and then revert to the tax levels now in effect, as is specified in the first of the two bills I am introducing, the following trust fund balances would result:

	Fiscal year—
	1984	1985	1986	1987
Beginning unobligated balance	1993.5	2911.4	1782.2	1417.6
Revenues from user taxes	2218.3	2252.4	3030.5	3659.9
Program spending	1813.0	3926.0	3911.0	3737.0
Interest on surplus	512.6	544.4	515.9	507.3
Ending unobligated balance	2911.4	1782.2	1417.6	1847.6

As can be seen in this chart, even with the proposed tax cut the unobligated balance never drops below $1.4 billion, demonstrating that we can have a tax cut, return to the full spending levels promised beginning with the next appropriation bill and continuing through the life of the program, and still have a fully adequate and prudent cushion in the trust fund.

In short, the first bill I am introducing reduces aviation user taxes to reflect the underspending which has occurred to date in the trust fund programs. It assumes, however, that beginning with the fiscal year 1985 transportation appropriation bill, this administration will remember and advocate the spending levels on which it based its own tax proposals, and that the Congress will also appropriate in accord with those spending levels. I certainly hope that is a valid assumption and I think this bill would be a very considerable improvement and would go a long way to restoring fairness to aviation taxes and credibility for the promises made when taxes were raised a year ago.

However, if that assumption does not prove correct, we would then again be either collecting taxes that were unneeded and unwarranted, or we would have to enact further extensions of the tax reduction.

Given the Federal Government's poor track record for being able to stick to its own multiyear spending plans, I suggest it would be preferable to build into any tax reduction legislation an unambiguous mechanism which guarantees, without resort to the uncertainties of future legislation, that we will never again be in the position of collecting unneeded revenues. I therefore am introducing a second bill embodying such a mechanism. It provides for exactly the same reduced tax levels as in the first bill and makes the reduction effective on exactly the same date January 1, 1984. However, the termination of the reduced-tax period is not specified in the second bill as it was in the first. Instead, at the end of each fiscal year, the unobligated balance in the trust fund must be published in the Federal Register. If that balance were $2.3 billion or greater, the taxes in the following calendar year would be at the reduced level. If the balance were less than $2.3 billion, the taxes in the following calendar year would be at the higher level. Thus, the taxes would never change on less than 2½ months notice or for less than 12 months at a time. This is important because frequent tax changes or changes on short notice could be a very considerable burden in their own right.

The $2.3 billion trigger level was selected because it is the level at which no combination of revenue losses due to reduced taxes and spending decisions could drop the unobligated balance below $1.3 billion in the following year. Thus, under the second bill as well as the first, an adequate cushion would be maintained in the trust fund at all times.

As can be seen from the previous chart, the effect of the second bill would be no different from the first; that is, the tax reduction would be in effect for calendar 1984 and 1985, if the spending levels were as promised beginning with fiscal year 1985. If, however, we continue to have substantial spending shortfalls, then the reduced tax levels would remain in effect. In this way both the users and the Congress would be assured that aviation user taxes would not become that which they are now but which the Congress would never have agreed to: Taxation without purpose. I believe that this mechanism would also act as an incentive to see that the promised spending would be permitted to occur.

We in Congress never again want to be in a position of having imposed taxes for valid purposes, only to subsequently discover that administration actions are decimating the programs that were those valid purposes, while leaving the higher taxes in place. The second bill I am introducing today is the best way I can think of to insure that we in Congress are not backed into this outrageous situation again. But I am willing to work with the Ways and Means Committee on either of the bills I am introducing or on any aviation user tax reduction proposal that would accomplish these objectives.

In conclusion, I would remind Members that all segments of aviation—commercial air carriers and general aviation—are in very difficult circumstances. Aviation is a highly cyclical industry: When the rest of the economy catches a cold, aviation gets pneumonia. This year the general economy is coming out of its longest and deepest recession since the Great Depression, and as a result, aviation has been suffering worse than pneumonia. On top of 3 years of recession, the general economy has given this highly fuel intensive industry periods of astronomical fuel cost increases and has given this capital-intensive industry interest rates previously imagined impossible. While general economic conditions have shown improvement this year, aviation has been so weakened that it still has a lot of recovering to do. It is simply not an industry that can easily bear even a small increment of unneeded taxation.

As an example, recent difficulties in the airline industry remind us again that in a weakened economy available dollars are stretched to the breaking point between airlines, their employees, and the low fares often necessary to attract sufficient number of passengers in hard times. The kind of tax reductions I am proposing are not so large as to make these problems disappear, but these tax reductions do represent something we can do that would immediately have some positive effect. Just reducing the passenger ticket tax from 8 to 6 percent, as I have proposed, would mean that this very tightly stretched situation in the airline industry would be $650 million a year less tight. That amount has to be considered in the context of a $30 billion a year scheduled airline industry. Nevertheless, the $650 million for example would have been larger than the industry's total losses in any year of its history except one. In the present circumstance, that is not a consideration that should be overlooked, particularly given the fact that the only alternative is to have that money sit without purpose in the trust fund surplus.

I also want to note that the Members with leadership roles in the authorization of the aviation trust fund programs in the House have worked with me on these tax reduction proposals and are joining me as original cosponsors: JIM HOWARD, chairman of the Public Works and Transportation Committee; GENE SNYDER, ranking minority member of that committee; JOHN PAUL HAMMERSCHMIDT, ranking minority member of the Aviation Subcommittee; DAN GLICKMAN, chairman of the Subcommittee on Transportation, Aviation and Materials; and BILL CARNEY, ranking minority member of that subcommittee. I invite and urge other Members to cosponsor as well, and I hope the Ways and Means Committee will be giving serious consideration to these proposals.●

RODINO HONORS MEMORY OF MAHATMA GANDHI

HON. PETER W. RODINO, JR.

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. RODINO. Mr. Speaker, tomorrow the Federation of Indian Associations is sponsoring in New York City a grand celebration marking the 114th birthday anniversary of one of history's greatest nationalist leaders, India's Mohandas K. Gandhi. Prime Minister Indira Gandhi will be present to lead this observance.

Mahatma Gandhi has been an inspiration everywhere for leaders who aspire to national independence. His determination to bring about historic change peacefully—and the accomplishment of that goal—gave birth to a philosophy of progress through nonviolence that has had a tremendous effect worldwide, including our own society through the leadership of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

Dr. King often declared himself a disciple of Mahatma Gandhi, and his life's work is enduring envidence of this. It is most fitting, therefore, that this celebration to honor Mahatma Gandhi is taking place in the Martin Luther King Auditorium in New York.

I want to add my voice here to those who will speak in his memory tomorrow and remind us once again of this great man's contributions to the doctrine of peaceful change. And I wish the Federation of Indian Associations continued success in this celebration and in future endeavors.●

SOVIET WATCH

HON. JACK FIELDS

OF TEXAS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. FIELDS. Mr. Speaker, I insert Professor Jaffa's article into the RECORD for the consideration of our colleagues.

[From the Washington Times, Sept. 29, 1983]

A METHOD IN THEIR MADNESS

(By Harry V. Jaffa)

Why did the Soviet Union shoot down an unarmed Korean 747 jet airliner? The question has been asked over and over and over again in the days following that terrible event. It will continue to be asked, for the very good reason that no one will have a very good answer. At least, there will be no answer that will be confirmed from Moscow, and only Moscow knows the answer.

But the answer will come in time: It will come when succeeding acts of Soviet terror reveal a pattern, a method in the madness. That pattern will finally convince the Free World of its own madness in sturdily refusing to believe that the U.S.S.R. is a gangster regime—the successor to the Nazi regime of Adolph Hitler, no less bent upon world domination than Hitler was, and far better armed to accomplish that domination than Hitler was.

In a "Nightline" interview, in which Ambassador Jeane Kirkpatrick faced off against a Soviet "commenator" speaking from Moscow, the ambassador and her Soviet opposite agreed upon one thing: that this "terrible" incident was a tragedy for everyone, and that no one gained anything by it. But the ambassador was wrong in agreeing to this proposition, and the Soviet commentator—who was in fact nothing but a gangster public relations expert—was lying through his teeth.

Bruce Herschensohn, commenting for ABC evening news, pointed out a great gain for the U.S.S.R. in this incident. In demonstrating their utter ruthlessness, the Soviets struck fear in every country around the world which for any reason anticipates conflict with the U.S.S.R. Even more important, all those Third World countries, and even the countries of the Western Alliance, are bound to be impressed by the ability of the Soviets to work their will, even in the most openly ruthless manner, with impunity.

The immediate reaction in Western Europe, was one of revulsion against the Soviets. But that revulsion came while outrage in the United States was still white hot, and when it was still thought the United States might take measures that would impose a cost or penalty upon the U.S.S.R. But as the anger wanes, as the living go about their business, and as the dead recede into the past, the fear engendered by the Soviet act will continue, and will grow, for it will soon be followed by other acts of like import.

By now, the slaughter in Afghanistan has subsided into a minor irritation. The yellow rain in Southeast Asia touches people we hardly know. A Harvard University professor assures us that the deadly residue is a species of "bee dung." Any explanation is grasped like the proverbial straw, if only it will give us a good conscience, while we try to forget, and resolutely do nothing.

Why was 007 over Soviet air space? We do not know. The secret may be in the black box, but the Soviets will see to it that it is never recovered—at least by us. Could the plane have been hijacked? Could a KGB operative have tampered with the computer that guided the plane, while it was on the ground in Anchorage?

Clearly, if the Soviets had wanted to intercept what they genuinely believed to be a spy mission, they would have forced the plane to land on Soviet ground, and impounded it until any intelligence on it has been removed. Indeed they could then have displayed their proof to the world as they did when they captured an American U-2 plane in 1959.

The destruction of the Korean airliner, as a defensive measure against espionage, is not an explanation that fits any sober reason. But are the Soviets simply paranoid about their security? There is a saying that just because you're paranoid doesn't mean they're not really out to get you.

In the larger sense the Soviets are undoubtedly paranoid: because they believe the Marxist-Leninist theory of history, which says that the conflict between communism and capitalism is driven inexorably by the dialectics of history. But in the more limited sense—of doing things that are against their interests—the Soviets are never paranoid. They shot down 007 to demonstrate to the world how dangerous they are, and how hopeless is the case of those who resist their will.

What should the president have done? The shooting down of 007, like the invasion of Afghanistan, like the establishment of a military, naval and air base in Cuba, like the movement into Angola, and into Ethiopia, and into Southeast Asia, and into Central America, etc., etc., is evidence of growing Soviet power and growing ability to project that power around the perimeter of the Soviet borders and far beyond those borders.

The "window of vulnerability" may well be upon us now, and the most recent incident but a demonstration by the Soviets that that window is indeed open. In truth, there is little, or perhaps nothing, that we can do to "punish" the Soviets for this, taken by itself.

But the president should call a joint session of the Congress, and declare that Soviet aggressiveness is evidence that our defense preparations are wholly inadequate for meeting this challenge. Why else would the Soviets increasingly manifest their contempt for us, and increasingly declare their intention to bully us?

Much changes, and yet in a way everything remains the same. It is 1938. Hitler rants and screams that he must have the Sudetenland. He assures us that it is his last territorial ambition in Europe. Czechoslovakia is a little country in Eastern Europe. Let Hitler move east, Chamberlain thinks; we are to his West. A year later, the Munichoids are chanting, "Why die for Danzig." (Danzig is the same Dansk where Lech Walesa launched Solidarity some 40 years later.)

The president will not admit that the conflict with the U.S.S.R. is as inexorable as the Soviets themselves believe it to be. Make no mistake, our relations with the Soviets are on a collision course. We can avoid that collision in one of two ways only. The first is by surrender. The second is by becoming so strong that the U.S.S.R. will acknowledge our strength and defer to it. Parity between these two superpowers will surely lead to war or surrender. Bullies do not fight when they are not certain of winning. But there is no pity or human feelings in them. They will not hesitate to slaughter us to the last man, woman and child if they believe we lack the will or means to resist them.●

NEWS POLL INDICATES AMERICAN SUPPORT FOR U.S. ROLE IN UNITED NATIONS

HON. BOB EDGAR

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. EDGAR. Mr. Speaker, last week, a number of House Members publicly expressed their disagreement with the comments of U.S. Ambassador to the United Nations Charles Lichenstein. Ambassador Lichenstein had suggested that member states of the United Nations move their representation and the organization itself elsewhere.

Although the President subsequently stated that the Ambassador had his full support, he also launched a campaign to reverse a vote in the other body which would reduce the U.S. contribution to the United Nations. He also strongly endorsed the United Nations and its goals in his speech before the United Nations General Assembly on Monday, September 26, 1983.

Today, we have further evidence of the support of the American people for the United Nations. A New York Times/CBS News Poll, conducted from September 24 to 28 and profiled in today's Times, indicates that 65 percent of those surveyed believe that the United Nations should remain in the United States; only 20 percent feel that it should move. Furthermore, an overwhelming 89 percent support U.S. membership in the United Nations.

Mr. Speaker, this a powerful endorsement of the U.S. role in the United Nations. It is true that our country is sometimes unfairly maligned in the General Assembly, that many times the world body opposes our position on international issues. Yet the American people do support our active participation in the United Nations. Americans know that international cooperation is not easy, but that it is necessary. Americans know that we cannot turn our backs on the international community. Americans know that acceptance, not rejection, of the United Nations is the best way to counter Soviet influence around the world. At this time of international tension, let's not spend more time on locale proposals for the United Nations—let's get on with its real business of working toward peaceful resolution of world conflicts.●

A TRIBUTE TO BEATRICE RICHMOND

HON. EDWARD J. MARKEY

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MARKEY. Mr. Speaker, I would like to ask my colleagues in the House to join me in saluting a woman who, for the past quarter century, has worked to promote economic and social growth in my native city of Malden, Mass.

On October 8, Beatrice Richmond will complete 25 years of service to the city of Malden. This remarkable woman demonstrated unique skills and extraordinary civic commitment as a member of the board of the Malden Redevelopment Authority. Beatrice Richmond's diligence, integrity, and special insights helped make the Malden Redevelopment Authority a leader in the areas urban development.

Beatrice Richmond was not driven by a desire for personal recognition, but by a genuine concern for the needs of Malden residents. The results of her work are evident throughout the city of Malden. As her Congressman, I am extremely pleased to call attention to her efforts to make Malden a better place to live.

My work and that of other public officials involved in urban redevelopment will be forever enhanced by the example that Beatrice Richmond has set.●

NEED FOR CONTINUED ARMS CONTROL NEGOTIATIONS

HON. TIMOTHY J. PENNY

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. PENNY. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of continued efforts on the part of the United States for serious arms control negotiations with the Soviet Union. It is in our national interest to work to reduce the likelihood of what would be the world's final tragedy: a nuclear holocaust. We must seek an arms control agreement as our best hope for lasting peace.

I would like to quote from George F. Kennan's memoirs:

> We must remember that almost the only language in which we now communicate with the Soviet leaders is the language of overt military and political moves. If we still hope to have the ultimate decision confined to the political field and to win on that field, let us be sure the words we speak in this peculiar language do not operate to reduce the Soviet leaders to a state of mind in which for them, as for people everywhere who accept the belief in the inevitability of war, the only question is not "whether" but "when."

Ambassador Keenan wrote those words 21 years ago. Unfortunately, they still apply. The Korean Air Lines massacre is just the type of terrible incident that might induce us to take an overt political move that would increase, rather than reduce, the possibility of war. We cannot afford to walk away from the negotiating table, precisely because this outrageous incident once again illustrates the volatility of the Soviet Union. I firmly believe that negotiations offer the possibility of lessening the danger of a nuclear confrontation. If the United States curtails its arms control efforts, we will communicate the wrong message in the dangerous language of overt military and political moves.

The downing of the Korean airliner and the murder of its passengers has rightfully evoked strong and sharp condemnation by members of the international community against the Soviet Union. All civilized nations recognize that the Soviet Union bears the blame and guilt for the deaths of the 269 people aboard. Several actions have been considered as possible sanctions. We all agree that the Soviets must give a complete account of what happened. We expect the Soviets to reexamine their policies of dealing with incursions into their airspace. We demand that the Soviets make immediate restitution to the families of the victims. We should also demand restitution to the world community in the form of concessions by the Soviets at the arms control table.

It is in the interest of no one to discontinue our efforts to reduce the threat of a nuclear holocaust. Taking a lesson from the Korean Air Lines tragedy we must redouble our efforts to secure something of true and lasting value through arms control negotiations.

I trust this administration is serious in pledging that serious arms control negotiations will continue. We must not remove ourselves from the political field of arms control. The future of our planet demands that we choose a course of action that carries us not to the inevitability of war, but to the possibility of peace.●

DEFENSE CONTRACTOR LOBBIES FOR MX PROGRAM

HON. PATRICIA SCHROEDER

OF COLORADO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mrs. SCHROEDER. Mr. Speaker, if any of my colleagues have noticed a recent surge in constituent mail in support of the MX missile system, they can thank Martin Marietta, the prime contractor for the weapons system.

On September 12, 1983, Martin Marietta President Thomas E. Pownall addressed a page and a half memorandum to all employees advising them that "These programs are significant to the corporation."

Mr. Pownall noted:

To prevent further erosion of Congressional support for President Reagan's program, it is very important for members of both the Senate and the House to know that there is strong constituent support.

For the convenience of those employees who had difficulty expressing themselves, Mr. Pownall supplied a set of postcards. He concluded his memorandum, "They need to hear from you—by postcard, letter, or telegram—but soon!"

There is an obvious question as to whether this lobbying campaign transgresses Defense Acquisition Regulations (DAR 15-205.51), prohibiting defense contractors from attributing indirect or direct lobbying costs to the Government.

A more fundamental question, however, is whether the narrow, private interests of a corporation should be defining national defense policy—especially when the lobbying is promoted as disinterested, constituent opinion.

The entire memorandum follows:

MARTIN MARIETTA CORP.,
Bethesda, Md., Sept. 12, 1983.

TO ALL MARTIN MARIETTA EMPLOYEES: Within the next 60 days the Congress will consider the appropriation of funds for production of the Peacekeeper (MX) missile and other strategic initiatives. These programs are significant to the Corporation. That, of itself, might be enough reason for this communication with our employees, but there are other, higher considerations involved—grave issues of national security which must be decided by the Congress. It is on the basis of the latter considerations that I'm writing to you.

In April, the President's Commission on Strategic Forces, chaired by General Brent Scowcroft, issued its report and recommendations on actions necessary to modernize our strategic nuclear forces and to restore balance between Soviet and U.S. strategic systems. These proposals, which were recommended for implementation as a package, provide for limited deployment of the Peacekeeper missile in Minuteman silos, progressive arms control initiatives, and development of a small, single-warhead ICBM. Combined, these changes will strengthen our ability to ensure a stable deterrent to nuclear war while providing negotiating leverage for our arms control representatives, seeking to move the Soviets toward an overall reduction in strategic nuclear weapons.

I share the President's concern that failure to modernize the land-based leg of our triad will jeopardize those negotiations and tempt the Soviets to exploit their large and growing advantage in nuclear forces.

The nation needs a clear show of support from the Congress for the Administration's request to implement the commission's recommendations. The MX system provides the earliest opportunity for deployment of a truly modern ICBM. This near-term deployment will have significant influence on deterrent credibility, will strengthen allied support of NATO nuclear force modernization, and will enhance meaningful arms control negotiations. Quoting from the commission report: "It is illusory to believe that we could obtain a satisfactory agreement with the Soviets limiting ICBM deployments if we unilaterally terminated the only U.S. ICBM program that could lead to deployment in this decade." Approval to deploy MX may or may not encourage the Soviets to come to the table for serious discussions, but it appears to offer the best immediate hope for beginning to reduce forces on both sides.

In May, the bipartisan Scowcroft report was approved by the House of Representatives on a vote of 239 to 186. However, in July, when authorizing 1984 funds for the program, the House vote was only 220 to 207. The Senate approved the report by a vote of 59 to 39 in May and 57 to 42 in July. These lesser margins of support were due to intense lobbying pressures by anti-nuclear, anti-defense, and nuclear-freeze proponents. However well intentioned, their arguments have crystallized in a position that would have the United States rely on Soviet benevolence in the face of what surely would be construed as a show of national weakness or lack of resolve. This position would, in my opinion, undermine the Free World and put our national security at jeopardy; it is a risky course, with no support in historic precedence. Its logic seems dubious in the recent and present situations, in which the Russians continue their arms buildup at a rapid pace.

To prevent further erosion of Congressional support for President Reagan's program, it is very important for members of both the Senate and the House to know that there is strong constituent support. If you agree, and I hope you will, that Congressional implementation of President Reagan's approach is meritorious, please let your Congressmen know how you feel. For your convenience, postcards are enclosed for your signature and for addressing to your two U.S. Senators and the U.S. Representative from your district. They need to hear from you—by postcard, letter, or telegram—but soon!

Sincerely,

THOMAS G. POWNALL,
President.●

RAWLE & HENDERSON CELEBRATE BICENTENNIAL—OLDEST LAW OFFICE IN CONTINUOUS PRACTICE IN U.S.A.

HON. THOMAS M. FOGLIETTA

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. FOGLIETTA. Mr. Speaker, today I want to call the attention of the Congress to the Philadelphia law firm of Rawle & Henderson on the occasion of the firm's bicentennial anniversary year.

Rawle & Henderson is recognized as the oldest law office in continuous practice in the United States, tracing its roots to the William Rawle law office founded in Philadelphia in 1783.

Reflecting Rawle & Henderson's past is very much like reflecting on the history of the Nation and the American legal profession. Francis Rawle, the first of the Philadelphia Rawles, in 1721 wrote a treatise which became the first book printed by Benjamin Franklin. His son, also Francis, handled the legal affairs of Pennsylvania's founding Penn Family. Two genrations later, William Rawle was appointed by George Washington as "Attorney for the United States in the District of Pennsylvania." William Rawle was one of the founders of the Philadelphia Bar Association and was its first chancellor.

In 1871, a cousin of the founding Rawle family, Francis Rawle, became a partner in the firm. In 1878, Francis, with a group of attorneys from 29 States, met in Saratoga Springs, N.Y., to found the American Bar Association. History tells us that those attorneys gathered in Saratoga Springs had forgotten to bring a gavel and that Francis Rawle hurried to a nearby hardware store to purchase, for 25 cents, a carpenter's mallet. The mallet now symbolizes the American Bar Association. Francis Rawle was the first treasurer of the American Bar Association and was elected president in 1902. Subsequently, in 1942, Joseph W. Henderson also was elected American Bar Association president. Henderson had joined the Rawle law firm in 1917.

Today, the firm of Rawle & Henderson is known for its excellent work in matters relating to maritime, admiralty, and commercial litigation; corporate representation; and the general practice of law at every level.

More important than Rawle & Henderson's work within the legal profession is the firm's service to its profession and its community. I am most pleased to say this tradition is continuing in this 200th anniversary year. This year, Rawle & Henderson is establishing the "Francis Rawle Award" to be presented annually in conjunction with the American Bar Association and the American Law Institute to an outstanding lawyer in the field of post admission legal education. In addition, the firm is presenting as a public service a series of public affairs programs on radio station WFLN entitled "World Views' and produced by the World Affairs Council of Philadelphia.

Mr. Speaker, I want to add my own congratulations to the many others Rawle & Henderson is now receiving in commemoration of its 200th anniversary.●

PRIDE AND ACHIEVEMENT OF EMPLOYEES AND MANAGEMENT

HON. MATTHEW G. MARTINEZ

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MARTINEZ. Mr. Speaker, I call your attention to a remarkable technological accomplishment by some of my constituents. The Byron Jackson pump division of the Borg-Warner Corp. located in my district has manufactured a high quality main sodium pump for the Clinch River breeder reactor. This prototype sodium pump recently completed rigorous performance testing at the DOE Energy Technology Engineering Center in Santa Susana, Calif.

I commend the employees and management for the production of a sodium pump which exceeds all operational design requirements. I also commend the employees of this Vernon-based plant for having, once again, demonstrated the American employee's ability to manufacture some of the best technologically advanced products.

The following article from the Energy Daily chronicles this successful technological accomplishment.

The article follows:

[From The Energy Daily, July 14, 1983]

CLINCH RIVER COMPONENTS PASS PERFORMANCE TESTS

Two of the largest components destined for the 350-megawatt Clinch River breeder reactor (CRBR) demonstration project have passed their performance tests with flying colors. In early June, the prototype main sodium pump successfully completed its year-long test campaign at the Energy Department's Energy Technology Engineering Center in Santa Susana, Calif. "The tests demonstrated that the 150-ton pump and its drive motor will meet or exceed all operational design requirements," said Charles Fox, assistant director for engineering at the Santa Susana testing station. The pump itself—able to deliver 44,000 gallons of sodium per minute—was manufactured by Borg Warner's Byron Jackson Pump Division; the 5,000-horsepower motor which drives it during full-power operation, and the pony motor which provides slow-speed capability, were both designed and manufactured by General Electric. The Clinch River plant will use six of the pumps.

Also in June, the Energy Technology Engineering Center ran full-power tests on the 106-ton prototype steam generator for Clinch River. It was the largest sodium-to-water steam demonstration ever conducted in the U.S. and "is one of the most significant test accomplishments on the Clinch River project to date," Fox enthused. "Steam generators are traditionally a difficult component to design. Test results indicate the CRBR steam generator will exceed design requirements and that's very good news." The prototype was tested at 70 megawatts (thermal), the limit of the Santa Susana facility. The steam generator—called a "hockey stick" design after its shape—consists of an outer shell surrounding 757 tubes; sodium is isolated on the shell side, water and steam on the tube side. It operates at temperatures exceeding 900 degrees F and pressures of 1,550 psi. Data from the Santa Susana test will be factored into the 10 steam generators now being fabricated for Clinch River at Westinghouse's Pensacola, Florida, factory. The 10 steam generators are being manufactured under a $34 million fixed-price contract. Three of them will be used as superheaters, six as evaporators and one as a spare; delivery is scheduled to begin early in 1985.●

BILLS ON AUTOMATED MANUFACTURING AND ROBOTICS

HON. DON FUQUA

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. FUQUA. Mr. Speaker, today I am introducing a package of three bills to stimulate the development and use of automated manufacturing systems and robots. These bills are the Robotics and Automated Manufacturing Systems Research and Education Act of 1983, the National Robot and Automated Manufacturing Systems Leasing Act of 1983, and an unnamed bill which provides a tax credit for the purchase of this equipment. I am joined in introducing these bills by my colleagues, the Honorable AL GORE of Tennessee, the Honorable GEORGE E. BROWN, Jr. of California, the Honorable BUDDY MACKAY of Florida, and the Honorable SHERWOOD BOEHLERT of New York. I invite all Members of the House to join in cosponsoring any or all of these three bills.

For the past 4 years the Committee on Science and Technology, particularly through our Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology, has been investigating innovation and productivity in the United States. We have been informing ourselves broadly through oversight hearings, taking legislative initiatives when we believed they were desirable, and cooperating with other committees of Congress. In June the Subcommittee on Science, Research and Technology held 7 days of hearings jointly with the Task Force on Education and Employment of the House Budget Committee on the subject of technology and employment. In October the same subcommittee is marking up a bill to encourage joint research and development work among private firms.

Several examinations of automated manufacturing and robotics have been included among the committee's studies, the largest of which were a 2-day seminar on technology and innovation for manufacturing which I sponsored in 1979 and 2 days of hearings on robotics held by our Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee chaired by the Honorable AL GORE in 1982.

The country that leads the world in the technologies of manufacturing has the potential to lead the world in manufactured products by applying those technologies. Unless the United States makes a major effort now, that country is going to be Japan. The Manufacturing Studies Board of the National Research Council reported in 1981 that the population of robots in Japan was 6,000 while the United States had 3,500. In 1982 at our Investigations and Oversight Subcommittee hearings, investment analyst Paul Aron reported 14,246 Japanese robots versus 4,700 in the United States. Mr. Aron's report which appeared this year notes 31,900 in Japan and 6,301 in the United States. In the broader field of automated manufacturing—where several robots or other automated machines are integrated into a system to produce an entire product—the United States faces an equally strong challenge. Earlier this year I visited the Fanuc robot plant in Japan where the people go home at night and the plant keeps working.

To develop the technologies of robotics and automated manufacturing, research and development is needed. Most of this research and development must be in the private sector to be effective; it must be tied to specific robotic and automated manufacturing products. There is a Government role, however, in developing such equipment for its own specialized uses—such as in space, defense, and radioactive materials handling—and in supporting research and development which is not product-specific and is not likely to be pursued by industry because of its long-range or risky nature. To allow commercial technology development there is also a need for people trained in that technology. The limiting factor in electronics and computers now is people. Without expanded education in robotics and automated manufacturing these fields will also be limited by the availability of trained American personnel. The Robotics and Automated Manufacturing Systems Research and Education Act of 1983 provides for a Federal role in these areas which I believe to be the right role.

Robots and automated manufacturing are new technologies and their introduction in a company involves both fear of the unknown and risk of failure. To offset fear and risk the Federal Government can provide financial incentives and make these technologies more easily available. That is what the tax credit and leasing bills I am introducing today would accomplish.

From the June hearings on technology and employment, it is clear that robots and automated manufacturing equipment will displace workers in some job specialties. But the displacement likely to be caused by new technology is a small fraction of the unemployment that will occur if our industries are not competitive. As a nation we must find a way to introduce new technologies, such as robots and automated manufacturing systems, and protect the welfare of our workers at the same time. This is a position both labor and management can support and did support at our recent hearings. The legislation I am introducing today does not deal with the issues of displacement and retraining; I am not persuaded legislation is needed. I do plan to study this issue further, however.

Summaries of the three bills follow:

ROBOTICS AND AUTOMATED MANUFACTURING SYSTEMS RESEARCH AND EDUCATION ACT OF 1983

A. RESEARCH

1. The National Science Foundation (NSF) is authorized to fund centers for industrial technology devoted to robotics and automated manufacturing and to fund project grants in the same fields. The centers are intended to be established through cooperative efforts between universities and industry. Areas of emphasis for both centers and individual project grants should include: manufacturing processes, control systems, sensors, sensory data analysis, software development, kinematics and dynamics, machinery design, teleoperation, artificial intelligence, human augmentation and prosthesis, and human and economic factors associated with the introduction of robots and automated manufacturing systems into society.

2. A Federal Research Center on Robotics and Automated Manufacturing is established at the National Bureau of Standards (NBS). This Federal Center would focus its research on measurements and standards required in robotics and automated manufacturing systems as well as systems integration, reliability and performance.

3. The Department of Commerce is directed to promote the formation of limited research and development partnerships in the area of robotics and automated manufacturing systems. Such partnerships would require no Federal participation. The Department is already engaged in promoting partnerships, though not necessarily in these areas.

B. EDUCATION AND TRAINING

The NSF is authorized to support the education and training of personnel needed in robotics and automated manufacturing. Support would be provided for graduate fellowships, undergraduate scholarships, instructional equipment, curriculum development, and post-doctorate fellowships.

C. PROGRAM REVIEW

The National Research Council is directed to review Federal efforts in robotics and automated manufacturing and report its findings and recommendations.

D. AUTHORIZATION AMOUNTS

[In millions of dollars]

	Fiscal year—
	1984	1985	1986–90
NSF Research	20.00	40.00	50.00
NBS Center	10.00	10.00	10.00
DoC R&D partnerships	2.00	2.00	2.00
NSF education and training	5.00	7.00	10.00
Program review	0.25	0.25	0.25
Total	37.25	59.25	72.25

NATIONAL ROBOT AND AUTOMATED MANUFACTURING SYSTEMS LEASING ACT OF 1983

A. LEASING CORPORATION

A National Robot and Automated Manufacturing Systems Leasing Corporation is authorized to be established. The Federal government would set the Corporation up, but the Corporation would be a for-profit private firm rather than a government agency. An appropriation of $1 million is authorized to start the Corporation in business, but it would be repaid to the government.

B. LOW INTEREST LOANS FOR LEASING

The Federal government would pay one-third of the interest due on loans made for the leasing of robots or automated manufacturing systems to small businesses or for short terms, making such equipment more economical to acquire. An authorization of $20 million per year for the Federal share of interest is provided for fiscal years 1984 through 1990.

ADDITIONAL TAX CREDIT

A tax credit of 10 percent (in addition to other tax credits) would be allowed for the purchase of robots or automated manufacturing systems.●

ON THE CONFLICT IN LEBANON

HON. CHARLES E. SCHUMER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. SCHUMER. Mr. Speaker, the lead article in today's Washington, Post states that the Reagan administration has been urging the Lebanese Government to give Syria a major role in Lebanon's domestic politics. Reportedly, this shift in U.S. policy is designed to improve United States-Syrian relations and advance a peaceful settlement of the conflict in Lebanon. Unfortunately, it will accomplish neither of these objectives.

A few facts will explain why. First, Syria has never recognized Lebanon's independence; it has always considered Lebanon a part of greater Syria, and will not cease until it has effectively annexed Lebanon. Second, Syria and the Soviet Union have always coveted a leadership role in the Arab world, and each has found turmoil and unrest as well as terroism and intimidation effective mechanisms for advancing their goals in Lebanon and the Middle East.

Both of these facts speak against Syria's acceptance of a formula for lasting peace. Syria has little use for peace except as a temporary means for achieving the concessions and power needed to foment a more effective war on Lebanon, the United States, and Israel. During the past few months, the Reagan administration seemed to have grasped Syria's game-plan, and its hard-bargain policy has paid off. By standing up to Syria and defending the U.S.-coordinated troop withdrawal agreement, the United States has won a cease-fire and an easing of Soviet-Syrian aggression. The United States must not now lose sight of an effective strategy for curbing Syria's ambitions.

Lasting peace in Lebanon is a vital goal for the United States, Israel and our NATO allies. But, lasting peace requires a commitment to stability, an ability to accurately assess one's enemies, and, most importantly, time. It would be a tragic mistake to sacrifice U.S. leverage in Lebanon for a hastily-constructed peace agreement with an unreliable foe.●

MINORITY BUSINESS OPPORTUNITY—THE AMERICAN DREAM

HON. HAL DAUB

OF NEBRASKA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. DAUB. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to say a few words regarding Minority Enterprise Development Week which begins October 2. The words "fulfilling an American dream" embody the spirit that drives not only minority enterprise but all Americans who seek to better their lives, and their neighbor's, by initiative and hard work. For minority Americans the message is a special one because for many of them the dream has been too long delayed.

I am proud to come from a community where minority enterprise flourishes. In the past 3 years I have had the opportunity to work closely with a number of groups in Nebraska that have formed to assist minority and disadvantaged business owners achieve their share of the American dream. The diversity of these businesses assures us that the day of full economic participation in American commerce is not too far off for all Americans.

As Members of Congress we owe an obligation to those who have chosen to make the system work for them. We need to make it clear to them that if they take the chance, do the works, and commit their resources to an enterprise that it will not be frustrated by high interest rates, strangling government regulation, or other government-created obstacles.

Minority Americans want a chance. Minority Enterprise Development Week is to commemorate the efforts of those who have taken upon themselves the challenge and opportunity of personal economic initiative. It is the responsibility of this body to see that the conditions for business development are ripe for minority entrepreneurs. If we can assure them of unfettered opportunity and the freedom to take themselves as far as their talents and ingenuity will allow them then many of the other social and economic problems that face this body will disappear.

Today there are 600,000 minority owned enterprises in America. In the next year many will fail but many will grow, and many more will begin. These are the same fates that await all business. Minority business is the key to an America where every citizen feels his own worth is undisputed by others because in a society that so often judges its members by what they can accomplish, success in the business world is unassailable evidence.●

SENATOR HENRY M. "SCOOP" JACKSON

HON. ROMANO L. MAZZOLI

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. MAZZOLI. Mr. Speaker, I would like to pay tribute to a great statesman whose example was an inspiration to us all, Senator Henry M. Jackson of Washington.

I was not acquainted with Senator Jackson personally, but I was well acquainted with Scoop's reputation as a dedicated, hard-working, effective legislator.

Senator Jackson's untiring efforts in the U.S. House and then in the Senate—he worked until the very day he died—attest to the devotion and zeal with which this distinguished gentleman served the people of Washington and this country.●

THE COLUMBUS SOCIETY OF FRAMINGTON, MASS., CELEBRATES ITS 75TH ANNIVERSARY

HON. JAMES M. SHANNON

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. SHANNON. Mr. Speaker, On October 15, the Columbus Society of Framingham, Mass., will be marking a "Red Letter Day"—the celebration of its 75th anniversary.

The Columbus Society was founded in 1908 as a fraternal and social organization and has since grown into an important community and civic organization in the town of Framingham. In addition to its membership activities, to Columbus Society has been involved in a number of charitable drives for the special childen and most recently has provided aid to victims of Italy's recent earthquakes and of our own flooded Midwestern States. Yet, with their active agenda, the society members have not lost sight of the four virtues set down by the founders: for country, humanity, progress, and equality.

Mr. Speaker, following is a two part history of the Columbus Society. "From a Little Acorn, A Great Oak" describes the founding of the society and its activities for the first 50 years while "and the oak grows stronger" is a history of the society since 1958.

The two-part history of the Columbus Society follows:

FROM A LITTLE ACORN, A GREAT OAK

(By Kenneth Crotty)

On the evening of December 27, 1908—three nights after Christmas Eve—a little group of men gathered in the basement of small dwelling in the Coburnville section of Framingham.

They were men of Italian descent. Many of them had been born in Italy.

They wore the collars of their great coats and jackets up about their ears that night as they plodded toward their destination. It was a clear but cold nights and the winds that frisked off Farm Pond had a nip to them.

The purpose of the meeting was to form a society or club for Italian-American men, where they could meet in good fellowship and where those of them who had problems might find a solution.

The year 1908 is not a particularly notable one in American history. It was in this year that William Howard Taft of Ohio, backed by the outgoing president, Theodore Roosevelt, defeated William Jennings Bryan for the highest office in the land. The campaign was conducted in a flood of silver-tongued oratory.

Arizona was not yet a state in 1908. Neither was New Mexico. Oklahoma, which 35 years later was to become the inspiration for one of the greatest musical comedies in the history of the American theatre, had just been granted statehood.

For a number of years prior to 1908, ships plying between Naples and other ports of call in Italy to New York and Boston had been bringing over an ever-increasing number of persons of Italian extraction to the United States.

Those who came to Framingham gravitated to an area on the southwest extremity of the town known as Coburnville, so-called because there was a street in this area named Coburn Street.

The existing records of that first meeting of December 27, 1908, are meager. Some say there were 50 men present. There are few survivors of that first meeting to relate what went on.

It is a matter or record, however, that out of this first meeting came the Christopher Columbus Society, that the first president was the late merchant and real estate man, Enrico Lordi, and that there were 67 founders of the Society.

The name was a natural Christopher Columbus was a hero to every Italian and especially to Italian-Americans.

The Christopher Columbus Society was an independent organization exclusively for men who could trace their ancestry back to Italy on their male parent's side. The idea of the club was mainly social and fraternal but it seemed like a good idea to the Founders if there could be sick and death benefits.

Getting a foothold in the New Country was not the easiest thing for an immigrant boy in those days.

The first meetings of the Society were held in an upstairs hall in the old Tribune Building in Irving Square. These first meetings were highly informal. No people enjoy family and fraternal gatherings better than the sons and daughters of Italy.

The first big Red Letter Day in the young organization was July 9, 1909. It was on this date that the charter was signed and granted. The Christopher Columbus Society was really on the move.

On the Fourth of July, 1910, there was a baptism of the flags of the new Society. These flags are now retired and may be seen in a place of honor in a glass-enclosed, hand carved cabinet in the present quarters of the Society.

By 1910, the Society was growing and, the temporary quarters in the Tribune Building were hopelessly too small and cramped. A search was initiated to find permanent quarters. On October 11, 1910, the Society purchased a lot 67 feet by 150 feet on Fountain Street.

The agreement by which the land was purchased and the building erected was a most unusual one. Members promised to donate one work week in their trade or occupation toward the Society. Those who could not arrange this, for one reason or another agreed to give one week's salary or wages.

These first doughty members were called Share Holders. According to the musty old records, there were a full 70 of them. By the end of 1911, the building was completed. Almost immediately committees fell to scheduling entertainments and other events to help pay off the mortgages and to raise funds for furnishings and equipment.

When World War I came, a number of the Society marched off into the service of their country. Interest slackened, naturally. But while many clubs and organizations fell by the wayside during this trying period, the Christopher Columbus Society on Fountain Street managed to keep its head above the troubled waters.

The years immediately after World War I witnessed the first big drive for new members. By-laws were relaxed a trifle to make it easier to join.

By 1929, a sizable portion of the mortgage had been paid off and by 1934 the Happy Day arrived. The original mortgage was lifted.

It was a joyful occasion and one calling for a toast. The year after saw additional land purchased for parking facilities. More and more members were driving to the club these days as cars become more plentiful.

It was about this time that social members were invited in. Previously it was necessary to be of Italian extraction on the male parent's side and to be under 50 to join. Now social members were asked in. It was not necessary to be of Italian extraction nor did a prospective member have to be under 50 to be a social member.

The fame of the Christopher Columbus Society of Framingham was spreading.

Those with long memories can recall readily that the club rooms in those days were located on the main floor. The basement floor was rented to the Framingham Pattern Works. It was a noisy era, indeed with the whir of the lathes during the daytime hours in the basement premises. There was always something doing from 8 a.m. to 5:30 p.m. on Fountain Street.

In 1938 the Society petitioned the town and received authority from the Town Fathers to rename the square in front of the Society quarters "Columbus Square." Columbus Society members had been prominent for years in community parades and other ceremonial events with their distinctive Society hats and their Columbus insignia. There was never a funeral of a Christopher Columbus Society member without a detachment of his fellows.

In 1936 the first State honors came to the Society.

In that year, the Massachusetts Sons of Italy held their state convention in Farmingham. The Columbus Society entered a float in the big parade which was the feature of the Convention. First prize in floats went to the Club on Fountain Street. It was another Red Letter Day.

Meanwhile, back at the clubhouse, things were becoming a bit cramped. The membership was mushrooming and there wasn't the slighest doubt that more space was needed and needed quickly. A committee was named to look around for the ways and means of expanding things. It was decided at this time that the lower basement formerly occupied by the Pattern Works would be used as a club social quarters.

So the last few years before World War II were filled with growing pains for the Christopher Columbus Society, which by this time had been abbreviated by common consent to the simpler Columbus Society.

In 1938 the by-laws were amended once again to make it easier to join.

It was in 1939 that the original flags of the Society were sent into honorable retirement and new flags were baptized. In 1939 there was much talk, too, of modernizing the building.

But the shadows of a global war were lengthening over Europe. In 1941 these shadows had fallen on Pearl Harbor and the U.S. When President Franklin D. Roosevelt asked Congress to declare war, the members of the Columbus Society were quick to respond to the call to the colors.

In the honor roll in the main hall of the Society today, you will find 128 names listed. Two of these did not march home again. They were Peter Stefanini, killed in action in Italy, and Alexander Falconi, first reported missing and later presumed dead in action.

These were sobering days for the Columbus Society. Periodically a news letter was sent to all members serving with the armed forces with news from the home front. At Christmas time gift packages were dispatched to make things just a little more cheerful for the boys away from home.

By means of funds provided by the Society, two rooms at the Cushing Hospital were furnished and equipped. In 1944 a monument, memorializing all the deceased members of the Society, was erected in the St. Tarcisisu Cemetery.

A solemn high mass of requiem was celebrated for the two members of the Society who had given their lives in the service of their country.

The clouds of war were swept away in 1945 and things brightened for the Columbus Society. Charter members were recognized formally in 1945 and given life memberships. In Nevins Hall in downtown Framingham on June 23, 1946, a "Welcome Home" party was staged for all Columbus Society boys who had served with the armed forces. The hall was filled to capacity for the occasion.

In 1948, the Rev. Pietro Maschi, the beloved pastor of St. Tarcisius Church, who had served as spiritual advisor from the very beginnings of the Society, died after a long illness. A saddened and grateful Columbus Society sent a delegation to serve as honorary bearers at his funeral.

Father Maschi will always hold a place in the hearts of all members of the Society.

In 1950 the long-planned remodeling of the 40-year-old quarters was started. It took until 1956 before the remodeling was actually completed.

Over the years the Columbus Society has been ever in the forefront of worthwhile projects, both civic and charitable. Although its primary concern has been the welfare of its own membership and their families, it has ever been ready to lend a helping hand where needed.

The spacious upper hall of the Society has always had a welcome sign for weddings, receptions, and other social functions.

During the years when parades were the routine thing in Framingham, the traditional Society cap was a familiar thing in those memorable parades. Few projects were undertaken in Framingham that the Columbus Society did not have a hand in.

It is interesting to look back upon the basic precepts of the Society as conceived by the Founders.

The four virtues of the Society-to-be, as the Founders envisioned them on that December night in 1908 were: "For Country, For Humanity; For Progress; and For Equality."

The Founders saw the Christopher Columbus Society as a place where men of Italian background could meet under congenial circumstances where they could band together for mutual benefits and unite for instruction and guidance for the ever growing colony of sons of Italy in Framingham on a local, state and federal level.

Down the years the Society has adhered to these Founding principles. Times of course have changed over 50 years. More and more men and women of Italian extraction have taken over positions of importance in the community.

The roster of the leaders on the civic, industrial and professional fronts in Framingham shows an ever-increasing number of Italian names.

The Columbus Society can be proud that it has played no small part in this remarkable transition.

AND THE OAK GROWS STRONGER

(By Albert C. Ferrante)

On Sunday October 12, 1958 the Fiftieth Anniversary of The Columbus Mutual Benefit Society and Club was celebrated at a local establishment then on route 9, called The Meadows. This occasion is recorded as one of if not the largest gathering and celebration of a local individual fraternal organization. A quote from the local newspaper of October 14, 1958, "National, state, and local dignitaries joined with a gathering of more than 850 friends from Framingham is paying tribute and esteem to the Christopher Columbus Society".

It was a gala event in the Society's history at Vaughn Monroe's dine and dance restaurant. Mr. Monroe at the time was internationally popular as a singer and band leader. He saw fit to fly in from New York City that morning to oversee his interests. The Meadows was filled to capacity. He entertained the gathering with vocal selections.

The guest speaker was brother-member Joseph R. Perini of the Perini Corporation. He gave a brief history of the life and achievements of Christopher Columbus.

Seven of the eight remaining Charter Members attended and were proudly seated in front of the head table.

This Golden Jubilee was dedicated in their honor.

"Again a Red Letter Day".

This Seventy-Fifth Year continues to find The Christopher Columbus Society and Club a proud fraternity in good standing in the local community and state.

From the Fiftieth Celebration to its Diamond Year much has happened throughout the universe reflecting changes in the way of life.

Great advancements were made in medicine and science. Distance has become shorter in travel time. Men have been to the moon. Propelled aircraft has given way to jet propulsion. The promiscuous sixties and seventies brought us the mini-skirts and rock music along with many other changes.

The next twenty-five years? Who knows what the changes will be, but come what may this Society and Club will continue as strong as ever. More intense to pursue the comraderie social and welfare of its' members. This was the intent and interest of the founders back in 1908.

What happened in the last twenty-five years? Obviously, as time marched on new ideas were necessary and implemented.

The Society and Club is still domiciled at its' original quarters in Columbus Square, 11 Fountain Street. It is a land mark of the town in the Coburnville section which is still predominantly resided by decendents of Italian extraction.

The Columbus Society and Club has always been supportive to worthy civic causes. Most recently to the aid of Italy's devastated earthquake victims and to our flooded mid-western states.

In the last twenty-five years they have enbraced the Special Children as their favorite Charity and run functions including an annual dance for the cause.

The Society still sponsors a Mass on Memorial Day in Memory of the deceased members.

The club room is a gathering place to meet with the friends and relaxation. Whether it be at the bar enjoying refresments, or at a card game, or just plain conversation. Many a problem has been solved here. For here there is a cross section of many trades and professions.

There are some of the incentives and values for a successful Society and Club and the reason it will continue to prosper. It is the employment of these programs that inspires the membership and good fellowship.

Since the Fiftieth Anniversary the last of the Charter Members have passed on, but the efforts of their foresight standards, and spirit is not forgotten. They embedded a mystique that makes The Columbus Society and Club flourish socially and civicly in this community.

Responsible men founded this organization and responsible men will continue its success.

The Columbus Society and Club will always exists as long as their is brotherly love among men.

Though mentioned in previous writing of this Souvenir Book it is felt worthy to repeat the four virtues envisioned by the founders: for country, for progress, for humanity, and for equality.

From A Little Acorn, A Great Oak, . . . and the oak grows stronger, now more deeply rooted.

Best wishes on this Seventy-Fifth Year and may the future be as rewarding as the past.

"Another Red Letter Day"!●

ANOTHER VIEW

HON. GENE SNYDER

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. SNYDER. Mr. Speaker, much has been said in the past 2 weeks on the floor of the House of Representatives about what we should or should not do in response to the Soviet Union's downing of the Korean jetliner. I recently received a "position statement" from the Rotary Club of Newport, Ky., which presents another view to the question of how we should respond. They asked that I share it with my colleagues.

The "Position Statement of the Rotary Club of Newport, Ky.," follows:

The Russians did it to Hungary. The world was outraged. Russia said "mind your own business".

They did it to Afghanistan. The world was outraged. Same answer.

They did it to Poland. The world was outraged. You guessed it.

They did it to Berlin. On and on it goes.

Russians are good at killing people. They may be the best. They certainly want to be. Russia exists to enslave. Their leaders are so warped that they call slavery freedom and freedom slavery. Their people are so numbed that they believe the lie. Not much room there for making headway.

On September 1, Russia brutally killed 269 more people. The latest victims happened to be civilian passengers on a Korean airliner, commercial Flight 007. Russia has responded to the murders with the same remorse that one would have after snuffing out the life of a fly that landed on the wrong place at the wrong time.

Freedom, that most precious gift of all, can never be nurtured by revenge. No retaliation is a good retaliation. That says two things.

First, no responsive act, however imaginable, could appropriately atone for the murder of 269 innocent human beings. They and their courageous survivors are more harsh witnesses to the well known fact that the price of freedom is painfully high. Many have paid for liberty with their lives before Flight 007, and many more will pay the price afterward—perhaps even you, or your sons and daughters.

Second, no retaliation is a good retaliation because the best blow to communism is our daily commitment to remain free, to live the good life and to love our fellow man. By our example, someday, somehow, the Russian people will see to overthrow those leaders who keep them enslaved and in the dark. Surely we must remain militarily strong, and we will, because we are coexisting on this small planet with those whose God is force and whose weapons are lies.

Remember, the cold cruel powers of evil live in constant fear of being removed. They should live in fear. Down through the ages their kind—as all of us will—have passed on to judgment—The Rotary Club of Newport, Ky., U.S.A.●

LEBANON: THE PEACE PUZZLE

HON. BYRON L. DORGAN

OF NORTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. DORGAN. Mr. Speaker, Lebanon is the Rubik's Cube of diplomacy: every sign of progress brings new riddles to solve. For years it has frustrated the efforts of diplomats and government officials to bring peace and stability to that troubled land.

For good reason. Lebanon is the playing field for a bewildering variety of conflicts which pit Moslems against Christians, Arabs against Jews, Syria against the Palestine Liberation Organization, and the United States against the Soviet Union. The best minds have struggled in vain to bring sense and peace again to this nearly chaotic land.

Some would question whether Lebanon even warrants our nation's interest or the commitment of a limited marine contingent. As columnist George Will recently wrote:

Think of Lebanon as Connecticut . . . with a government that, on a good day controls part of Hartford. Imagine Connecticut with 45,000 Syrians, 12,000 Israelis, 6,000 U.N. troops behind Israeli lines, 16 militias and assorted Palestinians and Iranians. Now put 1,300 Marines at Hartford's airport and tell them to keep the peace.

The absurdity of the situation has triggered a long-overdue debate in Congress about the role of what is now 1,600 U.S. Marines and the purpose of our policy in Lebanon. Why do we have a whole U.S. Navy flotilla flanking the coast of a tiny nation of 3 million warring people?

OIL, ISRAEL, AND LEBANON

Despite the complexity of the situation and the small size of Lebanon, the United States should care what happens in this part of the world. Lebanon is important in its own right as struggling republic, a center for international trade and finance, and a dangerous flash point in the wider Middle East.

Unless we can help bring peace to Lebanon and the withdrawal of all foreign forces—Palestinian, Syrian, and Israeli alike—we face the prospect of continuing regional and civil war and nagging insecurity for Israel, our closest friend in the Middle East.

An additional issue is the petroleum resources of the Middle East and the Suez Canal. Widening conflict beyond Lebanon can threaten the source of one-sixth of the non-Communist world's oil supplies and disrupt the vital sea lanes that carry that oil to the United States, Japan, and our NATO allies. The morning papers report an Iranian threat to cut off Persian Gulf oil supplies. A recent report from the Congressional Research Service estimates that such a cutoff could reduce our national output and employment by 4 to 9 percent. Depending on our reaction to such an emergency, our economy and security could be jeopardized even more.

Clearly, we have much at stake and much to do. To act responsibly about Lebanon, Congress must answer three questions: Who shapes policy? What is our policy? How do we achieve our policy goals?

A SOUND ROLE FOR CONGRESS

We faced a crucial vote because the President has refused to follow the law and invoke the War Powers Act. The act requires the President to seek congressional authorization whenever American troops are involved in hostilities or face the imminent possibility of such involvement.

The U.S. Marine contingent in Lebanon has been forced into a combat situation and receives combat pay. The killing of four marines and the combat-related injuries of dozens more demonstrates that they are thrust into a combat situation. The use of the U.S. fleet to shell Druze and other militias in support of the Lebanese Army further clinches the case for starting the 90-day clock of the War Powers Act.

So the first task for the Congress is to pass a clear and forceful resolution that triggers the War Powers Act and demands that the President state convincingly the reasons for putting our Marines on the firing line.

In my view, an 18-month troop authorization that has been proposed gives the President far too much power when the administration has not given Congress either a clear statement of its goals or a solid commitment to abide by terms of the congressional resolution. I fear that open-ended authority may draw us into deeper conflicts and prevent us from playing an effective peacemaking role.

Consequently, I voted for the Obey-Long substitute amendment, which would make Congress a responsible partner in shaping our policy in Lebanon without forcing the withdrawal of our troops under an arbitrary deadline. I believe this alternative offers a better way to achieve a durable peace in Lebanon and to insure that our Marines are used for the right reasons.●

THE MEDICAID MATERNAL AND CHILD HEALTH AMENDMENTS OF 1983—H.R. 4059

HON. HENRY A. WAXMAN

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, September 30, 1983

● Mr. WAXMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am today introducing H.R. 4059, the Medicaid Maternal and Child Health Amendments of 1983. This important legislation would allow States, at their option, to extend medicaid coverage to certain groups of pregnant women and infants up to age 1 who are poor by State standards but are uninsured. The Federal Government would pay 100 percent of the costs of this additional coverage. States that already cover this population would receive a bonus. In addition, the bill clarifies the meidicaid eligibility of infants born to women who are receiving medicaid at the time of birth.

Last June, the House and the Senate adopted a budget resolution for fiscal year 1984, House Concurrent Resolution 91, that makes a limited amount of Federal funding available for a maternal and child health initiative under medicaid. Specifically the resolution provides $200 million in additional Federal funds for this purpose in fiscal year 1984, $250 million in fiscal year 1985, and $500 million in fiscal year 1986.

On July 15, the Subcommittee on Health and Environment held a hearing on proposals to implement this provision of the budget resolution. The hearing record makes abundantly clear why such legislation is urgently needed.

Representative LEHMAN, the chairman of the Prevention Strategies Task Force of the Select Committee on Children, Youth, and Families, shared the results of hearings that his committee has been holding on child development. Problems in the very early stages of infant and childhood development can lead to lifelong physical, intellectual, and emotional difficulties. In many instances, these problems can be reduced or avoided altogether through prenatal and other preventive care.

The problem, Chairman LEHMAN observed, is that many low-income pregnant women and children are not covered by medicaid or any other public program and therefore do not have access to these critical services.

The American Academy of Pediatrics, the American Public Health Association, the Children's Defense Fund, and other witnesses confirmed Chairman LEHMAN's observations. Prenatal care demonstrably reduces the incidence of low birth weight babies, thereby reducing the risk of conditions closely associated with low birthweight, including higher infant mortality rates, mental retardation, birth defects, growth and development problems, blindness, autism, cerebral palsy, and epilepsy. Similarly, adequate medical care during infancy and early childhood is crucial to proper growth and development.

We know that health care can make an important contribution to the wellbeing of our children, yet many low-income pregnant women and children still have no access to services because they have no insurance coverage. Medicaid, the Federal-State program of health benefits for the poor, simply does not reach all of this vulnerable population. Nearly 6 million children in families with incomes below the Federal poverty level are without medicaid coverage; more than 2 million of these live in families with incomes that are less than half the poverty level. Each year, some 330,000 pregnant women from families with incomes below the poverty level are ineligible for medicaid.

The difficulty here lies in medicaid's eligibility rules. Under current law, States must provide medicaid coverage to individuals receiving aid to families with dependent children (AFDC)—that is, one-parent families with dependent children. The States have the option of covering other groups of low-income women and children who do not fall into the one-parent/dependent-child category. These optional groups include first-time pregnant women—whose unborn child is not considered a dependent—as well as children in two-parent families. Unfortunately, a significant number of States have chosen not to cover some or all of these optional groups.

According to a recent telephone survey, seven States—Arkansas, Indiana, Maine, New Hampshire, Oklahoma, Texas, and Virginia—do not extend medicaid to poor first-time pregnant women. Of the remaining States, three—Delaware, Louisiana, and New Mexico—do not cover these women from the date of medical verification of pregnancy, resulting in a loss of coverage for prenatal care.

This same survey indicates that 23 States (Alabama, Colorado, Delaware, Florida, Georgia, Hawaii, Idaho, Illinois, Indiana, Kansas, Kentucky, Louisiana, Minnesota, Mississippi, Montana, Nebraska, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, New Mexico, North Dakota, Rhode Island, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Virginia, Washington, West Virginia, and Wyoming) did not provide medicaid coverage to children (other than foster care, institutionalized, or unborn children) in poor two-parent families.

Finally, 28 States (Alabama, Alaska, Arkansas, Florida, Georgia, Idaho, Indiana, Kentucky, Louisiana, Maine, Mississippi, Missouri, Montana, Nevada, New Hampshire, North Carolina, New Mexico, North Dakota, Oklahoma, Oregon, South Carolina, South Dakota, Tennessee, Texas, Utah, Virginia, Washington, and Wyoming) do not cover poor two-parent families where the principal earner is unemployed.

The legislation I am introducing today will provide financial incentives to States to exercise their existing options to extend medicaid coverage to low-income pregnant women and infants who do not fit into the narrow AFDC family category. One of the reasons that some States have chosen not to cover this population is the potential short-term cost to the State. Under current law, States must pay a portion of the costs of the medicaid program; the Federal Government pays the rest. Currently, Federal matching payments to the States for Medicaid services vary from 50 percent to 77 percent of a State's outlays, depending on the State's per capita income. The higher the per capita income, the lower the Federal matching rate.

First, the bill allows those States which, as of July 1, 1983, did not offer medicaid coverage to first-time pregnant women from the date of medical verification of pregnancy, to do so, with the Federal Government assuming 100 percent of the costs. In determining whether a first-time pregnant woman was poor, the State would use its own income and resources standards under its AFDC program.

Second, the bill allows those States which, as of July 1, 1983, did not offer medicaid coverage to pregnant women in two-parent families where the principal earner is unemployed, to do so. Again, the Federal Government would assume 100 percent of the costs. The State would establish its own income and assets standards, as if it had an AFDC-UP (unemployed parent) program.

Third, beginning in fiscal year 1986, the bill allows those States which, as of July 1, 1983, did not offer medicaid coverage to pregnant women in all poor two-parent families, to do so, with 100 percent Federal matching. State income and resource standards would apply to this so-called "Ribicoff" group.

Fourth, the bill permits those States which, as of July 1, 1983, did not offer medicaid coverage to infants and young children in poor two-parent families, to phase in coverage of these children with 100 percent Federal financial participation. These two-parent families would not be limited to those with an unemployed principal earner; the only requirement would be that they meet State income and resource standards. In fiscal year 1983, States could cover infants in such families up to age 1. In fiscal year 1984, States could cover children in such families up to age 2. Each subsequent year, the permissible coverage age would increase 1 year, so that by fiscal year 1988, the States could cover children through age 5 in poor two-parent families with 100 percent Federal assistance. After age 5, children would no longer be eligible for 100 percent Federal reimbursement. The State could, of course, choose to continue coverage for these children at its regular matching rate.

I recognize that those States which already offer this coverage to their poor women and children will not qualify for the more generous Federal matching rates. The bill therefore gives these States a bonus in the form of a reduction in the Federal matching penalty that all States will experience in fiscal year 1984. Under current law, Federal medicaid matching payments to the States will be reduced by 4½ percent during fiscal year 1984. States can lower this penalty in a number of ways, including the operation of qualified rate-setting systems and keeping their medicaid expenditure growth below a certain target rate. Under this bill, States which already cover all of the specified populations—and therefore could not qualify for the 100 percent Federal matching—will have their penalty reduced from 4½ percent to 4 percent. They could, of course, continue to qualify for the other offsets as well. According to an informal survey, the following States would receive this bonus: California, Connecticut, Iowa, Maryland, Massachusetts, Michigan, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Vermont, Wisconsin, and the District of Columbia.

Finally, the bill clarifies that, in cases where a child is born to a woman who is covered by medicaid at the time of birth, the child is eligible for medicaid, so long as the woman remains eligible and the child is a member of the woman's family. According to testimony presented at the July 15 hearing, some States have in these circumstances required separate eligibility applications to be filed on behalf of the newborns. The bill eliminates this unnecessary procedural hurdle.

According to preliminary Congressional Budget Office staff estimates, the cost of the bill in fiscal year 1984 would be under $200 million, in compliance with the budget resolution. There would be no new costs to the States.

It is important to keep these cost estimates in proper perspective. In fiscal year 1984, the Federal Government will spend an estimated $21.1 billion on medicaid; the States, an additional $18 billion. The spending authorized by this bill represents just one-half of 1 percent of total Federal and State medicaid outlays that year.

This increment, while minuscule in relation to overall medicaid spending, will yield huge dividends in the health and well-being of our children. And I personally am convinced that, in the long run, this bill will result in significant savings to the Federal Government by reducing the need for expensive medical treatment and institutionalization for preventable birth-related illness and conditions.

In concluding, I want to stress a few important features of this bill.

First, it does not create a new entitlement program. It merely changes the Federal-State financing relationships in the existing medicaid program to encourage States to cover low-income pregnant women and children that they could already cover under current law.

Second, the bill provides maximum flexibility to the States. It does not mandate State participation. State coverage remains totally optional, even though the Federal Government is willing to pay all of the costs. The States may continue to use their current income standards; no Federal minimum definition of poverty is imposed. The States may offer their current medicaid benefits to this population; the bill does not prescribe any minimum benefits. Similarly, current State policies regarding reimbursement for these services would remain unaffected.

Third, the new spending authorized by the bill is allowed under the budget resolution. That resolution does not require that offsetting cuts be made in existing programs or that new revenue sources be enacted to finance this bill. Consequently, the bill does not propose to do so.

Finally, this bill is a statement for fairness. A bedrock principle of our democracy is that all Americans have a fair start in life. It is beyond dispute that children whose mothers cannot afford adequate prenatal care do not get a fair start. Tragically, some get no start at all. we simply cannot afford to ignore this problem any longer.

I urge my colleagues to support this bill, the text of which is as follows:

H.R. 4059

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a)(1) Section 1905(b) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d(b)) is amended by adding at the end the following new sentence: "Notwithstanding the first sentence of this subsection, the Federal medical assistance percentage shall be 100 per centum with respect to amounts expended as medical assistance for services furnished with respect to a qualified pregnant woman or child (as defined in subsection (n)).".

(2)(A) Section 1903(s)(1)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(s)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting "or furnished with respect to qualified pregnant women and children (as defined in section 1905(n))" after "Indian Health Service".

(B) Section 1903(s)(2) of such Act is amended—

(i) by striking out "and" at the end of subparagraph (B),

(ii) by striking out the period at the end of subparagraph (C) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and

(iii) by adding after at the end the following new subparagraph:

"(D) by one-half percentage point if the State provides (and provided as of July 1, 1983) for coverage under the plan, under section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii)(I), of pregnant women and children under the age specified in section 1905(n).".

(3) Section 1903(t)(1)(A) of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(s)(1)(A)) is amended by inserting "or furnished with respect to qualified pregnant women and children (as defined in section 1905(n))" after "Indian Health Service".

(b) Section 1905 of such Act (42 U.S.C. 1396d) is further amended by adding at the end the following new subsection:

"(n) The term 'qualified pregnant woman or child' means—

"(1) a child under 1 year of age who is described in section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii)(I) and covered under the State plan as an individual described in section 1902(a)(10)(A), or

"(2) a pregnant woman—

"(A) whom the State has the option of deeming to be a recipient of aid to families with dependent children for purposes of this title by reason of section 406(g)(2), or

"(B) who is a member of a family which would be eligible for aid under section 407 if the State plan under part A of title IV required the payment of aid with respect to dependent children deprived of parental support or care by reason of the unemployment of a parent who is the principal earner (as described in such section); and who is not eligible for coverage under the plan, as the plan was in effect on July 1, 1983, as an individual described in section 1902(a)(10)(A).".

(c) The amendments made by the preceding subsections of this section shall take effect on October 1, 1983 and apply to amounts expended for services furnished on or after October 1, 1983.

(d) Effective for amounts expended for services furnished on or after—

(1) October 1, 1984, section 1905(n)(1) of the Social Security Act is amended by striking out "1 year" and inserting in lieu thereof "2 years",

(2) October 1, 1985, such section is further amended by striking out "2 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "3 years",

(3) October 1, 1986, such section is further amended by striking out "3 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "4 years", and

(4) October 1, 1987, such section is further amended by striking out "4 years" and inserting in lieu thereof "5 years".

(e) Effective for amounts expended for services furnished on or after October 1, 1985, paragraph (2) of section 1905(n) of the Social Security Act is amended to read as follows:

"(2) a pregnant woman who is described in section 1902(a)(10)(A)(ii)(I) and covered under the State plan as an individual described in section 1902(2)(10)(A); and".

SEC. 2 (a) Section 1902(e) of the Social Security Act (42 U.S.C. 1396b(e)) is amended by adding at the end the following new paragraph:

"(4) A child born to a woman eligible for and receiving medical assistance under a State plan on the date of the child's birth shall be deemed to have applied for medical assistance and to have been found eligible for such assistance under such plan on the date of such birth and to remain eligible for such assistance so long as the child is a member of the woman's household and the woman remains eligible for such assistance.".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) shall apply to children born on or after October 1, 1983.●

SENATE—Monday, October 3, 1983

The Senate met at 12 noon, and was called to order by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

PRAYER

The Chaplain, the Reverend Richard C. Halverson, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Let us pray.

I will sing of Thy steadfast love, O Lord, forever; With my mouth I will proclaim Thy faithfulness to all generations. For Thy steadfast love was established forever, Thy faithfulness is as firm as the heavens.—Psalm 89: 1, 2

Faithful, Father God, help the Senators to hear the criticism of people and press—justified or not. If justified, help them to change in ways that will quiet the critic and the cynic. If not justified, help them to prove the criticism wrong. In these critical days for the Nation and the world, may the Senate be part of the solution and not part of the problem.

Dear God, deliver the Senate from everything that prevents its efficient and productive operation. Strengthen integrity, selflessness, servant-hood, honesty. Help each Senator to remember his mandate and be true to the responsibility and honor implicit in trustworthy leadership. In the name of Him who, though tempted as we, was without sin. Amen.

RECOGNITION OF THE MAJORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The majority leader is recognized.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Chair.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, the Senate has convened today pursuant to an adjournment on Friday, and pursuant to a unanimous-consent order which provides that the call of the calendar has been dispensed with, the reading of the Journal has been dispensed with, that no resolution shall come over under the rule, and the morning hour is deemed to have expired.

SENATE SCHEDULE

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, after the two leaders are recognized under the standing order there will be a period for the transaction of routine morning business of 1 hour in length during which Senators may speak for not more than 10 minutes each.

MARTIN LUTHER KING HOLIDAY BILL

Mr. President, at the conclusion of the time for the transaction of routine morning business it is the intention of the leadership on this side to go to the consideration of the Martin Luther King holiday bill.

It is hoped that we can finish that bill today. If we cannot, we will continue on the measure as long as it takes.

Mr. President, there are a number of other items that must be dealt with this week, if possible. There are conference reports, there are at least two appropriations, perhaps an abbreviated or scaled-down agriculture bill and, no doubt, other measures that I have not recalled to include.

The Senate is scheduled to go out for the Columbus Day recess on Friday, the 7th, and to reconvene on Monday, the 17th of October. I anticipate the Senate will keep that schedule, absent some extreme situation or urgent national emergency.

Mr. President, I believe that that covers the situation as I see it at this moment. I have no further need for my time under the standing order, and I offer it to the minority leader if he wishes.

RECOGNITION OF THE MINORITY LEADER

The PRESIDENT pro tempore. The minority leader.

VOTE ON RESOLUTION CALLING FOR RESIGNATION OF SECRETARY WATT

Mr. BYRD. I thank the distinguished majority leader. He and I have discussed this matter earlier today and so it comes as no surprise. Earlier today I asked the distinguished majority leader when we might get a vote on the resolution concerning Mr. Watt, and we talked about it a little bit and I was left with the impression that I need not expect such a vote—I do not want to attempt to presume to say what the majority leader said or even convey my impression of the conversation, but I do raise a question at this point. We have an amendment to the State Department authorization bill, which is the unfinished business, and that amendment, which is a sense of the Senate amendment, would call on the President to ask for the resignation of Mr. Watt.

This is an issue which is important to the Senate in a number of ways, among which is the fact that this is the confirming body under the Constitution, and we have voted in 1981 to confirm Mr. Watt for the position which he now holds and, second, there are not only Democrats but there are also Republicans, if I judge correctly from some of the statements that have been made by our colleagues on the other side of the aisle, who would like to see a vote on this amendment.

I see a twinkle in the eye of my majority leader and perhaps he sees a twinkle in mine, but I would ask the majority leader as to when he thinks we will get a vote on the pending Watt amendment to the State Department authorization bill.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I must do something about that twinkle in my eye which has been referred to often now by the minority leader. But he is right; of course he is right.

We talked about this matter earlier today before the Senate convened and, as I recall the conversation, the distinguished minority leader indicated he wished to proceed with that and I told him I did not and we sort of bogged down at that point. But let me say to the distinguished Senator I am not trying to keep him ever from getting a vote on that amendment. Indeed I intend, on behalf of the leadership on this side, to ask the Senate to go to the State authorization bill and when we do the Byrd amendment, dealing with Watt will be the pending question. But I frankly had not planned to do that until after we come back on the 17th, probably right after we come back; although on the day we come back I would hope we can take up the Export Administration bill which we extended only for 15 days and which will expire while we are gone. As a matter of fact, I feel committed to do that.

But there is no desire on my part to postpone the State authorization bill beyond that week. I cannot give the Senator a day after the 17th when we will take it up but I can tell him that I still plan to ask the Senate to turn to it, to resume consideration of the unfinished business which is State authorization or if it is necessary to proceed by motion on Martin Luther King. It is my intention to once more call up the State authorization on the calendar after we return on the 17th.

So, I can assure the Senator that I understand all to well how he can force that issue. He can offer that amendment to goodness knows how many other vehicles. He can make my life miserable offering that amendment on other issues. I would just as soon have it on the State authorization bill as anywhere. But I would just as soon not have it this week. We have the Martin Luther King holiday bill to deal with, two appropriations bills, and conference reports that we are trying to get out by the 7th.

What I would like to do is this—I will have to clear this on our side, if my friends and colleagues on the staff will listen for a moment—and that is perhaps to propose a unanimous-consent agreement that would provide that at the close of the time for the transaction of morning business we go to the Martin Luther King bill, and that no call for the regular order between now and October 17 on this or any other matter would bring back the unfinished business, which could not recur until on or after the 17th of October. That is what I would like to do.

That would mean, when we get back, we would be in the same status we are in right now, except for the matter of devoting this week to whatever important business that it seems we need to do before the Senate can go out for that 10-day break.

(Mr. GORTON assumed the chair.)

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, I hope the majority leader can get unanimous consent to proceed to the Martin Luther King bill. As far as I am concerned, I would be happy to enter into an agreement that, if we proceed by unanimous consent, a call for regular order would not bring down the unfinished business, the State authorization bill. If the majority leader should move to proceed, I believe that motion, if carried, would put the now unfinished business, back on the calendar.

So I would hope that he would not have to do that.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I hope not, too, as well. Because both the minority leader and I have stood in our places here on this floor long enough, in my case to have at least a passing familiarity with the rules and he with a great wealth and storehouse of knowledge of the rules, and we both know that finally he can do what he wants to do.

But what I am doing is trying to devote this week to other matters. So if we can arrange that up front with everybody understanding what we are doing, and by unanimous consent, I think it would be far better. So I will ask my cloakroom to try to clear that.

I will repeat once more what it will be: That at the close of the time for the transaction of routine morning business, the Senate will then go by unanimous consent to the consideration of H.R. 3706, Calendar Order No. 343, which is the Martin Luther King holiday bill and that the State authorization shall not recur as the unfinished business until on or after October 17.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, does the majority leader feel that there is a good chance that there will be no amendments to the Martin Luther King bill, or does he feel that that will only be brought about by cloture, if invoked?

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I am not sure yet. I said earlier today to other Senators who inquired that I anticipate that there will be a motion to commit and if that fails—and I will oppose that motion—we will know whether there are going to be amendments at that point, or general debate.

In either event, if it is clear we cannot finish this bill today, since we have such a crowded schedule, it is my intention at the moment to go ahead and file a cloture motion this afternoon.

Mr. BYRD. I take it that it is the position of the majority leader to oppose—and I am just presuming now, because I have not discussed it with him—I take it to be the position of the majority leader to oppose any and all amendments to this bill.

Mr. BAKER. Yes, Mr. President, the minority leader is correct. I will vote against all amendments to the bill. I support the bill as reported by the House and most likely I will move to table amendments to the bill.

Mr. BYRD. I thank the majority leader.

Mr. President, I see no Senator seeking time. I yield back my time remaining to the majority leader.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the minority leader.

Mr. President, I believe the Senator from Pennsylvania is here to seek recognition in his own right during the time for transaction of routine morning business. If the minority leader has no further requirement for time, I yield back the time allocated to the two leaders.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, there will now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business for not to exceed 1 hour, with statements therein limited to 10 minutes each.

THE KURDISH SITUATION AND THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, recent media accounts of Kurdish involvement in the Iranian-Iraqi war brings again to our attention the plight of the Kurdish people, who have for decades been oppressed by the governments which rule them. This situation illustrates the acute need for the Genocide Convention.

Some 10 million Kurds inhabit the mountainous region where Iraq meets Iran and Turkey. Although Kurdistan is divided by these national boundaries, its inhabitants constitute a separate nationality. They speak a distinct Indo-European language, practice unique cultural traditions, and claim ethnic distinction from the peoples which surround them.

Yet the Kurds have been, and continue to be, the target of systematic efforts—most recently, in particular, by Iraq—to uproot, disperse, and extinguish their society. Kurdish villages have been destroyed. Kurdish families have been separated. Kurdish patriots and resistance fighters have been imprisoned or executed. Kurdish refugees have been forcibly resettled and detained under subsistence-level living conditions. These acts are clearly designed to literally eliminate the Kurds as a cultural group.

It is not clear that the Kurdish people are victims of genocide according to the Genocide Convention's precise definition. It seems undeniable, however, that many Kurds have been victims of gross violations of human rights, and that these violations are being systematically carried out as a deliberate government policy. These acts certainly border on genocide.

Historical illustrations of the need for a treaty banning genocide are less compelling precisely because they are now history. We may find it too easy to shrug them off as mistakes of the past. I hope my Senate colleagues will remember that acts of a genocidal character are still occurring in the present day. The imperative for a genocide ban remains current. U.S. ratification of the International Genocide Convention would strengthen the message that the international community will no longer tolerate these offenses against humanity. I urge my fellow Senators to lend their support to ratification without delay.

NEEDED: COMPREHENSIVE ARMS CONTROL AGREEMENTS WITH THE SOVIETS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, the debate about what foreign policy we should follow to prevent a nuclear war has boiled down to what kind of arms control we should pursue. Oh sure, a number of Americans, including some in the Congress and more than a few in the military, still believe that we should forget about trying to limit arms and take on the Russians in a straightforward race to develop and maintain a nuclear military force superior to anything the Russians can develop. Advocates of this view say the following: In the first place, we cannot trust the Russians to keep any agreement we make with them. Second, we can out-produce them with nuclear weapons because our economy is twice as productive as theirs. Third, we can assuredly stay ahead of them because we have superior technology and the scientists and engineers to keep that technology out in front. Furthermore, whereas the Russians have a shortage of skilled manpower and facilities, we have millions of capable workers unemployed and a full 25 percent of our industrial capacity standing idle and ready, willing and able to go to work. So they ask: Why not put these resources to work to win the nuclear arms race with the Russians and keep it won?

The answer is that this kind of unrestrained competition for nuclear supremacy will swiftly bring on a nuclear arms technology that will make life on earth even more tenuous and dangerous than it already has become in this nuclear age. And sometime, somewhere out of fear or ignorance or stupidity or some other fatal human failure, the last world war will start. If it started today it would certainly end in a terrible catastrophe for all. But if it started after 10 or 20 years of an unrestrained all-out build-up by the two superpowers, it might very well end the prospect of life on Earth by the human species. Also, the unrestrained arms race would make the prospect of war not only more devastating but far more likely. At this very moment, the overwhelming consensus of experts is that the two superpowers have rough nuclear arms parity. The overwhelming consensus also judges that a nuclear war would be an immense loss for both sides with no victor. And the consensus view also holds that this present situation does provide some degree of stability as both superpowers recognize that any nuclear war between the two countries would destroy both as organized societies as well as impose mamouth casualties including half the population of each country. An all-out, unrestrained arms race between the United States and the Soviets under these circumstances would therefore tend to increase, not lessen, the likelihood of nuclear war.

So even the Reagan administration which came to office with less regard for nuclear arms control than any administration since the first nuclear bomb was exploded at Hiroshima now pushes for arms control—highly limited arms control—but arms control nevertheless. Although it does support arms control, the Reagan administration has limited that support to the deployment of intermediate nuclear missiles in Europe and the so called START initiative which would limit the number of deployed strategic warheads on both sides. The administration has not shut the door on other limited arms control possibilities. But it has flatly opposed a truly comprehensive arms control agreement like the nuclear freeze which has won solid and impressive popular support and passed the House by a nearly 2-to-1 margin—including many Republicans—earlier this year.

Mr. President, I have discussed the nuclear freeze on the floor of the Senate almost every day for more than 1 year. The heart of the dispute over the freeze goes to whether such a freeze could be negotiated effectively with the Soviets and if negotiated whether or not it could be verified with assurance. It may well be, Mr. President, that a comprehensive arms control agreement like the freeze would be easier to negotiate and also easier to verify than the more limited agreements that now occupy the administration. If there is a clear lesson from our experience in negotiating nuclear agreements with the Soviet Union it is that the more comprehensive the treaty, the more practical the negotiations, and the more successful the compliance.

In the June issue of the Federation of American Scientists Public Interest Report the argument for comprehensive agreements is made concisely and well. I aks unanimous consent that a copy of this statement be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the statement was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

COMPREHENSIVE AGREEMENTS

One of the enduring debates in the arms control community is over the question of whether or not one should seek to negotiate comprehensive agreements.

Many arms controllers have reached the conclusion that the effort to negotiate comprehensive agreements was a mistake and that one should now focus on specific individual measures.

It is not possible to determine how this lesson could have been drawn from the experience of the past 15 years. The only agreements which have been successfully negotiated have been comprehensive ones. The inclusion in the agreement of a number of elements made trade-offs possible. The United States could gain the limitations it wanted while conceding other limits to the Soviet Union. There is nothing to suggest that more narrowly drawn agreements would have been easier to negotiate or that they would have been easier to sell to the Senate.

In fact one could argue the opposite. It is the failure to include limits in the agreement that has often been most controversial. Moreover the Soviets have demonstrated that they will push to the limits of any agreement, not doing anything that clearly violates them but nonetheless exploiting every loophole and ambiguity. Perhaps a careful review would lead us in the opposite direction—to agreements which covered all aspects of strategic forces, leaving no room for loopholes or ambiguity.

Comprehensiveness would also make verification easier.

If everything were to be controlled it might be easier first to stop and then to try to negotiate reductions.

HAZARDS OF MARIHUANA SMOKING

Mrs. HAWKINS. Mr. President, surprisingly, most students in this country do not consider marihuana smoking dangerous, at least not as dangerous as cigarette smoking. If we cannot convince our Nation's children of the profound dangers of marihuana smoking, and if we prove unsuccessful at curbing illicit drug traffic in this country and abroad, then I should like to suggest that, instead, we introduce legislation requiring that the following warning be printed on each marihuana joint sold in the street:

Warning: The Surgeon General Has Determined That Marihuana Smoking Impairs Memory, Learning Performance, and Speech, Reduces Your Ability To Perform Simple Motor Tasks, Speeds Up Your Heart Rate, Permeates Your Lungs With Cancer-Causing Hydrocarbons, Interferes With the Menstrual Cycle, Affects The Reproductive Organs, Leads To Psychological Problems, Induces Feelings of Paranoia, and Can Inspire Panic Anxiety Reactions Leading To Suicide, and Experts Have Testified it Takes 35 Days To Eliminate the Effect of One Joint From Your Body.

Mr. President, adolescents are the only age group on this country to have shown a decrease in life expectancy, rather than an increase. While the health of all other Americans has been improving, the death rate for young Americans between the ages of 15 and 24 is higher than it was 20 years ago. Medical experts are convinced that drug abuse has been the major factor in this frightening trend. Rick Gibson, a school guidance counselor in Goddard, Kans., had this to say about his experiences with drug abusers in school:

"It's unreal. The Kid looks you straight in the eye and says, full of conviction: "Well, pot doesn't hurt me!" His grades have slid from A's and B's to C's and D's. He's been put off the basketball team beause of poor performance. He's irritable, hostile, always tired, feels depressed. He cares less about everything. He has a cough, chest pains. He's really going down the tubes. But blowing grass every day, he insists, has no relation to any of this.

"To my mind, the scariest thing about marihuana is that the user can't see what the drug is doing to him. Or, if he does admit to a sympton, he shrugs it off. Yesterday a seventh grader told me, 'I know pot's done bad things to my memory. But I don't really need my memory because I decided I'm not going to college.' "

Mr. President, the notion that marihuana is a harmless, non-habit-forming drug is a myth, a very dangerous myth, that deserves to be debunked. We must unmask the frightening facts about the extreme dangers of marihuana smoking, which has reached pandemic proportions in this country. The United States is the most drug-abusing nation in history, and marihuana is the most pervasive illegal drug of abuse. Vast numbers of our Nation's young people are daily ingesting a virulent poison into their bodies—marihuana.

The tremendous quantities of marihuana smoked and its uninterrupted usage, makes marihuana smoking more dangerous than food additives or even air pollution. Current research even indicates that THC, the active ingredient in marihuana, may induce genetic mutation and cause permanent cell damage. Thus the deleterious effects of marihuana smoking may persist into the successive generations, and its mutagenic effects may alter our minds and bodies forever.

In the words of a White House drug policy official:

If the present adolescent drug abuse trends continue, we could soon acquire an unmanageable number of emotionally, intellectually, and socially handicapped young people; we could have a "diminished generation" unable to function effectively, if at all, in an increasingly complex and demanding world.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD at this point a special report by Consumer's Research magazine, entitled "Twelve Things You Should Know About Marihuana." And I plead with each Senator to read it carefully.

There being no objection, the report was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From Consumers' Research Magazine, April 1980]

TWELVE THINGS YOU SHOULD KNOW ABOUT MARIJUANA

OFFICIAL STUDIES REVEAL NEW EVIDENCE OF SERIOUS THREATS TO HEALTH: A SPECIAL REPORT FROM CONSUMERS' RESEARCH, INC.

The importation and sale of marijuana, once symbolic of the "counterculture" in the United States, has become big business.

As many as 43 million Americans have used marijuana at one time or another, and 16 million people described themselves as "current" users in a 1977 official survey. Suppling all these customers has become a multibillion-dollar industry—netting $12-$20 billion annually to the distributors, on the estimate of the Drug Enforcement Administration.

While most adults past 35 have not used marijuana, their children have—in ever increasing quantities. In one survey, 59 percent of high school seniors acknowledged having used the drug. And, quite clearly, they have little trouble getting it. A Gallup Poll found 81 percent of high school respondents saying marijuana was readily available.

The phenomenon has reached into the junior high schools, and to even younger age brackets. In 1978, one-quarter of the young people questioned said they has used marijuana by the time they were in the ninth grade. Officials of the National Institute on Drug Abuse, the Federal Agency that monitors such things, estimate that 8 percent of children 12 to 13 years old, and and unknown number under 12, have used marijuana.

This increased usage by young people has been matched by increasing potency of the drug as it is marketed in the United States. Chemical tests of marijuana coming into this country in the 1970s suggest it was five or six times strongers in terms of psychoactive ingredients than the marijuana available a decade earlier.

Marijuana use has grown so markedly because of a general belief that the substance is a harmless recreational drug, with no adverse effects. This view is widely entertained by young people. It has also drawn support from statements by groups interested in changing marijuana laws, and by official spokesmen who have said definitive results on marijuana are not yet in, or that it is no more harmul than tobacco or alcohol.

Also, as the marijuana industry has grown, a number of entrepreneurs have entered the field—selling glossy magazines and paraphernalia related to marijuana use. These products are in large measure aimed at youthful users, and often convey the message that consumption of marijuana is a harmless, if not actually beneficial, activity.

While millions of young people are using marijuana in the belief that it won't hurt them, developing scientific evidence points in just the opposite direction. In the past few months, Federal agencies that had previously spoken in tentative accents about marijuana have been issuing statements stressing the dangers of the drug, particularly for young people. While more research is needed, these statements suggest a serious, and growing, health hazard.

Past noncommittal comments on this subject were based on the fact that insufficient testing had occurred, or that the tests were not adequately controlled. In recent years, however, this situation has changed. The National Institute on Drug Abuse—a division of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare—has sponsored more than 1,000 experimental projects concerning marijuana. More than 100 such tests were supported by NIDA in 1979.

In such tests, NIDA controls for dosage, strength of the psychoactive ingredients in the drug, and other possible variables, to insure that the results are both consistent and relevant to social usage. And, in addition to the tests it has sponsored, the agency continually sifts the results of other tests in this country and around the world.

Out of this process, there has emerged a series of results—and warnings—from the nation's highest ranking officials dealing with questions of drug abuse. In the past year, officials of NIDA have published documents and offered testimony before Congress explaining the physical and psychological effects of marijuana in greater detail than ever before. These statements are made the more impressive by the fact that previous comments from NIDA on the subject have been so restrained. (Symbolic of this change is Dr. Robert L. DuPont, former Director of NIDA.)

Prominent among the findings in these documents are that marijuana use impairs memory, learning performance and speech, reduces ability to perform tasks such as driving or flying, has negative effects in terms of heart rate and lung capacity, introduces cancer-causing hydrocarbons into the lungs, may affect the reproductive functions, leads to psychological problems in youthful users, induces feelings of paranoia and can lead to panic anxiety reactions.

In other words, these official studies reach conclusions that run directly counter to the popular assumptions about the effects of marijuana—particularly assumptions that are prevalent among adolescents and children who are using the drug on a regular basis.

In this special report, Conusmers' Research presents some of the data obtained from these official documents. All statements herein are derived from recent reports issued by NIDA or the summary statements of responsible NIDA officials, as follows (with citations used in the text given in parentheses): Testimony of William Pollin, M.D., Director of NIDA, before the U.S. Senate, January 18, 1980 (Pollin); Marsha Manatt, Ph.D., Parents, Peers and Pot, published by NIDA in 1979 (Manatt); address by Robert C. Petersen, Ph.D., NIDA assistant director of research, to the American Academy of Pediatrics, October 14, 1979 (Petersen); "Marijuana: What It Is and What It Does," in NIDA Drug Abuse Facts, 1980 (DAF).

We present this special report in the belief that parents and others need access to the latest findings to be fully aware of the risks being run by young Americans using marijuana.

1. What is marijuana?

Marijuana (also called pot, grass, reefer, or weed) comes from a plant with the botanical name of Cannabis sativa that grows wild and is cultivated in many parts of the world. Containing 419 chemicals, this plant has the ability to intoxicate its users, primarily because of the psychoactive mind altering ingredient called delta-9-tetrahycrocannabinol, or THC. It is the THC content, found at various concentrations in different parts of the plant, which determines the potency. And the THC content is controlled by plant strain, climate, soil conditions, and harvesting. (DAF)

THC (delta-9-tetrahydrocannabinol) is the major psychoactive, or mind-altering, chemical in marijuana, but at least three other cannabinoids that affect the mind interact with THC . . . THC is a powerful hallucinogenic chemical; however, marijuana users take THC in a form diluted with nonpsychoactive plant material.

In the 1960s, most of the marijuana used in the United States was domestic and had a low THC content (0.2 percent to 1.5 percent). During the 1970s, a great deal of marijuana consumed in the United States has been smuggled from Mexico, Jamaica, and Colombia with a THC content averaging 2.5 percent to 5 percent. (Manatt)

Although confiscated samples of cannabis can not be regarded as adequately representative of marijuana used in the United States, there is considerable evidence that their potency has markedly increased over the past several years. Analyses by our University of Mississippi Marijuana Research Project chemists indicated that in 1973 Mexican samples averaged little more than one-tenth of one percent delta-9-THC, the principal psychoactive ingredient. By 1979, however, the strength of the material had increased to nearly two percent THC (1.95 percent)—nearly a twenty-fold increase. Other material, suspected to be of Colombian origin, now averages over four percent THC content. Samples of hashoil, a still more concentrated material (not even available a decade ago), has been found to have an average THC content as high as twenty-eight percent. (Petersen)

2. Who uses it?

An estimated 43 million Americans have tried marijuana at least once. Approximately 16 million were considered current users at the time of the last national survey in 1977, "current" because they reported smoking marijuana during the month preceding the survey.

A breakdown of teenage marijuana use shows that:

59 percent of high school seniors had tried it, and 1 out of 9 was a daily user.

8 percent of the 12–13 year olds reported that they had smoked marijuana at least once, and half of this groups were current users.

29 percent of the 14-15 year olds had tried it, and 15 percent were still using it.

While children under the age of 12 were not surveyed, many in the 12 to 17 age group report that they first tried marijuana, and even started smoking it regularly, while they were still in grade school, and probably before their parents even suspected they knew about the drug. (DAF)

Use, once largely confined to young adults, now involves millions of children under eighteen, many of whom smoke marijuana every day. Frequency of use is clearly increasing and the age of first use continues to drop alarmingly. In 1975, for example, one out of seventeen high school seniors nationwide was using daily. By 1978 the percentage of seniors using each day had nearly doubled. We have good reason to believe such use is continuing to increase. In Maine and Maryland, for which we have recent statewide survey results, one in six high school students is getting "high" on virtually a daily basis. The number of high school seniors who had first used marijuana by the ningth grade jumped by fifty percent (from 16.9 to 25.2 percent) between 1975 and 1978. (Petersen)

Figures from the annual survey of high school seniors conducted by the National Institute on Drug Abuse in 1977 indicate that adolescents are beginning their use of marijuana at younger ages. . . . In 1977, surveys showed that more young girls were joining their male peers in pot smoking. In 1978, the proportion of high school seniors who smoked marijuana daily rose to 1 out of 9 (11 percent), nearly double the figures for daily use in 1975 (1 in 17, or 6 percent). Daily marijuana use now exceeds daily alcohol use among high school seniors (6 percent). In fact, the percentage of teen-agers who are daily users of marijuana may well exceed the 11 percent who acknowledge daily use in the survey. (Manatt)

3. Accumulation in the body

When marijuana is smoked, THC, its active ingredient, is absorbed by many tissues and organs in the body. The body, in its attempt to rid itself of the Foreign chemical, chemically transforms the THC into metabolites. Human tests on blood and urine can detect THC metabolites up to a week after marijuana is smoked. Tests involving radioactively labeled THC have traced these metabolites in animals for up to a month. (DAF)

THC and the other cannabinoids are fat-soluble chemicals. They accumulate in the fatty linings (lipid membranes) of the cells in the body and brain, and are metabolized out of the system very slowly. A week after a person smokes one marijuana cigarette, 30 to 50 percent of the THC remains in the body; it is estimated that 4 to 6 weeks are required to eliminate all the THC. Thus, the youngster who smokes on Saturday night and again on Wednesday gradually builds up the level of THC in his/her system. Regular use—even once or twice a week—means the user is never entirely free of the drug . . .

At present, scientists are not sure how this accumulation of marijuana chemicals (including many cannabinoids and compounds other than THC) affects human health and development. However, many observers of youthful marijuana smokers worry that this slow, subtle, accumulation within the body and brain may cause gradual personality and behavioral changes. (Manatt)

4. Marijuana and alcohol

Various marijuana plants and various parts of the same plant have differing amounts of the cannabinoids and can produce different effects on users. In this respect, marijuana differs from alcohol, which has a controlled level of active ingredient. (Manatt)

The persistence of THC in the system differentiates marijuana from alcohol. Alcohol is a water-soluble chemical that is metabolized or "washed out" of the body relatively quickly. Thus, the youngster who drinks too much will probably get sick and suffer a hangover the next day, as his/her stomach and liver work to process the alcohol. This detoxification is completed within 12 hours. Because THC is not water soluble, it is not quickly washed out by the body fluids. (Manatt)

Despite their occasional assertion to the contrary, children's marijuana use is not analogous to the adult's before-dinner martini. Unlike the martini, smoking a "joint" has as its objective getting "high," that is, intoxicated in a way that alters judgment, self-perception, memory, and other aspects of psychological functioning. Unfortunately, unlike alcohol intoxication, with its telltale signs of slurred speech, impaired coordination, and breath odor, marijuana intoxication is easily disguised so that it clearly interferes with learning and performance in school. (Petersen)

However, studies have also shown that marijuana does not increase aggressiveness as alcohol sometimes does, and a driver under its influence is not as likely to lose control of the car. (DAF)

5. Effects on the lungs

Scientists believe that marijuana can be particularly harmful to the lungs because some users inhale the unfiltered smoke deeply and hold it in their lungs as long as possible, thereby keeping the smoke in contact with lung tissue for prolonged periods. Repeated inhalation of smoke, whether marijuana or tobacco, inflames the lungs and affects pulmonary functions. In one study on humans, it was found that smoking five joints a week over time is more irritating to the air passages and impairs the lungs' ability to exhale air than smoking almost six packs of cigarettes a week. Another study on animals using THC levels similar to daily human use found that extensive lung inflammation . . . after 3 months to a year of use.

While marijuana smoke has been found to contain more cancer-causing agents than tobacco smoke, there is no direct evidence so far that marijuana can cause cancer in humans. However, biopsies of human lung tissue chronically exposed to marijuana smoke in a laboratory showed cellular changes called metaplasis that are considered precancerous. In laboratory tests, the tars from marijuana smoke have produced tumors when applied to animal skin. (DAF)

There is growing concern that the contemporary American practice of inhaling and holding marijuana smoke deep in the lungs may precipitate earlier and more serious lung problems than have been identified in countries where marijuana use has been traditional. In 1976, lung researchers reported that smoking three to five joints a week is equivalent to smoking 16 cigarettes a day . . . That is, five joints equal 112 cigarettes. (Manatt)

Marijuana smoke contains larger amounts of cancer-producing hydrocarbons than tobacco. In animal testing the smoke residuals produce skin tumors and there is laboratory evidence that human lung tissue exposed in the test tube to marijuana smoke shows more cellular changes than when exposed to similar amounts of standard tobacco smoke. As yet, there is no direct evidence that marijuana smoking is correlated with lung cancer, although some preclinical studies point out some changes which may in the longterm result in cancer. Critical epidemiological studies should be started to evaluate this risk after longterm use. As with tobacco, it will probably take at least 20 years to know the results.

After exposure to marijuana smoke, pulmonary macrophage production has been inhibited in animals. These are the cells which help protect the lungs from bacterial invasion. Cilia, which assist in moving inhaled dust and other small foreign particles from the lungs, have also been found to be adversely affected by marijuana smoke. In summary, following exposure to marijuana smoke, defense systems in the lungs show more impairment than following exposure to tobacco smoke.

In three animal studies, after daily exposure for periods of from 3 months to a year, the animals showed extensive lung inflammation and other evidence of lung damage not found in animals exposed to tobacco or to inert marijuana smoke. Thus, it appears likely that daily use of marijuana may lead to lung damage similar to that resulting from heavy cigarette smoking. (Pollin)

6. Effects on the heart

Marijuana use leads to an increased heart rate and associated circulatory changes. Evidence that chest pain associated with poor circulation to the heart muscle occurs more rapidly in patients with already impaired heart function with marijuana use than with cigarette smoking has led to a consensus that those with heart conditions, or at high risk, should not use marijuana. Limited studies to date have not shown deleterious consequences from these acute effects in healthy young male volunteers. (Pollin)

Marijuana use increases the heart rate as much as 50 percent and can bring on chest pain in people already experiencing a poor blood supply to the heart. For this reason, doctors believe that people with heart conditions, or those who are at high risk for heart ailments, should not use marijuana. (DAF)

Studies show that adults with impaired heart function suffer chest pain (angina pectoris) when they exercise after smoking marijuana. Smoking tobacco cigarettes also affects heart function, but the marijuana effect is even more pronounced. Thus, people with known heart problems should not smoke marijuana at all. Physicians warn that marijuana's effect on heart function may pose an increasing public health problem if use continues to spread among older adults and if youthful users keep smoking pot as they grow older.

Many heart weaknesses in children and adolescents are not detected until later in life. Whether increasing marijuana use among youngsters will precipitate earlier manifestations of latent heart defects is an open question. (Manatt)

7. Interference with memory

Acute intoxication impairs learning, memory, and intellectual performance. Virtually all of the many studies which have been done of performance while "high" show that marijuana interfers with immediate memory and intellectual performance in ways that impair thinking, reading comprehension, arithmetic problem solving and speech.

The research finding such impairment included a variety of study tasks such as digit symbol substitution (a timed task in which the individual substitutes a series of symbols for numbers), choice reaction time (a reaction-time task in which the response depends on rapidly discriminating between choices), the ability to repeat in forward and backward order a succession of digits and to mentally make a succession of repeated subtractions.

Less familiar, more difficult tasks are interfered with more than well-learned performance, and the extent of the effect as with all drugs depends on the amount used. (Pollin)

8. Driving and flying

Marijuana intoxication impairs driving, flying and other complex psychomotor performance, at usual levels of social usage. Studies involving such diverse areas as perceptual components of the driving task, driver and flight simulator performance, test course and actual driving behavior, all tend to show significant performance and perceptual deficits related to being high that make functioning more hazardous . . .

Research has indicated that experienced pilots undergo marked deterioration in their performance under flight-simulated or test conditions while high. It is also significant that these experienced pilots predicted there would be no decrement in their performance, and were not aware of the general deterioration in their performance. There was a substantial decrement on the basis of having smoked only one joint.

A continuing danger common to both driving and flying is that some of the perceptual or other performance decrements resulting from marijuana use may persist for some time, possibly several hours, beyond the period of subjective intoxication. Under such circumstances, the individual may attempt to fly or drive without realizing that his or her ability to do so is still impaired although he or she no longer feels "high." Ongoing studies are attempting to further delineate these issues. (Pollin)

9. Defense against disease

Because marijuana accumulates in the fatty membranes of the body cells, it affects the entire cellular process, including cell-mediated immunity. Although this complex area of research will require many years to establish conclusive findings, there is increasing evidence that marijuana use reduces or alters fundamental cellular defenses against disease. Because there has still been no centralized pooling of information from parents, physicians, and marijuana users themselves, the practical implications of the lab findings are still not established. (Manatt)

Some reports suggest that the white cell formation central to the body's immune response is affected by heavy marijuana smoking. Some laboratory animal studies have found that the immune response is significantly suppressed in mice and rats subjected to high doses of marijuana. Other studies have not confirmed these findings. Because the immune response is so important to good health, long-term studies are essential to determine if marijuana users become more susceptible to disease. (DAF)

The T-lymphocyte is a white blood cell which plays a central role in the immune response. There have been two human studies, which suggest an effect on T-cell function under conditions of chronic heavy marijuana use; other human studies, however, have failed to confirm this observation.

The animal data are a bit more clear-cut and have more consistently indicated a definite suppression of the test animals' immune responses. Three reports based on work in two laboratories have reported reductions in the immune response in mice and rats treated with high, but humanly relevant, doses of inhaled marijuana smoke.

There has been no large-scale epidemiological research undertaken as yet to determine if marijuana smokers suffer from infections and other diseases to a greater extent than others of similar lifestyle, who do not use the drug. Thus, for the present, this question must be regarded as unresolved. (Pollin)

10. Psychological effects

There is unanimity of informed professional opinion concerning marijuana use by children. While there may be uncertainty about the implications of occasional marijuana use by well-integrated adults, there is little question that regular use of an intoxicant that blurs reality and encourages escape into a chemical nirvana makes growing up more difficult. (Petersen)

The most common adverse clinical reaction of marijuana use among American users is the acute panic anxiety reaction. Transient mild paranoid feelings are common in users. Marijuana flashbacks have been reported.

An acute brain syndrome associated with cannabis intoxication including such features as clouding of mental processes, disorientation, confusion and market memory impairment has also been reported, though this is much more likely at unusually high doses and appears to be rare. (Pollin)

Personality and behavioral changes will probably occur long before any physical changes become obvious, though many of the psychological problems may have a physiological basis. Some observers of heavy marijuana users have described an amotivational syndrome, in which the user becomes apathetic, lethargic, passive, and withdrawn. Younger users tend to lose interest in schools, sports, clubs, and other vigorous or engaging activities. Their lives seem to narrow in focus, as they become more preoccupied both with the rituals of drug use and with drug-using friends. The youngster may frequently be fatigued, depressed, and moody. S/he may have a tendency toward paranoia and complain that everyone is "down on me" or that someone is always "hassling me." Despite the apathy and withdrawal, s/he may flare up and become hostile when questioned by parents or teachers about altered behavior or attitudes . . .

Perhaps the most insidious effect of adolescent marijuana use is that mood-altering drugs provide a quick and simple escape from the stresses that are a normal part of growing up. A youngster who continually blots out pain, boredom, or frustration, never learns to cope with them. Many youngsters who habitually get stoned at parties and games do not learn to converse and to participate; they do not develop social skills. Being stoned is a self-absorbing, self-limiting, antisocial experience. Tennagers who continually "get high" may grow up believing that getting high is the only way to enjoy anything. (Manatt)

11. Possible brain damage

To date, no definitive neurological study of humans has turned up evidence of marijuana-related permanent brain damage. However, in a recent study of rhesus monkeys, the animals were trained to smoke a marijuana cigarette 5 days a week for 6 months. The researcher reported that persistent changes in the structure of the monkeys' brain cells followed.

This and other studies have led researchers to conclude that the possibility of subtle and lasting changes in brain function from heavy and continuous marijuana use cannot be ruled out. (DAF)

In 1976, Dr. Sidney Cohen reported that marijuana use may alter the relative roles of the right and left hemispheres of the brain, with significant impairment of verbal-analytic tasks. To some degree, his findings substantiate the observation by a Canadian researcher that regular marijuana use seems to decrease his students' ability to abstract and synthesize or to perceive appropriate relationships when writing university-level essays. In 1978, Dr. Robert Heath and his associates revealed that his studies with rhesus monkeys indicated that heavy marijuana use (one joint a day) produced permanent changes in deep-brain areas that affect emotion and behavior. Of particular significances was a widening of the gap between brain cells (the synaptic cleft) across which nerve impulses are transmitted. (Manatt)

12. Effects on reproduction

There is evidence that marijuana, like many other substances and therapeutic compounds, affect the network of glands and hormones which are involved in such functions as reproduction. There are a variety of both animal and human studies suggesting that marijuana used daily and in substantial amounts similar to those of a regular cigarette smoker may adversely impair some aspects of the reproductive function.

Levels of the male hormone testosterone have been found to be reduced temporarily, though still within normal range, in some, but not all studies, Whether more persistent, chronic use of marijuana might result in permanently depressed levels of serum testosterone is not known at this time.

At least two studies have found abnormalities in the sperm count, motility and in the structural characteristics of sperm of male chronic users. One study of 16 male, healthy, chronic marijuana users smoking from eight to 20 standard marijuana cigarettes per day for 4 weeks in a hospital environment, found a significant decline in sperm concentration and a decrease in sperm motility.

Three studies in animals of the effects of marijuana on testicular functioning, including the production of sperm, have also found adverse effects. While the clinical implications of such findings are not yet known, and the acute effects noted may be reversible when marijuana use is stopped, they do indicate a basis for concern for long term users as decreased fertility may result, expecially in those of already marginal fertility. (Pollin)

Information about the reproductive effects of marijuana on women is scarce; marijuana research on women of childbearing age is not permitted because of possible reproductive risks. But one recent study of marijuana use and human female endocrine functioning with 26 women using street marijuana for 6 months or more found they had defective menstrual cycles three times more frequently than a similar group of nonusers.

These defective cycles involved either a failure to ovulate or a shortened period of fertility—findings which suggest that regular marijuana use may reduce fertility in women. Many female animal studies have been completed and show that marijuana influences levels of estrogen, the principal female sex hormone, and progesterone, another reproductive hormone, as well as the growth hormone from the pituitary. These studies do suggest that heavy use should be avoided by the physically and sexually developing adolescent girl . . .

As stated earlier, research on women is limited because of possible risks to the unborn child. Laboratory animal tests, however, have shown that THC-treated female monkeys were four times more likely than untreated monkeys to abort or have stillborn infants. And males born of the THC-treated monkeys were lighter than usual in birth weight. Scientists believe that marijuana, which crosses the placental barrier in the pregnant mother's womb, may have a toxic effect on embryos and fetuses. Use of marijuana or any other drug during pregnancy is an unnecessary risk.

Animal studies have shown that THC from marijuana can be transmitted to a baby through the mother's milk and that traces of THC have been found in the baby's urine and feces after nursing. Scientists have no doubt that THC is also transmitted in human milk, but because of possible risks to the mother and child, human research has not been done. (DAF)

NATURAL GAS DECONTROL

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I hope Senators will read an article on natural gas deregulation by Dr. Edward Erickson, professor of economics and business at North Carolina State University.

Dr. Erickson has just completed an exhaustive study of the natural gas market in North Carolina and the possible economic impact of price decontrol there. In a nutshell, his article recounts the enormous benefits North Carolina and, indeed, the Nation, would realize if Federal restrictions now inhibiting the market were lifted.

My support for deregulation is no secret. I firmly believe Federal controls should be removed to insure adequate supplies of natural gas at affordable prices.

Mr. President, the Senate may soon consider whether to deregulate natural gas. I urge my colleagues to read Dr. Erickson's fine article and consider the compelling points he makes.

I ask unanimous consent that the text of the article be printed in the RECORD at the conclusion of my remarks.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

NORTH CAROLINA SHOULD BENEFIT FROM NATURAL GAS DEREGULATION

(By Edward W. Erickson)

(Editor's note: Dr. Erickson, Professor of Economics and Business at N.C. State University in Raleigh, undertook a study of the potential economic effects of federal deregulation of natural gas prices on North Carolina. His article below is based on that study.)

North Carolina has always been a leader. It is evident in our microelectronics center, our university system and our attractiveness to high quality new industry. North Carolina's tendency to be at the front of the pack is less apparent, but no less real, in the area of energy as well.

North Carolina is not a primary energy producing state, but the economic growth we have enjoyed over the last quarter century has in large measure depended upon increased energy utilization and availability. Since 1960, total U.S. energy utilization has increased 80 percent. Over the same period, North Carolina's energy requirements have grown 120 percent, or 50 percent more than the rest of the country. This growth is not the result of squanderous use. North Carolina's use of petroleum has tracked conservation trends in the rest of the country almost exactly. Growth of total residential energy consumption in North Carolina has been slightly higher than that for the rest of the country, but this simply reflects North Carolina's higher population and per capita income growth rates.

The major causes of increased energy use in North Carolina are the rapid increases in energy consumption in our industrial and commercial sectors. Since 1960, commercial sector growth in energy use has been 70 percent greater in North Carolina than in the rest of the country. And North Carolina's increase in the industrial use of energy is over 100 percent greater than that for the total nation.

The energy sources which have fueled these higher commercial and industrial energy growth rates have been coal and natural gas. North Carolina's use of coal is up 140 percent compared to a 40 percent increase for the rest of the country. And North Carolina's use of natural gas is up 183 percent versus 67 percent for the whole national economy.

The importance of coal as an energy source to fuel North Carolina's higher than average growth rate is consistent with both our relatively greater reliance upon electricity and national energy policy. But the role of natural gas is a pleasant surprise.

Just a few years ago, natural gas was nearly written off by national policy makers. It was widely believed that there was very little natural gas left to find and that the required drilling effort was beyond the capacity of the industry to undertake. Since 1976, however, the number of U.S. gas well completions has doubled. And in 1981, the latest year for which data are yet available, U.S. natural gas reserve additions exceeded production for the first time since 1967. Domestic natural gas is now beginning to be perceived as a potential bridge fuel to the latter part of the 21st century.

North Carolina has shared in the benefits of this encouraging reassessment. Since the days of deep curtailments in 1977, North Carolina natural gas use has more than doubled. Increased availability of natural gas has supplied about one-half of North Carolina's growth in energy usage since 1977. Thus, natural gas has made a very important contribution to the industrial growth which has benefited all North Carolinians. North Carolina industries which have benefited substantially from increased natural gas availability include textiles, tires, glass and fertilizer.

The shortages and curtailments in the 1970s were regulation-induced. Federal ceiling price controls did not permit producers to incur the costs necessary to allow supply to keep up with demand. It has been observed that, next to bombing, the second best way to destroy a city is through rent controls. The natural gas shortages which we inflicted upon ourselves were another illustration of that principle. For North Caorlinians, that was particularly bad news because we again led the nation—only that time it was in shortages of natural gas.

Is it possible that North Carolina might experience a re-run of the curtailments of the 1970's? Unfortunately the answer is yes.

Contrary to popular belief, the Natural Gas Policy Act of 1978 (NGPA) was not a deregulation bill. The NGPA extended regulation to the 40 percent of natural gas production which had previously not been subject to federal ceiling price controls. The NGPA pigeon-holed various kinds of gas production into a byzatine structure of over two dozen separate ceiling price control categories. About 5 percent of current gas production was decontrolled by the NGPA, and more decontrol is scheduled for 1985. But even after the scheduled decontrol of some gas in 1985, about one-half of U.S. natural gas production will still be subject to federal ceiling price controls. This remaining price-controlled natural gas, unevenly distributed among pipelines, has a considerable potential for mischief—particularly with respect to North Carolina.

North Carolina's sole source of natural gas is pipeline deliveries by Transco. Because of the rapid growth on the Transco system, Transco's relative share of older, price controlled gas is considerably smaller than the national pipeline average. For example, Transco's average cost for buying gas is $3.20 per million Btu's. This is almost 20 percent above the national average cost of about $2.70 per million Btu's. This means that North Carolina industries served by Transco have to compete with industries elsewhere which are served by other pipelines and have significantly lower energy costs.

At the moment, there is more total gas available to Transco than Transco can market to its customers. As a result, Transco has taken the national lead in developing innovative marketing methods. The North Carolina Utilities Commission has also been a national leader in encouraging our distribution companies to adopt flexible marketing practices. But the surplus of today, like the shortage of a few years ago, may not be a permanent thing.

To discover and produce natural gas requires that wells be drilled. A leading indicator for well completions is the number of drilling rigs in active operation. In December of 1981, the number of active drilling rigs in operation reached an alltime historical peak of 4,520. At the end of April, 1983, the active rig count was 1,860—nearly a 60 percent decrease.

The signs are beginning to indicate that we are on the way out of the most severe industrial recession since World War II. Therefore, for both demand and supply reasons, the national natural gas market may begin to tighten up in the relatively near future.

In a tight national market, North Carolina may be disadvantaged in terms of access to available natural gas supplies. Pipelines now purchase a mix of natural gas with widely different regulated wellhead prices. These different prices are all rolled together with transportation costs to arrive at an average delivered price. For gas to be sold, the average delivered price must be competitive with alternative fuels. In a tight market, with some gas controlled and other gas decontrolled, pipelines with large shares of the controlled gas can bid higher prices for decontrolled gas than can pipelines such as Transco with small shares of controlled gas.

Pipelines with large shares of controlled gas are called "deep cushion" pipelines. Pipelines with small shares of controlled gas are called "shallow cushion" pipelines. In a relatively tight market, deep cushion pipelines can outbid shallow cushion pipelines for available new gas supplies, average the higher new gas costs in with lower controlled gas costs, and still remain competitive at the burner tip. The result is shortages and curtailments for shallow cushion pipelines such as Transco.

If a shallow cushion pipeline is disadvantaged in terms of access to new gas supplies and has to curtail industrial load, the remaining residential customers have to pick up a larger share of the total transportation and distribution overhead. But if a shallow cushion pipeline attempts to match the "hothouse" prices offered by deep cushion pipelines, its average delivered gas costs exceed alternative fuel costs and it loses industrial load anyway. It is a "no win" situation created by the existence of some gas that is subject to price controls and some gas that is not.

A potential solution might appear to be extending ceiling price controls to all gas. But that just creates another layer in the complicated welter of regulated prices, encourages inefficient use of natural gas, and lays the foundation for another national shortage of natural gas.

The Federal Trade Commission has found that, "the natural gas industry is capable of workably competitive performance in the absence of price regulation." In a competitive situation, prices are free to go up and down as contracts are voluntarily renegotiated in response to the market forces of supply and demand. Even impeded by price controls, these forces are at work in natural gas markets today. It is difficult, however, for a competitive market to generate its full potential benefits when it is half price controlled and half free. The real solution is to totally remove all federal ceiling price controls from the entire supply of natural gas.

Deregulation of wellhead prices for natural gas and removal of regulatory restrictions on the use of gas yield incentives to utilize natural gas efficiently, cause natural gas to be produced at minimum cost, and allow the market to flexibly adapt to changes in supply and demand. The sooner complete deregulation of the natural gas market occurs, the better it will be for the citizens of the United States, and particularly North Carolinians.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. HUMPHREY). Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE CONTRIBUTIONS OF SENIOR CITIZENS CENTERS

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, on August 30, 1983, the Daily Dispatch published an excellent feature story about the Moline Senior Citizens Center. I had the pleasure of visiting this center while I was in Illinois during the August recess.

As I pointed out in my book "Growing Old in the Country of the Young," loneliness and poverty are the worst fears of the elderly. Senior centers such as this one in Moline provide an unduplicated variety of services to help address both problems.

One of the most important services provided by the Moline Senior Citizens Center and other similar senior centers is companionship. Through social activities like planning group traveling, cardplaying, billiards, and dances, and charity work such as craft projects and volunteer programs, older persons who otherwise might feel isolated and shut out of society can remain actively involved in the community.

Other centers also serve as congregate nutrition sites, providing the only hot balanced meals some of the elderly may have contributing what they can to their cost. I was proud to coauthor the original meals program, and feel a special affinity with it. Before this program started, many older persons used to sit alone all day in their separate apartments drinking tea and eating toast, because they had no money for food or were unable to cook. The meals program provides both a nutritious meal at a low cost and, perhaps even more importantly, lunch companions for people who might under other circumstances go without human contact for periods of time.

A number of communities also have another food program that delivers hot meals to elderly men and women who are homebound but nevertheless want to remain in their own homes and out of nursing institutions. The daily delivery of meals and human contact make this possible. The program allows people whom the elderly trust to have access to them, to learn when they are having problems, and to guide them to solutions.

In addition, transportation plays an essential role in the comprehensive programs of many senior centers. It is difficult for a number of the aged to get around without aid—and virtually all the elderly have trouble coping with standard mass transportation where it is available. A growing number of areas are providing small buses and vans to help the elderly run necessary errands, see physicians, and reach community events, including senior center affairs. This not only provides essential transportation, but allows the opportunity to see friends and meet others while on the bus.

It is clear, then, that senior centers provide invaluable services to the elderly. I ask unanimous consent that this article, which outlines one such center's contributions, be printed in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Moline (Ill.) Daily Dispatch, Aug. 30, 1983]

SENIORS' CENTER OFFERS FRIENDSHIP

(By Jeff Rodriguez)

MEMBERS FIND NEW PURPOSES IN LIFE

Maybe you're one of those people who has always associated being old with rocking chairs, hearing aids and long days of listless inactivity.

Well, sonny, have you got another think coming!

Why, down at the Moline Senior Citizen Center, where the weekly schedule includes exercise classes, arts and crafts, charity projects, and even dancing, there's always something interesting going on. The center is not only for those who are young at heart, but for the folks who are young in the head and hands as well.

"The people here are terrific," said Lynn Wilkinson, coordinator for the center and herself a spry 25 years of age. "They're always on the go, always having a good time. I can hardly keep up with them."

Wilkinson said the center, located at 620 18th St., is "primarily a recreation facility." She said membership dues are just $2 annually, and the center is open to all senior citizens in the area, Monday through Friday, 9 a.m. to 5 p.m.

But though the center is a recreational and social outlet for the members, there's a good deal of charity work going on. Through the Leisure Auxiliary of the center, the members do work for the American Cancer Society, the Junior Service League, FISH and other organizations that approach them.

In June, they reported nearly a thousand hours of volunteer work for the month. "Anything we can do to help, we'll do," said Wilkinson.

And that includes helping themselves; the center is operated and supervised by the Moline Park and Recreation Board, but, true to the nature of its membership, the center is largely self-reliant. The city pays for the maintenance of the building, and for the salaries of Wilkinson and her staff, but the center is otherwise left to its own means.

Funds are gathered through the many donations of money and gifts from members (73 in June alone), and through several fundraising projects.

One of the center's most important projects is the open house, where members sell craftwork and other handmade goods to visitors, giving their profits to the center. "They're a very giving group, both monetarily and in friendship," said Wilkinson.

It's probably that friendship that the group is richest in. The center is a very big reason why there are few less elderly citizens who consider themselves "elderly."

"After my husand died, I hibernated," said Estella Schaaf, Moline. "Being here has given me new life."

Schaaf, a victim of a series of strokes, was told by doctors that she would never walk again. Now she's a supervisor for the Leisure Auxiliary, and she scurries about constantly, checking with everyone and helping to get the work done. Schaaf said, "If I would have given up, I'd still be in a wheelchair."

Adah Fye, East Moline, said, "I don't know what I'd do without the center, it's been a big boost. When my husband died suddenly, it left a great void. This has filled the void."

Wilkinson said the center has about 800 members. They come from all social classes and span four decades of age differences, from members in their 50s all the way up to 98-year-old Elizabeth Matson, who still comes to the center to help sew cancer pads.

Wilkinson said transportation is available for members unable to drive or without cars. "They're proud people," she said. "They don't like to be catered to."

One member capable of transporting himself is Arthur Timmerman, Moline, who has been a member for about 15 years (dating back to when the center was run out of the old Viking Hall in Moline). Timmerman does the shopping with Wilkinson, hauls the groceries and runs other errands for the center.

"We all come down here to give something," said Timmerman. "The more active you are, the better off you are." Timmerman said he goes to the center about four times a week, and enjoys the card-playing and billiards.

Cards and pool are just two of the many activities at the center. There are also craft projects, sing-alongs, calligraphy classes and exercise sessions. Every Friday, a live band is brought in for a dance, and the members also have their blood pressure checked twice a month.

Wilkinson, who has been coordinator for just over a year, praised the work of her two staff members, Sally Chumbley and Lucille Almquist. In the process of building a solid working relationship with them, she has earned the respect of the members.

"Lynn has been helpful along every line," said Helen Adamson, East Moline, a member of the center for 20 years. "They picked a good one when they picked her."

"The age differences haven't been a problem," said Wilkinson. "At first, I was a little concerned about being grand-parented, but they're very easy to get to know and love. If you respect them, they'll respect you."

The relationship has proved beneficial for both Wilkinson and the members, giving the center an inviting atmosphere. The center is a place for senior citizens to keep productive and stay active at an age when many people are slowing down.

But the center also provides another valuable feature: friendship. Loneliness can add years to a person's life, and the companionship of the center helps to combat that unnatural aging. It's almost as if the center has some mystic capability to restore youth and energy to the members; the elderly citizens once too tired to face the next day now can't wait for it to begin.

"This is my second home, and I love it," said Mary Taulbee, Moline. Like so many of the members, she said that the center's existence has made all the difference to her outlook on life.

"Before, I was lost, and didn't know what to do with myself," she said. "Now I'm down here every day, always trying to keep busy, always on the go. My family says they have to make an appointment just to see me anymore. Me, I think it's wonderful just being here."

PRESIDENT REAGAN ON THE VOA

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the greatest goal of this or any nation is peace. It is the shared dream of the American people that peace will someday bestow its manifold blessings on all the troubled regions of the world. I want to commend to the attention of my colleagues the remarkable way in which the U.S. message of peace was carried to the world last Saturday, September 24, when President Reagan made a remarkable trip from the White House. He sat at a microphone in a studio of the Voice of America in Washington, and, for the first time since President Kennedy, an American President addressed the world on the broadcast frequencies of the Voice of America.

President Reagan spoke about peace and about his forthcoming remarks to the U.N. General Assembly. The broadcast probably reached 100 million people, many of whom would have been unable to hear the President's message from the United Nations because its transmission would have been stymied by the jammers of the Soviet Union and their proxies. The President's speech was simultaneously broadcast in English and in Russian, Ukrainian, Lithuanian, Romanian, Bengali, Hausa, and Urdu.

The broadcasting of accurate, objective and comprehensive news is the mandate under law of the Voice of America. The President and the Voice of America are to be highly commended for their work in getting the message of peace across to the world. I ask unanimous consent that an article on the subject from the Chicago Tribune appear in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the article was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Chicago Tribune, Sept. 25, 1983]

SOVIET RADIO LISTENERS HEAR REAGAN

PRESIDENT'S ADDRESS ON PEACE CARRIED OVER VOICE OF AMERICA

WASHINGTON.—President Reagan had his weekly radio address beamed into the Soviet Union Saturday with simultaneous translations into eight dialects to push "the cause of peace."

In a long-planned and highly secret bit of diplomatic one-upsmanship, Reagan traveled several blocks from the White House to Voice of America headquarters to give his regular U.S. audience and millions of Soviet listeners a preview of his speech to the United Nations General Assembly on Monday.

"I will speak to the United Nations General Assembly in two days for a cause that people everywhere carry close to their hearts—the cause of peace," Reagan said.

"The subject is so important I want to share this message with a larger audience than I usually address each Saturday in the United States," he said in remarks released in advance by deputy press secretary Larry Speakes.

Word of Reagan's trip to Voice of America, where he used the same equipment at the same master control unit used when President Dwight Eisenhower broadcast to the world in 1957, was tightly held in advance "so the Soviets hopefully will not have the opportunity to jam the broadcast," Speakes said.

The reason for the Voice of America appearance "is to get his message across, particularly to people in the Soviet Union," Speakes said.

As the President spoke in English, simultaneous translations were broadcast in Russian, Ukrainian, Romanian, Bengali, Hausa [an African dialect], Lithuanian and Urdu [a Pakistani language spoken in the Soviet Union].

The broadcast will be available later in the other 42 languages the Voice of America broadcasts in, Speakes said.

Speakes said an estimated 100 million people each week hear Voice of America broadcasts in eight languages on three continents, Europe, Asia and Africa.

"It's to get his message across to the people, particularly the Soviet Union," said Speakes, who added the event had been in the planning stages for a few weeks. Reagan normally delivers the live broadcast from the Oval Office, or from his retreat at Camp David, Md.

Speakes said, "The pitch is to take his desire for peace directly to the Soviet people and others around the world."

Reagan used the 25-year-old equipment to symbolize the point he made in a speech several weeks ago that the Voice of America's hardware is outdated and in need of modernization with funds from Congress. He said at the time the Soviets could be winning a propaganda war because of their advanced broadcasting technology.

BRAZILIAN DEBT PROBLEM

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, the continuing international debt crisis will be the major focus of attention during the annual meeting of the World Bank/Intenational Monetary Fund meeting this week in Washington. Brazil has replaced Mexico as the debtor country with the most serious difficulties. Its foreign debt now exceeds $90 billion, and it is in arrears in interest payments to foreign bankers by more than $2 billion.

Last May the IMF and the international banks suspended loans to Brazil because of its failure to comply with IMF conditions. Although the Brazilian Government has recently negotiated a new agreement with the IMF, the resumption of foreign loans to Brazil is by no means certain. In keeping with its economic stabilization program, the Brazilian Congress must first pass a tough wage law, and this bill is spawning widespread opposition even within the governing party.

It is of major importance to the United States that Brazil find solutions enabling it to satisfy its foreign creditors without provoking serious internal social unrest. An important contribution to the debate on this topic was made earlier this month by Rubem Medina, a noted Brazilian Congressman. In a speech at the Johns Hopkins School of Advanced International Studies, Mr. Medina, who has twice headed the Economic Commission of the Brazilian Congress, elaborated a comprehensive five-point program for alleviating Brazil's foreign debt. His thoughtful proposals merit the serious attention of my colleagues in the Senate. I ask unanimous consent that Congressman Medina's statement be entered in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the lecture was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

LECTURE BY FEDERAL CONGRESSMAN RUBEM MEDINA AT THE SCHOOL FOR ADVANCED INTERNATIONAL STUDIES

In 1983 the Brazilians are faced with a drama resembling that which you yourselves went through in 1929. And they are going to overcome it, sooner or later. Sooner, if you, and all the people in the world learn to know us better and to trust us.

I am an economist, and a politician freely elected by the people. In other words, I study Brazil at my desk and I live Brazil in the highways and byways, in the trains, the plants and the plantations. This dual status lets me view Brazilian problems in a particularly all-encompassing manner. It brings me a feeling of certainty that the Brazilian crisis is so immense and complex that it forms a part of an even greater crisis that involves the whole world. More than an economic crisis, it is a social crisis, and might, from one hour to the next, turn into a political crisis capable of overthrowing a lengthy and mighty effort, that is transforming the country into the greatest democracy in the Latin world, with 60 million voters on the rolls as of the recent polls.

And when I use the term social crisis, I am not referring merely to unemployment or a reduction in living standards. I am talking about people that are literally dying of hunger in an immense region afflicted by drought these past five years. In this region, the hinterland of North East Brazil, 250 out of every 1,000 children born die in the first year of life. Millions of farmers have quit as their holdings have turned into desert and they try to keep body and soul together on government aid that amounts to 20 dollars a month; just enough to give them one third the number of calories the adult organism needs.

Many of these men and women have been migrating for years to the industrialized South. Despite every handicap, they have become competent workers and technicians, and are today helping manufacture computers or even airplanes that are exported to the United States.

Those migrants from the North East had reached the point where they felt they had vanquished the century-old challenge of the people in their part of the world. They did not earn much, but they managed to get enough to eat every day, to dress decently, to sleep under a proper roof, to have access to medical care, to bring up and educate their children. Suddenly, the factories started closing down. The dream was over. Now what are they to do? Trek back to the arid waste lands and slow death or stick it out there in the big city, after losing everything even possibly their self-respect?

The urge to resort to any desperate solution is great and the distance to social convulsion and political retraction is but a short one. It was perhaps with this in mind that the New York Times (August 5) editorial expressed the following concern:

"Brazil deserves at least as much attention as the Reagan administration is giving to Nicaragua, and much more understanding. It is a dynamic nation, without a shadow of a doubt the most powerful and promising one in all Latin America. And the burden of the ninety billion dollars of external debt threatens the stability of the country, the cause of democracy in South America, even the structure of world finance."

For all these reasons, I affirm with deep conviction that the Brazilian crisis no longer can be resolved by purely economic intruments. We shall either have a political solution, or none at all. It is no longer just a matter of paying what we owe—and we are indeed going to pay every last cent, if people give us time and conditions for doing so—but of deciding whether or not Brazil is entitled to have a future at all. That decision implies a series of short and long term measures that are not going to be solved with a calculating machine but through the political consensus of the Brazilians and their partners throughout the world.

A moratorium on the external debt is a decision that a country takes only when no other alternative is available to it. Brazil does not wish to reach that point. What we seek is an overall solution, negotiated with all our creditors, to establish a truly feasible program for payments. At the present time we are already assuming many of the burdens habitually resulting from a moratorium, but without the freedom of action that a moratorium would permit. Let me explain what I mean:

During 1983, external loans for productive purposes practically came to a halt. Our extremely low percentage of imports in relation to the gross internal product, less than 8%, has a tendency to decline even further, hampering the acquisition of vital components of many products we manufacture and jeopardizing the volume of our exports, without which we cannot generate dollar earnings to pay for what we owe. And a result of the high interest we are paying for debt servicing, the 6 billion dollars surplus we shall get on our commercial balance at the cost of a violent retraction in imports, will mean but little compared with the 11 billion dollars we shall have to pay in interest alone, in addition to the amortization of the short-term principal.

In view of the recent upward value of the dollar, we are paying more and more for what we buy and receiving less and less for what we sell. More than that, we are facing a series of protectionist measures in the countries we export to, including the United States. The negotiations we had been engaged in to modify the terms of our payments have been burdensome and not very productive, especially during these last few months. In other words, from being treated like a credit risk, we end up actually becoming a credit risk. Now, what would you do in our place?

In my opinion, Brazil ought to press for a five-point program:

(a) Automatic conversion of interest falling due in the next two years into long term loans, with a minimum grace period of three years. Such a measure, adopted through political channels at a government level, would permit creditor banks to enter the unpaid interest on their accounts as new loans rather than as losses. In other words, the ideal would be to request concession of a waiver by the Comptroller of Currency, to permit such a type of arrangement, which would facilitate Brazil's strategy of adjustment with financing. It is worthwhile calling to mind that similar schemes were adopted in the cases of renegotiation of indebtedness by Mexico and Nicaragua.

(b) Extension of Project 2 for renegotiation of the Brazilian external debt for the first two years, which would also be equivalent to converting into long term loans those installments falling due on the principal of the credits contracted in the past.

(c) Support by the governments of the developed countries, especially the United States, for official financial institutions such as the World Bank, that supply long-term credit, to finance investment projects. Supply of such resources would make it possible to develop innumerable investment opportunities providing high social returns, and prepare for the resumption of the process of economic development, interrupted ever since 1981.

(d) Reduction of the protectionism exercised by the developed countries against exports from the developing ones. The economic authorities of the industrialized countries need to understand that expansion of exports is the sole effective alternative for facing up to the heavy financial burdens of external indebtedness. Moreover, protectionism ends up by penalizing consumers in the developed countries themselves, more particularly the poorer sectors of the population, that would be purchasing the less expensive products exported by the developing countries.

(e) Reduction of the U.S. public deficit, which would cause a decline in international interest rates, benefiting not only Brazil and other debtor countries but the economy of the United States as well. It is unjust to demand that merely Brazil and other developing countries, with balance of payments problems, strive to balance their public finances, while the budgetary imbalance of the largest economy in the world increases, thereby boosting tremendously the cost of credit.

It would be ideal for these measures to be accepted by the public and private institutions Brazil owes money to, for if Brazil goes down, economically or politically, it will not go down alone. The rest of Latin America and the international banking system will go down with it.

The other question that is raised frequently in my country is: "How come Brazil got to owe so much?" In the first place, it was the Brazilian themselves that were responsible for it. We should have known better to resist the many offers of loans made by banks that wanted to remunerate their shareholders, whatever the risks, rather than lose out to competitors.

Then again, the petrodollars were easy to come by and flowed in a never-ending stream. Their port of destination was at all times the place paying the highest rate. The bankers rushed to Brazil with their enticing offers just at they ran to other nations as well. Mexico, today on the way to recovery, after the black September of last year, reached the point of procuring funds equivalent to the capital of the largest private bank in the world, the Bank of America.

Yes, we should have turned a deaf ear. But in any case, being a developing country means being a debtor country, an importer of resources. Between 1870 and 1890 the United States built up an external debt that mounted then, as ours does in Brazil today, to about 300% of the amount of one year's exports. And in Canada, in 1913, according to Economic Nobel prize winner W. A. Lewis, the debits with foreign countries reached a level of 860% of exports, which did not, however, prevent that country from becoming in due time one of the most affluent nations in the Western world.

We needed all the money we could get to prospect for petroleum, to develop the greatest fuel alcohol project in the world and build hydro-electric plants, as alternatives to oil and gasoline, to settle the Amazon West and produce foodstuffs, to give jobs to the 3 million Brazilians entering the labor market every year to win for them a hope for the future.

Our debt was not for financing the purchase of superfluous items but to build up a country as large as the United States. It is quite true we were in too much of a hurry, even though Rio was founded earlier than New York, but no one, not even the banks and governments of the world, had counted on so sharp a decline in the prices of crude oil and the consequent damming up of available funds. We were wrong. But we were in good company.

Brazil today is the eighth largest economy in the world. It not only has the greatest agricultural frontier waiting to be developed in the western world, it is the world's largest exporter of coffee and the second largest exporter of soya beans. It also puts out industrial products that are more and more competitive and that bring in more foreign exchange earnings than agriculture itself. In the mining sector, ore strike follows ore strike. In just three years we have changed from importers into exporters of gold. Our reserves of gold, iron ore and other metals appraised by international experts at about US $600 billion, are over six times our total foreign debt.

Today the economy is at a standstill. The level of employment in industry has fallen to where it was five years ago, while population continues to expand at 3% a year. Internal interest rates have accompanied those charged abroad, suffocating companies that have to borrow so as to produce and grow. Inflation is expected to reach 160% by the end of the year. And the conventional remedies such as containing wages so as to contain demand are of scant merit in a country where the minimum wage is equivalent to 2 dollars a day and per capita average consumption is negligible.

We will need to find a way that will enable us to restrain inflation, lower our public deficit and recover economic growth, without which democracy will endure enormous risk.

We will need to attract new investments and financing in order to provide more jobs and to carry out undelayable public works, without having to print new money. We will have to cut down waste and reorder priorities, as if we were living on an economy of war. In other words we are going to need bold new creative formulas.

But those goals, that are not just ours but also those of all mankind—for President Reagan himself has recorded his indignation at the residual pockets of poverty in so prosperous a country as yours, will necessarily entail the constructing of a new world economic order.

What type of order it will be, we do not know. But it will undoubtedly be far different from the economic world that emerged from Bretton Woods. It is no longer a matter of rebuilding a society already mature such as that of Europe and Japan, but of building an entire new society in the Southern hemisphere.

The world can no longer be divided by an imaginary line, north of which people go to the physician so as to lose weight and south of which the people die of hunger without ever having seen such a thing as a physician.

TUNISIA

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, too often, we focus our attention on nations which are the center of controversy while we ignore the moderate states which contribute so much to the family of nations. High on the list of the moderate, contributing nations is the Republic of Tunisia. Since 1956, the Tunisian people have met the challenges of independence without the turmoil which so many other nations have experienced. In 1957, for instance, the National Assembly of Newly Independent Tunisia replaced the hereditary ruler of the country, the Bey, with a provisional President. No shots were fired; no blood was spilled. The former ruler quietly and peacefully was removed from power and a Republic was established.

The manner in which Tunisians transformed their Government well illustrates the moderation and balance which has characterized Tunisian policy ever since. Last summer, when few could be found to accept the Palestinian leaders and combatants from Beirut, the Tunisians offered to help. Without their assistance, Ambassador Phil Habib might not have been able to arrange the withdrawal of the Palestinians from Beirut and that tragedy could have been worse.

The Tunisians have also displayed remarkable forthrightness in promoting moderate policies when moderation was not supported by others. President Bourguiba, in his famous Jericho speech in 1965, was the first Arab leader to call for direct Israeli-Arab negotiations to end the Middle East conflict. Today, as radical Arabs increasingly reject a negotiated settlement, the Tunisians remain firm in their support for a peaceful solution to that regional problem.

At the same time, the Tunisian Government and people endeavor to achieve economic development while retaining free and open institutions. Their success at improving economic conditions in Tunisia is a model for many other countries.

Despite the successes of the past, economic hurdles and regional instability still pose serious difficulties. American economic and security assistance is designed to help them meet these challenges and to demonstrate the mutuality of interests of our two nations. Tunisians have chosen the path of moderation and their success reflects well on all who strive for economic development, individual freedom, and the resolution of conflict through negotiation.

Mr. President, over the past 8 years, I have made two extensive trips to the Middle East calling on Israel and 13 Arab countries. Each time I have been accompanied by our Ambassador, and have insisted that our Ambassador be with me to always show a commonality of purpose of the legislative and executive branches of our Government.

In each case in Arab countries, I have urged the chief of state to adopt a policy that will lead toward the recognition of the reality and existence of Israel, the necessity of Israel existing as a sovereign nation behind defendable and definable borders, the need for the people of Israel to live in peace, and the need for all peoples of the Middle East to live in peace.

I have had many, many assurances that most Middle Eastern leaders accept this reality. They recognize Israel is here to stay. But when I come to the bottom line, "Will you authorize me to quote you?" there is some degree of reluctance.

In contrast, each time I have called on President Bourguiba and have asked, "May I have permission to state publicly that you today reaffirm the position that you took in 1965," which was that it was realistic for the Arab world to recognize that Israel was here to stay. He said, without equivocation, "You have my permission and you may do so."

So, once again I pay tribute and salute not only a remarkable leader and a remarkable person but a country that has steadfastly proven it is a great friend of he United States, and a great friend of free nations. Tunisia has withstood, with our backing and support certainly, attempts from within and attempts from without to undermine its security and its independence.

We know the Tunisians. We know who their adversary has been. We have stood with Tunisia, and I trust we will always stand with the Tunisians. They have proven their freindship and their devotion to peace, stability, security, and progress.

EXTENSION OF PERIOD FOR ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS UNTIL 2:45 P.M.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I will not take but a moment, because I know the Senator from Arizona is seeking recognition.

Mr. President, the President of the Arab Republic of Egypt is here and will be visiting with Members, including having coffee, in the Foreign Relations Committee room at 2:15 p.m.

I have discussed this with the minority leader, and he and I agree that in view of that and in deference to our distinguished visitor that we should extend the time for the transaction of routine morning business so that Members will have a maximum opportunity to pay their respects.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the time for the transaction of routine morning business be extended until 2:45 p.m. under the same terms and conditions.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is ordered.

Mr. BAKER. I thank the Senator from Arizona.

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. HOLIDAY

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I know that sometime today we will take up the subject contained in H.R. 3706, which is an act to amend title 5 of the United States Code to make the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., a legal public holiday.

Mr. President, several weeks ago I commented on this. I would like to repeat it, or substantially repeat it, because I do not know if I will have a chance to get the floor when the vote comes.

Mr. President, I think Martin Luther King has done a great deal of good for his country. I think he performed in an honorable way. But, Mr. President, when it comes to naming a holiday after a man—I do not care if he is black or whatever he is—I think that person should have been dead at least 50 years.

I can think, for example, of Thomas Jefferson. He does not have a holiday named after him. Abraham Lincoln does not have a holiday named after him. Charles Lindbergh does not have a holiday named after him.

With no disrespect meant to Martin Luther King, I intend to vote against the bill for a national holiday, frankly, for two reasons: One, the one which I have recited, the fact that we have not had enough time to fully judge his contributions to our country; and, second, because it means one more Monday that is a holiday. And we are slowly getting ourselves into a way in this country where we are going to have nothing but holidays every Monday. I oppose this move for that reason, if for no other reason.

So, again, I say, Mr. President, without any disrespect to Martin Luther King or any disrespect for his memory, but out of the great respect for many, many, many Americans, black and white, who have gone before us who are not recognized in this manner, I do not intend to vote for a holiday for Mr. King.

I hope the good judgment of my colleagues will prevail, because there are many, many, many people that we should recognize in this fashion in this country.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. HEFLIN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BIRTHDAY OF MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR., AS A FEDERAL HOLIDAY

Mr. HOLLINGS. Mr. President, many outstanding Americans and their individual accomplishments have been acclaimed in these Halls. And we have special days to mark the anniversaries of the birth of some of our most heralded forefathers, like Washington and Lincoln. But today it is time to recognize a man who accomplished a great deal not because of the power of his office, but because of the power of his message.

Few have done more to change America than Martin Luther King, Jr., a man of vision who for many Americans came to symbolize the equality of all Americans. Perhaps most important, he had a dream—the American dream. And he fought mightily for it without sticks, stones, or fists, but with the call that we, the people, shall overcome.

Dr. King's words will be remembered and so will his profound influence on historic legislation affecting civil rights and voting rights. Yet, some may forget the struggle, the determination, and the crusade. They may forget that the air was saturated with hate and fear and that the perseverance and eloquence of one great man inspired a people and a world to search souls and right civil wrongs.

Twenty-seven years ago there was Rosa Parks, a weary black seamstress who was arrested and fined $10 for failing to take a seat at the back of a Montgomery City lines bus. Dr. King organized a boycott of the bus system and arranged car pools to carry the 25,000 blacks who ordinarily rode the buses. Dr. King and his fellow ministers who organized against the bus system were later fined $500 for their actions and charged another $500 for court costs. But the cause marched on.

Dr. King told the story of one black minister, stopping his car to pick up an elderly black woman during the bus boycott. The minister said to the woman, "Sister, aren't you getting tired?" She replied, "My soul has been tired for a long time. Now my feet are tired and my soul is resting."

Thus a chain reaction for social change through peaceful means was started. The cause marched on with the freedom riders in the summer of 1961. It marched on through the streets of Birmingham in 1963. It marched on across the Edmund Pettus Bridge into Selma. And it marched on to the Nation's Capital and beyond.

But the journey was never easy. Freedom riders were slugged, burned, and savaged with iron pipes. In Birmingham of 1963 "white only" signs were almost as plentiful as the blossoms on magnolia trees. Hundreds of peaceful demonstrators were thrown in jail at the singing of "we shall overcome." Dr. King himself spent a week in solitary confinement where he wrote his famous "Letter from a Birmingham Jail," telling America that it was not pleasant to be called "boy" or "nigger," to be made to feel inferior, to be black in America.

The struggles in Birmingham and the struggles in Selma, throughout the South and throughout the Nation, were often met by tear gas, clubbings, and mass arrests. But the confrontations of violence and nonviolence not only called attention to specific incidences, places or civil wrongs, it induced a Nation to confront its conscience and protect the most fundamental rights of a free society—the right to vote and the freedom to be.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues today to commemorate the birth of a man who sought to make a living reality of our fundamental principles, that "all men are created equal," and that we all have a right to "life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., not only furthered the cause of black Americans, he furthered the cause of all Americans. Indeed, America was his cause. It is time that we recognize his efforts, his accomplishments, and his spirit, for with them lies not only a dream but the foundation of freedom upon which this great Nation has been built.

PENTAGON SPENDING SPREE

Mr. EAGLETON. Mr. President, understandably, nothing rankles American taxpayers more than waste in Government spending. When someone rips off the food stamp program (and some people do) or when someone rips off the welfare program (and some people do), taxpayers get indignant. Taxpayers work hard to make a living and rightfully resent that the money they pay in taxes sometimes goes to waste.

It is a curious thing that that same righteous indignation does not apply to the Defense Department when it squanders money by the hundreds of millions of dollars.

In the category of egregious, frenetic waste, consider this article from the Kansas City Star of October 2, 1983.

The Defense Department, like all government agencies, hates to have money left over at the end of the fiscal year. So when the Pentagon faced the end of the government's fiscal year Friday, it went on a one-day, $4.2 billion shopping spree.

Veteran Pentagon observers said it was the largest single-day defense expenditure since the Vietnam War ended a decade ago.

To avoid having to return any part of its fiscal 1983 appropriation to the Treasury Department, the Pentagon awarded 234 contracts and wiped out what would have been a surplus. Just the bare-bones description of those last-minute contracts covered 29 pages.

The Wall Street Journal describes this as a spending binge. Amongst the largest recipients of this binge were Honeywell, Inc. ($562.5 million) and General Electric ($434.5 million). The 29 pages of contracts cover several dozen corporations scattered around the country.

To be sure, not all of these contracts are wasteful. Many are probably in our national security interest. But why the last-minute spending rush to pour the dollars out of the Pentagon treasury before the money lapses at fiscal year end?

If the Agriculture Department did this same thing with food stamp money, taxpayers probably would be aroused. They should be just as aroused when the Pentagon does it.

To get to the bottom of this situation, I have by letter urged the chairman of the Senate Defense Appropriations Subcommittee, Senator TED STEVENS, to utilize the investigative resources of the Senate Appropriations Committee to probe this matter and to schedule an oversight hearing thereon. This hearing should determine whether these last-minute expenditures were truly necessary.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mrs. HAWKINS). Without objection, it is so ordered.

MARTIN LUTHER KING, JR. HOLIDAY

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, for some time now I have announced the intention of the leadership on this side to go to the consideration of the Martin Luther King holiday bill. It was postponed once for good and sufficient reasons. The announcement was made at that time, and then again last week, that on today we would go to that measure, and indeed we will. That is H.R. 3706, which is Calendar Order No. 343.

Madam President, I have discussed this with the minority leader, who is aware of the situation; with the distinguished chairman of the Judiciary Committee, the Senator from South Carolina, with the distinguished Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE); and with Senator HELMS, who is on the floor.

Madam President, first, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3706, Calendar Order No. 343.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, reserving the right to object, I am always reluctant to oppose a unanimous-consent request by the leadership, but in this case I must.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Objection is heard.

Mr. BAKER. Madam President, as always, the Senator from North Carolina has been kind enough to advise me that was his intention.

Madam President, also, as I will move shortly to the consideration of H.R. 3706, I suspect that the debate will not be swift and prompt.

No Senator will be taken by surprise, I am sure, when I say that it is the intention of the leadership on this side—I would even presume to say perhaps the joint leadership—to attempt to limit the debate on the motion to proceed as and when we reach that, the bill itself.

Mr. BYRD. Madam President, will the majority leader yield?

Mr. BAKER. Yes, I yield.

Mr. BYRD. So Senators should not be under any delusion, I signed the cloture motion. I was No. 16 on it.

Mr. BAKER. That may be. Madam President, and, notwithstanding the warm and cordial friendship that really does exist between the minority leader and me, I am told that it is perhaps the first time that the minority leader and I, since I have been majority leader, have both been singatories to the same cloture motion.

Mr. President, I now move that the Senate turn to the consideration of H.R. 3706, the Martin Luther King holiday bill.

Mr. HELMS. Madam President, just a few hours before the Senate recessed on August 4, there was a movement in the Senate to rush through at the last minute H.R. 3706, which would make a national holiday of the birthday of Martin Luther King. I felt obliged at that time to register strong objection. I did not then and I do not now favor another national holiday, shutting down this country, for Martin Luther King or anybody else. What we need to concentrate on in this country, Madam President, is more productivity, not more leisure time. Moreover, the extreme haste with which some wanted the Senate to move on such significant legislation was not at all in keeping with the Senate tradition of full debate and careful deliberation.

Madam President, just so the record will be clear as to how quickly the proposed national holiday legislation has moved and how scant the consideration has been in connection with this matter in the 98th Congress, let me review the measure's chronology.

On June 16 of this year, H.R. 3345 was introduced in the House of Representatives to make a national holiday of Dr. King's birthday. No hearings were held, yet the bill was favorably reported by the House Committee on Post Office and Civil Service to the full House of Representatives on July 26.

On July 29, a bill identical to H.R. 3345 but with a new number, H.R. 3706, was introduced. This change obviously was made in order to accommodate certain House Members who wanted their names included on the printed bill as original cosponsors.

On August 2, this new bill, H.R. 3706, was discharged by the Post Office Committee by suspension of the rules. On that same day, again by suspension of the rules, the House called up the measure and passed it.

Bear in mind, Madam President, not 1 minute of hearings was conducted on the pros and cons of this legislation. Not one.

In any case, Madam President, the Senate received the bill on August 3. Instead of its being sent to the appropriate committee, the Committee on the Judiciary, for consideration, for hearings, the bill was read twice and placed right on the calendar.

The very next day, August 4, with Senators expecting to go into recess within a few hours, some of my distinguished colleagues proposed that the bill be brought up quietly so that it could sail through, probably with a voice vote, with little or no debate.

Madam President, what goes on? Why are those who favor this national holiday, which will cost our economy between $4 and $12 billion, depending on whose estimate you take—why could not, why should not this bill have been referred to the Committee on the Judiciary for consideration, as is normal procedure? Why the haste?

The Senate was in no position to act on this matter on August 4, because I regretfully told the majority leader that I would be obliged to talk a while on it. As I indicated earlier, that was the day that the Senate went into recess for the month of August.

Madam President, because of my opposition to the legislation and because of what has been perceived by many Americans as a steamroller approach, I had to make clear on August 4 that I felt obliged to resist consideration at that time of H.R. 3706. I had hoped that a measure of comity and commonsense would prevail during the August recess and that the we would come back here and that the bill would be referred to the Committee on the Judiciary and that hearings would be held so that the pros and cons of the proposition could be heard. But that did not occur. The bill is still on the calendar and my good friend, whom I admire and respect so much, the distinguished majority leader, has just moved for its consideration by the Senate.

Madam President, it continues to be my strong hope that, after having an opportunity to reflect further on the implications of this proposal, the proponents of this legislation will abandon any inclination to move precipitately or rashly and consider what we are doing with such a proposal.

If this bill is laid before the Senate, it is my intention to move to commit it to the Judiciary Committee for consideration and for hearings. That is all I ask. If the Senate will simply follow its normal procedures in matters of important legislation, I assure Senators that it would not be my intent to delay consideration of this proposal once it has been reported back to the Senate by the Judiciary Committee. But unless and until the public has been given a right to say yea or nay, for or against, pro or con, I must object.

It is unrealistic to expect quick passage on the floor of any measure that Congress has had before it in one form or another for 15 years but repeatedly has declined to act. Now there is an atmosphere of pressure, intimidation, even threats that if Senators do not vote for this bill, all sorts of unhappy things will happen next year. I, for one, am not going to knuckle under to such intimidation, and I hope other Senators will not.

I do not ask Senators to change their position; I ask Senators simply to vote to send the bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee, where it should have gone in the first place, and let there be consideration and public hearings on it.

I cannot understand why that is not a fair request.

As to the merits of H.R. 3706, I must confess that I find it difficult to believe that the proponents of the bill have given even scant thought to the ramifications and the implications of this proposal.

Madam President, can they be serious about virtually shutting down this country for yet another holiday each year? Have they considered what it will cost in terms of money and taxes and jobs? I have come to the conclusion that many have not given those implications one iota of consideration. And I do not think it speaks well of the Senate. Frankly, with the economy struggling to make a comeback, I am convinced that we need fewer, not more, national holidays. There are nine already: New Year's Day, Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Fourth of July, Labor Day, Columbus Day, Veterans Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day.

Now, one distinguished Member of the House of Representatives has estimated that the potential cost to the American economy—and he is talking about Government and the private sector—would be $12 billion.

Now, I do not know whether his estimate is correct or not, but I think that perhaps the correct figure lies somewhere between $4 and $12 billion. How much closer to one than the other I do not know.

And the ironic thing to me is that black citizens, who, above all others, need jobs would ask, demand this Senate to pass this legislation without any hearings, without the normal processes of the Senate being utilized. I just do not understand it.

Madam President, I asked the Library of Congress to give me an assessment of the direct costs of this proposal. I was informed that at the beginning it would cost U.S. taxpayers $270 million for pay and benefits and lost productivity among the Federal employees alone. That is just for openers. The taxpayers will be hit for another $692 million to cover the pay, benefits and lost productivity among State and local government employees, assuming—and I think it is a fair assumption—that the States follow the Federal lead in this matter.

In addition, the Chamber of Commerce of the United States estimates that the cost to the private sector in terms of payroll for full-time employees would be $4.3 billion for this one additional day of shutting down this country.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. HELMS. I would prefer to finish my statement, if the Senator does not object.

Mr. KENNEDY. I would hope that in his statement——

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, who has the floor?

Mr. KENNEDY [continuing]. The Senator will give the authority for such a statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. COCHRAN). The Senator from North Carolina has the floor.

Mr. HELMS. I thank the Chair.

The picture of direct cost for an additional holiday looks something like this. The public sector cost, Federal, State and local, $962 million for one single new national holiday; private sector cost, estimated, $4.3 billion, for a total of $5.262 billion per new national holiday.

Now, Mr. President, that figure is horrendous enough in an economy that is struggling to recover, at a time when a chorus of political voices rises every day saying we must do something about unemployment, we must do something, they say, about productivity. I agree with both of them. But as the saying goes, "Here we go again."

This figure does not, I say again, account for the indirect cost to the overall economy. Trying to get all the costs, indirect as well as direct, is difficult, but at least we know that there are valid estimates concluding that $5.262 billion will be taken out of this economy.

Now, is it worth it? Every citizen, every Senator, of course, is obliged to make his or her judgment about that. In any case, whether one is inclined to accept any specific or precise figures, the fact remains, no matter who is doing the figuring, the cost of an additional national holiday is enormous.

Now, I have given a great deal of thought to that. All of us have our individual heroes. I have mine. There are many notable Americans in our history for whom no holiday exists. As the matter now stands, for example, I have often wondered why there was not a national holiday for Thomas Jefferson, who happens to be my favorite. There are many who would like to see a holiday for Franklin D. Roosevelt or John F. Kennedy or Booker T. Washington. Each of us could compile a sizable list.

Mr. President, I have been told that it is political suicide to oppose this proposal. It may be, but America needs to get productivity up, not water it down more. We need to reduce the tax burden, not increase it. We need to cut Federal spending, not increase it.

Mr. President, when one sector of the electorate feels very strongly and very passionately about a cause, it is a serious matter to oppose that cause. When people on one side feel very passionately about the matter, it is extremely difficult to ask them to lay their passion to one side and be objective in their assessment of the matter. I am not about to say that I do not have strong convictions myself about the proposal to create this new national holiday, to shut this country down for another national holiday. But I think that there are reasonable arguments and dispassionate analyses which ought to help bring our people together on this issue rather than drive them apart.

I think the best way for that to occur is for the Senate to say we are going to follow our normal procedures. Since it has not been given 1 minute's consideration in hearings in the House of Representatives or in the Senate, let us say we are going to send this bill to the Senate Judiciary Committee where hearings can be held and the people invited to come in and speak pro or con.

Those who object to it can never say that they were not given an ample opportunity to make themselves heard. But if we proceed along the track that we are now following, there are citizens all across this country who will be resentful. They will be hostile toward this Congress, and they will feel that they did not get a fair shake in being able to express themselves on a controversial, vital issue.

A holiday—a national holiday, in particular—is, or should be, an occasion for shared values, for the commemoration of things which we as a nation as a whole hold in common. While Dr. King, in his public image, did appeal to many of those shared values, his very name itself remains a source of tension, a deeply troubling symbol of divided society.

I do not refer to the tensions of racism. I readily admit that racism lingers in our society. But I think it is interesting, when one talks about racism, to try to find at least two people in the Senate or in any other group to agree what the word racism means. So I am reluctant to use a word that is subject to so many different interpretations, some of them completely at odds with each other, because too often the word racism is used as a smear word to convey exactly the kind of hatred that the word pretends to deplore.

A great many of our thought leaders in the media keep at a hand quickly available ax handle to bludgeon those with whom they disagree. They dredge up the word racism and apply it, as fact—when it is not fact. But I contend that relations between persons depend upon what is in their hearts, not upon their color; and I suspect that what we often hear described as racism are merely the same old vices to which mankind has always been susceptible at its worst.

The human soul is capable of both good and evil, and there is a good bit of both in each of us. We know from experience, even from our personal experiences, that human beings sometimes choose evil, so we should not be surprised that evil exists in the world, even though some persons, for political or sociological reasons, may refer to some of these evils as racism, instead of using the more accurate and traditional moral categories.

I say that to emphasize that Martin Luther King's repeated and well-publicized appeals to love and brotherhood found, during his lifetime—and still find—a broad appeal to men of goodwill, because they are basic things upon which we can all agree. But there are many who point out—and they are sincere and they are not without foundation when they say it—that the image of Dr. King as a religious leader blends quickly into the image of Dr. King as a political leader, as a man who was seeking to use the power of government to reshape and redistribute the power within the Government. Indeed, the veneer of religious imagery with which he cloaked his political concepts created the very tension which his name still invokes.

Mr. President, I submit that Dr. King's political views did not necessarily follow from his stated religious convictions, nor is there any reason for a Christian or any religious person to apply Dr. King's principles to the structure of society in the way that Dr. King did.

The tension between his religious and his political views was matched by the tension in his methods, between his preaching of nonviolence and his calculated use of nonviolence as a provocative act to disturb the peace of the State and to trigger, in many cases, overreaction by authorities.

So the perceptions exist among many in this country, right or wrong, that the legacy of Dr. King was really a division, not love; and although the anger of that division has cooled, mistrust remains. In any case, two generations have been led to concentrate on politics instead of production; and the bitterness that remains results from the failure of political methods to solve economic problems.

The palpable truth is—and many Americans are learning it—that you cannot eat politics. Dr. King has been presented as a hero to his people by a generation of people who may qualify as myth makers. Although Dr. King used the categories and rhetoric of Christianity in preaching the Bible, there are countless Americans who remember his associates, who remember that the then President of the United States advised him to diassociate himself from people specified by the then President.

He was a proponent of the same movement which today goes by the name of liberation theology. The view of the liberation theology is that a theology of God and salvation from sin is outmoded.

Instead, they say salvation is to be found in this world and we work out our salvation by bringing about some idealized view of a just society even if to do so requires destruction, theft, terrorism, all the other fruits of revolution. It is the same kind of liberation, I guess, that was whispered to Adam and Eve in the biblical accounts and the result was always the loss of Eden rather than the achievement of Eden.

Be that as it may, Mr. King's political views were those of a radical political minority that had little to do with racial minorities. It is this fact, not his exploitation of racial feelings, that makes it inappropriate to rush ahead without hearings, without due process, if you want to call it that, in the Senate.

The fact is that Dr. King's program at least in part was conceived and aided by men and women who were not loyal to the United States. And I use the term "not loyal" not in the general sense, but in the technical political sense of those striving for the violent overthrow of the Constitution of the United States. I refer specifically to members of the Communist Party of the United States, a revolutionary action organization funded and directed from Moscow. Although there is no record that Dr. King himself ever joined the Communist Party, he kept around him as his prinicpal advisers and associates certain individuals who were taking their orders and direction from a foreign power.

Dr. King kept as his adviser—perhaps, some would say, his key advisers—men who vowed to overthrow our Government and our way of life. He kept them even though non-Communist friends, who were sympathetic to his cause, repeatedly warned him that to keep Communists in his advisory and action structure was to bring disrepute upon his cause. Those who warned him included the President and the Attorney General of the United States.

There are some who might say that all of these things are irrelevant. What matters to them is that Dr. King seemed to be the conscience of a civil rights movement and that the aims of the civil rights movement were reform, not revolution, and some might argue that the participation of Marxists in Dr. King's movement did not taint the essence of what Dr. King accomplished. To the contrary, they might argue by participating in such a grand movement these Marxists themselves were brought into the political process and they argue that it is good to have Marxists participating in the system instead of trying to destroy it.

But this comes down to being an extremely tendentious argument which I do not believe a lot of Americans are willing to swallow.

I think most Americans would feel that the participation of Marxists in the planning and direction of any movement taints that movement at the outset. Not just communism itself but philosophical Marxism lies outside of the national consensus, or at least I hope it does.

Others may argue that Dr. King's thought may have been merely Marxist in its orientation. But the trouble with that is that Marxism-Leninism, the official philosophy of communism, is an action-oriented revolutionary doctrine.

And Dr. King's action-oriented Marxism about which he was cautioned by the leaders of this country, including the President at that time, is not compatible with the concepts of this country.

These are just some of the thoughts that many Americans have expressed to me. It has been widely advertised that I am going to filibuster this proposal. I do not know about that yet. We could put an end to the extension of time spent on this measure simply by sending this proposal to the Judiciary Committee with or without instructions to conduct hearings on it and report back at any time satisfactory to the Senate. That is all I ask.

I ask only that this proposal not be treated differently from other major controversial issues, that at least we give the people an opportunity to speak out pro or con and then report back if that is the will of the Judiciary Committee so that the Senate can act on it.

I give my commitment, if that procedure is followed, this Senator will consume no more time than normal depending on the language of the legislative proposal reported out. I will be committed, as a Senator, to offer an amendment if I feel it is necessary.

But you are going to find, Mr. President, holy wrath in opposition to the proposal that we follow the normal procedures of the Senate. We are going to hear all sorts of explanations to the effect that we have heard all of this before in prior years et cetera, et cetera, et cetera, as the King of Siam said.

But these protestations will be hollow because if this proposal is as sacrosanct as it is pretended to be, then what fear should we have of an exploration of the proposal? As I say, at the appropriate time, I am going to offer a motion to send this legislation to the Judiciary Committee. We cannot recommit it because it was never there in the first place. So the motion will be to commit it to the Judiciary Committee. And I shall be very interested in observing how Senators vote on this proposal, particularly in light of my assurance, my guarantee, that once that is done, once hearings are held, once the legislation is reported out, this Senator will do nothing inordinate to hold up action on the proposal.

But I do feel obliged, Mr. President, to raise a respectful protest in response to the manner in which this proposal has been handled thus far. That is it. We can end this debate this very afternoon, get it over with. All we have to do is refer this legislation to the appropriate committee, ask for hearings, and ask for a prompt report to the Senate.

For the life of me, I cannot see that that is too much to ask.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, as a cosponsor of this legislation, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded so that I may make an opening statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, before making a formal statement I must say that I am enormously distressed by these allusions, suggestions, inferences which are made by a colleague of mine, the Senator from North Carolina, about Dr. King's involvement with the Communist Party.

Those charges, Mr. President, were raised first and most vigorously by the arch-segregationists bent on retaining the rule of racism. It is their heirs in the last-ditch stand against equal justice who seek to divert us today on this legislation with such matters.

I do not think that the comments of the Senator from North Carolina are worthy of response and I will not dignify them with a reply. They reflect no credit on this body, and I am sure they would be shunned by the vast majority of the American people, including the citizens of his own State.

Mr. President, there have been comments made on the floor of the U.S. Senate about whether this legislation has had adequate hearings, and there has even been some observation that I, in the U.S. Senate, have been somewhat remiss in not holding hearings on this legislation. As a member of the Judiciary Committee and as the former chairman of the Judiciary Committee when this legislation was introduced, I might say we had in 1979, 2 days of hearings.

The Senate Judiciary Committee reported this bill to the U.S. Senate by a vote of 10 to 6, and to suggest on the floor of the U.S. Senate that the Senate Judiciary Committee has not had the hearings or that the House of Representatives has not had the hearings, shows gross ignorance about the legislative history of this particular proposal, and I think it was demonstrated by the Senator from North Carolina in not only his understanding of the legislative history but also with regard to his comments about the costs of various holidays.

Mr. President, I will put into the RECORD at an appropriate place the information that the Senate Judiciary Committee and the House Judiciary Committee have, both reports which are available to the Members of this body, have available to them here on the floor of the U.S. Senate, in talking about the costs to the American economy of this particular holiday.

The fact is, Mr. President, this particular issue has been before the U.S. Senate for a period of some 14 years in one form or another. It does not come as any surprise to the Members of Congress or to this body. It does not come as any surprise to the Members of the Senate Judiciary Committee, or the House of Representatives Judiciary Committee. It passed the House of Representatives 338 to 90 some several weeks ago, and now the Senator from North Carolina is trying to suggest, after due notice has been given for a period of weeks by the majority leader, that this somehow is being sprung on the U.S. Senate. That is hogwash, Mr. President. It is hogwash. Those same kinds of representations that are being made here have been made time and time again, and I have heard them when we have had to call various pieces of civil rights legislation from the calendar, and it is not an appropriate kind of commentary when we are considering the importance of this piece of legislation.

Mr. President, I welcome the opportunity to debate in the U.S. Senate, if we have that opportunity to debate in the U.S. Senate, the bill to create a natinal holiday commemorating the birth and life and message of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. This is a great day in the 200-year history of the struggle to make the American dream a reality for every American.

These are difficult times and more than ever before we must reaffirm our Nation's commitment to equality, to peace, to nonviolence, and to the right of all individuals to fulfill their potential free of prejudice and artificial limitations.

Martin Luther King dedicated his life and gave his life to complete the unfinished business of the American Revolution and the Civil War, and he helped this Nation to see that discrimination in our midst is eliminated and to accept the right of equality for all of our people, and the genius of Dr. King enabled America to confront and resolve that principle of equality in a peaceful and nonviolent manner, and he is one of the true giants of American history and he richly deserves the extraordinary honor we confer on him today.

In these years of deepening poverty and unacceptable unemployment there are millions of Americans whose skin is not white who wonder about their future and our Nation. They see a severe recession that closes the door of opportunity. They see an economic policy that is unfair, inequitable, and unjust. They see an attempt to retreat from voting rights and housing rights and civil rights, and, worst of all, they see a government that does not seem to care.

On August 27, over 200,000 people came to the Capital from every section of the land to ask this Nation to redeem its commitment to peace and jobs and freedom for all Americans. They came on the 20th anniversary of Dr. King's historic march on Washington in 1963. They proved in 1983 that the power of Dr. King's dream is still alive in the hearts of the Ameican people, and the item at the top of the agenda of those who marched last month is the measure we are acting on today because in honoring Dr. King, we honor the cause of equity and the cause of fairness and the cause of decency in economic progress and social justice for all Americans.

A few weeks before his death he reaffirmed his dream for America and called upon each of us to struggle for that dream. And I quote:

Let us be dissatisfied until every man can have food and material necessities for his body, culture, and educatiion for his mind, and freedom and human dignity for his spirit.

We face many vital issues in the present Congress. This legislation now before us may well be our most enduring achievement. Long after all other actions will have been forgotten people will remember his was the Congress that gave Dr. King the highest honor our Nation can bestow on any of its citizens. Presidents and Congresses will come and go, but Martin Luther King and his dream will go on so long as there is an America, and each year henceforth on this anniversary of his birth citizens of every region and every color will pause in their own lives, in their own way, in their own tribute to this man who brought us a fuller measure of justice than our Nation has ever known. In honoring Dr. King we honor the best in our country and ourselves.

Mr. President, I take some notice of the fact that we have a legislative bulletin that is put out, I imagine daily. In this case it is the one that is referred to as by the Republican Policy Committee. I am mindful that this legislation that has been introduced was introduced by, in this Congress by, Senator MATHIAS and has had bipartisan support in the Judiciary Committee. But I do think that it is important that we know where the President of the United States is going to stand. I know where the members of the Judiciary Committee stand and I know where many of us who are cosponsors of this legislation stand, but I think it is important that we find out where the President of the United States is going to stand because this is a matter of enormous importance and consequence.

I take note, Mr. President, that in the U.S. Senate Republican Policy Committee on the issue of H.R. 3706, Martin Luther King, Jr. holiday, that on the bottom it says, "Administration position not available at press time."

Well, I dare say that when we pass this legislation and we go on down to the White House we are not going to find another statement, "not available at press time." Mr. President, we need your intercession now, not down at the White House, in the Rose Garden at the signing time, we need it now, just as we needed it at the time of the Voting Rights Act; just as we needed it at the time of the Civil Rights Commission compromise proposed by Senator DOLE; just as we needed it at other times. Instead you have made recommendations and made suggestions about giving tax credits to those who gave contributions to segregated schools. Today, it is members of your party as well as this party who are prepared to stand up to this issue.

I certainly hope that, as we start this debate and this discussion here this afternoon on an issue of such importance and consequence—called off the calendar credibly by a Republican leader and supported by many Republicans in the U.S. Senate, as it was in the House of Representatives, and supported by millions of Republicans and Democrats and Independents across this country—that we have a right to know where you stand, Mr. President. Let us know, and perhaps we will not spend more time than absolutely necessary in this body on this issue which I think cries for action at this present time.

Mr. President, I know there are other of my colleagues that wish to speak on this issue. I yield the floor.

Mr. HELMS. Mr. President, in light of the comments by the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), it is important that there be such an examination of the political activities and associations of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., principally from the beginning of his work in the civil rights movement in the mid-1950's until his death in 1968. Throughout this period, but especially toward the beginning and end of his career, King associated with identified members of the Communist Party of the United States (CPUSA), with persons who were former members of or close to the CPUSA, and with CPUSA front organizations. In some important respects King's civil rights activities and later his opposition to the Vietnam war were strongly influenced by and dependent on these associations.

There is no evidence that King himself was a member of the CPUSA or that he was a rigorous adherent of academic Marxist ideology or of the Communist Party line. Nevertheless, King was repeatedly warned about his associations with known Communists by friendly elements in the Kennedy administration and the Department of Justice (DOJ) (including strong and explicit warning from President Kennedy himself). King took perfunctory and deceptive measures to separate himself from the Communists against whom he was warned. He continued to have close and secret contacts with at least some of them after being informed and warned of their background, and he violated a commitment to sever his relationship with identified Communists.

Throughout his career, King, unlike many other civil rights leader of his time, associated with the most extreme political elements in the United States. He addressed their organizations, signed their petitions, and invited them into his own organizational activities. Extremist elements played a significant role in promoting and influencing King's opposition to the Vietnam war—an opposition that was not predicated on what King believed to be the best interests of the United States but on his sympathy for the North Vietnamese Communist regime and on an essentially Marxist and anti-American ideological view of U.S. foreign policy.

King's patterns of associations and activities show that, at the least, he had no strong objection to communism, that he appears to have welcomed collaboration with Communists, and that he and his principal vehicle, the Southern Christian Leadership Conference (SCLC), were subject to influence and manipulation by Communists. The conclusion must be that Martin Luther King, Jr., was either an irresponsible individual, careless of his own reputation and that of the civil rights movement for integrity and loyalty, or that he knowingly cooperated and sympathized with subversive and totalitarian elements under the control of a hostile foreign power.

BIOGRAPHICAL DATA

Martin Luther King, Jr., was born on January 15, 1929, in Atlanta, Ga. He was the son of Alberta Williams and Martin Luther King, Sr., a Baptist minister. He was graduated from Morehouse College, Atlanta, in 1948, receiving the degree of B.A. He attended the Crozer Theological Seminary in Chester, Pa., receiving the degree of B.D. in 1951, and he received the degree of Ph. D. from Boston University in 1955. In 1953 he married Coretta Scott of Alabama, by whom he was the father of four children. On April 4, 1968, King was murdered by a rifle assault in Memphis, Tenn. On March 10, 1969, James Earl Ray, an escaped convict, pled guilty to the murder of King and was sentenced to 99 years in prison, a term he is now serving.

OPERATIONS "SOLO" AND STANLEY D. LEVISON:[1]

In the early 1950's the Federal Bureau of Investigation (FBI) undertook a long-term and highly classified counterintelligence operation against the CPUSA. The FBI persuaded a former member of the National Committee on the CPUSA and former editor of the "Daily Worker, " the party newspaper, to become active again within the party leadership and to report on party activities to the FBI. This man's name was Morris Childs, and his brother, Jack Childs, also a Communist, agreed to act as an informant as well. The FBI operation was known as SOLO, and for nearly 30 years it provided reliable and highly sensitive information about the CPUSA, its activities within the United States, and its relations with the Soviet Union to the highest authorities in the U.S. Government. At least three U.S. Presidents were aware of SOLO, and Morris Childs may have briefed President Nixon prior to his trip to Moscow in 1972. In 1980 SOLO was brought to an end. Jack Childs died on August 12, 1980, and the operation was publicly disclosed and thus terminated by historian David J.

[1] Footnotes at end of article.

Garrow in a book published the following year.

Among the most important facts learned from SOLO was that the CPUSA was dependent on a direct financial subsidy paid by the Soviet Union. About 1 million a year in Soviet funds was paid to a member of the CPUSA, usually Jack Childs himself, in New York City. Although this subsidy was illegal, the FBI allowed it to continue for a member of reasons—prosecution would have exposed SOLO and necessarily brought it to an end, and the operation was of continuing value; and the dependence of the party on Soviet funds meant that it did not seek to increase its membership and importance within the United States.

In 1953 Jack Childs reported to the FBI that an individual named Stanley David Levison (1912-1979), a New York lawyer and businessman, was deeply involved in acquiring and disposing of the funds of the Soviet subsidy to the CPUSA. Levison may have been involved as a financial benefactor to the party as early as 1954 and may have established legitimate business enterprises in the United States and Latin America in order to launder Soviet funds to the party. In this connection Levison was said to have worked with Isidore G. Needleman, the representative of the Soviet trading corporation AMTORG.

Childs also reported to the FBI that Levison assisted CPUSA leaders to acquire and manage the Party's secret funds and that he directed about $50,000 a year into the party's treasury. After the death of party treasurer William Weiner in 1954, Levison's financial role became increasingly important, and Levison, according to Childs, became "the interim chief administrator of the party's most secret funds."[2]

The FBI maintained close surveillance of Levison, but in mid to late 1955, Levison's financial role began to decline. The FBI decreased its surveillance, although Levison was believed to have occasional contacts with CPUSA leaders. The Bureau eventually terminated surveillance of Levison, probably sometime in 1957. Some indications that CPUSA leaders were disgruntled with Levison led the FBI to interview him on February 9 and March 4, 1960. It is not clear what Levison told the FBI at these interviews, but he definitely rejected the request of the FBI that he become an informant within the Communist Party.

In the summer of 1956 Bayard Rustin, himself a former member of the Young Communist League, the youth arm of the CPUSA, introduced Levison to Martin Luther King, Jr. in New York City. Levison and King soon became close friends, and Levison provided important financial, organizational, and public relations services for King and the SCLC. The FBI was not aware of their relationship until very late 1961 or early 1962, and it was the discovery of their relationship that led to the protracted and intensive FBI-DOJ surveillance of King for the remainder of his life. The FBI believed that Levison was still a Communist and that King's relationship with him represented an opportunity for the Communist Party to infiltrate and manipulate King and the civil rights movement.

Of King's dependence on Levison there can be no doubt. A DOJ task force investigating the FBI surveillance of King discussed this dependence in this report of 1977:

> The advisor's (Levison's) relationship to King and the SCLC is amply evidenced in the files and the task force concludes that he was a most trusted advisor. The files are replete with instances of his counseling King and his organization on matters pertaining to organization, finances, political strategy and speech writing. Some examples follow:
>
> The advisor organized, in King's name, a fund raising society. . . . This organization and the SCLC were in large measure financed by concerts arranged by this person. . . . He also lent counsel to King and the SCLC on the tax consequences of charitable gifts.
>
> On political strategy, he suggested King make a public statement calling for the appointment of a black to the Supreme Court. . . . This person advised against accepting a movie offer from a movie director and against approaching Attorney General Kennedy on behalf of a labor leader. . . . In each instance his advice was accepted.
>
> King's speech before the AFL-CIO National Convention was written by his advisor. . . . He also prepared King's May 1962 speech before the United Packing House Workers Convention. . . . In 1965 he prepared responses to press questions directed to Dr. King from a Los Angeles radio station regarding the Los Angeles racial riots and from the "New York Times" regarding the Vietnam War.[3]

After King's death, Coretta Scott King described Levison's role: "Always working in the background, his contribution has been indispensable," and she wrote of an obituary of King written by Levison and Harry Belafonte, "two of his most devoted and trusted friends," as "the one which best describes the meaning of my husband's life and death."[4] It may be noted that this obituary began with a description of America as "a Nation tenaciously racist * * * sick with violence * * * (and) corrosive with alienation." According to Garrow, Levison also assisted King in the writing and publication of "Stride Toward Freedom" the administration of contributions to SCLC, and the recruitment of employees of SCLC. King offered to pay Levison for all this help, but Levison consistently refused, writing that "the liberation struggle (that is, the civil rights movement) is the most positive and rewarding area of work anyone could experience."[5]

There seem to have been few if any agents and administrators in the FBI who knew of Levison's background of involvement in handling the secret and illegal Soviet funds of the CPUSA who doubted that Levison remained a Communist or under party control at the time he was working with King, and some FBI personnel have suggested that Levison may actually have held rank in the Soviet intelligence service. Garrow himself does not seriously question the accuracy of Childs' reports of Levison's earlier role in the party, but he appears to be skeptical that Levison continued to be a Communist at the time he worked with King and that he was not motivated in this work by any factor other than friendship for King and belief in the civil rights movement.

Garrow's conclusion in this respect is open to question. He is decidedly favorable to King, as opposed to J. Edgar Hoover and other anti-Communists of the time. It is not clear why Garrow came to this conclusion, since he does not appear to have had access to all FBI materials on Levison or derived from SOLO and since he appears to be largely ignorant of the nature of CPUSA activities in racial relations through front groups and surrogates and of the discipline of the party over its members.

A number of factors support the belief that Levison continued to be a Communist or to act under CPUSA control during his association with King:

First, there is no evidence that Levison broke with the CPUSA; the termination of his financial activities on behalf of the party prior to his work with King means nothing as far as his affiliation with or loyalty to the party or the Communist movement is concerned.

Second, Levison had been involved not as a rank-and-file member but as an operative involved with clandestine and illegal funding of the CPUSA by a hostile foreign power. He had had access to the highest leaders of the party and to the inmost secrets of the party. It is not likely that such tasks would be given to one who was not fully trusted by both the CPUSA leadership and by the Soviets themselves. Even if Levison had changed his mind about communism, his activities would have constituted grounds for blackmail by the party.

Third, several years after the apparent end of his financial activities for the CPUSA, Levison rejected an opportunity to act as an FBI informant against the party. Details of his discussions with the FBI are not available, but apparently they were not friendly.

Fourth, Levison testified under subpena at an executive session of the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security on April 30, 1962. This testimony is still classified. His attorney at this time was William Kunstler, who became notorious for his far left activities in the 1960's and 1970's; Kunstler had been recommended to Levison by the latter's friend, Arthur Kinoy, also a far left activist. Although Levison in his opening statement before the subcommittee denied that he was or ever had been a member of the Communist Party, he refused to answer any questions during this hearing dealing with his relations with the party or his alleged financial role in it; he pled the fifth amendment throughout the hearing.

Fifth, Levison's known policy and personnel recommendations to King exhibit a leftist orientation. He was instrumental in persuading and influencing King to oppose the Vietnam war and in hiring at least one other individual with known Communist affiliations to work in SCLC.

Sixth, prior to his work in a New York-based civil rights group called "In Friendship" in 1955, Levison had never displayed any interest in civil rights activities. The sudden development of his interest in civil rights and his extensive, time-consuming, and costly assistance to King may have been motivated by a spontaneous and enduring dedication to this cause, but there is little reason to think so. His own description of the civil rights movement as a liberation struggle suggests a Marxist perspective.

Seventh, after King was urged by DOJ to disassociate himself from Levison and was subject to surveillance and distrust by the FBI and the Kennedy administration, there was no effort on Levison's part to try to explain his past or to persuade appropriate authorities (in the FBI, DOJ, or the White House) that he had been innocent of Communist connections or that his relationship with King was not connected to his Communist affiliation. Had he been able to do so, King and the civil rights movement would have been much more favorably received by the Kennedy administration and King himself would probably have been spared several years of surveillance and harassment by the FBI. Instead, Levison and King entered into a secret and deceptive relationship by which Levison continued to influence King through an intermediary, himself of far left orientation and background.

In short, Levison consistently behaved in a manner that lent itself to a sinister interpretation, and his behavior lends further credence to the firm belief of FBI agents involved that Levison remained a Communist or under Communist control. That Levison remained under Communist control was and remains a reasonable explanation of his activities in lieu of any evidence to the contrary or any known behavior on his part that would contradict this explanation.

The FBI informed Attorney General Robert F. Kennedy of the close relationship between Levison and King and of Levison's Communist background on January 8, 1962. The Attorney General decided to warn King of Levison's background and to urge him to disassociate himself from Levison in order to spare himself, the civil rights movement, and the Kennedy administration any future embarassment. Both Burke Marshall, Assistant Attorney General, acting through Harris Wofford, White House Civil Rights Adviser, and John Seigenthaler, Administrative Assistant to the Attorney General, informed King that persons close to him were Communists or had Communist backgrounds. King expressed skepticism and made no commitment to inquire further or to take any action. Marshall brought the matter to King's attention again in subsequent meetings. On June 22, 1963, King met separately in Washington with Marshall, Robert Kennedy, and President Kennedy. All three men again warned King about the Communist affiliations of Levison and Jack O'Dell, an official of SCLC who had been promoted by Levison and who had been—and may still have been—a member of the National Committee of the CPUSA. President Kennedy, in a private conversation with King in the White House Rose Garden, compared the situation with the Profumo scandal in Great Britain and specifically stated, with reference to Levison and O'Dell, "They're Communists. You've got to get rid of them." [6]

Even after this conversation, King "made no move to sever ties with either O'Dell or Levison." [7] It was not until the FBI leaked information to the press about O'Dell and the publication of this information that King accepted O'Dell's resignation from SCLC in a letter of July 3, 1963. King had still done nothing to sever ties with Levison, and not until after a meeting of Burke Marshall with Andrew Young of SCLC did a change in their relationship occur. In this meeting Marshall told Young:

> I can't give you any proof, but, if you know Colonel Rudolph Abel of the Soviet secret intelligence, then you know Stanley Levison.[8]

This characterization suggests that the FBI may have had other facts about Levison showing a direct link with the Soviet Union.

Levison himself reportedly suggested to King that they curtail their association, and King reluctantly agreed. However, they now entered into a means of communication deliberately designed to deceive the FBI and the Kennedy administration. Levison and King were to communicate only through an intermediary—or "cut-out" in intelligence parlance—and to avoid direct contact with each other. In this way Levison could continue to influence King. Whether Levison or King instigated this clandestine and deceptive relationship is not clear. The intermediary between King and Levison, from July 1963 until 1965, when the overt contact between them was resumed, was Clarence B. Jones, a black lawyer whose left political views and firm resistance to any symptoms of racial discrimination had placed him in hot water a number of times while serving in the U.S. Army in the 1950's.[9]

Jack O'Dell continued to maintain an office at SCLC offices in New York City even after his resignation of July 3, and King and SCLC issued contradictory explanations of this continuing relationship. King himself made commitments to Federal officials that he would sever his ties to Levison and O'Dell, but telephonic surveillance of King, Levison, and Jones showed that he had not done so in regard to either individual. As Burke Marshall stated in an interview in 1970:

> If you accept the concept of national security, if you accept the concept that there is a Soviet Communist apparatus and it is trying to interfere with things here—which you have to accept—and that that's a national security issue and that taps are justified in that area, I don't know what could be more important than having the kind of Communist that this man was claimed to be by the Bureau directly influencing Dr. King.[10]

HUNTER PITTS O'DELL

Hunter Pitts O'Dell (also known as Jack O'Dell and J. H. O'Dell), known to have been extensively involved in CPUSA affairs at a high level of leadership, worked for the SCLC at least as early as 1961. O'Dell met Martin Luther King in 1959 and had communicated with him by mail in 1959 and 1960. In June, 1962, Stanley Levison recommended to King that he hire O'Dell as his executive assistant, and O'Dell subsequently was increasingly active in SCLC and was listed as a ranking employee of the organization.[11]

O'Dell testified under subpena in hearings before the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security (SISS) in New Orleans on April 12, 1956; he took the fifth amendment when asked about his organizational activities in New Orleans on behalf of the CPUSA. Materials discovered in O'Dell's apartment at the time the subpena was served were described in the annual report of the subcommittee as "Communist literature from Communist parties in various parts of the world." [12] He also took the fifth amendment when asked if he was a member of the CPUSA in a hearing before the House Committee on Un-American Activities (HCUA) on July 30, 1958. O'Dell, according to an FBI report of 1962, was elected a member of the National Committee of the CPUSA in December 1959, and, according to information submitted to

HUCA in 1961, was a member of the national committee as of that year.[13] As Garrow states:

No one, including O'Dell, denied his work with the Communist Party from the late 1940's to at least the late 1950's.[14]

O'Dell is an associate editor of Freedomways, a magazine described in 1964 by J. Edgar Hoover as an organ which the CPUSA continues to use as a vehicle of propaganda. One of the editors of Freedomways is Esther Jackson, a member of the CPUSA and wife of James Jackson, a leader of the CPUSA. O'Dell, as well as James Jackson, are included in a "list of members" of the World Peace Council for 1980-83. The World Peace Council, long known as a Soviet-controlled front organization, was described by the Central Intelligence Agency in 1982 as "the major Soviet-controlled international front organization." [15]

In October 1962, various newspapers in the United States, using information provided them by the FBI, exposed O'Dell's Communist affiliations and his current ties to King and the SCLC. King issued an inaccurate statement that sought to minimize O'Dell's work with the SCLC and accepted O'Dell's resignation. As Garrow states:

The resignation . . . was more fiction than fact, as King's own message and appointment books for late 1962 and the first half of 1963 reflect.[16]

Further news stories of June 1963, which exposed O'Dell's continuing relationship with King and his presence in the New York office of SCLC, coupled with warnings from the Kennedy administration led King again to accept the resignation of O'Dell on July 3, 1963. Even after this date, however, FBI surveillance showed a continuing relationship between O'Dell and SCLC.

There is no doubt about O'Dell's extensive and high level activities in and for the Communist Party, and his affiliations since 1961 strongly suggest continued adherence to and sympathy for the CPUSA and the Soviet Union to the present day. Despite these ties and King's knowledge of them, King promoted O'Dell within the SCLC at the behest of Levison and retained his help after twice publicly claiming to have disassociated himself from O'Dell following strong and explicit warnings from the Kennedy administration about O'Dell's Communist background and affiliations.

SOUTHERN CONFERENCE EDUCATIONAL FUND

Stanley Levison and Hunter Pitts O'Dell were not the only individuals of Communist background with whom Martin Luther King was in contact and from whom he received advice, although they were in a better position than most to exert influence on him. From the mid 1950's through at least the early 1960's, King and the SCLC were closely involved with an organization known as the Southern Conference Educational Fund (SCEF), essentially a Communist front organization. SCEF was itself dominated by the Communist Party through the party members who ran it, and some of these individuals provided assistance to King and exerted influence on him and the SCLC.

A. BACKGROUND OF SCEF

SCEF was originally founded as part of an organization known as the Southern Conference on Human Welfare (SCHW), founded in Birmingham, Ala., on September 6, 1938. SCHW was originally located in Nashville, Tenn., but later moved to New Orleans, La. In 1947, the House Committee on Un-American Activities issued a report on SCHW, which found:

Decisive and key posts (of SCHW) are in most instances controlled by persons whose record is faithful to the line of the Communist Party and the Soviet Union. . . .

The Southern Conference for Human Welfare is perhaps the most deviously camouflaged Communist-front organization. When put to the following acid test it reveals its true character:

1. It shows unswerving loyalty to the basic principles of Soviet foreign policy.

2. It has consistently refused to take sharp issue with the activities and policies of either the Communist Party, USA, or the Soviet Union.

3. It has maintained in decisive posts persons who have the confidence of the Communist press.

4. It has displayed consistent anti-American bias and pro-Soviet bias, despite professions, in generalities, of love for America.[17]

In 1944 the Special Committee on Un-American Activities (SCUA) of the House of Representatives also cited SCHW as a Communist front.[18]

Soon after its identification as a CPUSA front in 1947, SCHW was dissolved, but the Southern Conference Educational Fund continued. SCEF maintained the same address as SCHW (808 Perdido Street, New Orleans, La.) and published the same periodical ("the Southern Patriot"). In 1954 the Senate Subcommittee on Internal Security (SISS) held hearings in New Orleans on SCEF and found that at least 11 former officials of SCHW were or had been also officials of SCEF. Among these were the president and executive director of SCEF, both of whom were identified in testimony taken under oath as having been members of the CPUSA and as having been under the discipline of the CPUSA. Both individuals in their own testimony denied these allegations. The Subcommittee concluded in its report that—

An objective study of the entire record compels the conclusion that the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., is operating with substantially the same leadership and purposes as its predecessor organization, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.

The subcommittee accordingly recommends that the Attorney General take the necessary steps to present this matter before the Subversive Activities Control Board in order that a determination can be made as to the status of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc.[19]

B. BACKGROUNDS OF INDIVIDUAL LEADERS OF SCEF

At least two key associates of Martin Luther King were formally associated with SCEF as well as with the SCLC itself. The Southern Christian Leadership Conference, King's principal vehicle for civil rights activism, was officially founded in Montgomery, Ala., on August 7-8, 1957. Among the guests at the organizational meeting in Montgomery was Ella J. Baker of New York City, of the "In Friendship" organization.[20] Baker was also formally associated with SCEF as of October 1963, as a "special consultant." In 1959 Baker established SCLC headquarters in Atlanta, Ga., and was a long-standing friend of Martin Luther King. She later played a key role in the Student Non-Violent Coordinating Committee (SNCC), an organization that became notorious in the 1960's for its advocacy and instigation of racial discord and violence. John Lewis, a founder of SNCC, described Ella Baker as the spiritual mother, I guess you would call her, of SNCC.[21]

Little appears to be known of the "In Friendship" organization of which Ella Baker was the representative at the SCLC organizational meeting in 1957. However, Stanley Levison also was closely involved with this organization in New York. According to Garrow:

Levison . . . had first become involved in the southern civil rights struggle as one of the most active sponsors of a New York group named In Friendship. Organized in 1955 and 1956, In Friendship provided financial assistance to southern blacks who had suffered white retaliation because of their political activity. In Friendship has sponsored a large May, 1956, rally at Madison Square Garden to salute such southern activists, and a good percentage of the funds raised went to King's Montgomery Improvement Association.[22]

It was Levison who, with Bayard Rustin, sent Ella Baker to Atlanta to oversee the SCLC office in that city, just as he had brought O'Dell into the SCLC office in New York.

Fred L. Shuttlesworth, corresponding secretary of SCLC in 1957, was in 1963 the president and a former vice president of SCEF. Shuttlesworth was responsible for the formation of the Montgomery Improvement Association, through which King and other civil rights activists became involved in civil rights work. Several other individuals affiliated with SCEF as organizational leaders were alleged under oath to have been members of the Communist Party and to have accepted party discipline or can be shown to have had ties to known Communist Party front organizations. Internal documents of SCEF reveal that Martin Luther King was in close contact with some of these leaders of SCEF.

First, Aubrey Williams: president emeritus of SCEF in 1963, Williams had been identified as a member of the CPUSA and as having accepted the discipline of the Communist Party in the testimony of two former members of the party, Paul Crouch and Joseph Butler, before SISS in 1954. Williams denied these allegations.

Second, Dr. James A. Dombrowski: exectutive director of SCEF, Dombrowski had also been identified as a member of the Communist Party and as having accepted party discipline by witnesses Crouch and Butler before SISS in 1954. Dombrowski denied these allegations.[23]

Third, Carl Braden: field organizer for SCEF, Braden was identified as a member of the CPUSA in the testimony of Alberta Ahearn, an FBI informant in the party, before SISS on October 28, 1957. Braden later served as executive director of SCEF (1966-70) and, until 1973, information director of SCEF. Braden was indicted and conviced of advocacy of criminal sedition in the State of Kentucky in 1954 and was sentenced to 15 years imprisonment; the conviction was reversed by the decision of the U.S. Supreme Court in Pennsylvania v. Nelson, 350 U.S. 497 (1956), which struck down State sedition laws. In 1959 Braden was convicted of contempt of Congress for refusing to answer questions before HCUA. Braden served a year in a Federal penitentiary for this offense, and his conviction was upheld by the U.S. Supreme Court. Braden's wife, Anne McCarty Braden, was also identified by Alberta Ahearn as a member of the Communist Party in testimony before SISS in 1957. Anne Braden also was active within the leadership of SCEF.[24]

Fourth, William Howard Melish: Eastern representative of SCEF (in New York City) in 1963, Melish was identified as a member of the Communist Party in testimony before the Subversive Activities Control Board (SACB) in 1956 in connection with SACB hearings on the National Council of American Soviet Friendship, described by HCUA as the Communist Party's principal front for all things Russian and included in the Attorney General's List of Subversive Organizations pursuant to Executive Order 10450. William Howard Melish is the father of Howard Jeffrey Melish (also known as Jeff Melish), a member of the Student for a Democratic Society (SDS) and of the violent Weatherman faction of SDS. Jeff Melish was arrested in Chicago during the violent days of rage rioting organized by the Weatherman faction in 1969; he attended the "9th World Youth Festival in Sofia, Bulgaria," in 1968 and traveled to Cuba in 1970.[25]

Fifth, Benjamin E. Smith: formerly counsel to and in 1963 treasurer of SCEF, Smith as a member of the executive board of the National Lawyers Guild (NLG), repeatedly cited as a Communist front organization, in 1956 and in 1962 was listed as cosecretary of the NLG Committee to Assist Southern Lawyers. In the 1950's Smith was active in the legal defense of persons charged with violating the Smith Act, and in at least one instance he was reported to have received funds from the Emergency Civil Liberties Committee, an organization also identified as a Communist front organization.[26]

C. INTERNAL DOCUMENTS OF SCEF

On October 4, 1963, State and local police raided the headquarters of SCEF in New Orleans and seized a number of internal documents, memoranda, and letters. Much of this material shows extensive involvement on the part of SCEF and its staff in the activities of other CPUSA front organizations. Several of the documents reveal a close relationship between SCEF and Martin Luther King, Jr. These documents include the following:

First, an appeal to sign a petition to President Kennedy for executive clemency for Carl Braden, recently convicted of contempt of Congress for his refusal to answer questions before HCUA. Among the signatures on the appeal found in SCEF offices are those of the Reverand Martin Luther King, Jr., Atlanta, Ga. and of two former presidents of SCEF Aubrey Williams and Edgar A. Love and of a future president of SCEF, Fred Shuttlesworth. In addition to King and Shuttlesworth, other officers of the SCLC also signed the appeal: Rev. C. K. Steele, first vice-president of SCLC, and Rev. Ralph Abernathy, treasurer, SCLC.[27]

Second, a memorandum, dated January 18, 1963, from Carl Braden to Howard Melish (both of whom had been identified as members of the Communist Party), "In re Martin King." Complaining that Martin King has a bad habit of arriving late at meetings and sundry affairs such as the one we are planning in NYC on February 8, Braden suggested, as a means to correct King's habit, that—

> Either you or Jim Dombrowski should write him at his home, asking him to come to a dinner with you or Mogulescu or some of the key people . . . . The dinner invitation to his home will serve to remind him of the engagement that night and will also pin down whether he will be there.[28]

The significance of this memorandum is that it shows identified Communists—Braden, Melish, and Dombrowski—planning the influencing and manipulation of King for their own purposes. The assumption of the memorandum is that Melish and Dombrowski at least were close enough to King to invite him to dinner and to expect to be able to exert influence on him.

Third, a photograph of Martin Luther King, Jr., Carl Braden, Anne Braden, and James A. Dombrowski, with the legend on the back of the photograph in the handwriting of Dombrowski, "The 6th Annual Conference of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, Birmingham, Alabama, September 25 to 28, 1962."[29]

Fourth a check dated March 7, 1963, for $167.74, issued by SCEF to Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., with the notation "N.Y. exp." (New York expenses), and signed by Benjamin E. Smith and James A. Domrowski, treasurer and executive director of SCEF respectively. The Southern Patriot of March 1963 reported that King paid high tribute to SCEF in his remarks at the reception of the New York Friends of SCEF, and the UE News, official ogran of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America, reported on October 21, 1963, that King protested the seizure of the records of SCEF in Louisana and the arrest of two of its leaders and an attorney during the course of his remarks.[30]

Fifth, a letter on the stationery of SCEF apparently from Dombrowski to Dr. Lee Lorch, dated August 2, 1963. Lee Lorch was identified as a member of the Communist Party in testimony under oath by John J. Edmiston, former member of the party, in a hearing before HCUA on July 12, 1950. The letter from Dombrowski to Lorch discusses activities supportive of civil rights legislation then being considered in the Congress, and proposes the following:

> As part of a massive letter writing campaign, we propose to place a full-page ad in at least one newspaper in each of these 15 states.
>
> We enclose a layout and text for the ad to be signed by the Southern Christian Leadership Conference; Dr. Martin Luther King, president; the Student Nonviolent Coordinating Committee; and SCEF.
>
> SCEF will raise the money. It will take about $10,000 to place the ad in one newspaper in each of the 15 states, $20,000 in two papers per state, etc.[31]

Sixth, a memorandum from Dombrowski to members of the executive committee of SCEF, dated June 20, 1962, "Re: Atlanta Conference on Civil Rights and Civil Liberties." The memorandum states in part:

> For almost a year the staff has been discussing with various leaders in Atlanta the possibility of a Southwide conference in that city on civil rights and civil liberties. There has been a most encouraging response. Most gratifying is the interest shown by a number of organizations which in the past have not publicly associated themselves with projects in which the SCEF was involved.
>
> The Rev. Wyatt Tee Walker of SCEF has promised his cooperation, including the personal participation of the SCLC president, Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.[32]

Seventh, a letter, dated July 27, 1963, from Carl Braden to James Dombrowski, which states in part:

The pressure that has been put on Martin (Luther King, Jr.) about (Hunter Pitts) O'Dell helps to explain why he has been ducking us. I suspected there was something of this sort in the wind.

The UPI has carried a story quoting Martin as saying they have dumped O'Dell for the second time because of fear that the segregationists (sic) would use it against them. He expressed no distaste for Communists or their beliefs, merely puts it on the pragmatic basis that SCLC can't handle the charges of Communism. This is a quite interesting development.

So I think it is best to let Martin and SCLC alone until they feel like coming around to us. They'll be back when the Kennedys and other assorted other [deleted] opportunists with whom they are now consorting have wrung all usefulness out of them—or rather when they have become a liability rather than an asset. Right now the Red-baiters in New York are holding Martin and SCLC as prisoners through offers of large sums of money. We shall see if they get the money and, if they do, how much of a yoke it puts upon them.[33]

It will be recalled that in the summer of 1963, President Kennedy had urged King to sever relations with O'Dell and that King had appeared to do so by accepting O'Dell's resignation from SCLC. FBI surveillance showed, however, that O'Dell continued to frequent the New York office of SCLC.

The documents cited above show clearly first, that individuals in the leadership of SCEF, identified in testimony under oath as members of the Communist Party or generally well known for their activities on behalf of communism, considered themselves to be on close terms with Martin Luther King and in a position to exert influence on him, and second, that King himself had no objection to working with identified Communists except on the pragmatic basis that Communist affiliation might lend his activities a negative public image and be counterproductive. Indeed, King appears to have worked closely with individuals generally identified as Communists.

KING'S ACTIVITES ON BEHALF OF OTHER COMMUNIST OR COMMUNIST FRONT GROUPS

In addition to his association and cooperation with SCEF and its leaders, Martin Luther King also associated and cooperated with a number of groups known to be CPUSA front organizations or to be heavily penetrated and influenced by members of the Communist Party. On October 4, 1967, Congressman John M. Ashbrook of Ohio, at that time the ranking minority member of the House Committee on Un-American Activities and an authoritative spokeman on internal security matters, inserted in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD extensive documentation of King's activities in this regard: [34]

First, Martin Luther King, Jr., was listed as a sponsor of the "National Appeal for Freedom," held in Washington, D.C., November 19-21, 1960, of the Committee to Secure Justice for Morton Sobell, a group identified as a Communist front organization by HCUA and SISS in 1956.

Second, King sent a congratulatory telegram to the 27th annual convention of the United Electrical, Radio and Machine Workers of America (UE) in 1962. UE was expelled from the Congress of Industrial Organizations (CIO) in 1949 on grounds that it was dominated by Communists, and in 1944 the SCUA, in a report on the CIO Political Action Committee, found that—

The 600,000 members of the United Electrical, Radio, and Machine Workers of America (employed in many of the most vital American defense industries) are submitting to an entrenched Communist leadership.[35]

Third, in May 1962, King addressed the convention of the United Packinghouse Workers of America (UPWA). Stanley Levision wrote this speech. Charles Hayes of Chicago of UPHW was a guest at the founding meeting of the SCLC in Montgomery, Ala., in 1957 with Ella J. Baker of "In Friendship." The annual report of HCUA for 1959 states that Charles A. Hayes of Chicago had been identified as a member of the Communist Party by two witnesses: by John Hackney, a former member of the Communist Party who had served as a Communist in several party units within the meatpacking industry, and by Carl Nelson, who stated that he had attended many Communist Party meetings with Mr. Hayes.[36] In 1952, in testimony before HCUA, witness Roy Thompson, a former member of the Communist Party and a former official of UPWA in Chicago, stated that he had attended Communist training meetings in which instructions in communism were given by a Mr. Charley Hayes.[37] In 1959, witness Carl Nelson, a former Communist and worker in the meatpacking industry, testified before HCUA that the Communist Party deliberately sought to infiltrate its members into the meatpacking industry because they would be in an excellent position to cut off food for the Armed Forces in the event of war.[38] Mr. Nelson also identifed as having been Communists the editor of the official organ of the UPWA, two field representatives of the union, a departmental director of the union, a district secretary-treasurer of the union, a secretary in the international office of the union, and a former president of a local of the UPWA, in addition to Mr. Hayes, who was a district director of the UPWA, and his secretary.[39]

Fourth, Martin Luther King was a luncheon speaker at a conference in Atlanta, Ga., of the National Lawyers Guild Committee to Assist Southern Lawyers, held on November 30 and December 1, 1962. The National Lawyers Guild was cited several times as a Communist front, and in 1962 the committee stationery listed Benjamin E. Smith, cosecretary of the committee and treasurer of SCEF and Arthur Kinoy, as affiliated with it. Kinoy is reported by Garrow to have been a friend of Stanley Levison and to have recommended William Kunstler as an attorney to Levison for the latter's appearance before SISS in April, 1962.[40]

Fifth, King also lent his support to the National Committee to Abolish the Committee on Un-American Activities, identified as a Communist Party front by HCUA in 1961. Seven of the thirteen founders of this organization were identified as having been members of the CPUSA, including William Howard Melish. Carl Braden was also active in the Committee, as was Anne Braden.[41]

Sixth, King also assisted in the initiation of appeals for executive clemency for Carl Braden and, in 1962, for Junius Scales, former chairman of the North Carolina-South Carolina district of the Communist Party and sentenced to a 6-year prison term for violation of the Smith Act.

Seventh, Highlander Folk School: One of the most controversial aspects of King's career concerns his association with the Highlander Folk School of Monteagle, Tenn., and the nature of the school. In the 1960's groups in opposition to King frequently publicized a photograph showing King at the school, which was described as a Communist training school, sitting in the company of persons alleged to be Communists or pro-Communists.

This photograph is an authentic one, taken on September 2, 1957, when King addressed the 25th anniversary celebration of the Highlander Folk School. Shown in the photograph sitting adjacent to King are Abner Berry, a correspondent for the Communist Party newspaper, the Daily Worker; Aubrey Williams, identified as a member of the CPUSA and president of SCEF; and Myles Horton, a founder and director of the Highlander Folk School. Although Myles Horton was not identified as a member of the Communist Party, a witness before SISS in 1954 and a former member for 17 years and a former official and organizer for the party, Paul Crouch, testified that he had solicited Horton to join the party:

At that meeting after we discussed the (Highlander Folk) school I asked Mr. Horton to become a formal member of the Communist Party and his reply was, as near as I can recall his words, "I'm doing you just as much good now as I would if I were a member of the Communist Party. I am often asked if I am a Communist Party member and I always say no. I feel much safer in having no fear that evidence might be uncovered to link me with the Communist Party, and therefore I prefer not to become a member of the Communist Party." [43]

Crouch also testified that Horton had been affiliated with the Southern Conference Educational Fund and with its predecessor organization, the Southern Conference for Human Welfare.[44]

The Highlander Folk School (HFS) was founded in 1932 by Myles Horton and became well known for its involvement in a number of leftist causes. Both Aubrey Williams and James Dombrowski, each of whom was identified as a member of the Communist Party, were affiliated with HFS. Paul Crouch, who had been district organizer for the State of Tennessee for the Communist Party, described in his testimony the uses of the HFS for the party as they were developed in a conference that included himself, Horton, and Dombrowski:

> The purpose of the conference was to work out a plan by which the Daily Worker would be purchased by the school. They would be made accessible to the students, that everywhere possible the instructors should refer to the Daily Worker, to news that had come in it, to encourage the students to read it, and it was agreed that the Communist Party should have a student, a leader, sent there as a student whose job it would be to look around for prospective recruits and Mildred White, now in Washington, D.C., was selected to attend the Highlander Folk School for the purpose of recruiting for the Communist Party and carrying the Communist Party line among the student body there.
>
> Mr. ARENS (Special Counsel to the Subcommittee). You said it was agreed? Who agreed?
>
> Mr. CROUCH. Mr. Horton and Mr. Dombrowski.[45]

Based on this information and considerable evidence of a similar nature collected by the Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities of the State of Louisiana in 1963 and by other investigative bodies, it is not inaccurate to describe the Highlander Folk School as a Communist, or at least a pro-Communist, training school.

Although Martin Luther King, Jr., was present only briefly at HFS on September 2, 1957, when the photograph was taken, his relations with HFS appear to have been prolonged and positive. On February 23, 1961, the New York Times reported that—

> The Southern Christian Leadership Conference . . . and the Highlander Folk School have joined forces to train Negro leaders for the civil rights struggle.[46]

In 1962 the Highlander Center opened in Knoxville, Tenn., with Myles Horton on the board of directors. In December 1962, Martin Luther King, Jr., was listed as a sponsor of the Highlander Center on its letterhead.[47]

MARTIN LUTHER KING AND THE VIETNAM WAR

As the Vietnam war escalated in the mid 1960's, Martin Luther King became one of the most outspoken critics of U.S. policy and involvement in Vietnam. It is probable that Stanley Levison in particular encouraged King's criticism, since Levison himself was also critical of the war and wrote President Johnson to urge American withdrawal from Vietnam, describing American policy in Vietnam as completely irrational, illegal, and immoral and as supportive of a succession of undemocratic regimes which are opposed by a majority of the people of South Vietnam.[48] FBI surveillance of King showed that Levison was urging King to speak out publicly against American military involvement in Vietnam.[49]

On December 28-30, 1966, a conference was held at the University of Chicago to discuss and make plans for a nationwide student strike against U.S. involvement in the Vietnam war. This conference, which led to a week of demonstrations against the war known as "Vietnam Week," April 8-15, 1967, was initiated by Bettina Aptheker, daughter of Communist Party theoretician and member of the national committee of the CPUSA Herbert Aptheker, and herself a member of the CPUSA. The Chicago conference, as a report of the HCUA found, "was instigated and dominated by the Communist Party, U.S.A., and the W.E.B. DuBois Clubs of America," described by Attorney General Katzenbach in 1966 as substantially directed, dominated and controlled by the Communist Party.[50]

The scheduled after-dinner speaker at the Chicago conference was Rev. James L. Bevel, of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, who had been released from his duties with SCLC by Martin Luther King in order to serve as national director of the "Spring Mobilization Committee To End the War in Vietnam," an organization found by the HCUA to be heavily influenced, supported, and penetrated by Communists and in which Communists are playing a dominant role. Bevel joined the DuBois Clubs as a coplaintiff in a suit to prevent the "Subversive Activities Control Board" (SACB) from holding hearings on the DuBois Clubs as petitioned by Attorney General Katzenback, and Bevel was a sponsor of Vietnam Week and of the Chicago conference that initiated it.[51] The report of the HCUA concluded that—

> The proposal for a nationwide student strike was completely Communist in origin. . . .
>
> Communists are playing dominant roles in both the Student Mobilization Commitee and the Spring Mobilization Committee. Further, these two organizations have unified their efforts and are cooperating completely in their purpose of staging on April 15 (1967) the largest demonstrations against the war in Vietnam ever to take place in this country. . . .
>
> Dr Martin Luther King's agreement to play a leading role in the April 15 demonstrations in New York City, and his freeing Rev. James Bevel from his key position in the Southern Christian Leadership Conference to head up the Spring Mobilization Committee, are evidence that the Communists have succeeded, at least partially, in implementing their strategy of fusing the Vietnam and civil rights issues in order to strengthen their chances of bringing about a reversal of U.S. policy in Vietnam.[52]

The major statement of Martin Luther King on the Vietnam war is contained in a speech he delivered at the Riverside Church in New York City on April 4, 1967, a few days prior to the beginning of Vietnam Week. Analysis of this speech shows that King's criticism of U.S. policy in Vietnam was not based on a consideration of American national interests and security nor on a belief in pacificism and nonviolence but on an ideological view of the Vietnam conflict that is indistinguishable from the Marxist and New Left perspective.[53]

King portrayed U.S. troops in Vietnam as foreign conquerors and oppressors, and he specifically compared the United States to Nazi Germany:

> They (the South Vietnamese people) move sadly and apathetically as we herd them off the land of their fathers into concentration camps where minimal social needs are rarely met. . . . They watch as we poison their water, as we kill a million acres of their crops. . . . So far we may have killed a million of them—mostly children. What do they think as we test out our latest weapons on them, just as the Germans tested out new medicine and new tortures in the concentration camps of Europe?

King described the U.S. Government as the greatest purveyor of violence in the world today and President Ngo Dinh Diem as one of the most vicious modern dictators, but he spoke of Ho Chi Minh, the Communist dictator of North Vietnam, as a national leader and the innocent victim of American aggression:

> Perhaps only his (Ho Chi Minh's) sense of humor and of irony can save him when he hears the most powerful nation of the world speaking of aggression as it drops thousands of bombs on a poor weak nation more than 8,000 miles away from its shores.

The Communists, in King's view, were the true victims in Vietnam

> In Hanoi are the men who led the nation to independence against the Japanese and the French. . . . After 1954 they watched us conspire with Diem to prevent elections which would surely have brought Ho Chi Minh to power over a united Vietnam, and they realized they had been betrayed again.

In King's view, the National Liberation Front (NLF), the political arm of the Vietcong terrorists controlled by North Vietnam, was that strangely anonymous group we call VC or Communist, which consisted of a membership that is less than 25 percent Communist.

King might have been interested to learn of the television interview given in France on February 16, 1983 by North Vietnamese generals Vo Nguyen Giap and Vo Bam. As reported by the Economist (London) in its issue of 26 February, 1983:

> General Bam admitted the decision to unleash an armed revolt against the Saigon government was taken by a North Vietnamese communist party plenum in 1959. This was a year before the National Liberation Front was set up in South Vietnam. The aim, General Bam added, was 'to reunite the country.' So much for that myth that the Vietcong was an autonomous southern force which spontaneously decided to rise against the oppression of the Diem regime. And General Bam should know. As a result of the decision, he was given the job of opening an infiltration trail in the south. The year was still 1959. That was two years before President Kennedy stepped up American support for Diem by sending 685 advisers to South Vietnam. So much for the story that the Ho Chi Minh trail was established only to counteract the American military build-up. . . . General Bam got his orders on May 19, 1959. 'Absolute secrecy, absolute security were our watchwords,' he recalled.[54]

King included himself as one of those who "deem ourselves bound by allegiances and loyalties which are broader and deeper than nationalism and which go beyond our Nation's self-defined goals and positions. We are called to speak for the weak, for the voiceless, for victims of our Nation and for those it calls enemy, for no document from human hands can make these humans any less our brothers."

Apart from the arrogance and ingratitude displayed by these remarks, it is a logical implication of this self-proclaimed universal humanism that King should have denounced Communist atrocities and tyranny at least as strongly as those he attributed to his own country. Yet throughout King's speech there is not a single word of criticism, let alone of condemnation, for North Vietnam or for Ho Chi Minh, for Ho's internal and external policies by which a totalitarian state was created and its institutions were imposed on adjacent States, for the use of terrorism by the Vietcong or for the terrorism and systematic repression perpetrated by the Communists in North Vietnam.

King portrayed American policy in Vietnam and U.S. foreign policy in general as motivated by a need to maintain social stability for our investments and formulated by men who refuse to give up the privileges and the pleasures that come from the immense profits of overseas investment. He saw individual capitalists of the West investing huge sums of money in Asia, Africa, and South America, only to take the profits out with no concern for the social betterment of the countries.

King, in other words, did not dissent from U.S. policy in Vietnam because he was concerned for the best interests of the United States or because of moral and humanitarian beliefs. His opposition to the war was drawn from an ideological, and false, view of American foreign policy as motivated by capitalist and imperialist forces that sought only their own material satisfaction and which were responsible for the giant triplets of racism, materialism, and militarism.

This view of American foreign policy is fundamentally Marxist, and it parallels the theory of Lenin in his "Imperialism: The Highest Stage of Capitalism." It was a doctrine that became increasingly fashionable in New Left circles of the late 1960's and 1970's, although it has been subjected to devastating scholarly criticism.

Public reaction to King's speech on Vietnam was largely negative. The Washington Post, in an editorial of April 6, 1967, said that the speech was filled with bitter and damaging allegations and inferences that he did not and could not document.

> He has no doubts that we have no honorable intentions in Vietnam and thinks it will become clear that our "minimal expectation is to occupy it as an American colony. " . . . It is one thing to reproach a government for what it has done and said; it is quite another to attribute to it policies it has never avowed and purposes it has never entertained and then to rebuke it for these sheer inventions of unsupported fantasy.

Life magazine, in its issue of April 21, 1967, described King's speech as "a demagogic slander that sounded like a script for Radio Hanoi." Carl Rowan wrote that King "has alienated many of the Negro's friends and armed the Negro's foes * * * by creating the impression that the Negro is disloyal."[55] John P. Roche, a former director of Americans for Democratic Action (ADA), in a memorandum to President Johnson, wrote that King's speech indicates that King—in desperate search of a constituency—has thrown in with the commies.[56]

CONCLUSION: WAS MARTIN LUTHER KING A COMMUNIST?

As stated earlier there is no evidence that Martin Luther King was a member of the Communist Party, but the pattern of his activities and associations in the 1950's and 1960's show clearly that he had no strong objection to working with and even relying on Communists or persons and groups whose relationships with the Communists Party were, at the least, ambiguous. It should be recalled that in this period of time, far more than today, many liberal and even radical groups on the left shared a strong awareness of and antipathy for the antidemocratic and brutal nature of communism and its characteristically deceptive and subversive tactics. It is doubtful that many American liberals would have associated or worked with many of the persons and groups with whom King not only was close but on whom he was in several respects dependent. These associations and, even more, King's refusal to break with them, even at the expense of public criticism and the alienation of the Kennedy administration, strongly suggest that King harbored a strong sympathy for the Communist Party and its goals.

This conclusion is reinforced by King's own political comments and views—not only by the speech on Vietnam discussed above but also by a series of other remarks made toward the end of his life. King apparently harbored sympathy for Marxism, at least in its economic doctrines, from the time of his education in divinity school. The Rev. J. Pius Barbour, described by Garrow as perhaps King's closest friend while at Crozer Theological Seminary from 1948 to 1951, believed that King was economically a Marxist * * *. He thought the capitalistic system was predicated on exploitation and prejudice, poverty, and that we would not solve these problems until we got a new social order.[57] King was critical of capitalism in sermons of 1956 and 1957, and in 1967 he told the staff of the SCLC:

> We must recognize that we can't solve our problems now until there is a radical redistribution of economic and political power.[58]

In 1968 he told an interviewer that—

> America is deeply racist and its democracy is flawed both economically and socially * * * * the black revolution is much more than a struggle for the rights of Negroes. It is forcing America to face all its interrelated flaws—racism, poverty, militarism, and materialism. It is exposing evils that are rooted deeply in the whole structure of our society. It reveals systemic rather than superficial flaws and suggests that radical reconstruction of society itself is the real issue to be faced.[59]

In 1967, in his remarks to the SCLC staff, he argued that—

> For the last twelve years we have been in a reform movement. . . . But after Selma and the voting rights bill we moved into a new era, which must be an era of revolution. I think we must see the great distinction here between a reform movement and a revolutionary movement (which would) raise certain basic questions about the whole society . . . this means a revolution of values and of other things.[60]

And in 1968 he publicly stated, "We are engaged in the class struggle." [61]

King's view of American society was thus not fundamentally differed from that of the CPUSE or of other Marxists. While he is generally remembered today as the pioneer of civil rights for blacks and as the architect of nonviolent techniques of dissent and political agitation, his hostility to and hatred for America should be made clear. While there is no evidence that King was a member of the Communist Party, his associations with persons close to the party, his cooperation with and assistance of groups controlled or influenced by the party, his efforts to disguise these relationships from public view and from his political allies in the Kennedy administration, and his views of American society and foreign policy all suggest that King may have had an explicit but clandestine relationship with the Communist Party or its agents to promote through his own stature, not the civil rights of blacks or social justice and progress, but the totalitarian goals and ideology of communism. While there is no evidence to demonstrate this speculation, it is not improbable that such a relationship existed. In any case, given the activities and associations of Martin Luther King described in this report, there is no reason to disagree with the characterization of King made by Congressman John M. Ashbrook on the floor of the House of Representatives on October 4, 1967:

King has consistently worked with Communists and has helped give them a respectability they do not deserve and I believe he has done more for the Communist Party than any other person of this decade.[62]

ADDENDUM

On January 31, 1977, in the cases of Bernard S. Lee v. Clarence M. Kelley, et al. (U.S.D.C., D.C.) and Southern Christian Leadership Conference v. Clarence M. Kelley, et al. (U.S.D.C., D.C.), U.S., District Judge John Lewis Smith, Jr., ordered that the Federal Bureau of Investigation purge its files of:

All known copies of the recorded tapes, and transcripts thereof, resulting from the FBI's microphonic surveillance, between 1963 and 1968, of the plaintiffs' former president, Martin Luther King, Jr.; and all known copies of the tapes, transcripts and logs resulting from the FBI's telephone wiretapping, between 1963 and 1968, of the plaintiffs' offices in Atlanta, Georgia and New York, New York, the home of Martin Luther King, Jr., and places of accommodation occupied by Martin Luther King, Jr.

Judge Smith also ordered that—

At the expiration of the said ninety (90) day period, the Federal Bureau of Investigation shall deliver to this Court under seal an inventory of said tapes and documents and shall deliver said tapes and documents to the custody of the National Archives and Records Service, to be maintained by the Archivist of the United States under seal for a period of fifty (50) years; and it is further Ordered that the Archivist of the United States shall take such actions as are necessary to the preservation of said tapes and documents but shall not disclose the tapes or documents, or their contents, except pursuant to a specific Order from a court of competent jurisdiction requiring disclosure.

This material was delivered to the custody of the National Archives and Records Service to be maintained by the Archivist of the United States under a seal for a period of 50 years.

FOOTNOTES

[1] Most of this section is drawn from David J. Garrow, The FBI and Martin Luther King, Jr.: From "Solo" to Memphis (New York: W.W. Norton & Company, 1981), esp. ch. pp. 21-78.

[2] Ibid., p. 41.

[3] United States, Department of Justice, Report of the Task Force to Review the FBI Martin Luther King, Jr., Security and Assassination Investigations, January 11, 1977, pp. 121-22.

[4] Victor S. Navasky, Kennedy Justice (New York: Atheneum, 1971), pp. 162-63.

[5] Quoted in Garrow, FBI, p. 28.

[6] Quoted in Garrow, FBI, p. 61.

[7] Ibid.

[8] Ibid., p. 62.

[9] Ibid., p. 63.

[10] Ibid., quoted, p. 95.

[11] Ibid., p. 151.

[12] United States, Congress, Senate, Report of the Subcommittee to Investigate the Administration of the Internal Security Act and Other Internal Security Laws, Committee on the Judiciary 84th Congress, 2nd Session, for the Year 1956, Section III, December 31, 1956, p. 46. (Publications of this Subcommittee hereinafter cited as SISS).

[13] United States, Congress, House of Representatives, Structure and Organization of the Communist Party of the United States, Part 1, Hearings before the Committee on Un-American Activities, 87th Congress, 1st Session, November 20, 21, and 22, 1961, Testimony of Francis J. McNamara, p. 576. (Publications of this Committee hereinafter cited as HCUA).

[14] Garrow, FBI, p. 50.

[15] World Peace Council, List of Members, 1980-1983 (Helsinki, Finland: Information Centre of the World Peace Council), pp. 141-42; for O'Dell's background, see Review of the News, July 13, 1983, pp. 49-50; Soviet Active Measures, Hearings before the Permanent Select Committee on Intelligence, House of Representatives, 97th Congress, 2nd Session, July 13, 14, 1982, p. 57.

[16] Garrow, FBI, p. 50.

[17] HCUA, Report on Southern Conference on Human Welfare, 80th Congress, 1st Session, June 16, 1947, pp. 2 and 17.

[18] HCUA, Guide to Subversive Organizations and Publications (and Appendixes) Revised and published December 1, 1961, to supersede Guide published on January 2, 1957, p. 154 (hereinafter cited as Guide).

[19] SISS. Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., Hearings, March 18, 19, and 20, 1954, p. VIII.

[20] Trezz Anderson, "New Rights Group Launched in Dixie," Pittsburgh Courier, August 17, 1957, p. 2; this article misprints "In Friendship" as "In Fellowship."

[21] Robert H. Brisbane, Black Activism: Racial Revolution in the United States, 1954-1970 (Valley Forge, Pa.: Judson Press, 1974), p. 49; see also the masthead of The Southern Patriot of October, 1963, reproduced in State of Louisiana, The Joint Legislative Committee on Un-American Activities, Report No. 4, November 19, 1963, "Activities of the Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. in Louisiana," Part I, p. 74, Exhibit 29 (hereinafter cited as JLCUA).

[22] Garrow, FBI, p. 26.

[23] SISS, Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc. Hearings, pp. VI and VII.

[24] SISS, Communism in the Mid-South, Hearings, October 28 and 29, 1957, Testimony of Alberta Aheran, p. 37; John M. Ashbrook, "Rev. Martin Luther King: Man of Pease or Apostle of Violence," Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, p. H13013.

[25] JLCUA, p. 14; Guide, pp. 117-18; United States, Congress, House of Representatives, Special Committee on Un-American Activities, Report on the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, 78th Congress, 2nd Session, March 29, 1944, p. 156; United States, Department of Justice, Federal Bureau of Investigation, Foreign Influence—Weather Underground Organization (WUO), August 20, 1976, p. 332.

[26] See Guide, p. 1212, for citations of the National Lawyers Guild as a Communist front; JLCUA, pp. 14-16.

[27] JLCUA, p. 86, Exhibit 37.

[28] Ibid., p. 97, Exhibit 41.

[29] Ibid., p. 100, Exhibit 43a.

[30] Ibid., p. 101, Exhibits 44 and 44a; Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, p. H13012.

[31] JLCUA, p. 102, Exhibit 45; for the identification of Lee Lorch as a member of the Communist Party, see HCUA, "Hearings Regarding Communist Activities in the Cincinnati, Ohio, Area—Part 1," 81st Congress, 2nd Session, July 12, 13, 14, and 15; August 8, 1950, p. 2675.

[32] JLCUA, p. 104, Exhibit 46.

[33] Ibid., p. 106, Exhibits 47 and 47a.

[34] Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, pp. H13005-H13017 passim.

[35] Report on the C.I.O. Political Action Committee, p. 183.

[36] For Hayes's presence at the SCLC meeting in Montgomery, see Trezz Anderson, Pittsburgh Courier, August 17, 1957, p. 2, where Hayes's name is given as "Chris Hayes, United Packinghouse Workers . . . of Chicago." And see HCUA, Annual Report, 1959, p. 40.

[37] HCUA, "Communist Activities in the Chicago Area—Part 2 (Local 347, United Packinghouse Workers of America, CIO)," Hearings, 82nd Congress, 2nd Session, September 4 and 5, 1952, Testimony of Roy Thompson, p. 3767.

[38] HCUA, Annual Report, 1959, pp. 37-38.

[39] Ibid., pp. 38-39.

[40] Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, p. H13010; JLCUA, p. 75, Exhibit 30.

[41] Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, pp. H13011-H13013.

[42] Ibid., pp. H13010-H13011.

[43] SISS, Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., Hearings, Testimony of Paul Crouch, p. 136; see also Ashbrook, Congressional Record, pp. H13000-H13012; and JLCUA, pp. 23-37.

[44] SISS, Southern Conference Educational Fund, Inc., Hearings, Testimony of Paul Crouch, p. 137.

[45] Ibid., pp. 135-36.

[46] Quoted. Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, p. H13011.

[47] Ibid., p. H13012.

[48] Garrow, FBI, pp. 137-38.

[49] Ibid., p. 139.

[50] HCUA, Communist Origins and Manipulation of Vietnam Week (April 8-15, 1967), Report, March 31, 1967, pp. 53 and 5.

[51] Ibid., pp. 25-26, 53, and 33-37.

[52] Ibid., p. 53.

[53] The Text of King's speech, "Beyond Vietnam," was inserted by Congressman Don Edwards, "Dr. Martin Luther King on Vietnam," Congressional Record, May 2, 1967, pp. 11402-11406; all quotations given below are from this text.

[54] "Vietnam: We Lied to You," The Economist (London), 26 February 1983, pp. 56-57.

[55] Carl T. Rowan, "Martin Luther King's Tragic Decision," Reader's Digest (September, 1967), p. 42; for further negative reaction, see Garrow, FBI, pp. 180-81.

[56] Quoted in Garrow, FBI, p. 180.

[57] Ibid., p. 304, n. 25.

[58] Ibid., pp. 213-14.

[59] Ibid., p. 214.

[60] Ibid.

[61] Ibid.

[62] Ashbrook, Congressional Record, October 4, 1967, p. H13005.

CLOTURE MOTION

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, I indicated earlier that I was prepared to file a cloture motion under the provisions of rule XXII to bring to a close the debate on the motion to proceed. I send such a motion to the desk at this time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The cloture motion having been presented under rule XXII, the Chair directs the clerk to read the motion.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3706, a bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to make the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., a legal public holiday.

Senators Howard Baker, Ted Stevens, Strom Thurmond, Slade Gorton, Paula Hawkins, Ernest F. Hollings, Quentin Burdick, Spark Matsunaga, Bob Dole, John Danforth, Charles H. Percy, Edward M. Kennedy, Bob Packwood, David Durenberger, Arlen Specter, Robert C. Byrd, and Mark Hatfield.

Mr. BAKER. Mr. President, as Members know, under the provisions of rule XXII, the vote on this motion cannot occur prior to Wednesday. Unless the time is changed by unanimous consent, it will occur 1 hour after the Senate convenes and after the presence of a quorum is established pursuant to that rule. I will discuss with the minority leader the possibility of adjusting that time in order to suit the maximum convenience of the greatest numbers of Senators. It is anticipated, however, that the vote will occur no later than 1 hour after we convene and the establishment of a quorum as the rule provides.

If cloture is invoked, Mr. President, I would hope to proceed the to debate the bill itself and perhaps even to finish it.

I must say in all candor that I am advised that we will not finish the bill on Wednesday and Members should know that I also have a cloture motion for Wednesday, too. But we will cross those bridges as we come to them.

Mr. President, I hope debate will continue on this motion today and that we can utilize the time remaining to us during the day to good advantage.

It is the intention of the leadership on this side, since we cannot vote on cloture tomorrow and if Senators wishing to speak on the motion to proceed do not require the entire day, to ask the Senate to turn temporarily to the consideration of some other matter, and that may be the Labor-HHS appropriations bill, which is here and available.

But on Wednesday, which is the first moment at which we can vote on this measure absent unanimous consent, we will be back on it. I intend to vote for cloture, obviously, and I am very hopeful that we will obtain cloture.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I support the majority leader, the distinguished Senator from Tennessee, in his efforts to bring this matter to a vote at the earliest possible time and on his placing the matter on the calendar.

While I agree with what the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) had to say, I would underscore the comments that he had made about the bipartisan nature of the effort to commemorate the birthday of Dr. King and would underscore Senator KENNEDY'S comments about Republican support as well as Democratic support on this issue. I would not like to see undue emphasis placed upon the President's position because he has not responded in time for a bulletin to be put out.

The President is not obligated to make responses at a time when bulletins are issued. I, for one, am optimistic and even confident that, when the matter reaches the President's desk, the President of the United States will support this measure.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield on that point?

Mr. SPECTER. I yield.

Mr. KENNEDY. I hope that the comments that I made would not be considered to be unfair.

This is an issue which is not new, which has been before the Congress and has been before the Senate for years. If the Senator from Pennsylvania can give me any indication at any time where the President has made a statement in favor of it, then I would be glad to correct the record. But he has not. I think the record ought to at least be clear that this is not some new kind of an issue which we are springing on the President and, therefore, he should be excused from exercising some judgment.

If the Senator can point out some kind of a comment or statement that the President has made, I would be glad to go back and offer to change the record and say so publicly at this time. If he has not and has not spoken about it, then I do think that the observations that I made about his failure to take a position on an issue, which has been a major civil rights issue for millions of people in this country over the period of years, should be noted as we begin this particular debate.

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, I thank the Senator from Massachusetts. I think the Senator from Massachusetts has noted that I make no representation that the President has spoken on the subject. But I do make the assertion that the President does not have any obligation to speak on it in accordance with the publication timetable of the Republican bulletin. The time that the President has an obligation to speak on this matter is when the Congress of the United States has acted and has submitted the matter to the President for his signature.

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield 1 more minute?

Mr. SPECTER. Please allow me to finish, then I will yield before I move away from it. I have not responded yet.

But I do think that this matter is a very important subject which ought to be addressed on the merits and I do believe that the Senator from North Carolina has raised certain issues which ought to be addressed.

I think it preferable at this time not to inject partisanship into this issue about recognizing Dr. King's birthday as a national holiday. I think the more important factor is that, when the isssue passed in the House 338 to 90, it received overwhelming Republican support, and, as the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts has noted, there is Republican support in this body, that the focus should be, I submit, on what we ought to be doing at this time, and that there was a note of partisanship injected by what the Senator from Massachusetts has had to say.

It might have been preferable if the President had spoken out on this subject, or a great many other subjects, prior to this time on somebody else's timetable. But when he has not chosen to do so, I do not think that that is a germane issue.

I simply note—I do not wish to argue at length—but I simply note that Dr. King's birthday as a national holiday has received widespread bipartisan support—Republican as well as Democratic—and that the President does not operate on the timetable of the Republican bulletins.

I now yield further.

Mr. KENNEDY. I thank the Senator.

Since the matter is before us, I say to my good friend and colleague from Pennsylvania, does he think it is appropriate that the President of the United States indicate his position on this issue, as he is delighted to do as he has demonstrated on any number of three dozen issues which the Senator from Pennsylvania and I can possibly name or list? Does the Senator think that it is asking too much for the President to at least indicate to his party his position for those that might be interested?

Obviously, we make up our own minds. But I also like to support the President whenever I can, and I am sure that others here would like to be able to do so whenever they can, as well.

Mr. SPECTER. I would like to support the President wherever I can, and I think I do so more often than the Senator from Massachusetts.

I do believe that it would be appropriate for the President to indicate his approval. It would be appropriate for him to indicate his disapproval It would also be appropriate for him to do nothing if he chooses to do nothing.

It is certainly true, as the Senator from Massachusetts has asserted, that the President has indicated his position on some three dozen items or more. I think it is also true that the President has not indicated his position on some 30 dozen items or more. There are many, many matters which are pending before the Congress on which the President has not spoken out. Not that he does not necessarily have a position, but that he has a great many matters which confront him, more than confront the Senator from Pennsylvania, for example.

I do not think that the President is the issue at the moment. What I perceive to be the issue at the moment is the underlying merits of making a national holiday in commemoration of Dr. King. More specifically, the reason that I rose was not to take issue with the Senator from Massachusetts, but to make some comments about the discussion of the distinguished senior Senator from North Carolina (Mr. HELMS), which I will proceed to do at this time.

The subject matter of a national holiday in commemoration of Dr. King I think is appropriate and timely now. In my judgment, Dr. King has been a herculean figure on the American scene. He has taken stands against racism and discrimination which make him fitting to be commemorated by a national holiday, not as a representative of the blacks or a representative of minorities, but a representative of all Americans. That is the standard for a national holiday.

The Senator from North Carolina made a number of comments about Dr. King. I would like to add my own experience to this record at this time.

The Senator from North Carolina made a comment about liberation theology as one of destruction and Marxist theory as action oriented. It is my view that they do not accurately describe the actions of Dr. Martin Luther King. I make this statement based upon personal experience as the district attorney of Philadelphia, where, during the midsixties, I had the responsibility, along with others, for the maintenance of the enforcement of the laws of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

In that particular era there were riots in many parts of the United States, starting in Watts in Los Angeles and moving through Pittsburgh, Newark, Detroit, and many cities. Dr. King was in Philadelphia on a number of occasions and and I had the opportunity to hear him speak in 1965, which I remember very well.

Dr. King spoke eloquently but specifically on the issue of nonviolence. He spoke on the approach of changing the system within lawful means in the best tradition of the democratic approach and in the best tradition of freedom of speech, addressing the issue to change people's minds, to move against racism, to move against discrimination, and to move for equality.

In 1966 and 1967 I recall very well the very difficult times of the long hot summers, and I recall the riots which plagued our sister city of Pittsburgh. Detroit, Newark, and Philadelphia did not have that problem, but I think the contributing factor was the presence of Dr. King, as I recall very well in 1965, and I believe he was present on other occasions.

I think he was a stabilizing influence at a time when many who sought similar objectives did so through violent means, where there were those riots.

I can testify, which is somewhat unusual, perhaps, for a statement on the Senator floor, as to what Dr. Martin Luther King said as to his state of mind, as to what he thought ought to be carried out and as to what followed at least in the city of Philadelphia where he spoke eloquently on that subject.

So I do not believe that it is accurate to characterize Dr. King as an exponent in any way, shape, or form of a theory of destruction which may or may not be part of the liberation theology. I do not know the details of liberation theology as articulated by the distinguished Senator from North Carolina. But I do know that Dr. King did not talk of or incite destruction.

Similarly, I think it is inaccurate to characterize Dr. King as part of a Marxist philosophy which would be action oriented for destruction, because I saw him and I heard him speak about nonviolence, and I saw that carried out in accordance with what he was advocating at least in the city of Philadelphia.

I think there might have been other procedures followed by the distinguished majority leader (Mr. BAKER), but in placing this matter before this body at this time I think it most appropriate and I urge this body to consider this matter at the earliest moment and enact this legislation and submit it to the President, who I think will be ready, willing, and able to speak on the subject. As I say, I am optimistic, and in fact confident, that the President will support a national holiday for Dr. King and that we can move on this very constructive measure. I thank the Chair and I yield the floor.

Mr. THURMOND addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Carolina.

Mr. THURMOND. Mr. President, although the bill to make the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., a legal public holiday is not officially before us at this time, a motion has been made to proceed to its consideration. It will be brought up and, I anticipate, will be passed within a few days.

Mr. President, the Senate will then have before it H.R. 3706, a bill to make the third Monday in January a legal public holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr.

I intend to support this legislation, principally for the following two reasons:

First, my past opposition to a 10th paid holiday for Federal employees, regardless of how noble the purpose or how substantial the contributions of the individual memorialized, has centered on the excessive cost of these holidays. At the same time, I have never opposed a day of recognition for Dr. King, provided the cost problem could be adequately addressed. Congressional leaders recently have assured me that legislation will be considered shortly to reduce the overall cost associated with these holidays. That may be a more desirable means of handling this problem.

Second, Mr. President, I fully recognize and appreciate the many substantial contributions of black Americans and other minorities to the creation, preservation and development of our great Nation. For their numerous military and civilian achievements and services, our minority citizens are surely deserving of the highest honor and recognition. Many feel that a Federal holiday is a means of annually commemorating those significant aspects of American history which are of special importance to our minority citizens.

Furthermore, the preference of black leaders with whom I have conferred is that the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., should be the focus of such a holiday. I might say, Mr. President, that I have extensively discussed this issue with presidents of the historically black colleges, black elected officials, and a wide spectrum of other minority leaders in South Carolina and across the Nation. Clearly, the overwhelming preference among our minority citizens is for a holiday honoring Dr. King, and I respect these views.

In summary, Mr. President, I support prompt passage of this legislation, based on the assurances that the cost concerns will be addressed subsequently, and out of respect for the important contributions of our minority citizens and the symbolic significance of this particular holiday to them.

Mr. President, as chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary, let me say that my committee would have received this House-passed legislation if it had been referred to committee. However, the majority leader held it at the desk and it is now the subject of his motion to bring it before the Senate. In view of the other duties I have on hand, I have requested the able and distinguished Senator from Kansas, Senator ROBERT DOLE, who is a member of the Judiciary Committee and chairman of the Courts Subcommittee, and who has had a prominent interest in this and other civil rights legislation, to handle this bill on the floor. Senator DOLE has agreed to do this. So, from this point on, I shall turn this matter over to the distinguished and able Senator from Kansas, with the request that he take charge of the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I know the distinguished Senator from North Carolina (Mr. EAST) wants to make a statement. I have one that will take about 10 minutes. If he would like to precede me, I shall be happy to yield to him.

Mr. EAST. If the distinguished manager of the bill has no objection, I would like to proceed, if I could, if it is suitable with him, to make a few comments on this particular proposal and measure and the concerns that I have about it.

Mr. DOLE. I am happy to yield the floor to the Senator.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from North Carolina.

Mr. EAST. Mr. President, I think the debate that will eventually ensue over this measure needs to be in an atmosphere of nonpartisanship and in an absence of deep acrimony and loose accusations. I think Senator SPECTER is correct, that partisanship ought not to be introduced into it.

The one only I greatly fear is that those of us who, for what I think are very fair and legitimate reasons, oppose the measure will be cast by high-flown rhetoric as invariably prejudiced or racist on this matter. I think that is unfair and I think that the tone of it ought to be cast in terms of the merits of the bill, of the legislation.

Not everything done in the name of civil rights necessarily advances the cause of civil rights; not everything done in the name of anticommunism necessarily serves the cause of anticommunism; and not everything done in the name of a stronger defense supports stronger defense. I know there are people here who often fear that if they take a position on something, wrath will come down upon them that some way or other, they are prejudiced and biased people and that no reasonable mind or fairminded or thoughtful person can disagree.

I submit, and I intend to be a part of this debate, that a fairminded, thoughtful person, which I like to think I am, could be opposed to this particular measure yet be fully supportive of the notion that every American ought to be evaluated on the basis of his talent and ability regardless of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin; that a fairminded person could support that position, which I do, and yet oppose the creation of this 10th national holiday.

Mr. President, hearings may have been held before the Committee on the Judiciary in 1979, but since 1980, for example, since I have been here and been a member of the Judiciary Committee, no hearings have been held—not in the current Congress, not in the current composition. It has not been so dealt with. So I think my distinguished senior colleague from North Carolina makes a valid point.

After all, there are many implications and facets to this measure that we ought to explore. For example, just to show that this thing ought to be done in the spirit now of fairness and civility and lack of rancor about racism, we have now currently nine nationally paid legal holidays. Nine of them.

We have New Year's Day, Washington's Birthday, Memorial Day, Independence Day, Labor Day, Columbus Day, Veterans' Day, Thanksgiving Day, and Christmas Day. You will note of those nine, that only one is named after an American—George Washington's birthday. Columbus was the discoverer of the New World and, of course, Christmas—Christ. But only one is in honor of a specific American; namely, that was the father of the Revolution and the first President of the United States.

What we are saying here is that Martin Luther King, for whatever merit he had, and I am not questioning that, ought to be elevated to that stature and, I remind you, done to the exclusion of other great Americans like Jefferson, the author of the Declaration of Independence; James Madison, the father of the Constitution; Abraham Lincoln, who issued the Emancipation Proclamation; perhaps to Franklin Delano Roosevelt, one of the most influential Presidents of the 20th century; great public figures of our time such as Douglas MacArthur, or great public figures of the 19th century, such as Robert E. Lee.

All I am saying is that once you go beyond Washington, the founder and the first President, you set a precedent where other groups and interests naturally will wish to come in. Why should they be denied?

We might, for example, as an alternative, set aside a day called National Civil Rights Day. It would be a day where people were expected to go to work, or it might be a Sunday. And on that day, we could honor America's commitment to the idea, on National Civil Rights Day, that every American, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, or national origin, ought to be judged on the basis of talent and ability and not these other irrelevancies. That would be a good thing to do. To me, for example, I just throw it out as an alternative—what day might we pick? How about the birthday of James Madison, known as the father of the Constitution and the man who shepherded through the First Congress the Bill of Rights, from which many of the rights come that have protected minorities? I come from a group of handicapped Americans. In short, candidly, there is no end to how far you might wish to go.

I know prominent, handicapped Americans that I think it might be nice and appropriate to dedicate a national holiday to. Franklin D. Roosevelt would be one. He was a polio paraplegic, as I was, and after contracting polio, he was elected Governor of New York twice and President of the United States four times. He founded the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis at Warm Springs, Ga., which eventually developed the vaccine that destroyed and eliminated polio. How about a day for that, a nationally paid holiday?

Is that any less significant? If so, why so?

I am going to be strongly resistant in this debate to the notion that unless you support this particular measure, this particular vehicle, hidden somewhere down deep in the recesses of your heart and soul is bigotry, because that is not true.

(Mr. MATTINGLY assumed the Chair.)

Mr. EAST. A fairminded, reasonable person could not agree on the method here but agree on the end, where we included not only our distinguished black citizenry in this country but all other groups who have, as we frequently look back in history, been excluded from the mainstream of participation in American public life—women, for example, or again ethnic origin or religion or the physically handicapped. And so it goes.

I submit, Mr. President, no one in this debate is going to be allowed to proclaim—and there is no way I can stop it—that they have a monopoly on compassion and solicitude for the rights of minorities and the disadvantaged. And so I think one thing we could have taken up in the Judiciary Committee hearings, and I will want to take up on the Senate floor debate, is why we would single out this group and this particular day as opposed to these other things. If we set the precedent of going beyond the founder of the country, is that going to be good? Do we have the historical perspective yet to do it? This takes a long time. It is not to say after the year 2000 and we evaluate the history of the 20th century that Martin Luther King was not an important historical figure. But will he rank with the stature of Washington? I do not know. There may be other black leaders who will rise to ever greater heights than he. Historical perspective is needed.

Mr. President, with all due respect to my colleagues who wish to rush through this quickly, as was done in the House—and it is going to happen in the Senate, I know that, I know that as well as you do—I think the issue has become highly politicized. That I regret, but it will eventually pass, of course.

I am simply here to defend the notion that it is possible to look at other alternatives. I wish to hear the arguments of those who will be contending that Martin Luther King's birthday should be elevated to the stature that Washington's was; that it is a good precedent and we should not anticipate more. Women's groups will want it, and why not? Handicapped groups will want it, and why not? Eventually we run—and I do not mean to be facetious on the point—the risk in which we have no Federal working days; they are all holidays, in commemoration of great Americans.

Maybe the prudent thing to do, I am suggesting, for example, is to stop with George Washington, the first President, the leader in the American Revolution, the founder, and say that is that, and henceforth other famous Americans will be recognized in other ways—days set forth to simply recognize them, not paid now. They will have to work that day. Because I do not see how, if this day is made a national holiday, you can resist the other groups that will come forth.

I resist the idea on the basis of precedent. I could offer alternatives. I could suggest, well, let us do one for Jefferson, the father of American democracy, the author of the Declaration of Independence, or, as I have said, James Madison, the father of the Constitution, or Abraham Lincoln, certainly a towering figure of the 19th century, or Robert E. Lee, a towering figure of the 19th century.

It has nothing to do with partisanship. It has nothing to do with who your particular favorite hero is. But with every group or area in the country, there is the same problem.

In the 20th century, who might you pick? Again, I suggest Franklin D. Roosevelt for his contribution to the handicapped or his enormous impact upon American politics.

Could one really say as a matter of historical balance at this time that King ought to be elevated to the status of Washington and that there are not other appropriate ways of doing it? I think there are and we could find them.

I offer the possibility of an amendment called the National Civil Rights Day, in which it would be encouraged, at the Federal and State and local level, that we renew the spirit in America that we are committed to the idea of each individual American being judged on the basis of talent and ability and not race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or physical disability.

That sounds like a good alternative. We could have appropriate celebrations on that day. The President could use his office to remind us, because we do need to be reminded. I, as a person in one of these categories, am sensitive to that. I realize great progress has been made in the area of the handicapped—architectural barriers, generosity of spirit, openness of the American people, employers. But there is still a long way to go, and we need to be reminded from time to time. That would be true of other groups—women, religious bigotry, and so forth.

It is imperative at the outset of this debate, whether it is on a motion to proceed or a motion to send it back to the Judiciary Committee for hearings, which have not been held, or on the general merit of the bill once it is out on the Senate floor, that those who are for and against, decide this debate can take place at a civil, intelligent, and rational level without charges and countercharges about who has the greatest commitment to the rights of the excluded, minorities, and the disadvantaged in American life, because I will go on record and ultimately vote against this measure. I will concede that. But I do it not out of disdain for black Americans, for whom I have the greatest admiration. I have them on my staff, and I expect to have more. I have found them very talented and creative people.

Again, I will take the birthday of Franklin D. Roosevelt. I have exactly the same disability he had, polio paraplegic. I know the kind of physical struggle he had to go through to carry on in public life and to accomplish what he did. But I am reluctant to offer a day to mark handicapped American's because it goes beyond the precedent. And I do not think Franklin Roosevelt would want it. To anyone who spent any time at Warm Springs and has seen the great contribution that he made there—and out of that seed grew the conquest of polio in this country; people do not get it anymore—it would be obvious it deserves a national holiday.

But I am not going to propose that because I think it would break my own concern about the precedent—how far we go, once we let this genie out of the bottle, beyond recognizing Washington.

I think that is a fair question. I do hope the national media will try to give us a fair shot of putting the reasonable arguments in perspective. Let us express those arguments, instead of trampling this underfoot with the charge that here again is the ugly head of racism and bigotry. If I offered a proposal to make Franklin D. Roosevelt's birthday a national holiday because of his great contribution to the world of the physically disabled and you resisted it for some reason, I would not say you are spiteful and prejudiced against the handicapped. You could have other good reasons for opposing it, just as much as I have reasons for opposing Martin Luther King's birthday.

I have talked at some length—perhaps ad nauseum—and made my point more than I needed to. But I am troubled that as this debate proceeds on any point—motion to proceed, motion to commit to the committee, ultimately the substance of the bill—there will be s steamroller effort made by certain high-pitched voices in this Chamber, eloquent men, honorable men, good men, in which the intimation will be that only the prejudiced and only the bigoted could oppose it.

That, right there, is the ultimate form of bigotry, because you condemn out of hand those who might, in a fair, a reasonable, a civil, and I hope intelligent way, offer arguments against this national holiday.

All I am asking of my colleagues and all I am asking of the media, for that handful of Senators—and it will only be a handful; I know that; I can count—is that you at least respect that we feel that our position is an honorable one, not rooted in bigotry or hatred or prejudice, but rooted in genuine concern about whether this is a wise thing to do. Please give us that chance. Please give us that fair hearing. Let us not make it partisan. Let us not see who can outdo one another in saying, "I am a greater defender of the civil rights, of so and so, than somebody else is."

Let us carefully consider it, then, if it will not be sent back to committee, and probably the vote will be against it, and eventually we will get down to debating the merits of the bill.

Please, all I ask from colleagues and, yes, candidly, from the national media is this: Give us a fair chance to state our point of view; because a fairminded person, a reasonable minded person, a civil person, and I hope an intelligent person could be opposed to this bill for a variety of reasons, some of which I have only hinted at, and at the same time be fully committed to the idea—I repeat—that every American, regardless of race, color, religion, sex, national origin, or physical handicap, ought to be judged on the basis of their talent and their merit, not these irrelevancies. It is in that spirit that I will debate this issue. I hope we can keep the tone and the level of this debate at that point.

I know that Senator SPECTER, my distinguished colleague from Pennsylvania, supports this measure, and he is a bright and able and talented Senator. In fact, I was in Pennsylvania not too long ago, and I spoke there on behalf of a candidate running for mayor. I said what a fine Senator they have in Senator SPECTER as well as Senator HEINZ. I do not know how Senator HEINZ will vote on it, but Senator SPECTER has indicated that he will vote for it. I have the deepest admiration for him. He will have good reasons for it. He is a bright and able man.

Senator SPECTER, I think, is correct in raising this point: Let us not make it a partisan issue. Let us not get the decibel level of this debate to where it is simply one based upon acrimony, name calling, the progressives versus the bigots, unfair, inaccurate, not true.

So I only plead this at the outset: That the tone and the character of the debate be befitting the greatest deliberative body in the world, the U.S. Senate, of which I am proud to be a Member, and I am honored that the people of North Carolina sent me here.

Some will disagree with me on this issue; some will agree. But I hope that when it is over, they can at least say: "What EAST did say, he said fairly and civilly. It sounded at least reasonably intelligent, and he did a good job as being a part of the national debate on this, though he was on the losing side, and though he voted with a handful of Senators in opposition to this bill."

Mr. President, I know that the distinguished manager of this bill, the Senator from Kansas, wishes to make some comments, and there may be others. I will yield the floor and, of course, avail myself of the right, at a later point in this ongoing discussion and debate, to comment from time to time.

I thank my colleagues for their indulgence, and I yield to my distinguished colleague from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I have listened very carefully to the distinguished Senator from North Carolina; and as he has indicated, I believe there should be serious debate.

We can have a different view on any matter in the Senate without inferring that anyone who may disagree, lacks compassion or is insensitive, or whatever it may be, on this bill or on any other bill. Certainly, the Senator from North Carolina has demonstrated time and again his sensitivity, concern, and compassion.

I share the view he expresses in that this is a serious matter. It is one where differences of opinion exist on both sides of the aisle. I certainly take seriously what he says, as it should be, and I think there will be debate. I do not believe there will be any attempt to railroad any such legislation.

Frankly, it would have been preferable, I believe, to have run the normal course and had hearings in the Judiciary Committee. This would have given people a better idea on this side, even though we had hearings 3 years ago, that this was a matter of importance, that it deserves careful attention. But for reasons that the majority leader felt were compelling and sound at the time, the House-passed bill was held at the desk. That is a judgment the majority leader made, and I support him in that.

So now we need to perhaps cover some of the questions raised by the Senator from North Carolina and by other Senators on both sides of the aisle, without any doubt the last thing this should be is a partisan debate.

I guess if you looked at numbers you would say why should Republicans vote for this legislation anyway? Every black leader in America is an active Democrat. They are out trying to defeat Republicans. There is all kinds of evidence where you could say, "this is certainly not a matter for Republicans to be concerned about at all."

But as I look around the past several years I have been in Congress, one area in which we truly have had bipartisanship or nonpartisanship, for the most part, has been on civil rights legislation. And those of us on the Republican side are optimistic. We are looking at the future. Things will change. New leaders will emerge. New ideas will be exchanged by political leaders, black, white, Hispanic, whatever, in the next 10 to 20 years.

In my view, even though we may be on the low end of the totem pole now with 5 percent or 7 percent of the black vote, that in no way should impede what we consider to be sound legislation, whether it is a Martin Luther King public holiday or whether it is fair housing, or whether it is voting rights or whatever it may be.

So I would say as I said in a telegram I sent to Mrs. King and WALTER FAUNTROY during the recent commemorative march on Washington, let us keep civil rights a nonpartisan issue. There are those of us in the Republican Party who are strong supporters of civil rights, and we will continue to be strong supporters.

So I just suggest that there is going to be debate and we are going to pass this legislation. I am not certain when. And I do not suggest for a moment that anyone who speaks on the other side or offers amendments or in any way tries to underscore his views is holding up the legislation. But the legislation probably will pass. There are other matters that are pending that I believe we need to consider.

So, I believe, we will go on with this debate, for some time this afternoon. I guess tomorrow there are other things planned, like we will come back on this on Wednesday.

A nation defines itself in many ways; in the promises it makes, and the programs it enacts, the dreams it enshrines or the doors it slams shut. A great nation defines itself in poetry as well as politics, in its heroes and in its holidays.

Carl Sandburg defined America. "The people of the earth," he wrote, "the family man, wanted to put up something proud to look at, a tower from the flat land of earth on up through the ceiling into the top of the sky."

From her birth in the furnance of revolution, America was designed as an exercise in applied idealism. She would inspire other people who loved liberty and hungered for justice—or else she would become just one more straggler in history's long parade, a nation addicted to temporal power and corrupted by personal pride. Fortunately, that has not happened. We have not adjourned our covenant with each other, nor have we grown tired of the old, ringing words that proclaim equality under the law and promise better times ahead to anyone who would invest his own individual bit of divinity into the life struggle.

When we have been slow to keep the promise, men and women have stood up and pricked our national conscience. "It is never too late to give up our prejudices," said Thoreau. "Be as beneficient as the Sun or sea," proclaimed Emerson, "but if your rights as a rational being are trenched on, die on the first inch of your territory." And there was Lincoln, the patron saint of my party and the greatest testament to democratic government we have produced. "As I would not be a slave, so I would not be a master. Whatever differs from this," he said, "to the extent of the difference, is no democracy."

Lincoln was a controversial man. Abe Lincoln presided over the deaths of a million of his countrymen. They did not die, nor did he, to preserve, protect, and defend the status quo.

FREEDOM—AN AMERICAN STANDARD

Now as then, America is a country about rights. Take that away, and what is left? Yet rights, as we learned more than 200 years ago, are not always handed down from above. They must sometimes be forced by pressure from below. The process of forcing can disturb the peace. It can shatter the placid calm of tradition. But such is the price that society must pay for living up to its own high standards.

As we forged a new nation at Concord and Lexington, Saratoga, and Yorktown, so we welded it together at Bull Run and Gettysburg, projected it on to the world stage at Chateau-Thierry, seized for it the moral high ground at Anzio and Guadalcanal—and renewed its historic status as the last best hope of human freedom in our own time—at Selma and Montgomery, Birmingham and Atlanta, Chicago and Washington.

Nothing less than a new American Revolution raised our consciousness and made us ask questions of ourselves—questions delayed or simply avoided for far too long. Questions that went to the heart of what America thinks of herself and offers her own citizens. Questions put with eloquence and irrefutable force by a man whose birthday we seek to make a national holiday—not to honor him alone, nor even the millions who marched and prayed and demanded our attention when some of us would have preferred to look elsewhere. We seek to honor Martin Luther King's idea, an idea as old as the New England town meeting, and yet as endangered in the modern world as the dignity of man himself.

"Segregation," he wrote, "is the offspring of an illicit intercourse between injustice and immorality."

Yet in the same year that I first came to this Congress, no black man or woman could share a whites-only lunch counter in an Atlanta department store.

Injustice anywhere, said Dr. King, was an injustice everywhere. Yet in those same years, millions of black Americans were denied equal access to the voting booth, decent housing, a good job.

"We will not be satisfied until justice rolls down like waters," said Dr. King, "and righteousness like a mighty stream"—and some people called him a radical for quoting the Book of Amos.

But in America, the home of the brave and the land of the free, it was segregation that was radical, denial of opportunity that was revolutionary, and the smothering of individual hope that was an affront to decency. Thanks to Dr. King more than anyone else, America renewed her alliance with true democracy. She listened to the voices of her own oppressed. She caught the rhythm of their suffering, and she brought it in from the streets to the Halls of Congress and the centers of power. She wrote new laws to strike down old barriers. She built bridges in place of walls. She invited the black man and woman into the mainstream of American society—and in doing so, opened the way for women, the disabled, and other minorities who found their own voice in the civil rights movement.

A HOLIDAY FOR ALL THE PEOPLE

Some will oppose this legislation because they say it would cost too much. It might cost $18 million or $173 million, or even in the billions, we are told. Let's assume for the moment that they are accurate. Since when did a dollar sign take its place atop our moral code? And to those who worry about cost, I would suggest they hurry back to their pocket calculators and estimate the cost to 300 years of slavery, followed by a century or more of economic, political, and social exclusion and discrimination.

Others will contend that Dr. King was too controversial a figure to merit such a tribute. They forget that George Washington himself was called a tyrant during his second term in office. Or they suggest that this added holiday is somehow the exclusive property of black Americans. That is like saying that Columbus Day is exclusively for Italian Americans, or Labor Day reserved for union members. In my opinion, we can all profit from a day of national reflection on the faith that binds together a diverse people, and a chance to measure our own adherence to that faith.

We propose to celebrate Dr. King's birthday because his work—which in reality must be our work—is unfinished. Since he first commanded national attention, legal obstacles to voting, fair housing, and employment have fallen. The number of black elected officials has multiplied more than tenfold. The number of black kids pursuing a college degree has doubled in a decade, and incomes of young black couples have nearly reached parity with their white counterparts.

But much remains to be done. A dream has yet to be fully realized. And that brings me to my final point.

The pursuit of equal opportunity is a drama without intermission. Its cast is proudly nonpartisan. My own support of this legislation is nothing new; I take some pride in having been one of its original sponsors back in 1979. As a Republican, I can never forget that it was my party that originally struck the shackles from black Americans. As a Republican, I am appalled by waste—financial, to be sure, but human even more. In achieving economic and social emancipation, in putting an end to the waste of human talent and potential, Republicans have contributed much, not least of all our votes when crucial bills came before this body.

For there is nothing partisan about justice. It is as Conservative as the Consitution, as liberal as Lincoln, as radical as Jefferson's sweepng asserting that all of God's creation is equal in his eyes. So let us not congratulate ourselves simple because the cattle prods and police dogs of the 1960's have vanished from our streets. Instead, let us acknowledge more subtle forms of discrimination wherever they exist, and pledge anew to root them out, inspired by the example of a man of God and an authentic hero to tens of millions of Americans, black and white or whatever.

It is too late to bring him back—and muct too late to be debating his impact or inspiration. With this vote, we can show to the world that, while a man may have died in Memphis, his message lives on. Both deserve official recognition, on our calendar and in our priorities.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that my name be added to the cloture motion that was filed earlier today.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

(The text of the cloture motion, with the addition of the name of Mr. BRADLEY, reads as follows:)

CLOTURE MOTION

We, the undersigned Senators, in accordance with the provisions of rule XXII of the Standing Rules of the Senate, hereby move to bring to a close debate on the motion to proceed to the consideration of H.R. 3706, a bill to amend title 5, United States Code, to make the birthday of Martin Luther King, Jr., a legal public holiday.

Senators Baker, Stevens, Thurmond, Gorton, Hawkins, Hollings, Burdick, Matsunaga, Dole, Danforth, Percy, Kennedy, Packwood, Durenberger, Specter, R. C. Byrd, Hatfield and Bradley.

Mr. BRADLEY. Mr. President, I rise not to make a speech but to make a brief comment to my distinguished colleague from Kansas. I felt his remarks were eloquent and to the point, and I think played upon a very fine tradition in his party, and yet at the same time in response to earlier points made today, that this initiative does emanate from that side of the aisle as well, and I do not say that in a partisan sense. I say that only in the sense that I think there is still an ambivalence; you representing, the Senator from Kansas representing, one thrust, the Senator from North Carolina representing another, and it is that ambivalence that I think we see today at the highest levels of our Government. I know where the Senator from Kansas is on these kinds of issues. I have seen his work in the Voting Rights Act, I have seen his work in the Finance Committee, but I am not sure where the highest reaches of this Government are on these kinds of issues.

I think that is what Senator KENNEDY was referring to earlier when he sought to know the President's position on this holiday because I believe that this issue should be beyond partisanship. One would like to think that this basic commitment to civil rights is so profound that it goes beyond party label, and I think the Senator's statement today is only further evidence that that is still a possibility and perhaps a probability and perhaps in a real sense a fact today.

Yet, I mean, I remember back in 1964 as a college student when I sat right up there in the corner of this Senate gallery the day the 1964 Civil Rights Act was passed. I remember how good I felt about government, about keeping promises, about fulfilling the best of our Nation's ideals. And I will say to the Senator from Kansas, as he knows, 2 years ago how badly I felt about government when this administration attempted to protect the tax-exempt status of schools that discriminate on racial grounds.

In my view I do not think that these things, particularly questions of brotherhood, should be treated as political chits but as personal commands. I think the Senator from Kansas feels that way as well, and that is why I did not intend to make a speech today but simply to make that comment in hopes that the future of his party will be one that speaks for the values that the so eloquently expressed today and not the values that have been expressed on the floor today by the Senators from North Carolina.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I certainly thank my distinguished colleague from New Jersey. There is no doubt in my mind where the Senator from New Jersey stands on issues of this kind, and I appreciate his comments.

I do think, you know, as I said earlier, you look at it cold turkey as Republicans and say, "Well, there is no future in anything like this for the Republican Party" and if it is going to be based on any partisan consideration of political or political gain, then it loses its meaning in the first place and could not be seriously debated.

But I do believe, and I think just in my tenure in the Congress, there has been a big, big change, vast changes, and those changes for the most part—obviously there have been great black Americans, Hispanic Americans, white Americans, great leaders, but the spark that started the big movement was Martin Luther King, Jr.

So I join the Senator from New Jersey, and it is my hope as one on this side of the aisle that in 10 years from now when we look back on the debate on this issue we will be looking at full employment and no discrimination in housing or jobs for any American, handicapped, disabled, whatever; that progress is being made. But for those who have had to wait 300 years, 200 years, 100 years, 1 year, it seems mighty slow.

Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEVIN. Mr. President, this is a day I have wanted to happen since I was first elected to the U.S. Senate. It is a day when we in the Senate seek to memorialize the magnitude of a man who sought to protect the dignity of a people and awaken the conscience of a Nation. It is a day when we in the Senate seek to transcend the routine legislative agenda, as he sought to transcend the prejudicies of centries. It is a day when we in the Senate recognize Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. as deserving a unique place in our national life and our cultural heritage.

Dr. King's death is 15 years behind us now. To some extent, deeply felt passions and the frustration, anguish, and bitterness with which the Nation was consumed during the tragic year of 1968 have cooled.

But what remains with us and what is indelibly woven into the fabric and history of our Nation is the vision which Dr. King lived for and the dream for which he died. This vision and dream embraced all Americans in Dr. King's quest to make a living reality of equality of opportunity and economic and social justice for all humankind, those fundamental principles in our Constitution.

This great warrior, whose battlefield was the hearts and minds of those who did not feel that justice and dignity were meant for all people, whose shield and armor was strong determination and an unassailable character and whose ammunition was moral conviction and self-sacrifice, deserves the fullest honor of this Nation.

Few have dedicated their life so tirelessly in the struggle for equality as Dr. King.

From the bus boycott in Montgomery to the sanitation workers in Memphis, his unyielding commitment to improve the lot of all Americans was demonstrated—he achieved significant goals by peaceful and nonviolent actions.

To Dr. King, those means were beneficial to those in the struggle as the ends they were seeking.

With reference to the 11-month long successful Montgomery bus boycott, he said:

> Nonviolence had tremendous psychological importance to the Negro. . . . This method was grasped by the Negro masses because it embodied the dignity of struggle, of moral conviction and self-sacrifice. The Negro was able to face his adversary, to concede to him a physical advantage and to defeat him because the superior force of the oppressor had become powerless . . . I am convinced that the courage and discipline with which Negro thousands accepted nonviolence healed the internal wounds of Negro millions who did not themselves march in the street or sit in the jails of the South. One need not participate directly in order to be involved . . . to have pride in those who were the principals . . . to restore to them some of the pride and honor which had been stripped from them over the centuries.

When the Supreme Court order to end segregation on buses was delivered to Montgomery, Dr. King proudly told an overflow crowd at a local church:

> We came to see that, in the long run, it is more honorable to walk in dignity than ride in humiliation. So in a quiet dignified manner, we decided to substitute tired feet for tired souls, and walk the streets of Montgomery until the sagging walls of injustice have been crushed.

One way of insuring renewed dedication to his goals of freedom and equality is to enact legislation to honor Dr. King by designating his birthday as a national public holiday—allowing Americans at least 1 day each year to honor Dr. King's contributions to this country, 1 day to remember Martin Luther King's dream that our children will one day live in a Nation where they will not be judged by the color of their skin but by the content of their character.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, recently I spoke with a young woman who, as a 1-year-old was present at the 1963 March on Washington. Obviously, she was unaware 20 years ago that segregationists were physically stopping blacks from entering public schools, that blacks and whites were being threatened and in many cases assaulted for their commitment to equality and that our society was divided by a barrier of color.

Twenty years later, this same woman—now a young adult—was back in our Nation's Capital to commemorate the anniversary of the march and Dr. Martin Luther King's "I have a dream" speech. As the young woman rode the bus into Washington for the rally, she noticed that men and women, blacks and whites, Jews and gentiles, Protestants and Catholics were side by side.

She told me later that what struck her most about the experience was the sense of history—not just the historical nature of the 20th anniversary of the march, but the evidence of the changes in our society during the last two decades. Most importantly, she was reminded that she and millions of other Americans still share Dr. King's dream.

On that same day I was doing a radio call-in show in my home State of Minnesota. A caller identified himself as a teacher and said:

> The best reason I can give you, Senator, for creating a Martin Luther King holiday is that it will give me and generations of teachers a role model of human rights and liberties with which to prepare our young for their obligations as American citizens.

I strongly believe that we as a nation need to celebrate that dream and the man, Dr. Martin Luther King.

National holidays are important occasions for the people of our country to annually break their routine and celebrate the accomplishments of our Nation, the ideals and principles upon which the United States is founded, and the men and women who have stood for those ideals. Memorial Day, for example, was created in 1868 as a day on which to decorate the graves of those killed in the Civil War. Today, Memorial Day commemorates all men and women who have died for our country. President's Day remembers not just George Washington and Abraham Lincoln—whose birthdays I had off from school as a youngster—but the principles for which they and other leaders of our country stood.

In the same way, a national holiday for the Reverend Martin Luther King will celebrate not just a very special man, but a cause. Dr. King's crusade, for which he give his life, was the beginning of the end of our country's equivocation on the constitutional guarantees of equal rights, not just for blacks, but for other minorities, women, the elderly, the handicapped, and other groups.

Certainly, we still have a way to go to make those guarantees a permanent reality. But Dr. King's role in opening our eyes to the tragedy of discrimination and the fundamental principle of equality under the law should be celebrated. I think the recognition that a national holiday on Dr. King's birthday commemorates and ideal that is greater than any one man is the reason for President Reagan's support and the overwhelming vote of endorsement in the House of Representatives.

I am sure Dr. King would agree that the eloquency of his speech and his devotion to justice are not so much a reason for us to remember him as a person, but to remember his cause. For one 24-hour period in every 365 days we need to take the time to recelebrate civil rights and recommit ourselves to Dr. King's cause.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that an editorial from the St. Paul Pioneer Press be included in the RECORD with my remarks this afternoon.

There being no objection, the editorial was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

KING HOLIDAY WOULD BEST HONOR ALL

Ronald Reagan is reported to be warming up to the idea of a federal holiday commemorating the birthday of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Advisers are telling him it would be a friendly gesture toward blacks and other minorities—in other words, good politics. If he softens his previous opposition for purely political reasons, he would be engaging in the worst sort of hypocrisy.

By 338-90, the House voted last week to set aside the third Monday in January to honor the assassinated civil rights leader. The measure is now on the Senate calendar for debate after Congress returns from the August recess.

Attempts have been made to memorialize Mr. King in this way every year since his death in 1968. With the president's support, passage would be a near certainty this year.

Mr. Reagan has his problems with minorities, who are angered by his soft civil rights stance. It is understandable that he would want to strengthen his relations with blacks. But this method sounds calculating and opportunistic rather than sincere.

It would be quite appropriate for the nation to set aside a national holiday to honor the contribution of all minority groups, and to remind ourselves of the ongoing struggle to eliminate injustice and achieve equality. But should that celebration be in the name of one person, such as Mr. King, or should it be on behalf of all those who have contributed to these causes? We believe it should be the latter, even if Mr. King's name graces the holiday.

That is not to belittle Mr. King's contributions. His most lasting gift was his dedication to non-violence, and that gift was to all Americans. For that gift, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize in 1964, the youngest man ever to be so honored.

While his stature in the 1960's civil rights movement was towering, there were many before him and since his death who have fought mightily for the same principles he espoused. Those principles, we believe, are what such a holiday should honor.

Independence Day, after all, makes no mention of Jefferson, Franklin, or other founders of the Republic. Labor Day does not evoke George Meany or Samuel Gompers specifically. And there is no Pocahontas in the words, "Thanksgiving Day."

Perhaps what we need most of all is a Civil Rights Day, or even a Human Rights Day. Ask a Hispanic American, or a homosexual, or an American Indian, or a woman or a member of any number of other groups if we have a distance yet to travel on the road to liberty and freedom.

Whatever Mr. Reagan decides to do on this issue, his decision will be respected and accepted more if it is based on logic and merit, rather than how many votes it will win him or cost him in his anticipated 1984 re-election campaign.

Mr. JOHNSTON. Mr. President, today I express my support for the designation of the third Monday of every January as a legal public holiday in honor of Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. Dr. King was a man of great vision, whose peacefulness, yet determined leadership had a profound and lasting impact on American civil rights. It is only right that we as a nation should thank him for what he has given us with an equally lasting tribute.

As a U.S. Senator from the South, I am in a unique position to see the results of Dr. King's lifetime work. I can remember the conditions and difficulties faced by southern blacks prior to the civil rights movement. I can remember the segregated schools, stores, restaurants, drinking fountains, and bathrooms. I can remember blacks being denied the right to vote.

All of this was very much a way of life in the South. No one questioned it. We were living in a two-tiered society with the whites on one tier and the blacks and other minorities on the other. It took courage and conviction for Martin Luther King, Jr., and his followers to challenge this status quo and it was with great difficulty that the blacks of the 1950's and 1960's managed to convince those in the mainstream of the southern political arena that their treatment of blacks was unjust and unfair.

Even so, Dr. King accepted the challenge and proceeded to push his message in a nonviolent manner. In an effort to desegregate the city's bus service, King masterminded the Montgomery bus boycott of 1956. He marched in Birmingham for fair hiring practices and an end to segregation of public facilities and department stores. He was the founder and first president of the Southern Christian Leadership Conference, an organization of black leaders committed to eliminating discrimination and increasing black voter participation.

Dr. King did not limit his activities to the South. He also worked for slum rehabilitation in Chicago and called for an end to the war in Vietnam. Many urged him to remain silent about the war, however, he argued that it was worthless to talk about integration if there was no world left to integrate.

Dr. King was also a moving force behind the 1963 March on Washington. Since that time great strides have been made to fulfill Dr. King's legacy. For example, the passage of the Voting Rights Act of 1965 brought many millions of black voters to the polls for the first time and it resulted in the election of thousands of blacks to every level of government. In the South alone, this legislation has resulted in an elevenfold increase in the number of blacks who now hold elective office, with the greatest increase occurring in the State of Louisiana.

During his lifetime, Dr. King also saw the passage of the Civil Rights Act of 1964. This act has been instrumental in integrating more than 25 million people into the mainstream of American society and it still serves as the catalyst for the entry of many more.

While Dr. King's activities did not physically bring him into Louisiana, the reverberations of his activities had a profound and lasting impact on my State. Many of the present prominent black leaders of Louisiana were early disciples of Martin Luther King, Jr., and the civil rights movement. Today, they continue to carry his message throughout the State. Their place in the political heritage of Louisiana was laid down by Dr. King's work throughout the country. A national holiday in honor of Dr. King would also serve as a national holiday in honor of these individuals and all of the other followers of Dr. King who have contributed to making his dream a reality.

While it cannot be denied that much progress has been made over the years, we still have a long way to go. We still must seek parity in the job market at home. Furthermore, worldwide unrest makes it especially important that we continue Dr. King's message into the 1980's and beyond.

Presently, there is a civil war raging in Lebanon. Martial law and a strong Soviet presence are felt in Poland. Russia has invaded Afghanistan and it has ruthlessly shot down the Korean civilian jet 007. By honoring Dr. King and his dream of peace, freedom and equality in this appropriate fashion, the United States would be sending a signal to the world that we as a nation are committed to peace and equality, both at home and abroad.

Throughout his life, Dr. King received many honors. He was named the 1963 Time magazine "Man of the Year," the first black to be so honored. In the following year, he was awarded the Nobel Peace Prize, thus becoming the youngest person ever to be so honored. These tributes are minor in comparison to the immeasurable contribution Dr. King made to our heritage. Dr. King brought our prejudices and faults to the forefront and forced us as a nation to examine our conscience and thus to move toward becoming a nation of truly one people. By honoring Dr. King with a national holiday we will be reminded of his dream each year. We will be forced to reexamine our national conscience to see whether we are still striving to make that dream a reality.

Mr. President, Dr. King had a great impact on 20th century America, perhaps the greatest impact of any man or woman. His march from Montgomery to Memphis has permanently shaped the course of our history. Mr. President, I have been a cosponsor of this important legislation for many years and I call upon my colleagues to show their support for it and for the continuation of Dr. King's dream today.

Mr. DURENBERGER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. EVANS). The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BYRD. Mr. President, will the acting majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. STEVENS. Yes.

Mr. BYRD. Will there be any further rollcall votes today?

Mr. STEVENS. Mr. President, there will be no further rollcall votes today.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Saunders, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGES REFERRED

As in executive session, the Acting President pro tempore laid before the Senate messages from the President of the United States submitting sundry nominations which were referred to the appropriate committees.

(The nominations received today are printed at the end of the Senate proceedings.)

ANNUAL SCIENCE AND TECHNOLOGY REPORT—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 79

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with an accompanying report; which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

To the Congress of the United States:

I am pleased to submit to the Congress the fifth Annual Science and Technology Report, as required under the National Science and Technology Policy, Organization, and Priorities Act of 1976, as amended.

Today the United States faces major challenges to both our economic well-being and our national security. We turn increasingly to science and technology to help us maintain the competitiveness of our industries in the international marketplace and to ensure the continued technological superiority of our defense capabilities.

The science and technology policies described in this report outline the framework in which our Administration is addressing these challenges. The significant increases in Federal R&D support, especially in basic research—the fount of new technologies and new knowledge—is evidence of our long-term commitment to strengthening the economy and security of America through science and technology. Programs to increase the supply of well trained scientists and engineers will ensure the best possible talent for continued technological advances in industry, universities, and government. The results of these important actions, in conjunction with the vigorous investment in research and development by the private sector, will be greater security and strong economic growth in the years ahead.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 3, 1983.

DEFERRAL OF CERTAIN BUDGET AUTHORITY—MESSAGE FROM THE PRESIDENT—PM 80

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the President of the United States, together with certain papers; which, pursuant to the order of January 30, 1975, was referred jointly to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation, the Committee on Armed Services, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, the Committee on the Budget, the Committee on Labor and Human Resources, the Committee on Foreign Relations, the Committee on Finance, the Committee on Environment and Public Works, and the Committee on Appropriations:

To the Congress of the United States:

In accordance with the Impoundment Control Act of 1974, I herewith report nineteen new deferrals of budget authority totaling $1,909,569,000 and one new deferral of outlays totaling $15,209,000.

The deferrals affect programs in the Departments of Agriculture, Commerce, Defense (Civil and Military), Energy, Health and Human Services, Interior, State, Transportation, Treasury, and the Appalachian Regional Commission, Pennsylvania Avenue Development Corporation, Railroad Retirement Board, Tennessee Valley Authority, and the U.S. Railway Association.

The details of the deferrals are contained in the attached reports.

RONALD REAGAN.

THE WHITE HOUSE, October 3, 1983.

MESSAGE RECEIVED FROM THE HOUSE DURING THE ADJOURNMENT

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS SIGNED

Under the authority of the order of the Senate of September 30, 1983, the Secretary of the Senate, on September 30, 1983, during the adjournment of the Senate, received a message from the House of Representatives announcing that the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. WRIGHT) had signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolutions:

H.R. 3962. An act to extend the authorities under the Export Admininstration Act of 1979 until October 14, 1983;

H.J. Res. 137. Joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to issue a proclamation designating the period from October 2, 1983, through October 8, 1983, as "National Schoolbus Week of 1983"; and H.J. Res. 368. Joint resolution making continuing appropriations for the fiscal year 1984, and for other purposes.

Under the authority of the Senate of September 30, 1983, the enrolled bill and joint resolutions were signed on September 30, 1983, during the adjournment of the Senate by the Vice President.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 12:14 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House disagrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3929) to extend the Federal Supplemental Compensation Act of 1982, and for other purposes; it agrees to the conference asked by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. ROSTENKOWSKI, Mr. STARK, Mr. PEASE, Mr. MATSUI, Mrs. KENNELLY, Mr. CAMPBELL, Mr. MOORE, and Mr. FRENZEL as managers of the conference on the part of the House.

The message further announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 3813) to amend the International Coffee Agreement Act of 1980.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following joint resolutions, without amendment:

S.J. Res. 140. Joint resolution to provide for the designation of the week of October 2 through October 8, 1983, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week"; and

S.J. Res. 142. Joint resolution designating the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, as "National Productivity Improvement Week."

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 12:33 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

S. 216. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit certain tampering with consumer products, and for other purposes; and

S.J. Res. 140. Joint resolution for the designation of the week of October 2 through October 8, 1983, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week."

The enrolled bill and joint resolution were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore (Mr. THURMOND).

ENROLLED BILL AND JOINT RESOLUTION SIGNED

At 2:47 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the Speaker has signed the following enrolled bill and joint resolution:

H.R. 2840. An act to provide for the orderly termination of Federal management of the Pribiloff Islands, Alaska; and

S.J. Res. 142. Joint resolution designating the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, as "National Productivity Improvement Week."

The enrolled bill and joint resolution were subsequently signed by the President pro tempore.

At 2:46 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives, delivered by Ms. Goetz, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House agrees to the amendment of the Senate to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 461) to extend the authorization of appropriations for the Office of Government Ethics for 5 years, with amendments, in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate.

The message also announced that the House has passed the following bills, without amendment:

S. 884. An act to provide for the use and distribution of funds awarded the Red Lake Band of Chippewa Indians in docket numbered 15-72 of the United States Court of Claims;

S. 1148. An act to provide for the use and distribution of funds awarded the Assiniboine Tribe of the Fort Belknap Indian Community, Montana, and the Assiniboine Tribe of the Fort Peck Indian Reservation, Montana, in docket numbered 10-81L by the United States Court of Claims, and for other purposes;

S. 1465. An act to designate the Federal Building at Fourth and Ferry Streets, Lafayette, Ind., as the "Charles A. Halleck Federal Building"; and

S. 1724. An act to designate the Federal Building in Las Cruces, N. Mex., as the "Harold L. Runnels Federal Building."

ENROLLED BILLS PRESENTED

The Secretary of the Senate reported that on today, October 3, 1983, he presented to the President of the United States the following enrolled bills:

S. 216. An act to amend title 18 of the United States Code to prohibit certain tampering with consumer products, and for other purposes.

S.J. Res. 140. Joint resolution for the designation of the week of October 2 through October 8, 1983, as "Myasthenia Gravis Awareness Week."

S.J. Res. 142. Joint resolution designating the week of October 3 through October 9, 1983, as "National Productivity Improvement Week."

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first and second times by unanimous consent, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 1914. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to facilitate home equity conversions through sale-leaseback transactions; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 1915. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to repeal capital gains tax on disposition of investments in U.S. real property by foreign countries; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. PERCY (for himself and Mr. DIXON):

S. 1916. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, relating to the abandonment of intrastate bus transportation and State regulation of practices with respect to that transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. PACKWOOD:

S. 1917. A bill to provide that the Federal Communications Commission shall not regulate the content of certain communications; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

By Mr. GOLDWATER (for himself, Mr. GARN and Mr. SASSER):

S.J. Res. 177. A joint resolution to provide for appointment of Samuel Curtis Johnson as a citizen regent of the Board of Regents of the Smithsonian Institution; to the Committee on Rules and Administration.

SUBMISSION OF CONCURRENT AND SENATE RESOLUTIONS

The following concurrent resolutions and Senate resolutions were read, and referred (or acted upon), as indicated:

By Mr. BENTSEN:

S. Res. 237. Resolution to upgrade the children's bureau; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

By Mr. KENNEDY (for himself, Mr. CRANSTON, Mr. TSONGAS, Mr. DODD, Mr. GLENN, Mr. HART, Mr. MOYNIHAN, Mr. PELL, Mr. RIEGLE, and Mr. SARBANES):

S. Con. Res. 71. Concurrent resolution deploring the assassination of Benigno Aquino, calling for the conduct of a thorough, independent and impartial investigation and calling for free and fair elections in the Philippines; to the Committee on Foreign Relations.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. SPECTER:

S. 1914. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to facilitate home equity conversions through sale-leaseback transactions; to the Committee on Finance.

HOME EQUITY CONVERSIONS ACT OF 1983

Mr. SPECTER. Mr. President, earlier in this Congress, I introduced S. 831, a bill that would enable elderly homeowners to maintain residency while they, at the same time, convert the equity on their homes into income. This measure has attracted considerable interest and has had the benefit of review and comment by a number of home equity conversion experts. I am today introducing a modified substitute for this legislation so that a more comprehensive measure may receive hearings in the near future.

Our elderly homeowneres who must live on fixed incomes are often faced with a cruel choice. Confronted by ever-rising living costs, they must either reduce their standard of living, or sell their most precious asset, their home, to pay their bills.

The trauma of losing a home for which a person has worked a lifetime is profound. The alternative, however, is equally dismaying: Living out one's last years—the allegedly golden ones—in materially constrained circumstances. It is an alternative no elderly homeowner should have to face if an alternative can be devised.

My bill facilitates sale-leaseback arrangements for elderly home equity conversions. Under this arrangement, rather than having to sell for funds to meet living expenses and moving into an apartment, the elderly homeowner can sell to a financial institution but continue to live in his or her own home under a lease. The homeowner can pay the lease payments out of the proceeds of the sale which may be in the form of cash, mortgage payments, annuity payments, or a combination of these sources of funds.

Tax barriers to sale-leaseback would be eliminated by this legislation which I am proposing. First, the elderly homeowner in the sale-leaseback transaction would be entitled to a one-time capital gains tax exemption that is otherwise available to homeowners past the age of 55 who sell their homes. And second, the purchaser/lessor could take depreciation on the value of the property it had purchased although the seller retains occupancy rights.

With these tax barriers removed, I am confident that the sale-leaseback transaction will prove attractive to financial institutions.

The President's Commission on Housing has estimated that the potential market for these home equity transactions to be between $30 and $40 billion. And the Commission has said that this market can be expected to increase as the number of older Americans increases and the idea of home equity conversion gains acceptance.

Access to the rewards of home equity—which has been dearly earned—should be given to our elderly Americans during their lifetimes. It is of no value to them after their deaths. And it will go a long way toward making their last years truly golden ones.

This legislation will make sale-leasebacks feasible. It will make the arrangement attractive both to the elderly homeowner and to the purchasing financial institution.

I ask unanimous consent that a copy of the bill, and a list of modifications from the previous bill, be inserted in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1914

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. SHORT TITLE.

That this Act may be cited as the "Home Equity Conversions Act of 1983".

SEC. 2. DEPRECIATION IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTIONS.

Section 167 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to depreciation) is amended by inserting after subsection (h) the following new subsection:

"(i) QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTIONS.—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of property involved in a qualified sale-leaseback transaction, the deduction shall be computed as if the purchaser-lessor were the absolute owner of the property and shall be allowed to the purchaser-lessor.

"(2) DEFINITIONS.—For purposes of this subsection—

"(A) QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK.—The term 'qualified sale-leaseback' means a transaction in which—

"(i) the seller-lessee—

"(I) has attained the age of 55 before the date of such transaction,

"(II) sells property which was owned and used by such seller-lessee solely as a principal residence and not as section 1250 property before the date of such transaction, and

"(III) retains occupancy rights in such property pursuant to a written lease requiring a fair rental, and

"(ii) the purchaser-lessor—

"(I) is a person, and

"(II) is contractually responsible for the risks and burdens of ownership after the date of such transaction.

"(B) OCCUPANCY RIGHTS.—The term 'occupancy rights' means the right to occupy for a term which—

"(i) equals or exceeds one-half of the life expectancy of the seller-lessee at the date of the qualified sale-leaseback transaction (and his spouse, in the case of jointly-held occupancy rights),

"(ii) is subject to a continuing right of renewal by the seller-lessee (or his surviving spouse in the case of jointly-held occupancy rights), and

"(iii) terminates no later than the date of death of the seller-lessee (or his surviving spouse in the case of jointly-held occupancy rights).

"(C) FAIR RENTAL.—The term 'fair rental' means a rental pursuant to a qualified sales-leaseback transaction which is determined at the date of such transaction and equals or exceeds 80 percent of the appraised fair market rent.".

SEC. 3. CAPITAL GAINS EXCLUSION IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTIONS.

Subsection (d) of section 121 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to one-time exclusion of gain from sale of principal residence by individual who has attained age 55) is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(9) SALE OR EXCHANGE DEFINED.—For purposes of this section, the term 'sale or exchange' shall include a qualified sale-leaseback transaction as defined in section 167(j).".

SEC. 4. INCOME TO SELLER IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTION.

(a) GROSS INCOME.—Part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of subtitle A of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to items specifically excluded from gross income) is amended by inserting after section 121 the following new section:

"SEC. 121A. OCCUPANCY RIGHTS IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTIONS.

"Gross income does not include any value of occupancy rights or fair market price discount attributable to retained occupancy rights received in a qualified sale-leaseback transaction as defined in section 167(i).".

(b) GAIN OR LOSS.—Subsection (b) of section 1001 of such Code is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (1),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (2) and inserting in lieu thereof ", and", and

(3) by inserting after paragraph (2) the following new paragraph:

"(3) in the case of a qualified sale-leaseback transaction (as defined in section 167(i))—

"(A) there shall not be taken into account any value of occupancy rights or fair market price discount attributable to retained occupancy rights, and

"(B) there shall be taken into account the cost of any annuity purchased for a seller.".

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for part III of subchapter B of chapter 1 of subtitle A of such Code is amended by inserting after the item relating to section 121 the following new item:

"Sec. 121A. Occupancy rights in qualified sale-leaseback transactions.".

SEC. 5. INSTALLMENT SALES IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTIONS.

Section 453 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to installment method) is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (j) as subsection (k), and

(2) by inserting after subsection (i) the following new subsection;

"(j) APPLICATION WITH SECTION 167(i).—

"(1) IN GENERAL.—In the case of an installment sale in a qualified sale-leaseback transaction (as defined in section 167(i)), subsection (a) shall apply.

"(2) SPECIAL RULE FOR ANNUITIES.—In the case of an annuity purchased for the seller-lessee by the purchaser-lessor in a qualified sale-leaseback transaction, the purchase cost of such annuity shall constitute the amount of consideration received by such seller-lessee attributable to such annuity and shall be deemed received in the year of disposition.".

SEC. 6. BASIS OF ANNUITY RECEIVED IN QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTION.

Subparagraph (A) of section 72(c)(1) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to annuities) is amended by inserting before the comma "(including such amount paid by a purchaser-lessor in a qualified sale-leaseback transaction defined in section 167(i))".

SEC. 7. QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTION ENGAGED IN FOR PROFIT.

(a) FOR PROFIT PRESUMPTION.—Section 183 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to activities not engaged in for profit) is amended—

(1) by striking out "If" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "(1) IN GENERAL.—If",

(2) by inserting after paragraph (1) of subsection (d) (as designated by paragraph (1)) the following new paragraph:

"(2) QUALIFIED SALE-LEASEBACK TRANSACTION.—Any qualified sale-leaseback transaction as defined in section 167(1), unless the Secretary establishes to the contrary, shall be presumed for purposes of this chapter to be an activity engaged in for profit.", and

"(3) by inserting "(1)" after "subsection (d)" each place it appears in subsection (e).".

(b) USE OF DWELLING UNIT.—Subparagraph (B) of section 280A(d)(3) of such Code (relating to disallowance of certain expenses in connection with business use of home, rental of vacation homes, etc.) is amended to read as follows:

"(B) SPECIAL RULES FOR RENTAL TO PERSON HAVING INTEREST IN UNIT.—

"(i) RENTAL AGREEMENT.—Subparagraph (A) shall apply to a rental to a person who has an interest in the dwelling unit only if such rental is pursuant—

"(I) to a shared equity financing agreement, or

"(II) to an agreement entered into pursuant to a qualified sale-leaseback transaction defined in section 167(i).

"(ii) DETERMINATION OF FAIR RENTAL.—Fair rental shall be determined as of the time the agreement is entered into and—

"(I) in the case of a shared equity financing agreement, by taking into account the occupant's qualified ownership interest, and

"(II) in the case of an agreement entered into pursuant to a qualified sale-leaseback transaction, by complying with the requirements of section 167(i)(2)(C).".

SEC. 8. EFFECTIVE DATE.

The amendments made by this Act shall apply to sales after the date of the enactment of this Act, in taxable years ending after such date.

MODIFICATIONS TO S. 831

The original bill, S. 831, only addressed depreciation and capital gains exclusions. The modified bill amends a number of other sections of the tax code in an attempt to define legislatively the limits on this type of transaction.

The following changes have been made to clarify the tax code:

1. "Sale-Leaseback" replaces "sale-life tenancy" as the specific conversion mechanism to be used. The intent is to maintain a narrow focus utilizing a standard financial practice. There was controversy over the meaning of the term "sale-life tenancy".

2. The new bill defines "qualified sale-leaseback" as a transaction in which (a) the seller-lessee has attained the age of 55, sells property which was owned and used as a principal residence, retains occupancy rights in such property pursuant to a written lease requiring a fair rental. The seller-lessee is eligible for a one-time capital gains exclusion; (b) the purchaser-lessor is a person contractually for the risks and burdens of ownership, and may take depreciation on the property; (c) occupancy rights is defined as the right to occupy for a term which equals or exceeds one-half of the life expectancy of the seller-lessee at the date of the qualified sale-leaseback transaction (and his spouse) and is subject to a continuing right of renewal by the seller-lessee (or his surviving spouse in the case of jointly-held occupancy rights); and (d) fair rental is defined as a rental in a sale-leaseback transaction which is determined at the date of such transaction and equal or exceeds 80 percent of appraised fair market rent. This is to prevent less than arms length transactions (sale to relatives at negligible rent).

3. In addition, the bill states that the value of occupany rights should not be included in any computation of gross income or gain or loss to the property of the seller.

4. The bill extends common practice to installment payments in sale-leasebacks.

5. For determining the value of an annuity in a sale, the annuity shall be estimated by the cost of the annuity purchased. This defines a probable question since many residents are expected to seek or purchase annuities to ensure a steady source of income should they live longer than expected.

By Mr. GOLDWATER:

S. 1915. A bill to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to repeal capital gains tax on disposition of the investments in U.S. real property by foreign citizens; to the Committee on Finance.

REPEAL OF PROVISION IN FIRPTA

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, I am introducing legislation today to repeal onerous provisions of the tax law know as FIRPTA, the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act of 1980.

This law is seriously harming the national interest by deliberately discouraging foreign investment in U.S. real estate. In the words of a brilliant professional analysis of FIRPTA, by Prof. Richard Kaplan in the April 1983 Georgetown Law Journal, this law unnecesarily "complicates the Tax Code, overrides bilateral tax treaty provisions, and creates an intrusive but unenforceable collection scheme."

What FIRPTA does is to single out a small group of what we might call passive investors for special penalty and notice. These are certain foreign investors in American real estate who are not engaged in a U.S. trade or business and who are not permanent residents of or present in the United States more than 182 days in the year of sale of the land. Such foreign investors had been exempt from any capital gains tax upon the sale of such land.

FIRPTA removed this exemption both as to real estate held directly by individual investors and real estate owned by a corporation in which a foreign investor owns stock. There are significant exceptions to the latter form of landholding, particularly for stock that is regularly traded on an established securities market, unless the foreign investor owns more than 5 percent of the particular company's stock.

Since the biggest landowners are corporations, this exemption means that most foreign stockholders in the big oil and gas companies or timber and paper companies, who alone control some 211 million acres of U.S. land, are not affected by FIRPTA. Thus, the law is very discriminatory in its coverage and arbitrarily imposes its burdens on a limited kind of foreign investor without any visible reason, except favoritism to big corporations, which I will have more to say about in a moment.

Mr. President, in order to put this subject in context I will provide some basic facts about landholding in our country. There are 2.3 billion acres of land in America, of which 34 percent is owned by the Federal Government, another 2 percent is Indian trust land, and 6 percent is held by State and local governments.

That leaves 58 percent of the land in private hands, or 1.3 billion acres. The big majority of private lands is still agricultural or ranch land, 63 percent of it. Another 44 million acres are devoted to commercial, industrial, and recreational uses; and only 1 percent, 25 million acres, is used for private homeowners.

A Federal Government study by the Department of Agriculture calculates that about 3 percent of the population own 95 percent of lands. According to a different Agriculture Department report, as few as 570 large corporations control 23 percent of all privately held U.S. land through ownership or control of leasing, mineral, or surface rights.

What part of these private holdings are held by foreigners? Actually very little.

For example, a report of the Secretary of Commerce to Congress in April 1976 called Foreign Direct Investment in the United States concludes that:

> The expressed concern about foreign ownership of agricultural land and other real estate does not appear to have a strong factual basis for the nation as a whole.

The same report cites a special study of foreign investment in Hawaii in which it was "concluded that the economic impact of foreign real estate investment in Hawaii was beneficial to both Hawaii and the nation."

An Iowa study, described in the same Federal Government report, found that:

> • • • Use of farmland acquired by the nonresident aliens surveyed was not changed. In all of the cases investigated the land was used for grain production both prior to and after purchase by aliens. Local residents generally continued as operators of the land.

The latest available study by the Economic Research Service of the U.S. Department of Agriculture appears to support the validity of these earlier findings. In its report called Foreign Ownership of U.S. Agricultural Land Through December 31, 1982, the USDA calculates that foreigners owned 13.5 million acres, or slightly more than 1 percent of American farmland and forestry. Forest land accounts for 55 percent of foreign-owned acreage and cropland accounts for only 13 percent.

It is interesting to note that the report finds that only 37 percent of agricultural lands is held by foreign persons not affiliated with an American corporation. U.S. corporations in which foreign persons hold stock own 63 percent of all the foreign-held acreage. This means that most foreign-owned farmland is exempt from FIRPTA.

The value of U.S. agricultural landholdings by foreign owners was $9.6 billion at the end of 1982. In contrast, a Department of the Treasury report found that at the end of 1978, portfolio ownership of equity securities issued by private U.S. companies amounted to over $47.9 billion. This report, called Foreign Portfolio Investment in the United States, issued December 1980, also reveals that another $31.8 billion of publicly held stock issues of American companies was held by foreign investors who own 10 percent or more of the voting stock in a given U.S. corporation. The total percentage of U.S. stock so held by foreign portfolio investors and such foreign parents was $80.7 billion, or 7 percent of the total stock.

Now, the sale of this 7 percent of U.S. private stocks is exempt from our capital gains tax. Yet the sale of less than one-half of 1 percent of American farmlands owned directly by foreigners is subject to the capital gains tax.

Over $80.7 billion worth of U.S. private stock held by foreigners is exempt under our tax laws from any capital gains tax, but $3.5 billion of American farmland held by foreign owners not affiliated with an American corporation is not exempted.

This bizarre fact, or rather this extreme favoritism for one class of investors, stockholders, and discrimination against another class of investors, direct land owners, is compounded by the fact that foreign land investors who are not engaged in a trade or business are still subject to a 30-percent income tax on gross income, without regard to the normal deductions or exemptions that are available to U.S. citizens.

In other words, if a real property investment by a foreigner yields any income, such as rentals, a 30-percent tax based on gross rentals would have to be paid without deducting property taxes or even interest on loans borrowed. The exemption of such real estate from the capital gains tax would still leave gross income from developed property taxed at 30 percent every year until it is disposed.

The only way such a foreign investor can be entitled to all the deductions available to U.S. citizen taxpayers is by electing to claim a trade or business status, but once an election has been in effect for 3 years, the investor cannot revoke it without permission of the Internal Revenue Service, which seems unlikely.

Another unfairness of FIRPTA is that it penalizes foreign investors who bought U.S. real property for investment in good faith under the investment laws prevailing at the time of purchase. These investors have been caught by surprise with a retroactive law applicable to lands acquired before it went into effect.

There are other quirks about this law. For one thing, it has no withholding mechanism. It does contain reporting requirements, but the penalty for noncompliance is $25 a day up to a maximum fine of only $25,000. Thus, the law is virtually unenforceable.

The law is blatantly discriminatory against a very small group of foreign land investors and is structured in a nonsensical way. It is permeated with exceptions and brings in very little revenue to the National Treasury. Yet it is a major impediment to investment in American real estate because it put the United States in a disadvantageous position with other countries which are promoting and encouraging foreign investment to their lands.

Mr. President, a major statement on international investment was made by the White House just 3 weeks ago, on September 9. It is the first policy paper in 6 years on that subject by any President.

In it, President Reagan highlights our Government's support of free and open investment and our concern with the increasing use of governmental measures to distort or impede international investment flows.

In carrying out this new international investment policy, I can think of no better step or signal to the world that the American Government can take than to repeal the restrictions to investment in FIRPTA.

Every country is trying to lure capital to itself and our Nation is mindlessly trying to chase away investors. If our Government is now truly committed to ending barriers to international investment, we should immediately correct FIRPTA. The bill I have introduced today will do just that.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of the bill may appear in the RECORD.

There being no objection, the bill was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

S. 1915

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled,

SECTION 1. REPEAL OF CAPITAL GAINS TAX ON DISPOSITION OF INVESTMENTS IN UNITED STATES REAL PROPERTY BY FOREIGN CITIZENS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 897 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to disposition of investment in United States real property) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENTS.—

(1) Paragraph (5) of section 861 (a) of such Code (relating to gross income from sources within the United States) is amended to read as follows:

"(5) Sale or exchange of real property.—Gains, profits, and income from the sale or exchange of real property located in the United States.".

(2) Subsection (a) of section 862 of such Code (relating to gross income from sources without the United States) is amended—

(A) by inserting "and" after the semicolon at the end of paragraph (6),

(B) by striking out "; and" at the end of paragraph (7) and inserting in lieu thereof a period, and

(C) by striking out paragraph (8).

(3) Subsection (g) of section 871 of such Code (relating to tax on nonresident alien individuals) is amended by striking out paragraph (8).

(4) Subsection (a) of section 882 of such Code (relating to tax on income of foreign corporations connected with United States business) is amended by striking out paragraph (3).

(5) Subsections (c) and (d) of section 1125 of the Foreign Investment in Real Property Tax Act of 1980 are repealed.

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart C of part II of subchapter N of chapter 1 of such Code is amended by striking the item relating to section 897.

SEC. 2. REPEAL OF SPECIAL REPORTING REQUIREMENTS WITH RESPECT TO UNITED STATES REAL PROPERTY INTERESTS.

(a) IN GENERAL.—Section 6039C of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 (relating to returns with respect to United States real property interests) is repealed.

(b) CONFORMING AMENDMENT.—Section 6652 of such Code (relating to failure to file certain information returns, registration statements, etc.) is amended—

(1) by striking out subsection (g), and

(2) by redesignating subsections (h) and (i) as subsections (g) and (h), respectively.

(c) CLERICAL AMENDMENT.—The table of sections for subpart A of part III of chapter 61 of such Code is amended by striking out the item relating to section 6039C.

SEC. 3. EFFECTIVE DATE.

(a) REPEAL OF TAX.—The amendments made by section 1 shall apply to dispositions in taxable years beginning after December 31, 1983.

(b) REPEAL OF REPORTING REQUIREMENTS.—The amendments made by section 2 shall apply to returns for calendar years beginning after December 31, 1983.

By Mr. PERCY (for himself and Mr. DIXON):

S. 1916. A bill to amend title 49, United States Code, relating to the abandonment of intrastate bus transportation and State regulation of practices with respect to that transportation, and for other purposes; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

BUS REGULATORY REFORM ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1983

Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation along with my distinguished colleague from Illinois, Mr. DIXON, that addresses a serious rural transportation problem facing less populated communities in virtually every State in the country.

As my colleagues are aware, the Bus Regulatory Reform Act of 1982 greatly relaxed the manner in which the intercity bus industry is regulated. I joined my colleagues in supporting the Bus Act last year because of my belief that deregulation would lead to greater service for rural America. I continue to support deregulation, but also believe that refinements to the act are necessary at this time.

During last year's debate on the Bus Act, proponents argued that few abandonments would occur as a result of the measure and that, if they did, new carriers would provide replacement service. Unfortunately, this has not always been the case. In Illinois, for example, there has not been a single bus company that has offered to provide regular routes service, nor has any existing company expanded its route system, to incorporate abandoned routes.

Mr. President, unless legislative action is taken to assist the States, bus service in many rural areas will be unnecessarily eliminated. The measure that I am introducing today does not repeal the Bus Act. Rather, without altering the thrust of the act, it strengthens the ability of the States to preserve bus service.

